Sunday 10-5 Monday 8:30-6 Tuesday-Thursday 8:30-7
Friday 8:30-5 & Saturday 11-4
Http://www.aux.umass.edu

UMASS
FOOD SERVICES
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices/
JUNIORS - SENIORS - GRADS - COMMUTERS

*Accepted at: Bluewall
Hatch
Coffee Shop
Snack Bars
Dining Halls
Starbucks Coffee Cart
*other locations coming soon

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
SIGN UP NOW!

Features:
Grab 'N' Go
Display Cooking
Fresh Baked Goods
Full Meals or Snacks
4 Dining Halls
Salad Bars
Marketplace Concept

Economy Plan
154 meals per semester

Commuter Express Plan
79 meals per semester

Light Plan
35 meals per semester

Payments may be made at:
Bursar's Office, 215 Whitmore or Meal Plan Office, Franklin Dining Hall

For more information call:
545-1362 or 545-2472

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Wait and see

Our opinion

After five years of investigation, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees have announced a deal with the Follett Corporation which will allow the organization to privately manage the campus bookstore. The result of this decision may be the possibility of better service, UMass administrators with temporary smiles on their faces and an angry faction of students and faculty on campus who are anti-privatization.

The argument has been heated between the privatization supporters and those who oppose a corporate presence on the UMass campus.

While Follett promises better things for UMass faculty and students, and while administrators are smiling because of the new contract, the response on campus will probably be militant in nature as the students and faculty who vehemently oppose privatization will speak out against corporate power. They will be responding to a Board of Trustees that is attempting to lead UMass to a different place, and for our part, The Daily Collegian is at least willing to see where the University is taken as a result.

After all, if the students who work at the bookstore do not lose their jobs, if the service is better, if the prices fall and the selection increases, then privatization turns out not the be the great evil that certain groups on campus have projected it to be. At the same time, if students lose their jobs, if service is worse, if prices increase and selection decreases, the Board of Trustees must be willing to look at the Follett agreement and reconsider it.

Follett, for its part, runs bookstores on major campuses throughout the nation, including Michigan, Florida State, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and even the school that is this University's brother to the west: the University of California at Berkeley. Those schools continue to prosper and have not fallen to the wayside after Follett's management. Perhaps the situations at these schools will encourage anti-privatization forces at UMass to consider the possibility for gain at UMass before organizing rallies, letter-writing campaigns and boycotts.

Probably not. While The Daily Collegian will not come out against protests, rallies and campaigns in various formats, a certain amount of self-control should be used by anti-privatization factions on campus.

The bookstore is not yet worse than it was before.

The bookstore has not yet fired students workers.

The bookstore has not yet caused any great amount of suffering.

Groups on campus against privatization need to wait long enough to see what the effect of privatization will be.

Before organizing a massive letter-writing campaign decrying the bookstore as worse than before, students and faculty against privatization need to give the bookstore a chance to be worse than before.

Before boycotting the bookstore, students and faculty against privatization need to establish what a boycott can really, possibly accomplish.

At the same time, groups on campus who support privatization, or at least the privatization of the bookstore, need to seriously consider where they stand if service does not get better, if prices do go up, if students are unnecessarily fired. Supporters need to be willing to admit when they are wrong, and if it was wrong to bring Follett in to control the book store, the University's Board of Trustees needs to be willing to admit that.

For students to get the best possible results from the UMass campus, both sides in the heated privatization issue need to simultaneously remain calm while vigorously observing what is going on at the bookstore.

Are students being unnecessarily fired?

Is the service getting worse?

Are prices going up?

Is selection decreasing?

If the answers to these questions are no, anti-privatization supporters need to turn their attention elsewhere. If the answers are yes, the Board of Trustees needs to examine the reality that is privatization again. But until anyone can answer these questions, both sides need to sit quietly by and observe.

Who should decide his future?

I finished all three Harry Potter books over vacation, despite the fact that my eleven-year-old cousin and his seven-year-old sister told me that they were "baby books." (In my defense, all three have been at the top of the New York Times best-seller list.)

Maybe I am going through some sort of regression as graduation approaches. I am 21 years old and will graduate in May, and for the first time no one is giving me much advice. Instead everyone is awaiting my decisions because I'm finally supposed to be an adult.

I'm not happy about being an adult. I've never had much respect for adults on the whole, and they only seem to be sinking lower in my estimation.

Alexis Pashkar

Since Elian Gonzalez made the cover of Time, I figured that I should see what all the fuss was about after having ignored the news coverage of the event during vacation. I discovered that there are thousands – if not millions – of adults in Cuba and the United States who have an opinion as to where this child should live.

I should spare you the hackneyed metaphors, but I can't help thinking that the two men who "rescued" Elian did nothing of the sort. He is still strapped to that raft in the middle of the ocean, and sharks are circling his parched six-year-old body lying in the sun. The sharks, of course, are his family, thousands of Cubans, thousands of Cuban Americans, millions of other Americans, members of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, television news crews, Fidel Castro and all sorts of American politicians.

Some of these adults are responding to their nurturing instincts as human beings, and others are using Elian and what he represents for their own political motives. In both cases, emotions are running high, so high in fact that Joshua Cooper Ramo, the Time writer of "A Big Battle for a little Boy." (January 17, 2000), was practically sobbing in the margins. So much for objective reporting.

According to Ramo, "It is hard to think rationally about Elian when your throat is swelled and your eyes wet." Since I have been spared weeks of weepy television sound bytes, I am in a unique position to think about Elian rationally.

As far as I can tell, this whole thing has been a mess from the start. He should have been sent back to Cuba in November to be with his father. If we are going to assert our cultural superiority over Cuba because it is a Communist country (which has always been synonymous with evil enemy of the United States and very, very bad form of government), then we should stick to our beliefs. In the U.S. we do not separate children from their families unless their parents have abused or neglected them (and sometimes not even then). Nobody has turned up any dirt on Elian's father thus far, and rest assured that the rapacious American media would have discovered the smallest piece of lint on his soul and turned it into a pile of dirt if there really was anything to uncover. If Elian's father is a good guy, then the bottom line is that keeping Elian here violates John Miguel Gonzalez's rights as a parent and contradicts some of our national beliefs about parents' rights.

Some have argued that because Elian's mother died attempting to bring him here, he should stay here. I believe that because his mother is dead, his father is the only person who should have custody of him now. If children do not belong to their parents, to whom do they belong?

Furthermore, keeping Elian here this long only makes the decision more difficult. It is impossible for anyone to know or judge where he would be happier and which country would give him a better life. Elian is six and is probably not prepared to make a decision of this magnitude himself. He has no choice but to put his fate in the hands of moronic adults. But prolonging his stay, taking him to Disney World and showing him all the material things that distract American children from happy and productive relationships with human beings will not make his decision easy and will rear his potential return to Cuba. Kids like material things without realizing how little they need them to be happy. A good relationship with a loving father is worth a thousand trips to Disney World.

But Elian will be here at least until March. Should politicians and judges draw these proceedings out until next November, Elian will be a citizen thanks to the 1966 Adjustment Act which makes him a citizen one year after his arrival. Holding him hostage because of the time-consuming and twisted legal processes in this country is a mistake that does him a disservice.

Rectifying the mistakes made over the past several months is impossible. Celerity in bringing about a resolution is the best option. Should the decision fall in favor of his father, Elian's journey back to Cuba may be difficult emotionally and mentally. He would be going back to a different life, to a father he has not seen in months. In addition, Castro may use him as anti-democracy propaganda by making him publicly deny all of the positive experiences he had during his stay in Florida. Unfortunately, Elian's unsought fame makes him a symbol of Cuba's struggle, a symbol of hope for Cubans who live in Cuba but wish that they did not.

The opportunities for adults to exploit Elian and his symbolic role are numerous now, and they will continue as long as it takes to make the decision. Since lawyers, judges, and politicians in the U.S. cannot determine which country is best for Elian, the choice should be left to his father who currently lives in Cuba. Senor Gonzalez should be responsible for his son's welfare and happiness, not U.S. politicians. Should he decide at some future point to send his son on another risky boat journey to America, so be it. Until then, adults in the U.S. should butt out of something that they have no right to decide.

Alexis Pashkar is a Collegian columnist.

Letter from the editors

Voice your opinions

Hello, UMass students. For those students who are new to us, welcome to the University of Massachusetts and welcome to the Editorial/Opinion page of your paper, the Daily Collegian. And for those returning students, we hope you had a refreshing break and look forward to hearing your opinions either through columns or Letters to the editor.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with the Ed/Op page, here is a brief description. The page contains political columns that deal with important issues such as privatization and the like, and it also has within it crazy, outlandish stories dealing with everything from campus complaints about parking services to fictitious stories about weekends in the Hamptons.

But there will be a major change in the Ed/Op page this semester. In the past, regardless of the subject matter, columns were run throughout the week in a random fashion, but we have decided to change that. From now on, every day there will be a serious editorial in the upper left-hand corner of the page that deals with campus, national or even global events. Don't worry, you'll still see the wacky stories written by your favorite columnists, but we at the Collegian have decided to put the "Ed" back in Ed/Op.

Because photos of the individual authors are run with the columns, many of our writers are recognized on campus, in classrooms and in the dorms. Writing for Ed/Op is the quickest way to becoming a celebrity on campus (if there is such a thing), so if you're at all interested, come on down and write.

Not interested in becoming a regular contributor but still have an opinion on an issue? Then you can still write for the page via a Letter to the editor. These letters can be in reference to virtually anything: previously run columns, protests by students or global issues. The only restriction is that letters cannot be in response to other letters. So, if you want to get your opinion across, please bring your letters down to the Collegian or email them to dailycollegian@yahoo.com. They should be typed, no more than 400 words and contain the author's address and phone number.

Virtually everyone can contribute to the page in one form or another, and your participation is strongly encouraged. This is your voice – use it! This is a student paper written by students for students. If you are interested in writing, feel free to come down to the Campus Center Basement and ask for Gary, Alexis or Matt to find out how. Or you can call us at 545-1361 and we'll be glad to help.

Gary Mendese and Alexis Pushkar
Editorial/Opinion co-editors

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shaun Ilinitch Business Manager
Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Lenny Holston Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Ellen Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jamie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Chanele Dubofsky Jewish Affairs Editor
Lenny Holston Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Mernchel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as 'igue Life', became the Collegian Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The Misinformation Age

My brother is a genius, he really is.

Right now, my brother Doug is sitting in his house or an office near Dallas and laughing heartily to himself. You see, good ol' Doogie was one of the many people that cashed in on the Y2K hysteria that gripped much of the nation. Even I was hoping that the good people at BankBoston were going to make a mistake in my favor. Yet, I soon realized that the only "Millennium Bug" was in our heads and that I should deposit that money that I was hiding behind my autographed poster of Geri Halliwell (in a related story, her studio's computer crashed on New Year's Eve and she has decided to actually record her own voice for the next album).

Ken Mc Donald

Doug has been working diligently updating personal and corporate computers so that when the planet's odometer rolled over to 2000, we would not have a global meltdown and he subjected to the olden days when we had to leave our homes to go shopping or write letters using pen and paper. The UMass library had planned to add a large number of employees for the upcoming semester to deal with the extra rush of students that will not be able to download their term papers and final projects anymore. With each passing day it has become clear that there are going to be no major Y2K related problems. If you think about it, the whole hype and hysteria was a result of the world wondering what it would do without computers and the conveniences that they bring.

Personally, I depend on the Internet quite heavily for instant information on news stories, communication with friends, and most importantly, updates on how my fantasy basketball team is doing.

Yet, there is a simple pleasure that comes from brewing a pot of coffee in the morning and reading the Boston Globe or the Daily Collegian. To read the newspaper, you have to make a cognitive decision to enhance your knowledge about the day's events by paying the fifty cents or walking to the end of your driveway to get the paper. Many sites on the Internet cater to those that want the news thrown down their throats. If you want a prime example, turn to the Microsoft homepage. (Did you know that when you type in the word "Microsoft," it capitalizes itself? Damn you, Bill Gates. I wonder what happens when I type in "netscape" or "apple." Yeah, I thought so.)

The "gurus" at MSN.com throw what they think is important news at you like a bad joke and hope that you will like it. In fact, they give you the stories that will help them sell something somewhere down the line. Do you really think that Miramax Film's latest release is the second most important event going on today? There are many valid news sites out there; however, Microsoft will never openly reveal what they are.

Then there were the people that thought the world was going to end.

Seriously, what are all these wackos going to do now that we know that fire is not going to rain down from the sky and Baywatch will be returning for yet another season of saline and surf? These were the same jokers that bought gas masks during the Gulf War and rooted for the Pats to make the playoffs this season. Some of these people had been preparing for Armageddon and now have no idea what to do with themselves. Be ready to see a drop in the unemployment rate as many of these "Doomsday Dreamers" return from la-la land and decide to get jobs. You may actually see the "now hiring" sign in the window of McDonald's come down. On second thought, as long as there are grease fires, Mickey D's will have a need for new recruits.

If you think about it, MSN.com and cult religion have quite a bit in common. They try to convince you that you are supposed to be paranoid and that the world is going to end with the passing of each full moon. The only difference between the two is that Microsoft wants you to buy Windows 2001 and a cult wants members to buy fully automatic assault rifles and armor piercing bullets, or was that the NRA? I always get the two confused.

Well, either way, Y2K has dawned and the world is still turning. All the hubbub has quieted down and you are still at UMass. Hopefully you have become a little more secure in this the "Misinformation Age," just don't rest on your laurels for too long, because you and I both know that Bill Gates and those silly guntoting fools in Washington will be cooking up a brand new crisis for Y3K. And my brother will have a job for a long, long time.

Ken McDonald is a Collegian columnist.

Tough, "tuff" luck

It is a new year, my friends, and you can tell. For one, I'm extremely tough now. Secondly, it is obvious that it is a new year because there are no more nines in the date. Unless, of course, it's the ninth.

The whole "me being tough" thing will be clear in due time, but as usual, I have a random, round-about way of getting to the point, and you're just going to have to deal with that or skip to the final paragraph.

But anyway, the fact that it is the year 2000 causes all sorts of people who are not as tough as me and who have nothing better to do, to make dramatic changes in their lives and act as though everything is somehow different than it was roughly a month ago, when we were all entrenched in the archaic year of 1999.

Remember 1999? You know, the horse-drawn sleds and the slate drawings? And who can forget the bison hunts on the great plains? Ah, 1999. Back in the day.

Now, in the year 2000 ("Y2K" is what the kids are calling it), we have sophisticated computers and all sorts of other frills, like the printing press and thermos mugs. Phew, I'm glad we don't live in 1999 anymore. That was awful.

We are an enlightened society in this day and age.

That was a good one, don't you think?

In an extremely intelligent preparation for the coming of this new millennium, a number of people spent the weeks previous to that all-important tick of the clock by hoarding food and gasoline, and checking every few minutes to see if the world had blown up ahead of schedule. Because the world did not, in fact, blow up at all, these people, who are in no way stupid idiots for overreacting to hype, went back in their bunkers and as a result, we will all enjoy six more weeks of winter.

This all means that, according to El Nino, we will begin to see snow in about a month and a half, which is a great relief to Santa Claus, who was considering trading in his world famous sleigh for a Subaru Outback to prepare for next "winter." In turn, his reindeer were also relieved, because such a purchase would have made them obsolete to the overweight elf (except in the role of entree).

But I digress.

The most important thing that I want all of you to know out there in "Still bitching because I just got back to school" land, is that I got cool presents for Christmas, and that I am extremely tough now.

"But Seth," you whine. "I don't care what you got for Christmas!"

"I don't give a damn!," I reply in a tough voice. "If you don't like it, you can go finish the crossword puzzle and shut up."

Seth Koenig

There. Now that I've proven you wrong, let's move on.

Miss Anne (not her legal name, but rather one constructed at some point by my friend Melissa Filgerleski in an effort to protect her anonymity at all times, including during casual conversation), who works at the Whitmore Administration Building, gave me a Christmas tree ornament that very closely resembles a sheep, in that it is cute and soft and white and presumably quadri-pedal. The interesting thing about this sheep is that it has humongous ears and the word "Metallica" tattooed across its side, making it much more than just a sheep.

That's right. It's a badass Supersheep.

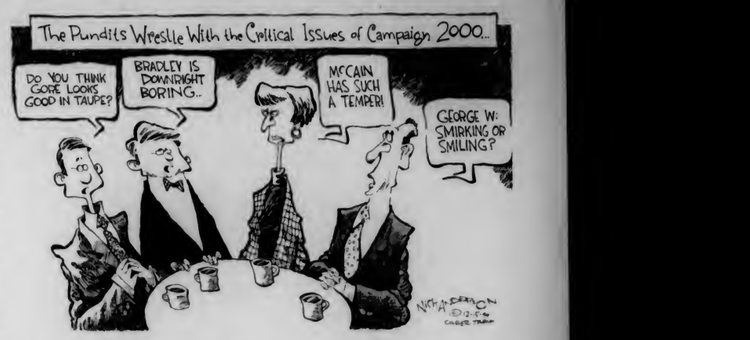
Miss Anne's equally considerate coworkers at Whitmore also sent me a Christmas treat: a bill for several thousand dollars. I thank them all quite heartily.

Along those lines, my parents, responsible for giving me a rough-and-tumble black leather jacket, also brought me Metallica's new double CD, S&M, which was my second copy, but the thought still counted.

From various sources, I also received extremely masculine notebooks that were created using deflated Spalding sports balls and a hubcap for my car.

Based on this sample of Christmas gifts that I received from a cross-section of people close to me, it becomes increasingly obvious that going into the holiday season, my friends and relatives believed that I was a wuss.

Because of their valiant efforts to correct this problem, I am now very tough. I am so tough, as a matter of fact, that I will spell the adjective incorrectly: "tuff". There, I think I made my point.



As a tough person, I not only wear tough clothes and have a tough sheep hanging off of my Christmas tree, but I also have a certain responsibility. Yes, being tough isn't just a neat way of looking – it's a job.

As required of a tough individual, I must walk around as though I not only swallowed an entire hippopotamus in one gulp, but also as though I refuse to get a tire iron removed from my rectum.

I say tire iron because anything else in that extremely sensitive region would very likely be considered "not tough", and I, being tough, simply can't have that.

So, in review, the moral of the story is that, in this new year, I am tough and I am clearly better than all of you merely because of what I wear and because I walk like I'm extremely uncomfortable. Please be very afraid of me. If you do not, I promise that I will scratch my crotch and spit a lot.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Yes, I do solemnly swear...

Goooood morning, UMass! Did everyone have a nice relaxing break? Well, I certainly hope so and I wish everyone the best of luck this semester. I really do.

For those of you who have read my columns before, that opening may have seemed a bit off key. You might even say that it was uncharacteristically nice. But I have an explanation.

You see, I have turned over a new leaf. Over intersession (while watching the "Jerry Springer Show"), I realized that I have been bitter in the past. I realized that I complained about a lot of things and maybe even made a sarcastic remark toward one or two people – but that's going to change. I now understand that sarcasm is wrong and negativity is the root of all evil. I now know there are many consequences to my actions, so I'm going to change for the better. And this column is dedicated to all of those things that I will never do again as long as I am a writer at the Daily Collegian.

Gary Mendese

First off, I will never again speak about affirmative action and how ludicrous its premises are. I'll never speak about the so-called racially biased SATs, "white privilege" or lack of "minorities" on campus. I won't speak of these things because they make me a racist. I understand now that because I'm "white", I shouldn't say anything about affirmative action because I'm automatically wrong; my opinion doesn't count. And as far as those "white" inner-city kids with no money, a crack head mother and no father go... oh well, there are bigger fish to fry.

What else is on my list? Oh yeah... I will never make fun of the wildebeests that work at Parking Services again. I realize that some people take pride in ruining peoples' days with financial burdens, and instead of getting angry at the $25 ticket and $70 tow, we should give them a smile and give ourselves a "time out." After all, we are the ones that parked in that metered space for five extra minutes after the quarter ran out. So it's our bad, not the yetis in those lovely redneck trailers located in the ass of the green lot.

Hmm... what other promises did I make? Oh, of course! I do solemnly swear to never ever make fun of the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) again. The fact of the matter is, they rock! I see how important they are and appreciate everything they have done for us here at the University. I have learned to enjoy the infantile graffiti throughout the campus, the constant "emergency meetings" they have every time one of them breaks wind, and the ever-so-groovy rallies and protests – those things are just fine with me. So the next time I walk by the GEO office, I'm going to smile. Perhaps I'll even bring them a box of Bon Bons to show my newly found affection for their organization.

So there you have it: just a few of the things that I promise never to do again as long as I am a writer here at the Collegian. It's going to be a tough time, I tell ya, but I'm determined. My final semester is going to be very laid back, and I promise to remain cool, calm and collected. Oh... and for future reference: if you don't like my columns, you can kiss my Italian ass.

Gary Mendese is a Collegian columnist.

Having fun over break

I didn't buy any extra toilet paper; not a single roll, although if I had bought extra toilet paper it most certainly would have been extra-absorbent, believe you me.

My position was that if the world did blow up on New Year's Day, a couple rolls of TP weren't going to save me from being eaten by crazed, starving dogs. And if dogs are going to eat my ass, I am damn well going to make sure that it tastes like a Boy Scout latrine. So toilet paper was out of the question.

That isn't to say that I didn't do anything at all over my [redacted] uh, I mean "winter" break. I did, in fact, do several things, which I will now relate to you in the hopes that one of you will feel sorry for me and give me a nice relaxing massage. (Mr. Scott, this does not include you.)

Rob Shulze

On Christmas Eve my father – usually a smart man – asked me to take an electric razor and cut his hair, thereby becoming just another statistic in the "mixing beer and hair care products" epidemic. (Remember, kids: Just Say No.) He wanted an inch or two off. Let's just say that by the time the night was over we matched (I've been shaving my head with a razor blade for the last month or two.).

It's kind of funny how the next day, during the family Christmas party, this story was told as a humorous anecdote. The part about me hiding in the dining room while he was in the bathroom screaming, "You butchered me! You butchered me!!!" was conveniently left out. The rage and fear were somehow forgotten in the retelling.

Speaking of fear, I also got to meet my girlfriend's extended family for the first time on Christmas day. I had heard some stories prior to this about her two uncles who "don't think [she] should have boyfriends." Yes, boy-hostile uncles. On the way to her house I consoled myself with thoughts of my own uncles. I don't know about you, but when I hear the word uncle I picture a bald, pudgy forty-year-old who considers drinking Red Dog to be an athletic activity. That's the sort of uncle I was hoping for.

Nope. Desiree's uncles happen to be in their middle twenties and very large, not in the sense of "pudgy" but more in the sense of "construction equipment." One of them had earrings. Both of them have an uncanny resemblance to the football player who tossed me in the trash can my freshman year of high school.

Thankfully, they seemed like reasonably nice guys and didn't give me wedgies or Indian sunburns or anything. My guess is that they could tell that I was a wuss by looking at me and figured that Desiree could just snap my neck herself if I ever tried anything, which is, of course, true.

As for Christmas presents, I received mainly the usual: underwear, pants, a Metallica CD and a steel barbell through my tongue. The last thing on that list, needless to say, automatically makes me much, much cooler than you. That is only true, though, if the measure of coolness increases with: (a) an overachieving drool output occasionally landing in your lap or the laps of those around you, (b) a thuper thexy lisp, and (c) a stench of brown Listerine, the barbarian kind that tells you to call Poison Control if you swallow it. To paraphrase a great movie: if that's cool, than consider me Miles Davis.

Ever since I had a hole poked through my tongue, everyone I have encountered has asked me how it felt. I'm to going to save all of you the trouble and tell you right now: it felt, in all honesty, like a kid about my age with greasy hair was shoving a very large needle through my tongue. Now leave me the hell alone.

I also received not one, but two pairs of red flannel pants. Why? I don't know.

Of course, one week after Christmas came the whole New Year thing. I spent my once-in-a-lifetime millennium party playing Twister and then falling asleep on the floor wearing a shirt belonging to a girl named Julie while watching the Queen Latifah show. (I didn't even know Queen Latifah had a show, but when you think about it, it kind of makes sense.) I wouldn't have traded it for any of the drunken orgies or barricaded paranoid ammunition-fests that went on at other locations around the world.

My sister took advantage of the fact that both my parents and myself were out to throw the traditional high-school jock booze fiesta in my house. Now, I have a fairly large house: three floors and a garage, numerous couches and beds, and plenty of rooms. Which room was trashed? Which bed was utilized for purposes better left unsaid?

That's right: mine. My towels smelled like vodka puke (mmm mmm good). My possessions were stepped on and thrown around. My bed – which I'd made before I left – was all churned up and possibly sticky. It was the only room in the house that was visibly disturbed. If I'd kept my mouth shut she would have gotten away with it. Did I turn the bitch in? Damn right. MWAHAHAHAHAHA!

What lessons did I learn over this vacation that I can impart to you, gentle reader? Well, for one, when confronted by glowering uncles, the best strategy is to tremble and, failing that, simultaneously whimper and urinate yourself. Also, it is just plain wrong for somebody to get some action in your bed when you, yourself, do not. Oh, yeah, and if you decide not to buy extra toilet paper, just to make a point and the world does not, in fact, detonate, the chances are very good that you will consume large amounts of salsa and chips while watching the Bruins lose to the Devils and then have a large bowl movement followed by the realization that you are completely out of the requisite sanitary tissue.

And then you will wish the world had blown up.

And then you will be very glad that your mom left her copy of Martha Stewart Living within easy reaching distance.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian columnist.

There is a MANDATORY meeting for ALL columnists interested in writing this semester tomorrow night at 7:00 in the Collegian office. Weekly and bi-weekly spots will be assigned so it is imperative that everyone shows up.

Thank you,
Gary, Alexis and Matt

U.S. needs to butt out

He sits alone at night without his son. His ex-wife is dead and he is the boy's father, but his son is not being returned to him. He, by all available accounts, loves his son, but the leader of his country is making it impossible to him to see his child.

Or at least, that's what Republican leaders and Cuban-exiles would say, angrily pointing towards Fidel Castro and proclaiming that Juan Gonzalez, the son of father Juan Gonzalez, should never be returned to a Communist nation, even if it is to his father. For weeks, the saga of the boy has developed, from the first few days when the boy was rescued after his mother and 11 others died attempting to illegally enter the United States, to the question of whether the boy should be returned to his father in Cuba, to an Immigration and Naturalization Service decision to send the boy back to the island nation, and now into a world of political wrangling.

Sam Wilkinson

Through all of this, both Castro-hating Cuban-exiles and Congressional Republicans have made fools of themselves while defending the boy's right to stay in the United States.

The exiled-Cubans have loudly stated that no child should have to grow up in a Communist country such as Cuba. Rather, he should be allowed to stay in the United States, the land of opportunity.

Oh, what wonderful opportunities Gonzalez would have had before him had his mother and the others made it to the United States. After all, this is the land of the free, the home of the brave. This is where dreams come true. In the United States, Elian would have a chance to be wealthy, something he could never become in that evil den of Communism: Cuba. After all, now that he is here, America's wonderful education system will usher Elian into their well-prepared and well-funded classrooms with open arms. As is standard for an child within the United States, he will receive a top-notch education. Meanwhile, he will receive the free health insurance that is available to poor families in the United States should he get sick. After a wonderful high school experience, Elian will be able to make a considerable fortune and to relax comfortably in his later years. This is the American experience that Cuban-exiles feel will be available to him.

But realistically? His mother was a poor illegal alien to the United States, and had she lived, might not be allowed to stay in the United States and even if she hadn't been discovered, she would have probably struggled. Elian would have attended schools that were probably in poor shape, had a hard time getting adequate health care and probably never would have been able to have the dream's that are available to, at this point, a very small number of Americans.

Meanwhile, Republicans suddenly care about immigrants. In fact, after some of them had gone so far as to suggest a wall between the United States and Mexico, now suddenly sensitive Republicans are calling for the boy to be allowed within the borders of the United States. Never mind the blatant hypocrisy of suddenly caring about people that Republicans had recently spent a good deal of their time spitting on, their blatant disregard for one of their main issues is even worse.

After all, hasn't it been Republicans who have championed family values in recent years? Hasn't it been Republicans who assailed families split apart? Hasn't it been Republicans who have sought to re-create the traditional idea of the American family? And now when the INS states that the decision that they are making is in the name of the family, that Elian Gonzalez should be returned to Cuba so that he can be with his family, Republicans are against the decision.

Apparently, xenophobic Republicans, and for that matter, xenophobic Cuban-exiles, only care about American families. Meanwhile, it is Juan Gonzalez, and, perhaps more importantly, his son Elian who are being cheated by the politics that surround them. Elian has become nothing more than a zoo animal for over-zealous Castro-haters, be them Republican or exiled Cubans. He is photographed and recorded when he plays. The six-year-old is nothing more than a political pawn for people hell bent on exacting some sort of revenge against a nation that refuses to abandon its political vision.

The worst of it? Elian hasn't been allowed to speak for himself. Cuban-exiles and Republicans seem to be completely uninterested in letting the boy speak for himself, and while they trump up claims that Elian has repeatedly asked to stay in the United States, they have repeatedly ignored claims that Elian has repeatedly asked to be returned to Cuba.

But why let the boy speak for himself? He cannot possibly understand the complexities of the politics that surround American-Cuban relations. He can't possibly know about Castro's Cuba or the America's freedom. He can't possibly know about embargos, missile crises or the Bay of Pigs.

Then again, why should he have to know about any of those things, and why should they matter when a boy has been separated from his loving father? Why isn't Elian the key issue? Why isn't his well being the key issue?

Because Republicans and Cuban-exiles just don't care about Elian's well being, but rather, how he can be used to exact some sort of revenge on Castro. Meanwhile, Elian sits in the United States separated from his father, Juan, in Cuba, a parent who might never get to see his child again because xenophobic Republicans and Cuban-exiles are far more interested in punishing Juan's political leader than doing what is best for him and his son.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Do you want to be heard by 17,00 people who may even be adoring fans?

Well the Collegian Ed Op page could be your stage. If you are interested in writing a column for this page, please contact Gary or Alexis at 545-1361 (leaving a message) or stop by room 113 in the Campus Center basement.

and if that isn't enough, you'll be seen by the world at www.dailycollegian.com

Computer future wearable:

UM Professor makes life easy and portable

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

In a promising technological world, many people would admit that they feel much better having a computer by their side. University of Massachusetts Computer Science Professor Andy Fagg has taken this concept to another level with his latest idea.

Fagg is developing a wearable computer that positions a tiny computer screen in front of his face. To some it may sound a little overly-sophisticated, but Fagg said he is used to the double take many people give him.

At the grocery store, most people look and think I'm past them, and then stare and stare," Fagg said in a statement.

Fagg said his aim is to teach the computer to "notice" a user's everyday routine and store information accordingly. The system would be sensitive to everything around and then make decisions and small information to divulge and at what time. For example, Fagg has programmed it to notice what times during the day he has meetings and "It should know that I'm going to a meeting and pull out appropriate documents, including minutes of the last meeting, and notes of related discussions," Fagg said.

He said he could also tell the system that he'll be cooking a certain recipe and it would then assist him in preparations. The computer system would already know what he has in his home cabinets and would be able to tell him what he needs to pick up at the grocery store.

"If I drive near the grocery store, it wakes up and whispers, 'Don't forget to stop at the grocery store, and by the way, you need these three items for the dinner you want to cook tonight,'" Fagg said.

It may seem almost impossible for such a small device to be able to convey so much information, but as Fagg expressed, "with a bit of my own soldering," the system is constructed entirely from off-the-shelf components that Fagg put together.

There is even a hand-held keyboard the size of a traditional computer mouse. Two batteries provide half of the device's six-pound weight. There is an assortment of serial ports and video ports, a headset with earphones, a video monitor and a Global Positioning System (GPS) receiver, similar to the ones in upscale cars. All of the machinery is easily crammed into a blue canvas camera bag, with wires projecting out of it.

The current challenge Fagg said he now faces is teaching the computer to politely interrupt him.

"The machine should present information at the appropriate time, and in the appropriate way," Fagg said. "I don't care what I need at the grocery store if I'm sitting in my office."

Fagg said most people wonder whether this kind of technology is catching on, though according to him, commercial wearable systems are already available. Microprocessors are getting smaller each year, making it possible to make wearable computers Fagg said.

While some might see a wearable computer as a bit of a pest and computer-dependent, Fagg said he sees it as a way to make life simpler.

"The machine doesn't nag you after the fact, when you've gotten home and forgotten to buy a gallon of milk," Fagg said. "It reminds you to pick up the milk when you're still in a position to solve the problem."

Computer Science professor Andy Fagg is currently developing a wearable computer that will aid in everyday activities.

COURTESY OF ANDY FAGG

In '99 Labor Unions Gained Most Members in Two Decades

By Nancy Cleeland
Los Angeles Times

In a sign that aggressive organizing is starting to pay off, U.S. labor unions gained more members last year than at any time in the past two decades.

By adding 265,000 workers, unions were able to keep pace with the rapidly expanding economy, which grew by two million jobs in 1999, according to numbers released Jan. 19 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Significantly, the rate of private-sector unionization held steady at about 9.4-percent, breaking a free fall that began in 1975, when one in four private sector workers belonged to a union.

The overall unionization rate was also unchanged, at 13.9-percent.

California led the nation, gaining 132,000 members on top of the 87,000 added in 1998. In contrast, some states saw continuing declines, notably New Jersey, which lost 32,000 union members last year.

Labor unions, which have poured millions into high-profile organizing drives in recent years, were helped by two outside factors: The economy grew, which pulled thousands of new workers into unionized industries, while the flight of manufacturing jobs to low-wage countries, which was intense in the early 1990s, slowed.

The numbers were welcome news for the beleaguered labor movement, which has been trying mightily to stop its decline and regain relevancy in the changing economy.

But economists said it will be several years before anyone can declare 1999 a turning point.

"These numbers don't show a resurgence," said Henry Farber, a labor economist at Princeton University. "They show a stability, which in a sense is a victory. But to me, it's really looking for the silver lining to say, 'Hey, look at this. We didn't do any worse this year than last year.'"

Labor leaders hailed the numbers as evidence of a comeback.

"We're turning the corner," said AFL-CIO President John J. Sweeney, who has pushed unions to devote more resources to organizing since taking the helm of the 13-million-member federation four years ago. "Our challenge for the future is to remain focused and to broaden our efforts."

High-profile organizing drives championed by Sweeney have had mixed results. He also has encouraged member unions to devote at least 30-percent of their resources to organizing – a dramatic change from the recent past, when unions instead focused almost exclusively on serving existing members.

Sweeney and others have argued that unless labor rebuilds its strength in the private sector, it can do little to improve wages and benefits.

Turn to LABOR, page A12

Nursing dean awarded national honor

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

School of Nursing dean Eileen T. Breslin was recently elected as a Distinguished Practitioner by the National Academy of Practice in Nursing.

The academy, which is located in Maryland, is comprised of ten small-er branch academies within the organization as a whole, that represent different areas in the health care practice.

Founded in 1981, the academy is based on the desires of its members to serve Congress and the Executive Branch of the United States government in a realistic advisory capacity. It is the only interdisciplinary assemblage of health care practitioners and is comprised of experts.

The academies both honor and represent professionals in a wide variety of different types of public service.

The areas represented by the academy span to include dentistry, pediatric medicine, nursing, optometry, osteopathic medicine, pharmacy, medicine, psychology, social work and veterinary medicine.

According to a representative of the National Academies of Practice (N.A.P.) Breslin is one of only 100 active practitioners in her field chosen to receive the honor of being an active practitioner.

She said that only the best-qualified nursing professionals were chosen and that these people were, "considered some of the most distinguished professionals in the United States."

According to the academy a Distinguished Practitoner is chosen with several factors in mind. One is an intense commitment to the field and the other is a long record of distinguished service to a specific area of study.

Barbara Pitoniak, a representative of the University of Massachusetts, explained that Breslin is well chosen for the award due to her "stature in the field of health care practice."

"This is an honor of distinction for one of our faculty members," Pitoniak said. Hurdis Griffith, president of the National Academy of Practice in Nursing, explained in

Turn to NURSING, page 7

Rhetoric Aside, Reality Will Determine Success of Bradley or Gore

By Ronald Brownstein
Los Angeles Times

INDIANOLA, Iowa – It's the pol vs. the professor, the realist vs. the reformer.

In their frantic final search for votes in Iowa and New Hampshire, Democrats Al Gore and Bill Bradley are offering voters very different conceptions of the presidency – and, in the process, subtly sharpening the class divides already shaping their race.

At its core, the dispute revolves around competing visions of the most effective leadership style at a time when the country is generally content yet narrowly divided between the two major parties.

Bradley is portraying himself as a visionary idealist who will use the presidency to transform the parameters of the possible on issues such as health care and campaign finance reform; as Bradley tells it, Vice President Gore appears as a compromising careerist too willing "to settle" for small change.

Turn to GRAVES, page B12

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-
COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0060

The historic
Salem Cross Inn
Route 9 West Brookfield, Ma 01585 Fine Food & Drink
salemxinn@aol.com
www.salemcrossinn.com

Pioneer Valley Transit Authority
The Shuttle Has Landed!
AMITY SHUTTLE
It's the Amity Shuttle, PVTA's answer to Amherst's need for FREE around town local transportation. With the Amity Shuttle local residents, as well as students, can use the shuttle to and from stops including the Graduate Research Center, Post Office, Village Park, and other key locations.
The Shuttle runs from 7:00AM to 11:00PM weekdays with a reduced schedule on weekends and during UMASS holidays. Pick up your complete schedule at any of the locations listed below.

GREEN 37 — AMITY SHUTTLE WEEKDAY SCHEDULE — EFFECTIVE JANUARY 2000

HAIGIS MALL	COWLES LANE	NORTH PROSPECT STREET	BIG Y Arrive	BIG Y Leave	SOUTH PROSPECT STREET	AMHERST POST OFFICE	HAIGIS MALL
7:00	7:02	7:04	—	7:15	7:20	7:22	7:30
7:30	7:32	7:34	—	7:45	7:50	7:52	8:00
8:00	8:02	8:04	—	8:15	8:20	8:22	8:30
8:30	8:32	8:34	—	8:45	8:50	8:52	9:00
9:00	9:02	9:04	9:15	9:45	9:50	9:52	10:00
10:00	10:02	10:04	10:15	10:45	10:50	10:52	11:00
11:00	11:02	11:04	—	11:15	11:20	11:22	11:30
11:30	11:32	11:34	—	11:45	11:50	11:52	12:00
12:00	12:02	12:04	—	12:15	12:20	12:22	12:30
12:30	12:32	12:34	—	12:45	12:50	12:52	1:00
1:00	1:02	1:04	1:15	1:45	1:50	1:52	2:00
2:00	2:02	2:04	2:15	2:45	2:50	2:52	3:00
3:00	3:02	3:04	—	3:15	3:20	3:22	3:30
3:30	3:32	3:34	—	3:45	3:50	3:52	4:00
4:00	4:02	4:04	—	4:15	4:20	4:22	4:30
4:30	4:32	4:34	—	4:45	4:50	4:52	5:00
5:00	5:02	5:04	—	5:15	5:20	5:22	5:30
5:30	5:32	5:34	—	5:45	5:50	5:52	6:00
6:00	6:02	6:04	—	6:15	6:20	6:22	6:30
6:30	6:32	6:34	—	6:45	6:50	6:52	7:00
7:00	7:02	7:04	7:15	7:45	7:50	7:52	8:00
8:00	8:02	8:04	8:15	8:45	8:50	8:52	9:00
9:00	9:02	9:04	9:15	9:45	9:50	9:52	10:00
10:00	10:02	10:04	10:15	10:45	10:50	10:52	11:00

Route Information
Due to traffic and weather conditions, times are subject to change.
UMASS Transit 24-hour hotline: 545-1633.
No fares are charged on this route.

Schedules are available at the Campus Center Information Desk, Whitmore Information Desk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst Police Station, Amherst Chamber of Commerce, all Amherst Public Libraries, the Peter Pan Ticket Office and on all UMASS Transit buses.

Visit our website at: www.umass.edu/bus
The Amity Shuttle is a trial service of the PVTA. Continuation of this service depends on your patronage.
PVTA

For additional information, please call 413-781-PVTA

Taipei & Tokyo
Chinese and Japanese
Sushi Bar • Luncheon Specials
Dine In or Take Out
Gift Certificates
1997 1998 1999

Which Store Has Your Book at the Lowest Price?
Amazon.com $122.95
Calculus by Garret J. Etgen List Price: $122.95
Barnes&Noble.com $111.75
VarsityBooks.com $101.41
We found it for $81.00!*
*Prices as of November 29, 1999
Search Over 25 Stores to find the Lowest Price!
BESTBOOKBUYS
http://www.bestbookbuys.com

■ nursing

continued from page A6

his letter congratulating Breslin's achievement that Breslin's, "stature in the field of health care practice brings honor to all of us."

He also commented about the organization as a whole and its impact upon the future of health care. He said that no other organization was, "the breadth of knowledge and experience within its membership to face and discuss today's health care delivery questions from an interdisciplinary perspective."

Breslin was appointed as dean of the School of Nursing at the University in 1998. She will receive her medallion from the National Academy of Practice in April in Bethesda, Maryland.

New professors bring media research to Department

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

As the new semester begins, the University of Massachusetts communications department welcomes two new professors, Erica Scharrer and Anne Ciecko to its faculty.

Erica Scharrer, a published author has recently begun to spend time looking into the press coverage Hillary Rodham Clinton is receiving as she campaigns for a seat on the Senate. As a continuation of ongoing research involving the media, Scharrer looks forward to discussing this and other issues within her classes this upcoming semester.

Among some of what Scharrer feels are her more important studies is a report of how media coverage becomes more negative toward First Ladies when they take a politically active role.

Scharrer spent the last year at the State University of New York at Geneseo where she focused on media messages and their impact on individuals. She has spent extensive time on the socialization of gender roles and the influence of media violence on the attitudes and behaviors of audience members.

Through her years of research, she has spent time looking at how television exposure has impacted criminal behavior. She focused on the impact the macho persona has on how people perceive television and how they react in the world. She said that she has found that many times with regards to people who are perceived as being "macho," there is a higher likelihood that they would be influenced by violence shown on television and in other medias.

On this topic, Scharrer is the co-author of a recently published book, "Television: What's on, who's watching, and what it means." In addition, she has written many journal articles and book chapters, which she has presented analyses of at both national and international conferences.

Previously Scharrer completed her Ph.D. at Syracuse University's S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications. After spending many years in New York, Scharrer said she chose UMass because of the "strength of the department." She also said, "I hold the highest respect for my colleagues here at the University."

Many members of the faculty and staff of the communications department are equally enthusiastic about the addition of Scharrer, as Michael Morgan, department chair expressed. He said he was thrilled to have her as a part of the staff and her continued research would be an excellent addition to the University.

Scharrer has also been awarded a Faculty Research Grant from UMass to continue her research on violent content in relation to all types of mass media.

Anne Ciecko, the other new communications professor has concentrated her research on a broad range of subjects involving cultural studies and plans to incorporate this knowledge into her classes.

Her current research focuses on international women filmmakers and popular Asian films, especially those of India and Hong Kong. She has also focused on British women in film. While researching, Ciecko has considered theoretical issues including the nation and cultural hybridism by combining analysis of media texts with studies of film production, distribution, exhibition and audience reception.

She is currently developing new courses in global cinema and feminist theory. In addition she plans to create a project focusing on local Asian communities and popular culture at UMass. The program will link her current research into her teaching. One of the most important aspects to her work is community interest and she said she feels this area and University is a great place to develop such programs.

Her ideas are being warmly welcomed by the department, as Michael Morgan, department chair said, "it's fantastic to have Ciecko."

In the past she has gained extensive experience coordinating both multicultural community-based art projects, as well as university and museum film festivals. She has also worked curating film, video and visual arts and while being involved in archival research.

Ciecko has published many articles on gender and global cinema as well as presented at national and international conferences on related topics.

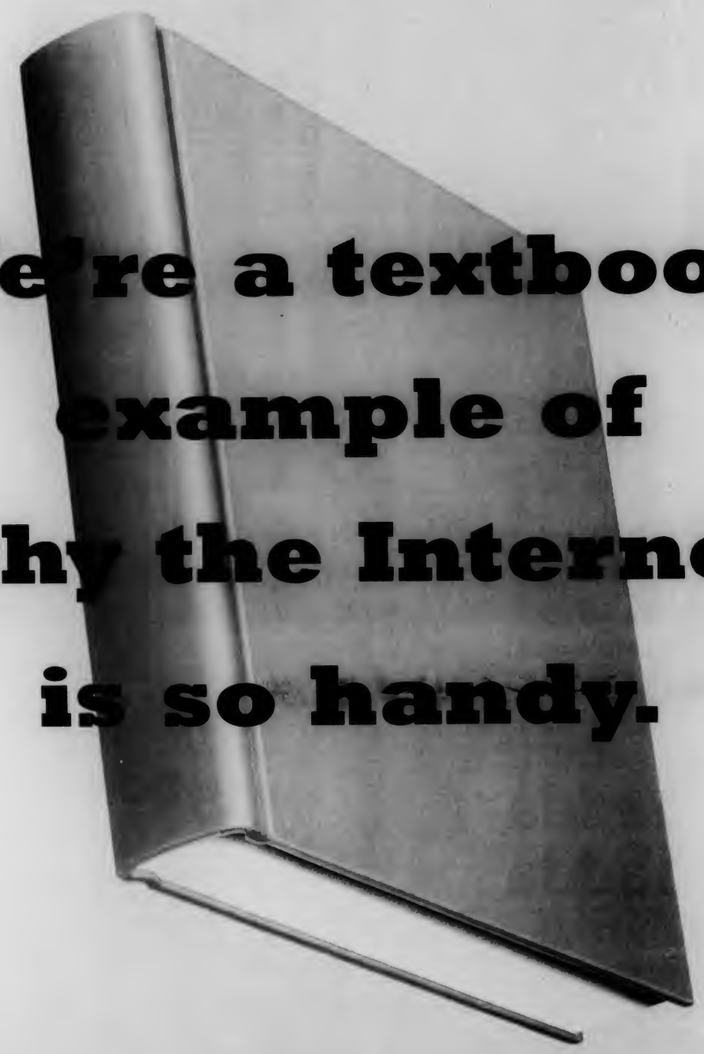
She studied in Pennsylvania for her earlier college education at both La Salle University and Pennsylvania State University. She received her Ph.D. in critical and cultural studies from the University of Pittsburgh.

The Communications department is looking forward to the additional knowledge both Ciecko and Scharrer will bring to the University, Morgan said. "We are looking forward to many years of great classes and high quality research on important issues."

A surprise attack

Megan Kellermann waits for the perfect moment to strike Billy Murnetta, a Mount Holyoke student, and her son Tommy with a hidden snowball.

Erica Scharrer has joined the Department of Communications



Yadda Yadda or Blah-blah-blah
Chances are, you're probably growing weary of all the advice about starting a career. Not just a job, mind you, but an honest-to-goodness lifetime decision. If that sounds familiar – and a little daunting – CIGNA is ready to help.
We're a worldwide leader in employee benefits and financial services. From health care to investment services, we strive to live up to our reputation as "A Business of Caring." Our workforce – approximately 43,000 strong – is diverse, yet everyone is committed to improving the lives of the people we serve every day.
We offer numerous roles for college graduates with a variety of backgrounds, but we don't hire people for just one job. Individuals get the chance to define themselves through their strengths and career goals. And we help through one-of-a-kind job rotational programs and professional development tracks.
The people who work here genuinely seem to enjoy the experience. Sure, we hand them plenty of responsibility – most prefer the challenges to bring out their best. Beyond that, we take pride as a company in the way we nurture their dreams outside the workplace – in their families and communities.
One CIGNA: Many Opportunities.
CIGNA
A Business of Caring.

Visit us on the Web:
www.cigna.com/working/college
We're an equal opportunity employer. M/F/D/V. "CIGNA" refers to CIGNA Corporation and/or one or more of its subsidiaries. Most employees are employed by subsidiaries of CIGNA Corporation, which provide insurance and related products.

We take OCMP
BUFFALO WINGS DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY
256-8911
Hours: Sun-Weds 11am-3am
Thurs-Sat 11 am-4 am
HELP WANTED :
Pays $60 to $120 Per Shift
1-TOPPING PIZZA PLUS 8 BREADSTICKS
$7.99 MEDIUM $10.99 LARGE $12.99 EX-LARGE
10 BUFFALO WINGS $5.99
1-TOPPING PIZZA & DOUBLE CHEESYBREAD
$8.99 MEDIUM $11.99 LARGE $13.99 EX-LARGE
TWO 1-TOPPING PIZZAS
$12.99 MEDIUM $15.99 LARGE $18.99 EX-LARGE
1 TOPPING PIZZA
$6.99 MEDIUM $8.99 LARGE $10.99 EX-LARGE

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Bud + Bud Light Bottles $2.25
Rum + Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House, Hip-hop, and Top 40 music open by SATURDAY - SAB Productions DJ's Fooz, Cromo, and Uncle
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

© 1999 VarsityBooks.com, Inc.

We're a textbook example of why the Internet is so handy.

We realize we don't have to waste your time explaining the virtues of the Internet. Let's just say that at VarsityBooks.com we've made the most of it. Not only can you save up to 40% on your textbooks, but you'll also receive them in just one to three business days. All on a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. What more do you need to know?

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS.

VarsityBooks.com

Bluewall gains new look despite flood and loss of heat

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Students returning to classes and campus today will be greeted by a new look at the Bluewall, unaware of problems that the popular coffee spot has recently been through. On Jan. 18, a valve in the Campus Center sprinkler system burst, causing water to flood the Bluewall, a mechanical room, and various Campus Center meeting rooms.

For a few days after the incident, the Bluewall was forced to move onto the Concourse, reducing their menu to soup, sandwiches, and coffee. When asked about the accident, Doug Warka, a supervisor for Hotel Maintenance Facilities said, "A one inch iron cast sprinkler line fractured at a 90 degree elbow, causing the water to pour in."

Warka explained that the Campus Center uses a "wet charge system" making it more difficult to stop the water because of the way the water meets the air pressure.

Drawing an analogy, Warka said, "Imagine you're using a hundred foot hose with a nozzle on the end. You close the nozzle and go to shut the water valve off. Then if you pick up the hose, and open the nozzle again, water will still be coming out of there because of the air pressure." A wet charge system has this type of air pressure built up throughout the system at the sprinkler heads.

The four main water valves are 200 pounds each, which meant that it took maintenance crews about ten minutes to turn them off, while water continued to pour out. Despite this Warka said they were able to contain the water once they shut off the system's main valve in the mechanical room.

The cause of the fractured valve is thought to be either bad casting or, more likely, a frozen rupture in the pipes. "We're still not sure what caused it," Warka said. "It could have been lousy casting and a small amount of pressure just set it off." However, Warka believes that the frozen rupture is the more likely explanation, even if the temperature did not seem cold enough to cause it.

As for any damaged caused, Warka commented, "There was very little damage to the Bluewall itself and most of the damage was done in the Mec. Room, which is meant to handle water anyway." There was also some damage to the Campus Center's East meeting rooms, caused by water dripping down from above.

Warka credited the successful containment to the maintenance crew's fast reaction time, three large sub pumps, and various vacuums used to pick up the water.

In an unrelated incident, a mechanical heater coil failed that same day, casing a loss of heat to the Bluewall. The coil heats up water, which is then sent out to heat the building. When that coil failed, it caused a delay in the Bluewall reopening its doors. Warka said that once the coil was fixed, the Bluewall will be able to resume business, as everything else is already operational.

KEN MCDONALD/ COLLEGIAN

Stringing beads

Claudia Canale-Parola of Amherst helps her daughter Isa pick out beads at August the First in Amherst Center.

Oceanographer observes change in cycle in Pacific

By Usha Lee McFarling
Los Angeles Times

New satellite data released recently show the Pacific Ocean may be undergoing a dramatic climate shift – much longer-lived than any El Nino – that could alter global weather patterns, disrupt fish stocks and perhaps lead Southern California into decades of drier than normal weather.

The changing cycle, known as the Pacific Decadal Oscillation, was formally identified just three years ago. Scientists tracking its progression say it appears that the eastern Pacific is undergoing a significant ocean-cooling trend.

Their interest was prompted by highly unusual temperatures throughout the Pacific Ocean. The most recent satellite images indicate waters along the coast of the Americas are several degrees cooler than normal while a massive horseshoe-shaped chunk of the Western Pacific is abnormally warm.

"It's bigger than El Nino," said Bill Patzert, a satellite oceanographer at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., who announced the findings on Jan. 19. "This is a very strong signal."

Records for the past century show the Pacific Ocean climate has shifted periodically every 20 to 30 years, at times ushering in prolonged shifts in U.S. rainfall patterns.

But whether it is shifting now remains an open question – and a topic of fierce debate. Leading climatologists this week said it was far too early to tell whether such a long-term shift was occurring. They warned that any predictions of drought were tenuous at best.

"Whether it's going to stick around is anyone's guess," said Nathan Mantua, a climatologist at the University of Washington and an expert on the oscillation's effects.

Nevertheless, Patzert theorizes the changes signal the Pacific is shifting to a "cool phase" that could last for decades, bringing far more rain than usual to the Pacific Northwest and less to Southern California.

Since 1977, the Pacific Ocean climate has been in a "warm phase," marked by higher than normal rainfall in Southern California and more El Nino events. Historical records show a cool phase persisted between 1947 and 1977 and that a warm, wetter phase persisted between 1925 and 1945.

While the day-by-day weather effects of a shift in the oscillation are subtle, the effects are important because they are widespread and long-lasting.

"Over time, these changes are huge," said Aarts Leetma , Director of the National Atmospheric and Oceanographic Administration's Climate Prediction Center in Washington. He added that the shift may play a role in Southern California's current dry spell and last year's mid-Atlantic drought.

Patzert's new data was beamed down from the Topex/Poseideon satellite, jointly run by JPL and France's space agency. The satellite uses radar to measure ocean height and converts those measurements to estimates of ocean temperature. Warm water, because it expands, can be higher by several centimeters.

The images show a steady cooling of several degrees in waters throughout the eastern Pacific and abnormally warm waters in the western portion. Even small changes in ocean temperature can have massive effects on climate.

But links between the Pacific Decadal Oscillation and drought remain unproven, said Dan Cahan, director of the climate research division at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at the University of California, San Diego.

Cahan is among a number of climatologists who argue there is not enough evidence to confirm any shift. Although fascinated by the recent ocean changes, many said the pattern could merely be an extended short-term event, like a La Nina, which also cools waters in the eastern Pacific.

The pattern could even be caused by something as random as a series of storms, said David Battisti, a professor of atmospheric science at the University of Washington, who has been monitoring the current changes for several months using records of sea surface temperature collected by ships and buoys, which he says are more accurate than satellite data.

The announcement by JPL scientists that the ocean is probably undergoing a long-term shift is "premature," and would require several more years of temperature records, he said. "You can't make a prediction from a snapshot."

More clear is the relationship between the Pacific Decadal Oscillation and fish stocks. After the last shift in the mid-1970s, "salmon runs in the lower 48 went to hell in a handbasket and got really good in Alaska," said Michael M. Mullin, who directs Scripp's Marine Life Research Group.

While it takes a few years for fish populations to respond to oceanic changes, early indications point to a cooling trend.

Now you have the freedom to fly anywhere Southwest Airlines does, coast-to-coast, for only $99 or less each way with roundtrip purchase when you travel on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Saturday. Just purchase your roundtrip ticket at least seven days in advance, within one day of making reservations, and by February 2, 2000. Remember, seats are limited and won't be available on some flights during busy travel times and holiday periods like Spring Break and Easter.

En Español
1-800-VAMONOS™
(1-800-826-6667)

1-800-I-FLY-SWA®
(1-800-435-9792)

www.southwest.com

EARN A FREE TICKET

Receive double credit as a Rapid Rewards Freedom Reward Member when you purchase Ticketless Travel on our web site. After just four roundtrips, you'll have a free ticket!

SOUTHWEST AIRLINES®
A SYMBOL OF FREEDOM

©2000 Southwest Airlines Co.

Fares may be higher Sunday, Monday, Thursday, and Friday

(Each way with roundtrip purchase)

FROM BRADLEY INTERNATIONAL TO:

Baltimore/Washington (BWI) (29 miles to downtown Washington, D.C.)	$44
Birmingham	$99
Chicago (Midway)	$92
Cleveland	$88
Detroit	$99
Ft. Lauderdale (22 miles to downtown Miami)	$99
Houston (Hobby)	$99
Indianapolis	$99
Jackson	$99
Jacksonville	$99
Kansas City	$99
Las Vegas	$99
Los Angeles (LAX)	$99
Louisville	$99
Miami (See Ft. Lauderdale)
Nashville	$92
New Orleans	$99
Orlando	$99
Phoenix	$99
Raleigh-Durham	$70
Reno/Tahoe	$99
St. Louis	$99
Tampa Bay	$99
Washington, D.C. (See Baltimore/Washington)

Does not include travel to or from Florida 3/10–4/10/00.

Offer applies to published, scheduled service only and includes nonstop, direct (same plane), and connecting service.

Fares do not include federal excise tax of $2.50 that will be imposed on each flight segment of your itinerary. A flight segment is defined as a takeoff and a landing.

Fares do not include airport taxes of up to $12 roundtrip. Your plans must include a stayover of at least one night. Tickets are nonrefundable but (except for tickets purchased through our Group Tickets program) may be applied toward future travel on Southwest Airlines. Travel through June 9, 2000. Fares are subject to change until ticketed. Any change in itinerary may result in an increase in fare.

FREE TICKET OFFER: If you are not a Rapid Rewards Freedom Reward Member, sign up after purchasing on the Internet to receive double credit on travel completed by June 9, 2000. Your plastic membership card will be mailed within 14–21 days and you must present it at the gate upon check-in each time you fly to receive credit toward a free ticket. Changes to your itinerary may eliminate the double credit offer. All Rapid Rewards rules apply.

UMass had average criminal semester

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

After a semester that saw the national media focus their attention on the University of Massachusetts following three assaults on campus, Deputy Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor described the remainder of last semester as being fairly average.

"We know that we had a number of very high profile cases this year on campus," O'Connor said, "and that heightened the awareness on campus on issues of safety."

O'Connor said that the increased campus awareness put more of a demand on everyone at the University of Massachusetts Police Department, from the Chief of the UMPD John Luippold to the most junior security officer.

"Having people working those additional hours was taxing," O'Connor said.

Officers were working more hours last semester after campus safety came into question and more attention was focused towards student safety.

The increased attention of individuals on campus was the result of three assaults in November, two of them sexual in nature. On both Nov. 2 and Nov. 16, women were sexually assaulted near the Campus Center Pond. On Nov. 14, three individuals attacked a woman. They sprayed her with pepper spray and punched her before she was able to escape. On Nov. 16, during an anti-sexual assault rally outside of the Student Union, a woman said that she had been assaulted, a statement which she later recanted through a lawyer. No criminal charges have been sought against the young woman.

In O'Connor's opinion, who said in November that she had never seen anything like the first two assaults happening so close to one another, the one positive aspect surrounding the assaults on campus was the increased attention that was focused on campus safety.

"Obviously, when people are focusing more on safety issues, people themselves will be safer," O'Connor said. "People capitalized on their opportunities for education, and, as a department, we not only police, but we look for opportunities to educate our students."

But O'Connor said that the assaults were not the only high profile cases on campus this year. Two students died last semester after being asphyxiated. Arthur Rudolph was discovered in the backseat of his car in Puffton Village on Oct. 4, and Andrew Brown died on Dec. 1 in his room in Cashin Dorm. Both deaths were listed as unattended.

"There were also pedestrians who were struck," O'Connor said. Tina Haafke, a student at Smith, was struck and killed by a car in Northampton on Sept. 27. UMass students Lisa Abrams and Courtney Spivack were struck on Nov. 29 on University Avenue near Southwest. A car struck Ruth Abrams, a visiting professor, on Oct. 7.

"In my seventeen years here, there will always be some sort of high profile case in a given semester or during a given year," O'Connor said. "That's the nature of so many people being so close to one another."

O'Connor said that the number of high profile cases within the UMPD are not necessarily those that make it out.

"Whether or not the community or the media picks on high profile case is somewhat different from where we stand," O'Connor said.

But the UMPD's does not always focus on high profile cases. In fact, the number of high profile cases is a fraction compared to the every day cases that are the responsibilities of officers. As far as other cases went, O'Connor described the year as being nothing unusual.

"None of the usual crimes were unusually high or low," O'Connor said, mentioning that larcenies were "fairly average." She said that her educated guess was that UMass had an average semester not including the number of high profile crimes.

"We probably had the same number of students arrested for alcohol possession as before, probably the same number of stolen cars, probably the same numbers of other crimes," O'Connor said.

As for the assaults, which remain under UMPD investigation, O'Connor and police spokesman Jim Abrams said the investigations are continuing.

"We are continuing to engage in a slow and methodical investigation as we analyze available evidence and attempt to put together the pieces before us," O'Connor said.

Officers have been looking for a white man with a medium build, between six feet and six feet three inches tall who was described by the victim's of both the first and second on campus assaults. The three individuals from the third attack were described as being somewhat shorter, between five foot nine inches and six feet tall, but two of the three attackers were white.

No arrests have been made in conjunction with the assaults.

■ budget

continued from page A2

depend on the percentage cut.

"The three percent cut will mean that people (faculty and staff) will have to be fired," Larson said. "The same is true with two percent in smaller departments."

Larson said even though the budget cuts will be for next year, some smaller departments have already cancelled individual class sections for the spring semester. Department heads don't want to commit to hiring teaching assistants or part-time faculty members next spring if they have to let them go in the fall, he said.

While the two percent cut would only be felt by certain departments, Larson said those departments such as the College of Fine Arts and Humanities and the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, that rely entirely on the state budget for funding, would be impacted the greatest.

Other colleges such as the College of Natural Science and Mathematics are heavily funded by federal agencies that contract faculty and graduate students to perform research. These departments do not rely on state budget allocation for funding.

According to Larson, these areas of academic interest would be least influenced by a two percent cut.

However, he commented that a three percent cut would affect all academic departments in one way or another.

"In some areas, a two percent cut is going to be a catastrophic effect, but a three percent cut will be felt quite heavily by all areas," Larson said.

Larson also said Chancellor Scott should not be blamed for the budget cuts. According to Larson, UMass-Boston is also facing the same kind of budget cuts. Larson said, to his knowledge, Dartmouth is the only UMass campus not experiencing cuts in their budget. He said he did not understand why only some UMass campuses were experiencing them.

He added that people should question UMass President William Bulger as to why these cuts are taking place during a time when the economy is so strong and stable.

Check us out on the web at www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Center Hotel
A FULL SERVICE HOTEL
Campus Center Hotel
University of Massachusetts

Now Hiring in

Now Hiring:
Laundry
Front desk
House keeping

CALL 549-6000

OR STOP BY THE FRONT DESK FOR APPLICATIONS

our website address: www.Aux.UMASS .EDU/hotel/

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
1000's of Choices
Incredible Selection Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Jan. 24 thru Fri. Jan. 28
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8
When we're gone visit us at www.postersale.com

Good News!

A New Year's gift from Dining Services.

Starting next semester, students on the Residential Meal Plan can eat a limited number of meals at the Retail Food Service Outlets in the Campus Center and snack bars in addition to the Dining Halls.

Bluewall
Coffee Shop
Hatch Food Court
Starbucks Coffee Cart
Whitmore Snack Bar
Hampden Snack Bar

How it works:
Student can use a meal exchange (cash value $5.50) at above locations.
Sorry, no reduction for meals of lesser cash value, and student is responsible for any additional charges over $5.50.

Enjoy the best food value on campus!

New forum for student business ideas

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

This semester students will have the opportunity to not only win $10,000, but in the process will be able to gain the professional skills and networks to develop and execute business ideas. The University of Massachusetts and Five College Entrepreneurship Program has been established to enhance student's abilities to embark on new ventures.

The Office of Economic Development and Mass Ventures, in conjunction with financial support from alumni and business and sponsoring the program, Mass Ventures is a development company that assists businesses successfully thrive in Western Massachusetts.

Beginning on Feb. 10, the program will start with a forum for alumni entrepreneurs, including the founder and CEO of Boston Beer to present their stories. This general kick-off is open to all students and will also serve as an informational meeting. Joseph Steig, Entrecluh program director and Vice President of Mass Ventures encouraged all students to attend. Students should come whether or not they know anything about business." The program will continue with a pizza networking meeting and eight seminars.

At the completion of the events, $10,000 will be awarded to the student with the best business plan. A business plan as defined by Erwin Chernoff, director of the economics department is "simply a compelling statement of what your business is going to do and why it will succeed."

The program has been set up in such a way that in addition to the possible award, students will be given the opportunity if they so choose to receive one honors credit for an interdisciplinary independent study.

By completing the eight seminars, who will feature lawyers, entrepreneurs and marketing specialists as speakers, students will be able to obtain knowledge that will be essential to them after graduation. "My motivation for being involved in the program fundamentally is to help engineers get great jobs," Dave Kazmer, an engineering professor said. "If you have an idea, you have a lot more to gain if you can successfully design the program for that idea."

These beneficial skills are ones that are very not often gained through regular classes, therefore making the program important not to mention convenient, Chernoff said. "Without even leaving campus, they can meet entrepreneurs and business experts and learn how to describe a business idea in a way that persuades others to invest, join the team, or buy the idea."

The program has been designed through the five colleges in order to create a diverse atmosphere where alumni and community entrepreneurs have the opportunity to create effective teams, in addition to giving students the chance to work with other undergraduates from different departments on campus.

"At any large university there are a lot of students that have great business ideas, but they may never meet," Steig said. "Through this program we can provide a forum for students from multiple disciplines to create business plans."

KARA STOKES/ COLLEGIAN

Five lonely pizzas...

The Pizzas at Anotonios wait patiently for the return of the ever faithful pizza loving students.

KARA STOKES/ COLLEGIAN

Winter has finally arrived

A sculpture outside Marshall Annex keeps warm with a scarf and a hat.

■ labor

continued from page A6

AFL-CIO Organizing Director Kirk Adams said the net gain of 265,000 members actually reflects a much larger organizing effort, and that AFL-CIO figures show 600,000 new workers joined unions last year.

Some union jobs were lost as manufacturers moved to low-wage countries, although that movement has slowed.

"The jobs going out the back door have lessened considerably," he said. "There was a loss of 350,000 jobs last year, but only 120,000 were unionized."

However, to show real growth, labor needs to do much more – adding about 500,000 to one million new members a year to keep pace with the growing economy and to counter the attrition of union jobs.

Some economists, including Farber, are skeptical labor can maintain that kind of growth, especially as the economy loses manufacturing jobs, where unions have been strong, and gains low-wage service jobs, where unions have struggled. And Latinos, who account for a growing share of the low-wage work force, are the least likely to be union members.

The government numbers, which show overall union membership to be 16.5 million, are estimates based on the Current Population Survey, which conducts a monthly survey of about 50,000 households. They do not include self-employed workers.

Of all demographic groups of workers, black men were the most likely to belong to unions, with a rate of 20.5-percent. Latino women were the least likely, at 10.4 percent. Union membership continued to be higher for men, at 16.1-percent, than for women, at 11.4 percent, although the gender gap has been closing in recent years.

Government workers continued to have the highest rate of union membership, at about 37 percent.

■ graves

continued from page A6

Gore, meanwhile, is presenting himself as a practical populist who can work within the system to make step-by-step tangible progress; his portrayal of Bradley is that the former senator from New Jersey morphs into a dreamy eggbead who would treat the presidency as "an extended seminar on theory."

"I do not believe the presidency is an academic exercise," Gore told a crowd of supporters at a college last week. "I think the presidency is a day-by-day fight for real people who face real problems... A president... who is willing to stay in there and fight for the average citizen can make all the difference."

That contrasts starkly with the language Bradley used at a rally last week to describe the job in inspirational, almost mystical, terms: "The untapped potential of the presidency is to unlock in each of us our capacity as public citizens ... to unlock in each of us our connections with each other as human beings." Such a civic awakening, Bradley argues, would allow him as president to pursue a bold agenda that now appears implausible.

In practice, the differences between a Gore or Bradley presidency might not be as absolute as this rhetoric suggests. Yet many analysts agree real differences in emphasis and approach lay behind the political positioning.

"There is a different view," says Thomas E. Mann, a senior fellow in governmental studies at the Brookings Institution in Washington. "Gore has learned from the seven years of the Clinton administration and understands something about how you get things done in contemporary American politics, and is also making a judgment about the market for bold initiatives in this political climate."

Bradley, by contrast, "has advanced a view that a crusading, transforming leadership style is appropriate for all seasons," Mann says. "It's as if the state of the economy doesn't matter, and the balance of political forces in the country and the Congress don't matter."

The two men disagree not only on the kind, but the number, of initiatives a president should offer. Citing Ronald Reagan as a model, Bradley insists a key to presidential success is to focus on a few big reforms; Gore, who has disgorged a torrent of proposals on a wider range of issues, maintains a president doesn't have "the luxury of focusing on a single challenge" when so many domestic and foreign concerns demand attention.

"The constituents all say that (kind of narrow focus) is good for a campaign, because people remember one thing," Gore charged in an interview. "But in the real world, it's not anywhere close to what you need to govern."

Behind these broad philosophical disputes are more tactical political calculations. Although neither might quite match the original, Bradley and Gore seem to be framing their contest almost like a choice between Adlai Stevenson and Harry Truman, the Democratic archetypes of book-smart and street-smart politicians.

With his lilting appeals to idealism, and his professorial manner, Bradley is effectively attracting liberals, especially those who wear ties to work. In the states where Bradley is best known – Iowa, New Hampshire, New York – voters with college degrees and upscale professionals form the core of his support.

Gore, a senator's son with an Ivy League pedigree, isn't exactly earthy, but, with his populist message, he is drawing support most heavily from blue-collar and minority voters – groups that have traditionally looked to politicians less for inspiration than practical help on their daily concerns. And by accusing Bradley of treating the presidency as "an academic exercise" Gore is evoking cultural images of ivory-tower intellectuals that could make it more difficult for Bradley to reach working-class voters.

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!

WE HAVE GREAT OPPORTUNITES FOR ALL AT THE CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK

ALANA Job Fair
Wednesday February 16th, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
6:00 p.m. - 9:00 p.m.

Co-op/Internship Opportunities
Networking
Summer/Permanent Employment
All students are invited!
For more information, contact
Ruth Carey 545-6252

Sponsored by: BCP, CCEBMS, DiMES, ULARC, MEP, and the Campus Career Network

Graduating? Need A Job?

Come meet a Variety of Employers at the Annual Campus Wide Career Fair
Wednesday February 16th, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium 10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

Over 100 Companies attending
Including

Acosta Sales and Marketing
American Express
Bell Atlantic
CIGNA
Cellular One
Energizer Inc.
Enterprise Ren-A-Car
Fidelity Investments
Fastenal Co.
Gillette
IBM
JC Penney
The Key Program Inc.
MIT Lincoln Laboratory
The Media Edge
Medical Information Technologies
National Agricultural Statistics Service
New England Center for Children
New York Life & NY Life Securities
Northeast Utilities
Proctor & Gamble
Putnam Investments
Raytheon
Sanders/A Lockheed Martin Corp.
Teradyne Inc.
Texas Instruments Inc.
WorldTeach/Harvard Institute

Wondering what to do this summer?
Come to the 17th Annual Co-op and Summer Job Fair
Thursday February 17th, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

WE'RE HERE FOR YOU!

College of Food and Natural Resources
Career Planning
111A Stockbridge Hall 545-6011
Field Experience
110 Stockbridge Hall 577-0421
College of Arts and Humanities
Career Planning
266 Bartlett Hall 545-6255
Field Experience
264 Bartlett Hall 545-6266
College of Social and Behavioral Sciences
Career Planning
105 South College 577-0417
Field Experience
102A South College 545-6267

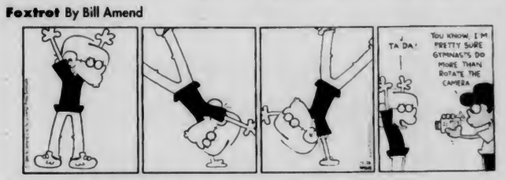
College of Engineering AND College of Natural Sciences and Math
Career Planning
119 Marston Hall 545-6251
Field Experience
126A Marston Hall 577-0419

Colleges of Education, Nursing and Public Health
Career Planning
150 Totman Gymnasium 545-6252
Field Experience
416 Arnold House 577-0427

Isenberg School of Management
Field Experience
208C SOM Building 577-0418

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Some kind of retrospective will be beneficial to you today, even as you look forward to new success with a new project. Remember where you've been!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Contact with someone quite different from yourself is likely to open your mind a little more, and open a few doors for you as well!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) An original plan comes your way today which is likely to offer more than just opportunity. Indeed, profit and pleasure go hand in hand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) This is a good day for you to prove yourself, as the risks are low and the opportunities many. Someone may have a secret to tell you during the later hours.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A surprise is in store for you today, and you must be sure to keep your eyes and ears open at all times. After dark, certain risks increase.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) This may prove a low-energy day, but there is still much you can accomplish even without running at high speed. Give your brain a work-out!

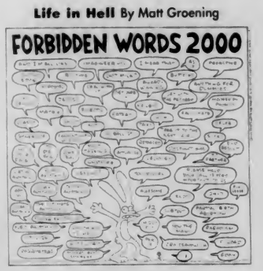
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Today, you may have to take over the decision-making process a work for a while. You may be able to improve morale and get better results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're not going to want to reveal something specific about yourself just yet, but the process of concealing it may get rather complicated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) This may prove a quiet, yet memorable day, as your mail-ones the past and realize something that will move quite important almost immediately.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You may have to begin a difficult project today which will require a great deal of planning, foresight and plus it all through. Prepare!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Now is no time to be aggressive unspecific with those under you. If you're in control today, you must demonstrate it in no uncertain terms.



CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You won't want to break up the team today, but there is something important that you must do on your own. There is room for private pursuits.

Quote of the Day

"Do unto others and enjoy it."

–Flyin' Brian Pillman

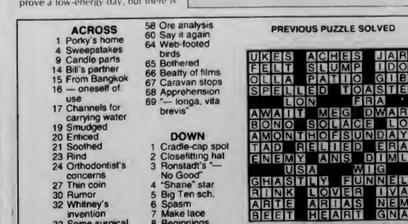
Life in Hell By Matt Groening

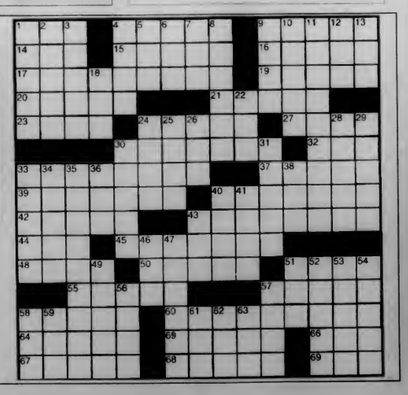
Think you're funny? We might too.

The Collegian is looking for student comic submissions. Contact Sam at 545-1909 or stop in to room 113 in the Campus Center basement.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.





...though you won't find out what they're offering until you get there.
Try calling their hotline at 545-2626

ACROSS
1 Porky's home
4 Sweepstakes
9 Candle parts
14 Bill's partner
15 From Bangkok
16 — oneself of use
17 Channels for carrying water
19 Smudged
20 Enticed
21 Soothed
23 Rind
24 Orthodontist's concerns
27 Thin coin
30 Rumor
32 Whitney's invention
33 Some surgical procedures
37 Spiral-horned antelope
39 Plunders
40 Core
42 Straighten
43 Placated
44 Herd of whales
45 Interferes in a harmful way
48 Bronte heroine
50 Brit's pal
51 Some poems
55 Mountain nymph
57 Salary increase
58 Ore analysis
60 Say it again
64 Web-footed birds
65 Bothered
66 Beatty of films
67 Caravan stops
68 Apprehension
69 "— longa, vita brevis"

DOWN
1 Cradle-cap spot
2 Closefitting hat
3 Ronstadt's "— No Good"
4 "Shane" star
5 Big Ten sch.
6 Spasm
7 Make lace
8 Beginnings
9 Crumples up
10 Like Yale's buildings
11 Some sweaters
12 First-aid box
13 Cunning
18 Slippery fish
22 "Sol"
24 Look after 25 Consumes
26 Ums' kin
28 Type of pie
29 Finished
30 Act like a ghost
31 Affirmatives
33 Picture
34 — Archipelago: island group
35 Border plants
36 Trail behind
38 Meadow
40 Fencing sword
41 Agile
43 Likely
46 Dr.'s org
47 Where to visit the Prado
49 Rub out
51 Rower's need
52 Actress Rigg
53 Chemical compound
54 Garden starters
56 Looks at 57 Actor Foxx
58 Long, long —
59 Sargasso, e.g.
61 Good
62 Harry's successor
63 Earl Grey, e.g.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Back to school staff

Night Editors	Seth Koenig, Adam Mortignetti
Photo Technician	Kara Stokes
Copy Editors	Sam Wilkinson, Mary Grein
Production Supervisor	Joylyn Lombard, Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Ben Alamed, Katie Ross, Melanie Thomas
Web Staff	Ben Alamed

I see the light!
The Bluewall flooded mid January due to a burst valve in the Campus Center sprinkler system

UM-Holyoke partnership aids city

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Holyoke Mayor Michael J. Sullivan announced during an inaugural address earlier this month that one of his early initiatives will be focusing on a long-term partnership between the city and the University of Massachusetts Center for Public Policy and Administration.

The agreement between Sullivan and John A. Hird, the director of the Center for Public Policy and Administration, will be aimed at improving the condition of the city and providing a hands-on approach for students working on public policy.

The project will be started this semester through a Public Policy and Administration class offered only to graduate students. By enrolling in such a program, the students will be committing themselves to approximately one year of service. According to Hird, approximately 10 to 15 graduate students in the master's program will work on projects that are at "no cost" to the city.

"We're not coming in with some kind of arrogant attitude when we say, 'We're from the university and we're going to help you.' We're coming out to work with Mike [Sullivan] on a partnership," Hird said in a MassLive article.

In the past, the center has worked in similar ways with the state and other communities, but Hird said Holyoke would be the first time the faculty and students establish a long-range commitment.

"We hope to have a long term relationship with Holyoke," Hird said.

"We hope to make a concerted effort to improve things."

Hird said that he hoped the commitment would, in fact, go beyond six months. He said in the MassLive article that the city has its share of economic and social problems that make it fertile ground for the center to research.

"Holyoke is more diverse [than other cities]," Hird said. "There are urban issues, more ethnic diversity and a lot of open space so there's a lot of public policy opportunities our students can work on."

With such a large number of diverse issues to work with, Hird said the experience will provide his students with an opportunity to determine the most important public policies for the city, such decisions that will effect the city as a whole. It is something Hird said many students cannot experience inside the classroom.

"This would be great for applied public policy situations instead of hypothetical, and the city realized it would help them out," Hird said. "It's mutually beneficial; it helps the city and it helps our students."

Hird said Sullivan is equally excited to get this project underway.

Having studied urban planning in college, Sullivan has displayed to Hird an interest towards innovations that can improve the city. Sullivan said in the article that he wants UMass to review and improve how city government functions and delivers services to make the whole process more accessible to people than it has been.

This is not criticism, he said in the article, but a way to get residents and city employees working together to improve the city. Hopes are high because of UMass resources and the city's potential, Sullivan said.

The UMass graduate students will work on community development, reorganizing city boards and commissions and ways to foster economic development.

Their work will be accompanied by a new master plan comprised of 353 recommendations resulting from more than a year of meetings held around the city. Residents, officials and others wrote the recommendations to guide city growth in areas from city pride and participation to strengthening neighborhoods, public safety and land use.

Sullivan said the first steps in the city-UMass effort would come within the next two weeks.

Y2K frustrations to Elian Gonalez: Collegian staff discuss issues

Since the last publication of The Daily Collegian, presidential campaigns have revved into high gear, the Elian Gonzalez and John Rocker controversies have continued to swirl and the world entered the year 2000. Because the newspaper was not being published, all news stories about those topics would be considerably out of date. However in an attempt to analyze those events, Daily Collegian staff sat down to discuss their thoughts on these issues.

Editor in Chief Seth Koenig, former news editor Elana Premack, Business Manager Shawn Ilnitch, Managing Editor Sam Wilkinson, Sports Editor Brett Mauser and Arts and Living Editor Adam Martignetti conversed about presidential candidates, Gonzalez, Rocker, and preparation for the year 2000.

Presidential Candidates

Winning in New Hampshire underdogs John McCain and Bill Bradley have strongly challenged and look to win that state's primary elections. The upset victories would be big, as both candidates are extreme underdogs. McCain is challenging George W. Bush for the Republican candidacy and Bradley is challenging Al Gore for the Democratic nomination for the presidency.

Seth: I think Bill Bradley is the best gun on the table right now. He seems to be optimistic, but then again that's what a lot of politicians do before they are elected, but he has me convinced. He seems to be sincere and he's offering more of an education platform than more candidates.

Adam: Bradley and McCain are similar in their appeal to the common person. They are more believable than Gore and Bush, who both seem stiff and programmed, while both McCain and Bradley have progressive ideas. Bradley leans right and McCain leans left, which brings them both towards the middle.

Seth: They both need V8 as a result of that.

Elana: Bradley and McCain appear to be less political than Gore and Bush, who are both falling into the same traps that Clinton fell into and continues to fall into. People are hoping for Bush and Gore to slip up more than they are for Bradley and McCain. Both [Bush and Gore] come from political families and that means we've watched them for longer

Seth: I think it is interesting that Gore challenged Bradley to debates and if I'm not mistaken to stop raising money. Ted Note: Gore proposed to end television advertising in exchange for debates.]

Adam: The polls say Bradley is ahead in New Hampshire, as is McCain, so both the underdogs seem to be ahead in New Hampshire.

Sam: I think I'm totally behind Bradley at this point, because Gore just seems like a complete ass. I consider myself to be a liberal and I don't think Gore really cares about his liberal roots. Then again, I'd be inclined to support McCain simply because he isn't Bush.

Shawn: Gore is being penalized because he was a politician but nobody looks at him for what he's done politically. He's been with Clinton on everything.

Adam: With what?

Shawn: Well, not with Lewinsky, but definitely beside him on the other projects. But people see a politician and get a bad idea about their ideas. People with different ideas are able to get the attention of the voters.

Adam: That's true.

Brett: I'm going full fledged for John McCain. I grew up with a military background, and I've inherited military values. Once we get away from the backbone of the United States, once we start taking away from idea of holding the fort, we'll start to have problems. McCain supports veterans who have been under appreciated for years.

Adam: Like a values type thing?

Brett: Yeah, like a values type thing, because my father was in the navy for 27 years and it just makes sense to support McCain.

John Rocker

A relief pitched for the Atlanta Braves Rocker, in an interview published in Sports Illustrated, came out against New Yorkers, foreigners, and homosexuals. The angry response that followed included calls for his total banishment from baseball, a year's suspension, or for him to be fired. While none of these things have happened, Rocker has undergone psychiatric evaluation. In an interview with ESPN's Peter Gammons, Rocker publicly apologized for his statements.

Adam: I'm a Braves fan and what he did is completely inexcusable. I've seen the subsequent interview with Gammons. I saw the public apology, but I don't know if he's sorry. Maybe he's mentally disturbed, he looks demonic, he looks like a crazed man out there pitching. He did help make a good point that the comments were made in a locker room situation, none of us were there.

Brett: Were they there? Was it a locker room? The comments were made in a car.

Adam: I think every baseball fan outside of New York hates New York.

Seth: I can agree with that.

Adam: I think only two people know if those comments were supposed to be serious and that is the reporter and John Rocker but how they were written made him seem completely irresponsible.

Shawn: I heard it was a revenge thing for treatment in New York. He'd had batteries thrown at him, beer poured on him.

Adam: He lives in New York suck, but seriously, Rocker seemed remorseful for what he said.

News Analysis Team:
Clockwise from the top left, Seth Koenig, Brett Mauser, Sam Wilkinson, Elana Premack, Adam Martignetti, Shawn Ilnitch

Seth: I think one of the important things about what happened in the John Rocker situation is that it brings a closer attention to the everyday racist statements that are heard so often, what John Rocker said isn't that uncommon to hear, but Rocker said that to Sports Illustrated, so he got published. If there is a silver lining to the dark cloud of this situation maybe people will pay more attention to the comments that are made in passing.

Brett: I don't agree with what Rocker said, but bottom line is that a person's first amendment rights can't be taken away from him and all he was doing was expressing them. I think the forum was completely inappropriate for him to state those things but it isn't a complete surprise that there are people who are out there that think this way. The only reason that this is news is because they were things said by a baseball player who is notorious.

Adam: He wasn't notorious before this.

Brett: But he so was, I still really like John Rocker as a player, but I don't support him as a person.

Adam: He's a gutsy guy as a professional.

Sam: What John Rocker said and what John Rocker believes are completely separate things, but he has every right to go out and make an ass of himself. The idea that there are groups in America that would call for him to lose his career as a result of what he said sets an awfully dangerous precedent of punishment on a national level for people that make asses of themselves. Rocker's only responsibility is to get saves. How he votes or what he thinks or who he likes or doesn't like doesn't really matter if he does his job right.

Elian Gonzalez

Elian Gonzalez, a six-year old from Cuba, was discovered floating in the ocean after a boat with him, his mother and eleven other Cubans sank. He survived but his mother died. Controversy has swirled after it became apparent that what to do with the child wasn't so clear. His father in Cuba, Juan Gonzalez, has asked for the boy back, but Cuban-exiles and Republicans have opposed this, saying the boy should be allowed to stay in the United States.

Brett: If the child's mother was bringing him to the United States with the intention that the child should have a life in a free country, it defeats his mother's attempt to provide for her son, it makes her death in vain if he is sent back to Cuba.

Seth: Personally speaking, it's a tough decision, obviously. I think Brett's right in what he just said, but on the other hand, who has more right to this child's custody, is it a government in the United States, or is it his father? He isn't even a citizen.

Shawn: If his mother lived they would have been sent back.

Adam: He was entering illegally.

Shawn: They should listen to his father and as long as his father isn't crazy. Elian should be returned to his father.

Sam: I don't even know with there's a question of him being sent back. He should have been sent back when the INS said to send him back. That Republicans who are supposedly so pro-family values would go against the reunification of a family is completely hypocritical and it disgusts me. As for Cuban exiles, they obviously care more about than hell-bent to get revenge on Castro than they do for this boy.

Elana: I think that governments in general try to interfere in personal families lives, he's six years old not able to make a decision that will affect the rest of his life, and that may not be an option. I think his father wants him and he should be able to have him

Shawn: If this happens in America and my mother dies, I'd go to my father.

Elana: He has to be happy, but he's six. This will affect him for the rest of his life

Adam: I'm sick of the Elian Gonzalez story, its on every newscast, seems like this has gone on for months. I think the INS made the decision that the child has to be sent back to Cuba and I think that decision has to be adhered to. I'll pin for his plane ticket myself.

Millennium Buildup

After countless news stories, feature stories, and endless preparation, the year 2000 came and passed without a hitch. Apocalypse, visions of failed computers or the arrival of a religious figure to signal the end of the world failed to bring about any significant disaster.

Adam: I wanted people to die.

Elana: People did die just not because of Y2K.

Seth: This was a crock right from the get go. I honestly think that if there are people out there who were seriously believing that everything was going to shut down, they aren't very well informed and be, they are putting faith in superstition. It was just stupid. Nothing happened for all intents and purposes. Granted I am a genius, but I assumed nothing would happen and most others knew the same thing. People have been working on this for years, for people to think no progress would have been made is foolish.

Elana: I think that I despise being a part of the media that contributed to this madness. Every newscast focused on Y2K while other things happened in the world

Sam: As part of the media I was just as sick as any of the rest of us for the buildup of this complete non-event. Obviously it's just another year's change. Nothing happened and that we were suckered into this as much as anyone else. It is really somewhat embarrassing, but hindsight's 20-20. At the time we thought it was important and obviously we were wrong.

Elana: I watched the Australian celebration at which point I knew nothing was going to happen. The world wasn't going to end hour by hour. It was interesting to see the world rally around a cause it was interesting because it wasn't real. It got people so excited.

Seth: Everyone rallied to celebrate, limaging what difference people could make if people put that kind of effort into the elimination of hunger and poverty, the evil New York lets, imagine what could be done.

Brett: As insensitive as it sounds, I was disappointed nothing happened. I waited for something to occur and nothing did, and I don't think that I'm alone.

Adam: In terms of the buildup, I think it was a convergence of a number of factors, including the computers, which weren't going to work and the apocalyptic religious people who thought the world would blow up. Everyone took it so much farther than it had to go. The computer problems might have been real, but it was possible that things might have happened a while ago. I don't think any sane person thought that God would come down and smite us all.

Elana: The end of the world is supposed to be a surprise, and obviously we weren't going to be surprised by anything after being so prepared.

Adam: The media completely blew the thing completely out of proportion. My favorite statistic is that companies spent half a trillion preparing for Y2K, and Russia spent something like a penny, we have to wonder if all the preparation was warranted.

Sam Wilkinson and Brett Mauser contributed to this article.

Report on UHS aims to lower student fees

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Funding alternatives and possible service changes within the University Health Services (UHS) at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst are part of a report prepared by Nolan and Bober Associates, Inc., a health systems consulting firm. The report, which was released by Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, last week is the end result of observations made by the consulting firm since Sept. 1998.

Cevallos explained in a statement that the report was commissioned by the University for assistance in finding the most effective way to adjust to changes in health care.

The pullout of Kaiser Permanente from UHS last year made these changes more difficult and therefore prompted the University to evaluate, through consultant firms the overall financial and service operations.

"The way health care is delivered and financed has been changing dramatically at the national and state levels," Cevallos said. "This changing climate has brought a number of challenges to UHS."

One of these challenges surrounds the issue of cost and student fees. Over the past several years student fees have had to make up for the lack in insurance payments that UHS was receiving despite their increased care given to Unass and other area college students, as well as University employees enrolled in various insurers, including HMOs.

In addition, student fees support non-revenue producing programs given for students by UHS. One example of such programming is drug and alcohol prevention programs.

Although Cevallos notes that this change in costs is a result of changes on a broader spectrum in reimbursement methods in the health care field he felt something needed to be done.

"We feel that students's fees must be reduced," Cevallos said. "We are going to propose to University trustees that we lower the basic health fee by ten percent in the coming year."

In addition he said that fees may be lowered even more in the following years, with a targeted reduction in the basic health fee of $4 percent. Because student fees contributed approximately $1.8 million to UHS in the fiscal year 1999 such a reduction would mean additional changes to the services.

Cevallos said the reduction would affect the scope of services provided through the basic fee paid by students and would therefore lead to issues of efficiency and productivity.

Before any changes or reductions could be made the financing situation would have to be further looked into and all sides of the issue explored. As Cevallos explained it was a very complex situation.

"If employers and others were eliminated from UHS services altogether, the overhead costs would spread over fewer people and student fees would increase accordingly," Cevallos cautioned.

Ultimately Cevallos said that he was looking for the most economically effective way to run UHS.

The report urged the University to address the overall mission of UHS by answering questions about who the primary users of UHS should be and what services they should provide to the campus community. It also suggested that the University looked into finding ways to subsidize the shortage of money between insurance payments and true costs.

According to Cevallos, Bernette Melby, Director of Health Services is currently working with UHS leadership to develop an action plan to address the suggestions and concerns highlighted in the report. He said the plan will include a reduction of student fees, but is not limited to that issue.

The plan should be completed early this semester.

At time of press University of Health Services was unable to be reached for comment.

Disco red in the Campus Center
Both the University Store and the Bluewall feature new larger than life neon signs that illuminate not only the words but also the surrounding walls.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Page B1 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Wednesday, January 26, 2000

Ripley leads winter's field of Oscar contenders
Cider House Rules, Interrupted both late dark horses

The Talented Mr. Ripley
Directed by Anthony Minghella with Matt Damon, Jude Law, Gwyneth Paltrow

Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

As The Talented Mr. Ripley opens, a barrage of adjectives are placed in front of Tom Ripley's name- confused, mysterious, jealous, etc.- before the screen settles on talented to describe the slightly nerdy introvert. From all indications, that is exactly what Tom Ripley is. He has taught himself to play the piano to the point where he can fill in for his professional friend. His regret for having taken one particular job is our only foreboding evidence.

Still, talented Tom Ripley doesn't have much of a life for his own. He's poor, living in a shoddy subterranean New York apartment. He works two undesirable jobs as a bathroom attendant and as an opera house usher. He spends his days mired in the alluring shadow of 1950s grandeur that surrounds him. When a Mr. Greenleaf mistakenly offers him an all expense paid trip to Italy and a $1000 reward to bring his wayward son Dickie home, Tom accepts despite an initial reluctance.

In Italy, Tom meets Dickie (Jude Law) and his young fiance Marge (Gwyneth Paltrow). It quickly becomes apparent that Tom's knack for picking up new skills goes beyond just the piano to identifying music, forging signatures, and uncannily icy impersonations. Dickie likes Tom though (mostly because of Tom's efforts to fashion himself as an exact copy of Dickie) and the two join forces in order to deceive Mr. Greenleaf.

What follows is a psychological roller coaster for Tom Ripley. If it's possible, this world is more extravagant than the one which he left behind. He is taken in by it, drawn into it, and ultimately, he comes to love not only the lifestyle, but also the person living it. Just as Tom finds security and a sense of belonging for the first time in his life, Dickie seems to abandon him, leaving Tom to fend for himself in a foreign land. In a moment of self-revelation, misunderstanding, and rejection, Tom escapes a surreal situation the only way he knows how- by killing Dickie.

Taking a turn from his smart guy roles, Matt Damon gives a stunning performance here as the embittered Ripley- a man trapped by his own perceptions and his own identity. Damon compassionately portrays the homosexual Ripley making him a true cinematic rarity- the sympathetic anti-hero- one who has no choice in his course of action. The audience understands why he kills and indeed rationalizes why he must kill. Malice quickly becomes necessity. He's insecure and utterly innocent.

Indeed, Tom's first two victims are not very likeable characters nor are they exactly morally virtuous. Dickie is an unfaithful playboy who's impregnated a local Italian girl and his friend Frankie is an arrogant vagrant who merely inherited his family's money.) Director, screenwriter Anthony Minghella (The English Patient) ensures a favorable reaction for his protagonist with a meticulous and calculated screenplay. As the action unfolds, a sense of tension and frenzy builds for the nervous, on-edge Tom. The world is closing in on him and he has nowhere to go. Besides the blonder than blonde cast, expectedly lush setting, and gorgeous cinematography, Minghella delivers a truly great story of mounting suspense punctuated by solemn raw violence.

Like a good Agatha Christie mystery, The Talented Mr. Ripley shuffles among many characters with much of the struggle being held internally in the mind. Cate Blanchett is in no more than a handful of scenes, but her character, Margaret, plays arguably the most pivotal role of the movie for Tom. Matt seems a good emotional release, as we always seem to get the sense that she too is feigning to be someone that she is not. Neither Tom nor the audience can ever reach this definitive conclusion though. And like an Agatha Christie book, The Talented Mr. Ripley will keep you guessing until the very end.

It's truly a unique movie, an intriguing look at perspective and identity. Built on the idea of a man victimized by fate and social failure, The Talented Mr. Ripley gives insight into the depths of those excluded from society, those whose most base instincts are condemned. Tom Ripley is a scared young man who only wishes to blot out everything that's happened; unfortunately, he simply can't. A-

Matt Damon, Jude Law, and Gwyneth Paltrow star in the psychological suspense thriller, The Talented Mr. Ripley

Tobey Maguire gives an Oscar worthy effort in the marvelous adaptation of John Irving's Cider House Rules

The Cider House Rules
Directed by Lasse Hallström with Tobey Maguire, Michael Caine, Charlize Theron

Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of David Copperfield, Charles Dickens writes, "Whether I shall turn out to be the hero of my own life, or whether that station will be held by anybody else, these pages must show." The lines serve as the prefect framework for The Cider House Rules, the story of young orphan Homer Wells.

We first meet Homer as a young baby in the backwoods of Maine at an out of the way orphanage/abortion clinic. The aging overseer of the orphanage, Dr. Wilbur Larch, loudly recalls how the boy was twice adopted and twice returned. As a result Dr. Larch decides to take care of Homer himself, teaching him how to care for existing patients along the way.

So, we see young wide eyed Homer (Kelli Fuller Maguire), experienced practitioner and father figure to many of the younger orphans. The movie does an amazing job etching each of these children with a distinct personality (Fuzzy, who needs an impromptu machine to help him breath, to Jack, the tough kid who idolizes Homer. As the movie continues there is an overwhelming sense of family and caring developed among the group. The audience lives with the hopes of each child as every new family arrives and their despair as that family leaves with a different child.

In fact, the only relationship, which seems strained at all is that of Dr. Larch and Homer. Despite his acquired knowledge, Homer refuses to perform any abortions and seems reluctant to accept the role thrust upon him as future caretaker of the orphanage. Likewise, Dr. is standoffish, never showing Homer the love he shows upon the other children nor embracing the fatherly role, which is so obviously his own.

One day, inspired by an Air Force pilot (Paul Rudd), Homer decides to leave the orphanage with him and his young fiance (Charlize Theron)

Turn to CIDER HOUSE RULES, page B8

Girl's characters are undeniable

Girl, Interrupted
Directed by James Mangold with Winona Ryder, Angelina Jolie, Whoopi Goldberg

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Turning novels into books is never a sure thing; the result is often either a rushed and overly complex mess, or such a dumbed-down and simplified version of the book that any of the original energy and subtly is lost. Rarely, however, a novel adaptation gives life to a movie that retains the depth of character of setting found in a book, while infusing it with the immediacy and visual energy possible in the film medium. Girl, Interrupted is a wonderful example of this, a movie that paints its characters in bold and fascinating strokes, and communicates their emotions perfectly.

This is the story of Susanna (Winona Ryder), a young woman recently graduated from high school who seems to possess little ambition beyond her vague desire to be a writer; she displays symptoms of depression and borderline personality disorder, and is compelled to check herself into a psychiatric care institute after trying to commit suicide by consuming an entire bottle of aspirin. She does not believe herself to be suffering from anything as dire as her parents and doctors believe, and so regards her new surroundings with hostility and resentment at first. The ward is populated by young woman of varying degrees of mental instability, most notably by Lisa (Angelina Jolie), a manipulative and unstable nine-year veteran of the institution. Most of the movie's action follow Susanna's relationships with the residents of the ward, and her internal struggle to identify and expel her own psychiatric demons.

The acting in this movie is simply outstanding. Ryder displays both exterior fragility and interior strength and self-assuredness; she is intelligent but emotionally naive. I cannot think of a better choice for the role of Susanne, or a single instance of inappropriate acting on Ryder's part. Jolie is equally compelling as Lisa, whose emotional state acts as a foil for Susanne's; her external strength of character and bully mentality helps to illustrate her internal hollowness and emotional estrangement from everyone around her. Whoopi Goldberg gives an excellent supporting performance as nurse Valerie, the symbolic mother figure to the institutionalized girls and a woman of great compassion and patience.

With this sort of material and character lineup, it would be an easy thing to turn out an overly-political movie, taking stabs at the 1960's approach to mental illness and the eagerness of doctors to institutionalize their patients (not to mental this movie's potential to turn into

Turn to INTERRUPTED, page B6

AOL joins Time-Warner
How entertainment will change

Adam Martignetti

These days many entertainment behemoths are reaching into a seemingly bottomless bowl of alphabet soup and a lot of people are wondering what they're going to pull out. TWX/TIA/AOL/CBS. Do these letters look familiar? If not, then learn them, quick. People are hailing these letters as the driving force behind a changing and more importantly a converging entertainment industry.

These letters are actually not letters at all, but symbols, stock symbols to be precise. Respectively, they are the ticker symbols under which Time Warner Cable (TWX), Viacom (VIA), America On Line (AOL), and CBS trade on the New York Stock Exchange. Why are these symbols so important? How does this all relate to the entertainment industry? Well, that's a bit trickier.

First, a quick history lesson. A few years back, a small entertainment company called Buena Vista (they own Disney and all their affiliated properties) decided to buy Capital Cities, the people who own ABC and ESPN among others. The deal was immediately hailed as groundbreaking. For the first time, a production company (Buena Vista) was allowed to own a network TV company (ABC). This meant that Buena Vista could control everything from production, to marketing, to distribution, to exhibition, to syndication basically complete and total vertical integration.

Earlier this year, history, as it is wont to do, repeated itself. Mega-media giant Viacom (who owns the production company Paramount) bought CBS, sending shockwaves throughout both the entertainment and the financial world. In the blink of an eye, NBC was now the only major network TV station not owned by a production company. A dramatic contrast to their lengthy history of separation. Rumors were quickly swirling around Hollywood and Wall St. NBC was going to partner with Universal or MGM or someone else. People believed that they had to in order to compete. Meanwhile amidst the rumors, the stock prices of not-only NBC but also any potential partners skyrocketed.

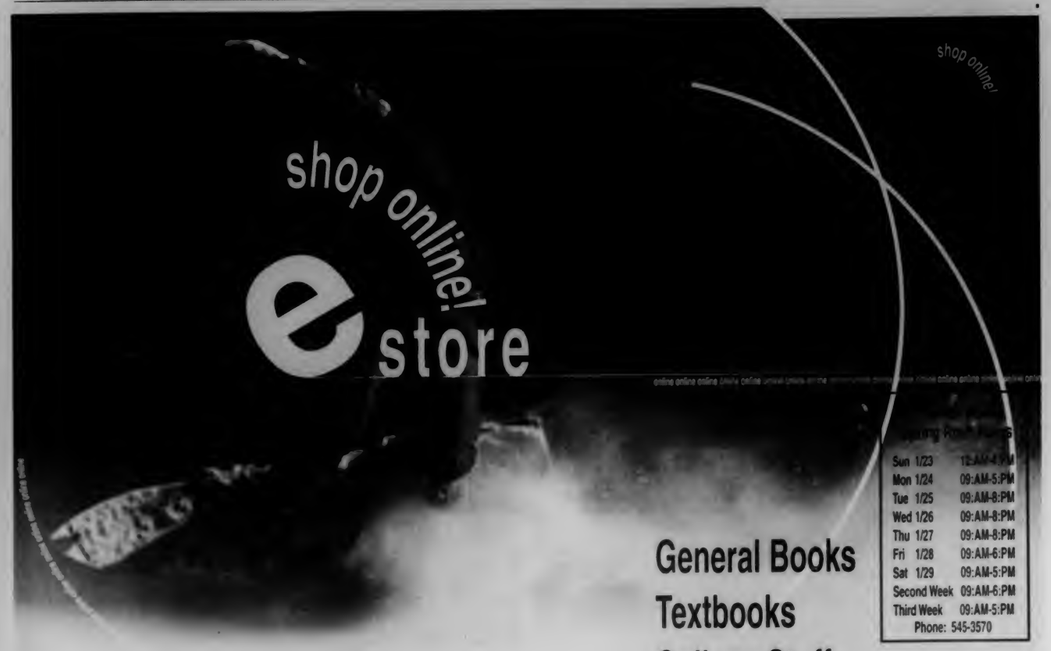
On January 10 th of this year (ironically ten years to the day after Time merged with Warner Brothers), the public witnessed perhaps this new century's defining link between Hollywood and Wall St. link, possibly revealing the future of the entertainment world. On this day, America On Line shocked the world by announcing a merger with Time-Warner, the largest media company in the world. The merger was a merger only in name as AOL had basically managed to buy the second largest U.S. cable company.

How can that be? After all, Warner Brothers has been around for more than 75 years, AOL has been around for less than 15. Time-Warner's revenues dwarf AOL's by a multiple of more than ten times. Yet, AOL had managed to pull off the first huge coup of the new millenium. How? Two words: market capitalization. Market capitalization is simply the product of a company's publicly traded shares and the price of those shares (# of shares x price of shares). And in today's business environment, it's the only game in town. Wall St. traders had pushed the stock price of America On Line (AOL) so high that at the time of the deal, it had a market capitalization of $160 billion- more than twice Time-Warner's (TWX), which was about $80 billion. In other words, AOL's company was worth approximately twice Time-Warner's, making it easy for them to consume the media giant.

Of course, the implications of the AOL Time Warner deal were enormous. In the wake of the merger, Time-Warner's stock price shot up nearly 50 percent while AOL was consistently pounded by Wall St (rewarding the traditional media company for joining the fast growing new media company and vice-versa). And like the Viacom-CBS merger, rumors were abound.

People saw this as the first momentous step towards the convergence of traditional media: magazines, TV, and music (Time-Warner's entities), and new media, the Internet, streaming video, and digital music (AOL's entities). However, a look at history would have shown that this had been tried before and had failed.

Last year, Internet portal Lycos (widely considered the second most popular search engine) tried to merge with USA Cable networks (those line people who give you you're daily dose of cancelled sitcoms and weekly episodes of La femme Nikita). However, the merger failed when the two could not agree on a financial plan for their partnership. Despite history's foreboding lesson, exuberance hit Wall St. and stocks soared. Yahoo! was going to buy Disney, AT&T (who also recently merged with Media One to become the nation's largest cable company) was going to buy Disney, Microsoft was going to buy Yahoo! or AT&T or both. Every company in the media industry was considered in every possible merger scenario to try to keep up with the new AOL-Time Warner monster.



Basically, the reason Wall St. was so excited about the AOL-Time Warner deal is the same reason why it could possibly revolutionize the entertainment industry. The pairing was perfect. Time Warner with all its media arms (publishing, movies, TV, music, etc) did not have any firm strategy for taking this content to the Internet. With its 20 million Internet subscribers, AOL needed two things: content and a way to deliver it. Timer-Warner obviously gave them the former and the latter comes through Time-Warner's cable system.

You see, cable lines are currently the most popular way of delivering high speed Internet access or broadband. It is also commonly referred to as the future: everyone knows it and it's just a matter of time before it arrives. It means instant access to the Internet and all sorts of possibilities for new entertainment. Broadband technologies could include streaming video, TV and movies on the Net, interactive media, customized music CDs, free telephone service, smart home appliances, and even things as inential as online shopping or paying bills online.

So what does this all mean for entertainment consumers? Well, other than musing over the possible teaming of Mickey Mouse and Bill Gates, it has a number of consumer implications. The partnering of AOL and Time-Warner will effectively create the world's largest database complete with consumer preferences, media choices, and credit card numbers. Since AOL doesn't have the best reputation for security in the first place, privacy issues are an immediate concern here.

Secondly, the deal will likely create lots of new opportunities for new Internet technologies with possibly one hefty price tag: the end of the Internet as we know it. Despite their 20 million subscribers, AOL is undoubtedly feeling the pressure of a barrage of new, free Internet Service Providers (free).net, excite@home, altavista, juno, etc.). Basically, there is nothing keeping people from dumping AOL for one of these free services; that is, nothing except content. Time Warner has a significant Internet presence; so hypothetically, AOL can make that content available only to their customers (companies aren't in the practice of giving anything away for free). In other words, if you subscribe to a free ISP, you will not be able to access Time-Warner websites without joining AOL or possibly paying a fee to them. Carry this logic out further and as AOL buys more companies with Web content, then people will be forced to either join AOL or suffer the consequences. Of course, if Microsoft or Yahoo! buys Disney and others, then they could do the same thing. You see where this is going. Eventually, three of four huge Internet companies (we'll call them "behemoth.coms") will own the vast

Turn to AOL, page B10

ARTS COUNCIL

Congratulations!!!

The campus groups below received funding from the UMass Arts Council for their fall art events. Our next grant deadline is coming up soon on February 3rd! Call 545-0202 or visit us at 101 Hasbrouck Lab to learn about our grant programs and how to apply.

- Vietnamese Student's Association "Tet Celebration."
- Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Art events at "Evening on the Nile."
- Graduate Art Students Association "Poem as Painting."
- Political Science Department for a mural at Thompson Hall by artist Lynn Peterfreund.
- Theater Department "The Bacchea" production.
- Campus Center/ Student Union Arts Committee for a performance by Fred Clayton and the Toby Kasavan, Mark Hennen and Daniel Carter Trio.
- UMass Ballroom Dance Club to hire a dance coach.
- Theater Guild for the productions "Company," "Reckless," and "Equus, A Casa Actor's Theater."
- Orchard Hill Area Government for the undergraduate short story journal "Shortcuts."
- Active Ingredients' improvisational performances.
- Music Department: Performance of "Ben Sommer Music."
- Boricus Unidos Art events at Puerto Rican Heritage Week.
- Pride Alliance "In Memory of Brandon."
- MFA Juniper Fellows Visiting Writers Series.
- UMass Dance Team Choreography fees for the NCA Cheer and Dance Team.
- Haitian American Students Association Art events at Annual HASA/CASA Cultural Night.
- South Asian Students Association To support Juaj Masti.
- Cambodian Students Association/RSO To support artist fees for Bun Pehhum Ben.
- Something Every Friday performance by Jabali Africa.

http://www.umass.edu/fac/artscouncil

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Santana, TLC battle teen sensations for Grammys

Geoff Boucher
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD - The "Supernatural" career revival of Carlos Santana cast a spell over the 42nd annual Grammy nominations on Tuesday with the guitar rock hero and the band that shares his name combining for 10 nominations, including best album and record.

Santana and his group had previously combined for only five Grammy nominations in their storied 30-year career, but the 10 nominations Tuesday trail only Michael Jackson and Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds for most nods in a single year. Jackson and Edmonds racked up a dozen each in 1983 and 1994, respectively.

Santana's Grammy success also ties into a major music industry theme of 1999: the success and recognition of Latin music and Latino artists. The Mexican- born, 52-year-old Santana - who said in 1998 that his Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction made him feel like baseball's Jackie Robinson - is poised to have the biggest Grammy success of any Latino artist ever, with the possibility of winning nine trophies (he was nominated twice in the pop collaboration category).

Other leaders among the nominees were the Atlanta hip-hop and R&B trio TLC and classical conductor-composer Pierre Boulez with six each, and country- swing revival group Asleep at the Wheel with five.

Santana's Supernatural and TLC's FanMail led an especially eclectic field in the prestigious best album category, joining a teen pop juggernaut, a female country trio and a jazz vocalist-pianist - the Backstreet Boys for Millennium, the Dixie Chicks for Fly and Diana Krall for When I Look in Your Eyes, respectively.

The album nomination for Krall marked the first for a jazz artist in that category since Bobby McFerrin's Simple Pleasures in 1988. In a rarity, none of this year's nominees for best album have ever been nominated in the category.

For Santana, the shower of Grammy attention caps a sparkling year. Supernatural has sold more than 4 million copies and hit No. 1 on the nation's album charts on the power of "Smooth," a pairing with Rob Thomas of Matchbox 20 that was one of the biggest radio hits of the year. The album tapped into a new, younger audience for Santana by teaming the band with other contemporary stars such as Dave Matthews, Everlast and Lauryn Hill, whose The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill won last year's Grammys for best album.

"Things come when they come," Santana said. "I always felt my reward was for Miles Davis to call my house, Wayne Shorter, Herbie Hancock, Buddy Guy, B.B. King. When people like these call my house, those are my Grammys, my Oscars, my Emmys, my Tonys. I know I'm connected with some of the very, very important people on the planet."

"We began together so this is, creatively, very exciting for us," said Arista Records President-CEO Clive Davis, who signed Santana to the band's first record deal in the late 60s on Columbia and recently brought him to Arista.

Indeed, Davis was a big winner as well Tuesday. Besides his own first Grammy nomination (for co-producing Supernatural), he saw another longtime signee, Whitney Houston, rack up four nominations, as well as Arista-affiliated TLC's nominations. He also will be honored with a lifetime achievement award at the Grammys ceremony on Feb. 23 at Staples Center in Los Angeles.

All this combines for a very public boost for the mogul, who is locked in a corporate battle for control of the label he founded.

Women dominated in the best new artist category, where teen pop singers Christina Aguilera and Britney Spears square off with R&B vocalist Macy Gray, bluesy singer-songwriter Susan Tedeschi and the lone male nominee, bombastic rap-rocker Kid Rock.

The last nomination was the only acknowledgment of rap-rock in the four major categories. While the hybrid of hip-hop beats and the aggressive guitar crunch of hard rock was a major commercial force in 1999, groups such as Limp Bizkit and Korn had to settle for nominations in secondary categories such as best hard-rock performance.

Likewise, hip-hop was noticeably absent from the top categories. Except for TLC's stylish weave of hip-hop and R&B, other leading offerings from the genre were shut out of the album, record and song categories.

In the field of song of the year - which recognizes songwriters, not the performers - the nominees represented some of the biggest hits of the year: Backstreet Boys' "I Want It That Way" by Andreas Carlsson and Max Martin; Ricky Martin's "Livin' La Vida Loca" by Desmond Child and Ruby Rosa; "Smooth" by Itaal Shur and Rob Thomas; TLC's "Unpretty" by Dallas Austin and Tionne "T-Boz" Watkins; and Shania Twain's "You've Got a Way" by Robert John "Mutt" Lange and Twain. The nod for "Smooth" marked an 11th nomination for Santana's music in 1999.

Three of those songs also popped up in the record of the year category, where the nominees are "I Want It That Way," "Believe" by Cher, "Livin' La Vida Loca," "Smooth" and "No Scrubs" by TLC.

In the best dance recording category, three pop stalwarts - Cher, Donna Summer and Gloria Estefan - will contend with British turntable star Fatboy Slim and actress-singer Jennifer Lopez.

Commercial success was not the sole litmus in the category of best country album, where the best-selling Dixie Chicks will vie with Alison Krauss, Asleep at the Wheel, veteran George Jones and the all-star trio of Emmylou Harris, Linda Ronstadt and Dolly Parton.

The eligibility period for the 42nd annual Grammy Awards was Oct. 1, 1998, through Sept. 30, 1999, and almost 500 nominations in 98 categories were announced. The more than 10,000 members of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences vote for the winners.

For Information On 2 or 3 Year Scholarships call The UMASS Army ROTC 545-2321

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Spring Semester Internships Available

We are a new, web-based retail business in Amherst. We can offer students a great learning experience in marketing, business management and public relations. Work with us during Spring or Summer.
Call Shirley at Memorial Candles
1-888-LIGHT-15

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
36 North Pleasant St, Downtown Amherst
253-4400

- Open 7 days a week
- Serving Lunch, Dinner, and late night menu 'til Midnight
- Great pub style fare with unique daily specials and an emphasis on fresh seafood
- 12 Freshly brewed ales and lagers on tap, homemade root beer, and locally made hard cider
- Fully stocked bar. Choice selection of liquors & wines
- Live Entertainment
  - Thursday-Saturday 10:00 pm
  - Sunday Night Jazz at 9:00 pm
  - The Amherst Jazz Orchestra on the first and third Mondays of every month at 8:30

Welcome Back Students!
We Accept All Major Credit Cards + OCMP

Thank You

UMASS UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

For Participating in Our College Newspaper Readership Pilot Program.

The New York Times USA TODAY The Boston Globe

COURTESY OF PARAMOUNT PICTURES

After being Oscar-snubbed for The Truman Show, Jim Carrey makes another bid as late comedian, Andy Kaufman

Carrey carries Moon shot

Real Kaufman still a mystery

Man on the Moon
Directed by Milos Forman with Jim Carrey, Danny DiVeto
Courtney Love

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

No one knew Andy Kaufman. The genius behind his comedy lay in its never-ending nature; you never knew when the performance was over, and so the true, private personality of Kaufman has remained something of a mystery. Enter Man on the Moon, a Kaufman biography starring the talented, dynamic, and hilarious Jim Carrey, which tells the story of the under-appreciated comedian and attempts to shed some light on the mind at work behind the act.

Carrey plays Kaufman with a precision that borders on channeling, recreating classic stage performances and television appearances with remarkable faith and accuracy. All of the highlights of Kaufman's professional life are present, including his "SNL" Mighty Mouse theme song sing-along and his stint as a professional wrestler. For younger generations who never had the chance to appreciate Kaufman's comedic talent, this movie serves as an excellent primer to his work and public appearances.

Man on the Moon comes up short, however, in its efforts to examine Kaufman's personal life. For a biographical film to be effective and worthwhile, it must give the audience a closer look at its subject than they would otherwise be allowed, and with only a few exceptions, that was not the case here. We get some behind-the-scenes Kaufman antics between him and his agent George Shapiro, played excellently by Danny DeVito (who acted alongside the original Kaufman on the TV series "Taxi"), and some likewise entertaining chumming around with Kaufman's friend and comedic conspirator, Bob Zmuda (Paul Giamatti). The question of Kaufman's true personality, the mind at work behind the jokes and characters, however, remains unanswered. The movie didn't take any chances of misrepresenting the man, and in doing so resigned itself to little more than a retelling of history. Man on the Moon plays like a highlight clips show of Kaufman's life; all his best material, with nothing of substance concerning the man himself.

Of particular note is Kaufman's romance to Lynne Margulies (played adequately by singer/guitarist Courtney Love), which is thin to the extreme; it's like the screenwriter forgot entirely about their relationship the moment after he introduced it. We see so little of their interaction that it's difficult to believe any sort of chemistry exists between them.

Having said all of this, however, I do not wish to overstate the significance of these oversights. As a strict biography, Man on the Moon falls short, but taken simply as a movie, it certainly entertains. Jim Carey is a delight to watch, and Kaufman's old antics are as funny as ever, even when performed by someone other than himself. Despite the movie's shallow treatment of his character, the tragedy of Kaufman's death is not lost on the audience.

The soundtrack to Man on the Moon was provided by the veteran rock band R.E.M., whose song "Man on the Moon" off of the album Automatic for the People is often credited with renewing the public's interest in Kaufman's life. In addition to atmospheric score, the band provided a new song, "The Great Beyond," for use in the movie. B

Stone's stylized Sunday goes down with a resounding thud

Any Given Sunday
Directed by Oliver Stone with Jamie Foxx, Al Pacino, Cameron Diaz, Randy Quaid

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Remember those Wendy's commercials with the where's-the-beef lady? She'd look at a burger with a tiny piece of meat and say, "Where's the beef?" Well, after seeing Any Given Sunday, I had a strong urge to declare, "Where's the movie?" I knew I had just sat and watched something for over two and a half hours, but I couldn't recall much of anything about what I had seen. For all of the intense camera work, the screaming actors, and the pounding music, this movie came up short in nearly every department.

Watching Any Given Sunday is like bringing a really young kid to the video arcade: it moves from one flashy, colorful, and loud image to the next, pressing a few buttons here and there and wasting a lot of money in the process. Oliver Stone's directorial approach is incredibly overdone and off-putting. The camera never stays still, zipping and cutting around, making use of different film qualities, broken-record style dialogue repetition, and other needlessly distracting strategies. It becomes tiring to watch, a chore that leaves you dizzy and wondering where, exactly, the movie is taking place.

On the football field, Stone's style all but buries the literal events of the movie; you're too busy blinking your eyes trying to keep up with the self-indulgent camera work to understand what the team is attempting. For a movie that centers around the game of football, there was surprisingly little actual football content. Perhaps Stone thought the audience wouldn't be willing to deal with some of the intricacies of the sport (although he apparently did think they'd be interested in slow motion, backlit, sepia tone shots of cheerleaders jumping in the rain).

The intensity of Stone's style comes down a few notches when the movie turns away from the football field, but a whole new sort of distraction emerges there. The movie attempts to juggle way too many character stories, while at the same time moving the whole team toward a climactic playoff match, and even with the movie's hard to swallow running time of nearly three hours, not a single one of these individual

Turn to ANY GIVEN SUNDAY page B8

COURTESY OF ROBERT ZUCKERMAN

A. Pacino and Cameron Diaz scream their way to no end in Oliver Stone's shaky On Any Given Sunday

Anderson falters; Magnolia wilts

Magnolia
Directed by Paul Thomas Anderson with Julianne Moore, William H. Macy, Tom Cruise

Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

There must be an affliction on the city of Los Angeles- some sort of vague curse, which disrupts the personal, emotional, and family aspects of its inhabitants' relationships. The movie Magnolia takes a similar approach to the 1998 film, Playing By Heart, which sent a bunch of disparate, self-obsessed Los Angelenos out into the dark night to find love among neurioses, imperfections, and hopelessness. With the utterly self-indulgent Magnolia, Paul Thomas Anderson tries something in the same vein, but to what end I am still wondering.

The dysfunctional members of Magnolia's cast are not looking for love, and in fact are not connected at all, except in the most superficial ways. Even at the superficial level, the connections are extremely weak. I can't remember in what order we meet the characters, but by the end of this three and a half hour dreary melodrama, it doesn't matter.

There's the dying man (Jason Robards) who, while fading in and out of consciousness, makes a request to his softhearted caretaker (Phil Parma) to see his estranged son. His wife (Julianne Moore) is a basket case who spends most of the movie lamenting her indiscretions during their marriage and contemplating suicide. The man's son turns out to be Frank T. J. Mackey (Tom Cruise)- a vein scam artist who promises to "tame the cock" through his illicit "Seduce and Destroy (women)" program. There is the dying quiz show host (Phillip Baker Hall) who tries to make amends with his disillusioned wife (Melinda Dillon) and crack addicted daughter (Melora Walters). There is the consummate nice guy police officer (Jim Kurring), who falls for the daughter during a typical house call. There is the quiz show prodigy Stanley (Jeremy Blackman), who is pressured by his lazy, unloving father and the ex-quiz show prodigy (William H. Macy) who can't hold a job or confront his homosexuality. Unlike the trailer's promise, it doesn't make any sense at the end.

Anderson (who tried the same type of interconnectivity with Boogie Nights) randomly and aimlessly shuffles among the stories with no purpose other than throwing their turmoil in the audience's face. If you can excuse Magnolia's non-plot, then the major problem with all the shifting among stories is the lack of emotional investment in any of the characters. Despite the film's ridiculous length, the stories and their characters are still treated superficially.

COURTESY OF NEW LINE CINEMA

Tom Cruise stars as Frank Mackey, one of the many players in the poorly conceived marathon Magnolia

So, no matter how much Julianne Moore cries and laments and screams, it still seems extremely fake and forced. The dying old man groans and weeps and groans and weeps incessantly, but we don't care. Both the caretaker and the police officer come off as maudlin, at best, bumbling, naive, and idiotic at worst. William H. Macy's character is nothing more than a whiner. The only redeeming quality of the game show host and the cocaine addict is self-acknowledgment of their addiction- the former to his job and the latter to the drug. Sadly, both resign themselves to something they know is bad for them. Personally, I think watching Tom Cruise perform the entire "Seduce and Destroy" seminar would have been far more interesting than Magnolia.

Basically, we are reduced to trying to figure out the ultimate motive behind Magnolia- an undesirable task to say the least. Both the beginning and the end seem to suggest that it is the sheer oddity and eerie coincidence of the events that make them special. In other words, unexpected things really happen all the time, and Magnolia is supposed to be an example of this. However, this theory must be rejected based upon the fact that nothing at all really happens in the movie.

Anderson's feeble attempt at connecting his characters leads to the second idea: that of the dysfunctional family ultimately coming together. Most of the movie's story lines provide evidence for this theme. Quiz kid Stanley finally garners the courage to reprimand his unloving father. Frank T.J. Mackey returns home to weep at the bedside of the dying father who abandoned him, and ultimately meets his wife; She survives her suicide attempt. The game show host finally hears the punishment for wronging his wife and daughter. The latter two find each other in a moment of desperation. This explanation though still excludes William H. Macy's loner, the dualist police officer, and the dedicated caretaker.

The last, and possibly most likely, theme is that of redemption. When it starts raining frogs (no, you didn't read that wrong; it actually rains frogs for quite a while), there is the sense of something Biblical (possibly a reference to Exodus and one of the ten plagues placed on Egypt), suggesting the theme of redemption. Not all of the characters achieve redemption though, which makes this harder, but they do all need it. The police officer needs it because he's clumsy, and looked down upon by fellow officers. The dying man needs it, because he once abandoned his own dying wife and her son. Julianne Moore to live with herself. William H. Macy to explain a life of failure. Frank Mackey needs redemption to face a past that he forgot about. The game show host to face a past that he wishes he could forget about.

Paul Thomas Anderson tries to sell this conclusion with the officer's final speech. "Some people need to be pushed, other need to be forgiven...", but I don't buy it. Magnolia never goes beyond the surface to explore any sort of deeper meaning. And on the surface, the movie is an extraordinarily long, disjointed, cliched emotional disaster. If Anderson wanted to tell a story of redemption, he should have told the story of Christ. It would have been much more interesting and a lot shorter. D

Quest delights

Hilarity sparks spoof

Galaxy Quest
Directed by Dean Parisot with Tim Allen, Sigourney Weaver, Alan Rickman, Tony Shalhoub, Daryl Mitchell

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Galaxy Quest is a silly movie, the sort of movie that makes no promises of artistic accomplishment or intellectual stimulation. It's not a thought-provoking movie. It overflows with gags and jokes, takes itself lightly, and makes no attempt at even a scrap of credibility. And for those reasons, it's one of the most refreshing movies I've seen in a long time. It's not the best movie of the season, by any means, but for someone in search of 90 minutes of goofy relaxation, I can't think of a better choice.

Galaxy Quest uses a standard sci-fi premise: the main characters are actors in a campy sci-fi TV show, and an alien civilization has been receiving the TV transmissions and believing the show to be real. These aliens find themselves threatened by a hostile race, and seek out the help of the actors, who they believe to be heroes of the highest caliber. Hijinks ensue as the humans find themselves thrust into a ludicrous adventure they cannot possibly handle.

So that's just what happens in Galaxy Quest. Tim Allen stars as Jason Nesmith, better known to a group of aliens as Commander Taggart. He and fellow actors Gwen DeMarco (Sigourney Weaver), Alexander Dane (Alan Rickman), Fred Kwan (Tony Shalhoub, Antonio from the defunct TV series "Wings"), and Tommy Webber (Daryl Mitchell) are removed from their pathetic lives of convention appearances and product endorsements to combat a marauding race of space-faring reptiles. The movie plays out as you would expect, mining camp, action and comedy into an entertaining spoof of a classic "Star Trek" episode. Shalhoub is particularly hilarious in his deadpan role as the ship's engineer. Not every joke the movie throws out works, but enough do to keep you entertained.

Galaxy Quest succumbs at times to becoming too attached to its characters, blurring the line between spoof and actual fan sci-fi piece and the movie's finale is perhaps a bit too feel-good, as the crew proves themselves real heroes and everyone goes home feeling swell. Regardless, though taken for what it is, Galaxy Quest is well worth the price of a matinee ticket. B+

COURTESY OF DREAMWORKS

Tim Allen and Sigourney Weaver star in the whip smart Galaxy Quest

The first 250 students to open a new UCard account with $25 or more will receive an EXTRA $10 on their UCard Account!
Offer good January 24 - 27.

NEW THIS SPRING – Over 60 laundry rooms now take the UCard.

UCard Office Franklin Dining Hall
10 a.m. - 3 p.m. Wed - Thurs Opening Week
10 a.m. - 5 p.m. M-F Academic year

UCard

For more info, call 545-0197 or visit www.umass.edu/ucard

WHERE TO EAT BETWEEN COURSES

d'angelo sandwich shops
The Sandwich Specialists

48 North Pleasant Street • Amherst • 256-4131

Next time you get hungry in between classes, come to D'Angelo for delicious subs, salads, wraps and pokkets. For over 40 years people have come to D'Angelo to get the freshest, tastiest sandwiches and salads around because they know that we use only the finest quality ingredients and plenty of them. All served for a reasonable price and served quickly! That's why they call us The Sandwich Specialists!

DELIVERY • CARRY OUT • DINE IN

SAVE $1.50 on the purchase of one large sub or two small subs/pokkets
SAVE $5.00 on the purchase of two large subs or four single subs or two pokkets
SAVE $1.00 on one medium sub.

SUBS • POKKETS • WRAPS • SALADS

■ interrupted

Continued from page B1

are (estrogen-fest of sorts). The movie manages to avoid these pitfalls, however, concentrating on character examination and leaving such political temptations behind. Susanna's intelligence and integrity as a blossoming writer (the book is based on a true story, written by Susanna's real-life counterpart) is challenged and put in a realistic light, never glorified or idealized.

Even the cathartic temptation of Susanna escaping or striking back at her captors is denied; we only see the doctors and hospital staff as villains as long as Susanna does, and her outlooks matures and enlightens as the movie progresses.

I haven't read the original book, so I cannot say anything about Girl, Interrupted's loyalty to its parent text. I can, however, endorse it as a captivating biography of a young woman's struggle against the perils of institutionalization, self-doubt, and emotional isolation. A-

After 30 years in the music business, Supernatural put Santana, who leads this year's Grammy nominations with 10, over the top

Jay-Z recognizes maturation

Jay-Z, seen here at the Billboard Music Awards, tells his story with Volume 3...

By Richard Harrington
The Washington Post

On "Do It Again (Put Ya Hands Up)", the party-hearts first single from Jay-Z's new album, the Brooklyn-bred rapper and cohort Beanie Sigel and Amil warn would-be competitors that "the game is over, we'll never loud outs' sow all just better hope we gracefully bow out."

Don't expect that to happen any time soon, though Vol. 3 ... The Life and Times of S. Carter (Roc-A-Fella) is solid platinum, chock-full of hot tracks and sharp lyric attacks on pretenders, player haters and critics of hip-hop's current No. 1 hit maker.

"Do It Again" and the possessed "Pop 4 Roc" both recall the skittish rhythms of "Can I Get a ..." the latter drafts not only Amil, the Ltown rapper who first broke hip on "Can I Get," but Sigel and Memphis Bleek, who look ready to stake their own claims. As Sigel puts it: "I bring him like June and July/ spit like August/ I'm the truth I'm not lying/ I'm the reason Jay-Z feels comfortable rap

Turn to MATURATION, page B8

Metallica melds with orchestra
New music, new spins on old favorites

Veteran rockers Metallica revisit the past with the help of the San Francisco orchestra and their newest live CD

METALLICA with MICHAEL KAMEN
and THE SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
S&M Elektra

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

In another glorious addition to the epic legacy of what is considered by many to be the greatest heavy metal band in history, four-time Grammy Award-winner Metallica sets the bar a little higher for the latest wave of modern metal.

Having conquered the field many times over, the Southern California based legends have offered the nation a refreshing departure from the recently overdone riff-rap explosion that features top-sellers Korn and Limp Bizkit, by pulling off what was previously unheard of: power chord rock combining with a symphony orchestra.

Recorded April 21-22, 1999 live at the Berkeley Communitys Theater in Berkeley, Cal., Metallica put together a 21-song double CD that breathes new life into some of their classics, as well as boasts two new tracks, never before released.

One of the sparkling new cuts, "No Leaf Clover", reached as high as No. 2 on the Billboard Charts, a remarkable feat considering that it's a live recording and a novelty. "Clover", as a song, seems perfect for the orchestra, while still retaining the more refined quality that "Iallica has shown on recent studio endeavors like Load and Re-Load.

To pull the listener into the event, Metallica and conductor Michael Kamen begin the show with the standbs instrumental introduction "Ecstasy of Gold", a lead-in that the metal band is known for using to begin concerts, symphony or not.

With the classical counterparts in mind, the CD goes on to feature "Call of Kiuhi", an instrumental tune from their 1984 album Ride the Lightning that Kamen described as "a symphonic piece even without the orchestra," and "a story in music."

While common opinion appears to be split on whether or not the heavier Metallica songs were successfully transformed into sonatas, raw rock anthem "Fuel" came out of the pile as a favorite for radio stations, as the band members initially refused to release a single. In that song, the opener for their last original studio album, Re-Load, the passion and energy surges through the listener with its original fervor, while the panicked tempo of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra does much more than just mimic the chords through Beethoven's army. Kamen and the band, James Hetfield, Lars Ulrich, Kirk Hammett and Jason Newsted, use the orchestra not to echo the previously released metal riffs, but rather as another, even more powerful instrument with a new, complimentary piece of the song to contribute.

The second CD of the set begins with "Nothing Else Matters", a logical choice for a conversion of this sort. The slow and rhythmic song was featured with symphonic alterations once before in an "Elevator Version" that was found most easily on bootlegs of their hard-to-find 1987 EP Garage Days, re-revisited, not to be confused with the recently released double-disc Garage, Inc., which was a later spin-off.

After a perfectly mastered "Until it Sleeps", Metallica and the SFSO get into another song that has spent considerable time riding the FM airwaves, "For Whom the Bell Tolls". While some die-hard Tallica fans have a hard time letting go of the gothic bell that graces the intro of this classic, found originally on Ride the Lightning, the S&M version, which lacks the thematic opening, makes up for the loss with that grandiose feeling that only an orchestra can add.

The band's second new song, "– Human", received notably less press than "No Leaf Clover", but is perhaps an even better example of the marriage between Metallica and the San Francisco Symphon. With an amazing blend of rough and smooth, "– Human" seems as though it could stand alone as either a progressive classical piece or a hard-driving metal song, complete with the same blues background found on Load's "2x4".

Found later on CD two and not to be missed, is the often overlooked tune "Outlaw Torn" an epic that hosts with introspection and is effectively enhanced by the addition of the SFSO.

Quite possibly the biggest catch of the whole set, however is the disc's rendition of "One", which is arguably the best single heavy metal song of all time. Alone this And Justice for All masterpiece is a perfect meld of methodical and maniacal qualities, building from woeful angst to the "chugga-chugga" anger that has become Metallica's trademark. With an accomplished orchestra, "One" is finally complete; a superb ballad that the minds of Ulrich and Hetfield created, but the instruments of which were perhaps unable to completely encapsulate.

Overall, the double CD, S&M, is not only worth buying, but is a testament to the skills of both Metallica and the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra and their ability to overcome the societal barriers placed on genres of music.

Disney's Fantasia 2000 more of same old tune

By J.D. Considine
The Baltimore Sun

Walt Disney's Fantasia was always the most high-minded of animated films. The original 1940 feature wasn't just a visual and aural tour de force; it was also a sly lesson in music appreciation, bringing the classics to audiences who otherwise might never have heard Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" or Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours."

Naturally, there's an element of edification in Fantasia 2000: An Original Walt Disney Records Soundtrack as well. From the opening semaphore of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, conductor James Levine – assuming the role Leopold Stokowski held in the original – does his best to make classical music seem as entertaining and exciting as a John Williams Star Wars score.

As did the original film, Fantasia 2000 balances works familiar to anyone (such as Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance March No. 1," which has paraded innumerable graduates across commencement-day stages) with less well-known modern fare (such as Shostakovich's Piano Concerto No. 2). In other words, it means to educate but doesn't want to make the learning curve too steep.

But to be honest, the soundtrack to Fantasia 2000 does to the symphonic repertoire what the old "Classics Illustrated" comics did to literature – condenses and oversimplifies great works.

Five of the film's eight selections have been "edited" for the movie, an effort ranging from minor tightening to full-scale rearrangement of the music. For instance, instead of giving us the first movement from Beethoven's Fifth, Levine and the Chicago Orchestra perform only the most familiar fragment of the work, condensing Beethoven's score into a snappy two minutes, 51 seconds. (The rest, presumably, was left on the cutting-room floor.)

That's nothing, however, compared to the liberties taken with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" marches. Not only has Peter Schickele edited all four marches until the whole is only slightly longer than March No. 1, but he lards the ending with an unnecessarily bombastic choral arrangement featuring soprano Kathleen Battle. It's as if someone decided that the music itself needed a big, Hollywood ending if it was to go over with today's audiences.

To his credit, conductor Levine does a reasonable job with truncated scores, offering spirited (if overly conventional) readings that make much of the music's orchestral color. Moreover, pianists Yelim Bronfman (in the Shostakovich) and Ralph Grierson (in the Gershwin) are both wonderful, performing with admirable clarity and lyricism.

Still, this Disney-fication of the classics rankles. Just as Disney's Jungle Book distorted Kipling's classic, Fantasia 2000 ends up compromising the very music it means to celebrate. And no amount of visual spectacle can excuse that.

Disney's Fantasia 2000 will be rocking Imax theaters until May when it hits nationwide

Hurry down...

January Sidewalk Sale

(indoors, of course)

Wednesday Jan. 26 - Saturday Jan. 29

ZANNA

downtown Amherst

campus reps needed!

the funkmaster >

Add local events to our site and promote the hell out of it on your campus... ...and we'll hook you up with $8 / hour

contact joey@nightfunk.com

NIGHTFUNK.com

ATKINS FARMS Country Market

Rte. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 • (800) 594-9537

Looking For Something To Do?
Atkins is a destination for all seasons.

A unique country market nestled in one of the oldest apple orchards in New England has something for everyone. Only a 5 minute drive from UMass on Rt. 116 will give you a chance to sample some of New England's favorite food.

Fresh Produce
Country Bakery
Deli & Lunches
Homemade Fudge

Meat Market
Ice Cream /Juice Bar
Specialty Foods
Full Service Florist

And so much more!

A Little Bit Of Atkins
At UMass located in the UMass Campus Center

Atkins Flower Shop
1 (413) 549-9405

Campus Delivery Available
Monday-Saturday
Worldwide Deliveries Through AFS & Telaflora wire services.

Don't Forget Valentine's Day February 14th.

Met-Rx.....EAS.....ProLab.....Twinlab.....Muscletech.....Solgar....Met-Rx.....EAS.....

Get In Shape with...

IN SHAPE NUTRITION

Nutrition Supplement Discounter

Spring Break

- Largest selection of fat burners and sport supplements in Western, Mass.
- Huge selection of vitamins and herbs
- Register here to win a trip to the Bahamas!!

Coupons available online @ www.inshapeonline.com

65 University Dr. Amherst, MA (413) 549- 7434

Young Hip Clothes

~ Details ~

Great Accessories
Clothing & Footwear

19 N. Pleasant Street, Amherst • 253-0300

Young Hip Clothes

blah, blah, blah...

Looking for a little entertainment?
Hungry for a new restaurant?
Got something to talk about?
Interested in a game?

click on these www.masslive.com/college www.masslive.com/campuscam www.masslive.com/chat
www.masslive.com/umassbasketball www.masslive.com/umassfootball www.masslive.com/sports
www.masslive.com/eguide/eats www.masslive.com/entertainment
www.masslive.com/forums

MassLive...your homepage away from home.

Just click to find out about anything that's going on in WMass entertainment whether it's dance, music or theater. Satisfy your hunger by referencing over 800 restaurant listings. Log onto MassLive's Live Chat and talk to real people about anything your heart desires...sports, politics, romance, whatever! Get up to the minute information, stats and schedules on UMass (or any) sports!

mass LIVE

www.masslive.com

Union-News. Sunday Republican.

Telaxis COMMUNICATIONS

Telaxis makes high-tech electronics for wireless Communications

Weekend availability

flexible hours
6, 8, 10 or 12-hr shifts
minimum of 12 hours per weekend

$12-14.00/hour for more technical postions

$9-10.00+ for advanced assembly skills and test jobs

$8.50/hout for entry level assembly positions

Training will be given.

TO APPLY
Call 413.665.8551
Emailhr@telaxiscomm.com
Fax 413.665.0069

Transportation can be provided if needed.

HDTV: high hopes dashed

Once lauded technology loses public interest

By Rob Pegoraro
The Washington Post

LAS VEGAS - This year, you'll finally be able to watch the Super Bowl in high-definition television. Only not in cities – including Washington, D.C. – where the local ABC affiliate doesn't have digital broadcasts.

It's been like that for digital television since before the first $10,000 HDTV set went on sale in the late summer of 1998. Digital TV - and in particular its flashiest, most expensive, most stunningly beautiful variant, high-definition TV - has been a puzzle of a technology. The pictures it can splash across a 60-inch screen are beyond fabulous in clarity. But the prices for those sets are equally eye-popping (a "cheap" high-definition TV now costs $3,000 or so). The selection of digital programs is growing.

At the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas, the Consumer Electronics Association, the Arlington, Va.-based trade group that organizes this annual gathering, announced Wednesday that more than 100,000 digital or "digital-ready" sets had been sold to dealers and repeated earlier predictions that 600,000 sets will be shipped this year.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman William E. Kennard announced at the show that broadcasters and TV manufacturers have until April to settle compatibility problems or face an FCC mandate on the issue.

Manufacturers say they're pleased with the results so far. "We're at projections only because we've sold everything we could make," said Jerry Surprise, a product manager at Panasonic. "The response was better than anything we'd projected."

But how many of these sets include the digital circuitry needed to receive broadcasts, whether other the air or via satellite?

"Ninety-plus percent of this is high-frequency or high-scan product without digital tuners built in," said John Revie, Sony's director of consumer television products. "Theoretically, the consumer can buy a set-top box later on." Without that equipment, an "HDTV-ready" set can make existing programming and DVD movies look much better, but it can't show any of the high-definition pictures being broadcast by the major networks, some Public Broadcasting Service affiliates and HBO.

"It's kind of two different mentalities," said Rich Hurlburt, manager of the systems installation group at Myer-Emco in Tysons Corner, Va. "One is the early adopter. The other is the kind that's trying to future-proof their technology purchase - I'm hedging my bet: I'm going to get a great picture on my DVD."

How much high-definition content you'll be able to pull in with a digital tuner is another issue. Broadcast networks, helped by subsidies from TV manufacturers, have put a decent chunk of their schedules on the air in digital form. But cable companies, with few exceptions, have declined to carry this digital programming; the bandwidth needed for one high-definition signal could be used to transmit multiple compressed digital signals, a much more profitable proposition considering the tiny installed base of digital sets.

"Would we like to see more (cable operators) come online faster?" said Jeff Iosephs, the Consumer Electronics Association's vice president. "Yes, we would. The fact is, there are other solutions that consumers can turn to. One is satellite. Another is good old over-the-air - we've seen antenna sales explode."

Josh Bernoff, an analyst at Forrester Research - and one of HDTV's foremost skeptics - said over-the-air reception poses further problems. "The good news is, the stations have mostly met their deadline, and the equipment appears to be working properly, and the sets have come down significantly in price," he said.

"The bad news is these questions about whether the transmission standard is workable."

Baltimore-based Sinclair Broadcast Group has been petitioning the FCC to revise the technology standard used to broadcast digital TV to make it more resistant to "multipath interference" (what makes analog signals "ghost") in urban areas. Most other companies in the business, including such set manufacturers as Thomson and Philips, have rejected Sinclair's request, saying improved tuning equipment will get around this problem.

Stay tuned for more controversy on that point, not to mention cable companies' cooperation and the issue of what kinds of sets can properly be labeled HDTV. This technology has a way to go. And there's still the issue of those prices.

"Not a lot of American families can pay $5,000 for that 56-inch (projection) TV," said Panasonic's Surprise. "We need to expand the market. We need to give the broadcasters a reason to produce this high-definition signal."

DMX delivers mixed masterpiece

By Roger Catlin
The Hartford Courant

DMX changed the rules of marketing last year when he came out with his new album days before Christmas.

At a time when new releases had stopped coming out for weeks, here he was, pictured boldly on the cover in red. It wasn't bunting, it was blood – lifting for the gangsta rap inside, if not for the season.

What is Christmas to a gangsta rapper anyway, except another day of insult and danger, with liquor stores closed to boot.

What was an audacious plan last year is now tradition, with the new DMX, And Then There Was X, out this week. The former Earl Simmons doesn't stray far from the Ruff Riders formula. He creates tense urban scenes with snakily insinuating, often orchestral backing tracks, adding to the feeling he's creating mini action films.

His gruff voice is at the forefront, there are cries of the trademark "What? What?" punctuating his delivery. He keeps asking: "You think this is a game?" in his grim tales, which still have the feel of morality tales, for all their grit and gumplas. Not just in his third consecutive "Prayer" but in the affecting track "Angel." A skit that shows loyalty is more important than money is almost out of Dickens.

So load it be to hardcore rap, he includes one of the best tracks, a delightful R&B male-female give-and-take with Dmne, as only a "bonus track."

DMX has often been compared with Tupac Shakur, from his gruff delivery and lyrical intensity to his compact, muscular stature and bald head. And while DMX once had the new release rack all to himself a year ago, here, like the Ghost of Christmas Past, is 2Pac himself with a new release with the Outlawz.

With various Outlawz playing bigger and bigger roles, the 2Pac parts on "Still I Rise" are in shorter supply than ever. Whole contemporary-sounding tracks are built around a few old rhymes. And the living rappers flow in the familiar 2Pac way. Even as they bring back hits like "Keep Ya Head Up" with one new verse, you can't help but think this well is going dry.

■ Any Given Sunday

continued from page B4

stories receives sufficient treatment.

The most central story concerns Willie Beamen (Jaime Foxx), a low-profile quarterback who finds himself thrust into the limelight when his team's other two QBs are taken out of the game with serious injuries. After a rocky start, Beamen begins making massive improvements and leads the team on a series of victories, indulging in corporate sponsorship, a rap album deal, and other benefits of being a celebrity athlete. The team's coach, Tony D'Amato (Al Pacino), is worried that Beamen's solo-flyer style of play calling will tear the foundation of the team apart. The team's young owner, Christina Pagniacci (Cameron Diaz) is pressuring D'Amato for greater exposure for Beamen, while the recovering starting QB, Jack Rooney (Dennis Quaid), is looking to get back in the game and end his career with a degree of dignity (angering his wife, who thinks he still has a couple good seasons of money-making in him). It's one big pigskin mess, and almost none of it is resolved by the movie's semi-exciting climax.

Part of the movie's problem comes in trying to declare the sanctity of the sport, the simple elegance of it, while surrounding it with stories of greed, self-service, and professional infidelity. In such a situation, sympathy for any character is difficult. Perhaps the movie simply took on too much and raced to get it all done, producing a scatterbrained and visually jarring film. Whatever the reason, Any Given Sunday is only so much light and noise, with nary a complete or compelling plot to be found. C-

■ maturation

continued from page B6

ing."

And that's unlikely to happen any time soon because, as Jay-Z puts it on the opening track, "I consistently take 'em out of the park like Ken Griffey." The album is full of reputation-building swagger, catalguing of lyrical skills and autobiographical perspective. On the defiant "Come and Get Me," Jay-Z, using his given name, muses, "Whoever thought Shawn Carter would change the game/ used to rap on the raindrops off my window pane." On the lighthearted "Things That U Do," Swizz Beatz track with a burbling backing chorus by Mariah Carey, he points out he "could've got lost in the system/ Instead I'm involved with the rhythm." And on "Hova Song," Jay-Z himself boasts "I'm the illest nigga/ prove me wrong!"

Cropping up on several tracks, the "Hova" business (as in "Jehovah") is part of an annoying megalomania that undermines the album. It's particularly evident on "Dope Man," part of a played-out tradition of scenarios in which rappers go on trial for real or imagined crimes. This time, Jay-Z serves up Brooklyn biography ("as a prisoner of circumstance/ Full Bigga, I couldn't much work with my hands/ but my mind was strong"), defends himself against attacks from both within and without the rap community, and eventually triumphs against all. Running commentary is provided by MTV's Serena Altschul, which should make for an interesting video, equal parts MTV and Court TV!

Aside from Carey, there are few guests from outside the Roc-A-Fella roster: Dr. Dre makes an appearance on "Watch Me" (Jay-Z ghostwrote "Still D.R.E." on Dre's comeback album) and Juvenile brings a little Dirty South bounce to "Snoopy Track." The latter is one of four produced by Timbaland, and they're all strong, particularly "It's Hot (Some Like It Hot)" with its snappy bass-and-handclap frame, and "Big Pimpin'," with its sinewy, swirling Middle Eastern melody.

Another Timbaland track, "Come and Get Me," is a compelling challenge to all comers and critics, as well as a spirited defense of Jay-Z's success: "I ain't crossed over/ I brought the suburbs to the hood/ made 'em relate to your struggle, told 'em bout your hustle/ went on MTV with doo-rags/ I made them love you/ you know normally them people wouldn't be (expletive) with you/ till I made them understand why you do what you do."

Other highlights include the DJ Premier-produced "So Ghetto" and "There's Been a Murder," built on a mesmerizing Alana Davis sample. The album also includes two hidden tracks, though they're listed on the back cover as "bonus hidden tracks." Easter eggs are harder to find.

Musician Regina looks to become local jewel

REGINA
Falling Together Coming Apart
Oak Grove Recording

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

Adding a twist to the bluesy folk style of music that Jewel brought to mainstream popularity, local artist Regina released a collection of songs entitled Falling Together Coming Apart.

Regina, whose family name is Rochefort, is a UMass student who is a recognizable performer around Western Massachusetts, including regular appearances in Springfield and a reported upcoming Feb. 11 show at the Iron Horse in Northampton. If the Iron Horse crowd gets a showing that reflects the quality of her recent CD, they could be getting a glimpse of the next regional star to hit the national scene.

Playing a different style than successful predecessors They Might Be Giants, Dinosaur Jr. and Sonic Youth, this Western Mass musician puts together a collection of tunes that makes masterful transitions between soulful ballads, up-beat love songs and individualistic statements.

Falling Together begins with "Sorry Again", which brings together a folk-like longing and a certain eerily calming quality reminiscent of the Sundays' cover of the Rolling Stones' "Wild Horses".

The following tune keeps the flow going strongly. "Forget Me Not" is probably the closest Regina gets to sounding like Jewel, as the intro reminds listeners of a mix between "Who Will Save Your Soul" and "You Were Meant for Me", from Jewel's debut album Pieces of You. "Forget Me Not" offers an example of her poetic lyricism, singing "I take a shower to wash off this feeling".

In "Falling In Love", perhaps the inspiration behind the first half of the juxtaposition that is the album's title, Regina accurately creates a hopeful atmosphere that reflects the buoyant, euphoric feeling one gets when "falling in love."

Still, the highlight of the album comes in the form of the song "Don't Make Promises", a faster-paced tune directed to the subject of relationships. While retaining a sense of loving sorrow and disappointment, the artist paints a willfully strong picture of a woman with stance and purpose with this quicker ditty, the second to last one on the disc.

The appropriately titled following song, "The End", contains a catchy, rhythmic strum and slap acoustic combination that leaves the listener in the mood for an encore that is impossible for Regina to grant, unless you catch her in person.

■ Cider House Rules

continued from page B1

who has just had an abortion. One thing leads to another and Homer winds up working on Paul Rudd's family orchard, living in the titular cider house.

Here, Tobey Maguire carries the movie with an eye-opening performance. His eager idealism and deliberate delivery give great depth to Homer Wells- young man seeing the world for the first time. He's enchanting as a romantic lead in the illicit, yet sweetly Innocent affair with Charlize Theron and he's stirring as the somewhat quiet presence on the all black apple-picking team.

Even as the movie moves in seemingly different directions, developing multiple subplots, strong themes powerfully bind it together. Symbolically, Homer encounters a new world much more complex than the simple one that he left behind. His idealism and black and white mentality don't apply here. There are no simple rules, which govern this world. And as the movie suggests, sometimes one has to break the rules in order to make things right again.

The Cider House Rules maintains a sense of the proper, even if the characters are pulled away from this ideal by fate. As a result, there is always a distinct feeling that Homer should return home to the orphanage, because that is truly where he belongs. An ailing Dr. Larch desperately tries to convince him that he should take over the orphanage. When Homer finally leaves the cider house to return to the orphanage, he is finally able to discover the true hero of his life.

The Cider House Rules is a magnificent tale of life, family, and heroism, brilliantly told throughout a rustic New England countryside. There are great performances all around from Tobey Maguire to Michael Caine, who is wonderfully endearing, to Charlize Theron, the classic grown-up schoolgirl. The first hour or more of the movie is about as good as anything you'll ever see. Even if the story gets a bit muddled in the middle, the ending is delightfully satisfying framing the entire story with great perspective. This is a gem and shouldn't be missed. A

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES

You Say You Want a Revolution
1776
This joyful Tony Award-winning musical makes the case that the founding of our country was funny, heartwarming, and full of music and dance. American history has never been so memorable!
THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 7:30PM
CONCERT HALL

So Hot She's Cool
Regina Carter Quintet
Jazz Violin
Catch this rising star when she comes to the Valley with her rare ability to fuse jazz, funk, African, Brazilian and soul music. Hear why she's galvanized the jazz world, including Downbeat Magazine which named her the #1 Jazz Violinist in its 46th annual poll.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 7:30PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM
The 2nd Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency
Sponsored by Barnes & Noble, The Women's Times, and WFCR's Jazz a la Mode 88.5 FM

Enchanting Melodies and Brilliant Poetry
The Beijing Kunju Opera Theatre
China's oldest opera tradition comes alive in a spectacular display of melody, mime, glorious costumes, and amazing acrobatics. Fascinating fun for the whole family.
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 7:30 PM
CONCERT HALL
In collaboration with the Asian Dance & Music Program. Sponsored by The Valley Advocate

The Sound and Soul of Senegal
THE DRUMMERS OF WEST AFRICA
One of the world's most renowned percussion orchestras in the world, this is the group from which Kodo takes its inspiration. Led by the living legend Doudou N'Diaye Rose, this 35-member ensemble from Dakar, Senegal, delivers a pulsating, unforgettable experience.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 7:30 PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by The River 95.3

Puppet Masters
Salzburg Marionette Theatre presents
The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni
Enchanting, magical, masterful Mozart as you've never seen it before! The Salzburg Marionettes are among the oldest and most famous puppet troupes in the world with skill and artistry that sets standards and charms audiences of all ages.
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, THE MAGIC FLUTE, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Join us for a Talkback with the artists after the performance.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, DON GIOVANNI, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Sponsored by Florence Savings Bank and WRNX 100.9 FM

We bring the arts home
PLEASE NOTE NEW TIME: WEEKNIGHT PERFORMANCES BEGIN AT 7:30PM.
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets

TICKETS $7.50 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
The Fine Arts Center
University of Massachusetts Amherst

University of Massachusetts Boston
Teach Next Year
Graduate College of Education
Question #1 Would you love to teach?
Question #2 Do you believe you can bring your talent and emerging expertise to high school students?
Question #3 Can you see yourself in a classroom of the future at a dynamic urban high school?
If your answer to all three questions is yes, consider becoming part of an active school-university partnership through enrollment in Teach Next Year at UMass Boston.
Teach Next Year offers :
- a one-year route to teacher certification and a master's degree through an experimental, experiential school-based program;
- a full year of graduate study at UMass Boston integrated with teaching at Boston's Dorchester High School;
- the first steps along your pathway to a career as a high school teacher.
Do you qualify?
Applicants must have a bachelor's degree in one of the liberal arts or sciences, or anticipate earning one by June. Teach Next Year is designed for college graduates who have records of leadership and achievement and who seek the opportunity to begin teaching in an urban high school. Persons of all backgrounds are encouraged to apply.
Costs?
Each Teach Next Year participant receives a full-tuition grant, a waiver of most fees, and a $10,000 graduate assistantship.
Priority consideration is given to applications completed by March 1, 2000. Please call or email us for more information:
617.287.7662
june.kuzmeskus@umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

"Fast and Fabulous!" -San Francisco Chronicle
"The hottest show on legs!" -Time Out London
February 1 & 2 8 p.m.
$10.00 Student Tickets *must be purchased day of show
TAP DOGS
FOR TICKETS...413-788-7033
For Group Sales (413)-788-7646
Sponsored by... BUXTON
Court Street, Springfield, MA

CARDIO KICKBOXING
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Born violent

Message betrays B.I.G.

By J.D. Considine
The Baltimore Sun

Judged from the CD booklet, Born Again looks like any other current rap album. In addition to listing the song titles, it identifies the rappers who make cameo appearances - a group that includes such major names as Eminem, Snoop Doggy Dogg, Li'l Kim, Too $hort, and Nas - and includes the usual list of thank-yous from the album's star. It's all very run-of-the-mill, except for the fact that the star in question, the Notorious B.I.G., has been dead for more than two years.

Death, of course, has never been a career-stopper in popular music. From Buddy Holly to Stevie Ray Vaughan, numerous artists have continued to release new albums after shuffling off this mortal coil.

But nowhere has this phenomenon been more pronounced than in hip-hop. Tupac Shakur, for example, has churned out as many albums in the years since his death in 1996 as he did in the last three years he was alive. Nor did the death of Lady I put an end to his recording career.

In the case of Christopher Wallace - a.k.a. Biggie Smalls, a.k.a. The Notorious B.I.G. - it's almost as if he never died at all. He was listed as executive producer on Sean "Puff Daddy" Combs' latest album, Forever, and on Born Again manages to have recorded with rappers he never met while alive.

Of course, these "new" recordings by B.I.G. are just demos and leftovers that Combs (who co-executive produced this album) and others have cobbled into new tracks. That's one of the reasons the album is so heavily larded with guest rappers - few of the snippets Biggie left behind were long enough to make full-length raps.

If that seems like thin material to fashion an album from, don't worry - the help Smalls gets from the album's guest stars and producers more than makes up the difference. Some tracks may be dreadfully predictable, as when Puff Daddy and Lil' Kim offer strictly by-the-book performances on "Notorious B.I.G.," but others are delightfully surprising. Hearing Eminem riff off of Biggie's rap in "Dead Wrong" reveals new depths in the young rapper's delivery, while Ice Cube's performance in "If I Should Die Before I Wake" makes a nice coda to the alleged East Coast/West Coast rap war.

Still, it's sad to hear so much talk of sex and violence on an album by a man many rap fans consider a hero. Knowing that B.I.G. died in a hail of bullets, it's disturbing to hear him boasting yet again about gunning down his rivals. Likewise, the sexual abuse of women described in "Big Booty Hoes" is enough to make a porn producer blush. Granted, Combs and company were only working with what they had, but still it's a shame that was we want to remember The Notorious B.I.G.?

Welcome Back Students!
AmherstOnline.com
Now that you're back, check out what's happening around town!
- Contests
- Coupons
- Giveaways
- News
- Information
- Entertainment
- Shopping
- Travel
- Food & Drink
- Employment
www.AmherstOnline.com
Bookmark It!™

Denzel storms rocky Hurricane

The Hurricane
Directed by Norman Jewison with Denzel Washington, Vicellous Reon Shannon, Deborah Unger

One of Hollywood's unwritten rules is that movies based on true stories always perform better than the average run of the mill drama. For some reason, knowing that the events on screen actually took place draws from the audience a deeper sense of attachment to the characters and a richer experience of emotion. The Hurricane, which stars Denzel Washington as Ruben "Hurricane" Carter is one of these movies.

The movie is partially based upon and features the novel, The 16 th Round, written by Carter himself. In that sense, the film does a great job detailing how Ruben Carter's story unfolds and how exactly his novel comes about. However, The Hurricane languishes in the beginning, struggling to establish its characters and its dual plot. It's almost as if director Norman Jewison wants credit for Bob Dylan's song, used twice in the first forty five minutes. Unlike Dylan though he never sufficiently explores the racial tensions or political overtones of the time, making his grand conspiracy plot half-heard and unconvincing at times.

Initially, the story chronicles Carter's journey through his troubled childhood in a bad neighborhood. We see him as a young troublemaker being reigned in by the hands of justice. The movie establishes Detective Vincent Della Pesca (Dan Hedaya) as Carter's nemesis- the symbols, figure of hatred and racism. Through boxing, Carter vows to take command of his life and reform, but his efforts are consistently thwarted by Della Pesca to the point where he is accused of a murder that he did not commit.

At the same time we meet young Lesra (Vicellous Reon Shannon), a young black boy who has been kind of foddly) adopted by three well-off Canadians. The Hurricane goes through the motions of having Lesra leave his family for a better education, so he can eventually go to college, but for no apparent reason. The film always seems to hint that there is more to the trio and their relationship with Lesra, but never really makes anything of it.

The Hurricane finally turns for the better when Lesra reads Hurricane Carter's book and, inspired by his friends, begins writing to him. A correspondence develops between the two, which leads to a friendship. Eventually all four start working to free the long imprisoned prizefighter.

At this point, The Hurricane takes on a surprising eloquence, reminiscent of the 1994 classic, Shawshank Redemption. With significant portions narrated by Denzel Washington's desperate voice, the film enters the world of the poetic and the powerful as Carter describes his innermost frustrations for having been done injustice. The friendship between Lesra and Carter blossoms until both find peace on a spiritual level and unity in each other.

Denzel Washington gives a well-tempered performance as the victim of racism, breathing much needed soul into this otherwise hard-edged film. He plays Carter with an adept subtlety and graceful presence, conveying more with a facial expression or a darted stare than anything else.

The Hurricane will definitely tug emotional chords but only because Washington is truly inspiring. He makes a very hard role go over quite easily and deserves much of the credit for the film's success. What the movie lacks in terms of message or perspective, it makes up for with raw emotion and heart. Considering the injustice done, that's truly a remarkable accomplishment. B

Denzel Washington brings Ruben "Hurricane" Carter's story of injustice to life

Snow treacherous

Director ruins tale

Ethan Hawke looking pensive as he does throughout most of the onerous, Snow Falling on Cedars

By Stephen Hunter
The Washington Post

Snow Falling on Cedars is a feverish love story, but the lovers are the director and his camera. When you watch it, you feel as if you're intruding on something intimate between them.

This latest effort by Australian director Scott Hicks loves its lovely inwiteness. It seems to be trying to think of some new rapture that hasn't been thought of in the previous century. It drifts far from narrative and deeply into poetry. It finds haiku everywhere. It seems to be set among petals on a wet, black bough. Basically, it's a noir thriller hidden beneath too much education. Under the dissolves, the moody shots of snow-drifting through a lowering sky, the diffraction of light smeared by raindrops on the lens, the sense of wetness everywhere, it's our old friend from 1947, the wrong-man thing. The wrinkles are mild, to say the least.

You'll get the drift of this about halfway through, unless you've read the novel by David Guterson, in which case you'll already know the drift and you'll wonder where the hell it is in all the arty photography. Up till that time, you've been taking the Hicks magical mystery tour of San Pedro Island, Wash., in 1950, where you've noted that the suspect and his wife are Asian, the victim and the reporter are Occidental, the snow is white and the rain is not. But most of all you've noticed that Hicks has grown a new style. Whatever happened to the clarity in which he rooted Shine? What did he do in between the two productions: see The English Patient seventy-seven times?

The novel, of course, was a deeper success, lush, rich, read by millions. And once the movie settles down a bit, it connects with that appeal and picks up a purity of line that becomes compelling. Guterson, for example, has come up with a neat little mystery that Hicks should have trusted more just as he should have hired a cinematographer he trusted less.

Ethan Hawke, everybody's favorite sensitive young man, plays Ishmael Chambers, the island's writer-editor-typesetter, a post he inherited from his father (seen in oh-so-many flashbacks as Sam Shepard). That's one of Ishmael's issues. Call him father-haunted. He wonders if he's the man his dad was. But he's also love-haunted. When he was a boy, he was truly, deeply, madly in love with Hatsue (Youki Kudoh), an ardency of desire that would have upset the island's gentle equilibrium between the races had it been made public, so it never was. To go for the trifecta, he's also war-haunted. He spent a brief time on the beach of some hell-blasted reef where men of the same culture that prosecuted the war on love tried their best to erase him from the Earth.

The war is everywhere in this movie, just as it was in "The English Patient." I like that: we forget too easily how the war lingered in our culture for decades. Now a few years after its end, the Japanese have returned from a government-imposed exile in the western desert with great bitterness, facing diminished participation in the community, lost properts and racial hate stirred by the oaths of white men in battle against the Japanese, no matter that their own sons were out in Italy killing Germans by the bucketful.

It's Hatsue's husband, Kazuo (Rick Yune), who is the logical suspect when Carl Heine (Eric Thal) is found floating offshore in a fish net. To make things more difficult, Kazuo and Carl, once close friends, were involved in a commercial dispute over some land. To make them yet more difficult, Carl's blood is found on Kazuo's fishing boat while Kazuo's knife is found on Carl's, although he was killed by blunt force.

Ishmael – when he's not remembering his ecstasies as a young man with Hatsue or his wise father or his own maiming experiences in wartime against the Japanese - begins to see through the obviousness of the state's case. Another theory of the events of those dark and rainy nights is plausible, but here's the temptation that dogs him: If he intercedes, then Hatsue is lost to him forever.

The movie is entirely too haunted for its own good, and it takes a great deal of time before it settles down. Everyone in this movie has issues: it's overdosed on point of view. It's as if Hicks has simultaneously discovered psychology and cinematography, and they combine dangerously for him. You have to wait for him to get over it, and then you can enjoy it.

DESIGN SUPPLY
ART STUDIO SUPPLIES
AT THE TOWN COMMON
65 SO. PLEASANT STREET
AMHERST, MA 01002
FREE DISCOUNT CARD WITH THIS COUPON
413-253-5592

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING•PRE-
COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0050

Part-Time Help Wanted
Campus Auto Supply
205 University Dr.
• Apply In Person
• Flexible Hours
• Good Driving Record

Thai Corner
On Boltwood Walk
Welcome Back Students
Eat In - Take Out
Lunch: Monday - Saturday 11:30 - 3:00
Dinner: Sunday - Thursday 5:00 - 9:00
Friday - Saturday 5:00 - 10:00
Real Thai Food
rice + noodles
flavorful entrees
Best Pad Thai in town.
31 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA 253-1639

BOOK MILL
USED & DISCOUNT BOOKS
7 DAYS 10-6
RIVER VIEW READING ROOMS
MONTAGUE • MA 367-9206
Books You Don't Need, In A Place You Can't Find

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077
Newly Rennovated Sushi Bar!
CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923 • 256-8924
NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

GREAT CLOTHES
50%-75% OFF
on name brand clothing, shoes & accessories for men & women.
New Shipments Arriving Weekly
THE WEARHOUSE
Clothing Outlet
255 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
Next to Dairy Mart and Bank Boston
(413) 549-5432

Youth, Pet Shop Boys lead winter releases

It's easy to see why Shania Twain's latest album, Come on Over: The International Version is such a success

By J.D. Considine
The Baltimore Sun

According to the accepted wisdom, Americans don't like the bland melodies and pneumatic beats of Europop. But the success of Europop hits like Cher's "Believe" argues differently, and Eiffel 65's near-irresistible "Blue (Da Ba Dee)" may well be the ultimate refutation of that theory. A haunting blend of melodic melancholy and rhythmic insistence, it's as catchy as its tale of a blue man in a blue world is strange. While there isn't anything quite as magnificently quirky on "Europop", Eiffel 65's aptly named album, there's similar wit and spirit in "Living In a Bubble" and the cyberromance tune "Hyperlink." On the other hand, "Your Clown" is just a pale imitation of Depeche Mode, while "Move Your Body" probably won't.

Sometimes it seems as if rappers are more interested in projecting attitude than in making music. Not Q-Tip, however. Ever since his days with the late, lamented A Tribe Called Quest, Q-Tip's rap style has been a model of intelligence and invention, mixing wise words with a sly musicality. But not even his best work with Tribe matches the innovative excellence of "Amplified" From the ticking electronics of "Wait Up" and "Do It" to the snarling shuffle of "End of Time" (which features a cameo by Kanti Q-Tip's instrumental tracks are as fresher they are funky, opening new ground for hip-hop. But his refusal to run with the pack doesn't keep Q-Tip from keeping company with vital artists. Hip catchy, irrepressible, Vivian Thing make plain.

Is there really such a thing as being too smart for your own good? That's a question worth pondering for fans of the Pet Shop Boys, whose bright and witty new album "Nightlife" has gone virtually ignored by American radio programmers. Granted, the duo's fondness for synth-driven dance pop hasn't always charted on this side of the Atlantic. Ocean as it is in Europe. But it's hard to imagine the British act would deny the ostentatious charm of "New York City Boy." Besides, there's more to "Nightlife" than just dancing: there's also the tuneful melancholy of "Happiness Is an Option" and sly hooks of "Vampire." Add in lyrics as inspired as those in the breakup number "I Don't Know What You Want But I Can't Give It Any More," and it seems stupid to ignore an album as fine as this.

Given its teen-dream roster, a line-up that includes the Backstreet Boys, Christina Aguilera, Britney Spears, 'N Sync and the Spice Girls, you'd think "Pop to the Power of 16" would be the epitome of modern youth pop. And it is – but that's the problem. Although each of these tracks is tuneful and well-crafted, it's hard to ignore the amount of calculation that went into many of these productions. It doesn't help, of course, that not all of the artists are represented by their best work, meaning that Spears' bland "Thinkin' About You" can't help but wilt in comparison with the Spice Girls' mega-catchy "Wannabe." But it's the general lack of passion that undoes this album. If only more teen poppers exhibited the spunk displayed by Hanson's "Thinking of You" or Billie's "She Wants You."

Like many other aspects of American popular culture, country music is eminently exportable. Garth Brooks, for example, is a huge star in Britain and Ireland, Jim Reeves is revered in Nigeria, and country music has been steadily building an audience in Australia.

Nor should we forget Shania Twain, whose 1997 album "Come On Over" was one of spectacularly around the world. But don't duh Twain an international country star just yet. True, she is a country star, and her popularity is definitely international. But after listening to "Come On Over: The International Version," it becomes difficult to argue that Twain's global success has anything to do with country music.

Simply put "The International Version" of the album takes the twang out of Twain. Where the original edition clad her pop-pasty songs in traditional Nashville garb – whining pedal steel, sweetly sawing fiddles and twangy guitar – "The International Version" outfits the song in pop/rock muth, with slick synths and rock guitars erasing any sense of regional flavor.

Apparently, when you take this girl out of the country, you take the country out of the girl. That's not to say the songs have been completely re-recorded. In terms of the melodies, the vocals and the basic shape of these songs, nothing has been changed in the transition to "The International Version." It even retains the mild Cajun flavor of the title tune. "Come On Over," Twain and husband/producer Robert John "Mutt" Lang haven't entirely reinvented the album's sound.

But it has been drastically reshaped. Although the pedal steel guitar on "I Won't Leave You Lonely" is still in the mix, its tone has been refocused and softened; where once it was a dominant flavor, now it's atmospheric background, giving the song the ambient feel of a U2 ballad.

Even more striking is "Honey I'm Home," which not only gives the opening fiddle lick a vaguely Celtic feel, but eliminates the heavy country feel of the chorus entirely. In this arrangement, "Home" is as rock and roll as the workaday world Twain's protagonist longs to escape.

Funny thing is, we almost don't notice the difference. Twain's songs are so strong, and her performances so charismatic, that the music seems appealing regardless of how it's treated. Sure, some fans may be put off by the Eurodisco treatment given the international version of "That Don't Impress Me Much," but it's doubtful that would keep them from singing along. Just like Twain fans all over the world.

For decades now, jazz musicians have been trying to develop a "third stream" between jazz improvisation and classical composition. With "Concerto" pianist Chick Corea becomes the latest to make the plunge. Corea's Concerto No. 1 for Piano and Orchestra finds the composer's piano augmented by double bass and a drum kit, but it doesn't play a jazz trio against the symphony orchestra. Instead, it's a standard neoclassical concerto, with the drum parts written out and only hints of jazz in the score (apart from the introduction and a cadenza, Corea does no improvising at all). It's a wonderful, slyly virtuosic work, but its austere character will likely please listeners less than "Spain for Sextet and Orchestra," which recasts Corea's most famous tune as a jazzy orchestral fantasy.

They may have made their name in the alt-rock underground, but Sonic Youth actually started out in the classical avant garde, performing the clangorous compositions of Glenn Branca and others. "Goodbye 20th Century" is, in that sense, a return to roots, in which the quartet (along with selected guest musicians) performs compositions by John Cage, Steve Reich, Pauline Oliveros, Nicolas Slonimsky and others. It's not rock music by any means, offering none of the music's rhythmic drive or melodic focus. Even so, these abstract soundscapes do share turf with Sonic Youth's own well-tempered dissonances, from the drone-and-squeak of Reich's "Pendulum Music" to detuned clunk of Slonimsky's "Piece Enfantine."

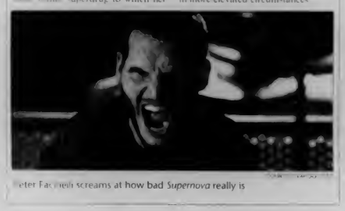
Given pianist McCoy Tyner's ability to play off the energy of his rhythm section, teaming him with bassist Stanley Clarke and drummer Al Foster ought to guarantee a display of musical fireworks. Yet "McCoy Tyner with Stanley Clarke and Al Foster" only sputters and fizzles, as the three trade instrumental ferocity for an almost gentle sense of swing. While that lends a certain lyricism to selections like "Once Upon a Time" and "The Night Has a Thousand Eyes," the best-fingered virtuosity of Tyner and Clarke doesn't always serve the midtempo material. Worse, the trio's attempts to groove, as on the tropical "Caribia" or the electric bass-driven "I Want To Tell You 'Bout That," are distressingly stiff. Apparently, some jazz trios add us to less than the sum of their parts.

Call it the Max Martin Effect. Ever since the Swedish producer turned the Backstreet Boys, Britney Spears and other teen idol acts into million-sellers, the recording industry has been desperate to clone Martin's sound. Hence "So Real" the debut album of 15-year old Mandy Moore, which studiously re-creates every cliche in the Martin catalog. Moore's production team, the Wasabees, may have musical ideas of their own, but you wouldn't know it from the way the title track apes the Backstreet Boys' "Everybody (Backstreet's Back)." The Wasabees aren't one-trick ponies – they do a fine Jimmy Jam/Terry Lewis impression on "Walk Me Home" – but the one feat they seem incapable of is making the kewpie-voiced Moore worth hearing.

Local boys, Sonic Youth return with their follow-up to the critically acclaimed A Thousand Leaves

COURTESY CHRISTIAN LANTZER

Supernova proves to be nothing but dumb



By Kevin Thomas
Los Angeles Times

Until LYMOND Supernova isn't an unmitigated disaster, which is no doubt why MGM opened it on Friday without any press previews. Despite the distinguished pedigree of James Spader, Robert Forster and Peter Facinelli and a great deal of money, the film is a relentlessly dumb outer-space adventure cluttered with a load of technobabble. Its direction credited to Walter Hill, Thomas Lee, Jeff Reiner and Hill suggested that his name be kept off it is brisk and well-behaved, and the film may play OK with undemanding fans of the genre.

We're 200 years into the future, and Earth's A.I. Marley is the captain of the starcruiser medical-rescue vessel Nightingale. Bassett is Kaela Elgin of the Nightingale's no-nun crew. But very sleek and sexy outfits of course, and she's wary of Marley's new co-pilot, Nick Vanzant (Spader), who has just kicked a drug habit, having been addicted to the same future-upending to which her ex-lover (Peter Facinelli) fell victim. Phillips, Robin Tunnes and Wilson Cruz capably round out the Nightingale's crew.

No sooner has this tension between Evers and Vanzant been established than the Nightingale receives an emergency distress signal from a rogue moon, site of a mining operation where some sort of disaster has struck. After some special-effect razzle-dazzle involving dimension-jumping, a celestial storm and gravitational pull from a star about to implode, the Nightingale winds up short on fuel and with a new passenger, a smirky, edgy young man, Troy (Kory Grantham Whitet who's the son of Bassett's former lover and clearly the harbinger of big time trouble ahead.

Unfortunately, all of what ensues is pretty murky and dull. Writer David Campbell Wilson further hampers a hazy narrative line with minimal characterization. Even so, Spader and Bassett, equally assured and sharp, strike sparks and it would be fun to see them reteamed in more elevated circumstances.

Peter Facinelli screams at how bad Supernova really is

Irwin hunts success
Crocodile expert wins big

By Paul Farhi
The Washington Post

Bird, Egyptian cobra, maybe six feet long, lying in the African sun, possibly on your lawn business. Which is how you won't believe an Egyptian cobra. Steve Irwin can tell you. One bite from these fellas and "crikey", as you'd blather. Oh soon it'll be.

But Irwin, comes Irwin, scurrying up to the serpent with the nave excitement of an 8-year-old bagging crawdads. The cobra senses what's afoot and rises to dither own. But Irwin is quicker. He corners the big boy.

This is the most aggressive animal I've ever seen across", Irwin shouts into the TV camera, sounding quite pleased. He's a super aggressive snake, I like? And big, too."

Well, you'd be aggressive, too, if someone were grabbing at your nether regions, which is what Irwin does next to the cobra. The snake decides it's had enough. Rising up, hood flaring, it strikes with frightening speed – once, twice, three – missing Irwin each time. Irwin goes goony with excitement. "I've never seen a snake more aggressive in my life! Woo hoo! He has a lot of venom!"

And then – peace. Reassured by Irwin – "You're all right, mate, you're all right" – the snake settles calmly onto a low-lying branch. Irwin moves in closer, finally bringing himself nostril-to-nostril with the reptile. Eventually, everyone goes home happy.

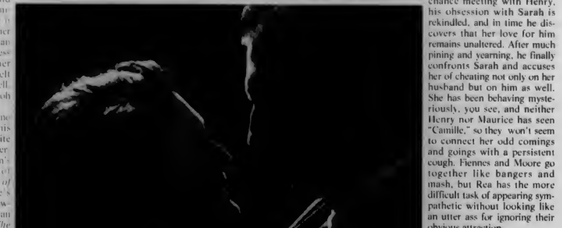
All in a day's work, mate. On his cable TV show, "CrocodileHunter," the hyperbolic Australian crocodile-wrangler cavorts with carpet vipers, scorpions, diamondbacks and rattlers. He wanders through bat caves, swims with monitor lizards and hustles after crocs and Komodo dragons. No matter how ornery, toxic or just plain icky Irwin annoys them all.

"Crocodile Hunter," which airs on the Animal Planet network, is "Mutual of Omaha's Wild Kingdom" meets Mad Max. Dispensing with the hushed voices and telephoto shots of traditional nature programming, Irwin gallops with abandon into the Australian outback or African veld to encounter the beasts himself.

Some people tempt fate; Irwin chucks it under the chin, scratches it behind the ears and grabs its tail. Irwin and his wife and co-host, Terri, say they're wildlife educators, but they're primarily high-wire entertainers. The prospect of seeing Steve get chewed on by one of his co-stars is the show's unique selling proposition and undoubtedly explains its appeal among young men.

The animals must be potentially lethal, or at least nearly so, to rate Irwin's attention.

"I'm showing people that these aren't evil, ugly monsters. These aren't things that should have their heads cut off," says Irwin, 37. "If I can give you the sensation of what it's really like to be with these animals, it's that much more exciting and captivating. Let's face it, a 20-year-old college kid isn't going to get jazzed" by a traditional approach.



Affair holds up well thanks to Fiennes, Moore

By Rita Kempley
The Washington Post

Ralph Fiennes is probably the only man in the world who could express his jealousy for a woman's stocking while putting it on her, no less – without either nauseating or cracking up an audience. But then to express his envy for the snap on her World War II-era garter belt and thence her shoe – well, what can we say but "Ralph, oh Ralph, don't stop now."

Fiennes, who broods like no other actor, demonstrates his best bedside manner opposite Julianne Moore in no-touch bedsell, mind you, in Neil Jordan's rain-soaked adaptation of Graham Greene's The End of the Affair. While Greene's autobiographical story is showing its age, it's no mustier than recent romantic tripe like The Bridges of Madison County (The memory of Clint Eastwood pulling Meryl Streep into her pantyhose haunts me to this day. But I digress.)

Now where were we? Oh, yes. The year is 1939. England is at war and all the rules have changed as they are wont to do when tomorrow may never come. Maurice Bendrix (Fiennes), a brooding novelist, is irresistibly drawn to Sarah (Moore), the glowing wife of Henry Miles (Stephen Rea), a dull but worthy civil servant kept busy fighting the war on the home front. The two are soon all wrapped up in a torrid affair that Sarah suddenly, and inexplicably, breaks off, telling him she will always love him. Maurice is utterly bereft, little guessing her true motivations.

Ralph Fiennes stars in yet another period piece, this time End of the Affair with Julianne Moore

Two years later, Maurice has a chance meeting with Henry, his obsession with Sarah is rekindled, and in time he discovers that her love for him remains unaltered. After much pining and yearning, he finally confronts Sarah and accuses her of cheating not only on her husband but on him as well. She has been behaving mysteriously, you see, and neither Henry nor Maurice has seen "Camille," so they won't seem to connect her odd comings and goings with a persistent cough. Fiennes and Moore go together like bangers and mash, but Rea has the more difficult task of appearing sympathetic without looking like an utter ass for ignoring their obvious attraction.

He pulls it off with a stiff upper lip and a great deal of pained dignity. That's not to say that the actors can really put across the film's morose and weirdly mystical resolution. Suffice it to say that her real love is bigger than the both of them and, sadly, has nothing whatsoever to do with hosiery.

■ AOL

continued from page B1

majority of Internet content and the public won't be able to access it without paying behemoth.com.

This logically leads to the last consequence, one which is already sweeping the entertainment industry: media consolidation. AOL-Time Warner wasn't the first consolidation of big media companies. Nor was CBS-Viacom. However, when taken as a sum, these deals point to one inescapable fact, media consolidation. Fewer companies are controlling more media. This means less diversity in all media messages and the problem will only worsen as traditional media meets the Internet.

Of course, history takes us back to where we started and maybe the dilemma isn't as bad as we think. Buena Vista's attempt at taking its newly acquired and popular Disney/ESPN/ABC content to the Internet via its "GO Network" failed miserably, losing $1.1 billion last year. Then again, what does history know?

Minutemen play Chutes 'N' Ladders as inconsistent play leads into A-10

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Sometimes you just wish the Massachusetts men's basketball team would make up its mind, shedding the image of consistent inconsistency. Over the past month, the Minutemen have ridden the most stomach-wrenching of roller coaster seasons, knocking off Atlantic Coast Conference power Florida State only to surrender the momentum in a disastrous showing at the Puerto Rico Holiday Classic.

The Atlantic 10 season came with the New Year and high hopes have revisited Amherst, the Minutemen wiping the slate clean to toe the line with their conference rivals. James "Bruiser" Flint's troops needed just a half to chip off all the rust left from an eight-day hiatus. After falling down by as much as 23 points to Saint Bonaventure in its conference home opener, UMass has responded with a respectful 10-point loss to the Bonnies before taking home a pair against Fordham and St. Joseph's. With an 8-7 record and the meat of the season just around the corner, including dates with Temple and Texas in a 5-day period next week, the Minutemen face hudgment Day earlier than Flint had hoped.

Here's a synopsis of the past month's activity on the hardwoods:

12/18/99: UMass 69, Florida State 60 (Sunrise, FL)

Arguably the high point of the UMass season, Monty Mack nets a season-high 30 in an impressive 9-point victory outside the conference. Mack canned 12 of 12 from the free throw line, including eight in the final minute to secure the win. An old Achilles' heel worked in the Minutemen's favor as UMass murdered the Seminoles from the charity stripe, hitting 21 of 29 while FSU went just 8-for-15 from the line. The Minutemen built a seven-point halftime lead and rode Mack to victory. Florida State's Ron Hale made a late bid, but the 'Noles fell short in the middle game of the Hill Health Plan Orange Bowl Basketball Classic.

12/21/99: Southern Illinois 65, UMass 63 (Bayamon, Puerto Rico)

In the wake of a most impressive showing in Florida, a change of venue cued up swayed luck as a two-point loss to the Salukis was only the beginning of a tumultuous trip overseas. Possibly seeing a potential date with No. 12 Tennessee the following day, the Minutemen fell despite holding Southern Illinois to 32 percent shooting. Twenty-four turnovers and 16 Saluki offensive rebounds did UMass in as SIU's bench scored a combined 24 points and grabbed 15 rebounds. Shannon Crooks scored 16 points off the bench, but his hall court heave as the buzzer sounded came up empty and the Minutemen were sent to the losers' bracket. Kirkland led the Minutemen with 18 points and seven rebounds while Mack chipped in with 17.

12/22/99: UMass 102, American-Puerto Rico 65 (Bayamon, P.R.)

The game was lopsided from the start as the Minutemen shot a season-high 59 percent from the field, including a 9-for-16 effort from behind the arc. Mack scored a game-high 21 points in just 15 minutes of play, drilling five of six from three-point land. Twelve different players visited the scoring column as UMass led by 20 at the half and continued the onslaught in the second stanza.

12/22/99: Boston College 83, UMass 59 (Bayamon, P.R.)

Just 18 days after knocking off the Eagles in their own den, the Minutemen hit rock bottom in a 24-point collapse at the hands of their cross-state rivals. BC got 26 points from Xavier Singletary, who scored just two in the teams' first battle. Singletary netted seven of 14 three-pointers, helping the Eagles jump out by 20 at the half. Kirkland, the team's second-leading scorer, shot just 1-for-9 from the field and grabbed just three rebounds. The lone bright spot came from Winston Smith, who tallied six points and seven rebounds off the bench.

12/30/99: Providence 61, UMass 60 (OT)

David Murray sank the winning layup with 13 seconds left in overtime as the Minutemen dropped their second straight against the Big East. Kirkland scored his first double-double of the season with 12 points and 11 rebounds, but the Minutemen succumbed to the Friars thanks to poor nights from the field and the line. The Minutemen were unable to capitalize on a grand day out on the glass. UMass outrebounded PC 43-30, including a gargantuan 20-6 advantage on the offensive boards. Mack scored two of his game-high 22 on a steal and layup to tie the score at 59. Shannon Crooks sank one of two from the free throw line to set up Murray's heroics.

1/6/00: St. Bonaventure 70, UMass 60

It could have been much worse, as midway through the second half, the Minutemen's point total stood at 25, matching the deficit they faced. They vers easily could have quit, but instead, they cut the deficit to 10 late in the game before the Bonnies finally put it away in both squads' conference opener. Kirkland reeled in another double-double, this time going for 16 points and 10 rebounds, but Caswell Cyrus went for 22 points and 11 rebounds for St. Bona. The Minutemen could muster up just three points, including just one in a first half which the Bonnies built themselves an 18-point lead.

1/8/00: UMass 82, Fordham 52

Everything clicked. With the help of full-court pressure, the Minutemen forced Fordham into 23 turnovers while holding the Rams to 30 percent shooting. Over half of UMass' rebounds came on the offensive glass, scoring 21 offensive boards to make up for an off-night from the perimeter. The Mack-Kirkland combination paired up for 45 points while the defense held Jason Harris and Bevon Robin to a combined 18 points, most of which came when the game was already decided. A 10-point halftime lead turned into a second half massacre as the Minutemen landed their first conference win of the season.

1/10/00: UMass 73, St. Joseph's 69

All of a sudden the Minutemen could shoot the ball. By knocking down 50 percent of their shots, UMass reached that plateau inside the conference for the first time since a 69-55 disposal of Duquesne last January, spanning over a year. Kitwana Rhymer, who notched 12 points and 12 rebounds, drained two free throws late to lock up the nailbiter at Hawk Hill. Chris Kirkland played his best game this season, scoring 18 points to go along with eight rebounds and six assists. SIU's Marvin O'Conner led all scorers with a career-high 28 points, but UMass held off the Hawks down the stretch for its first conference road win.

The Minutemen hoped to continue their success this past week, hosing on Dayton before a weekend visit from Rhode Island.

DAN SANTILLI/COLLEGIAN

Coach Flint and the troops hone to continue their success against the Atlantic 10 after the Ws started rolling in after a victory against Fordham.

Minutewomen jump all over three others in Springfield

By Seth Szilagyi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team opened its 2000 campaign on a positive note with a first place finish at Springfield College on January 15.

The Minutewomen won the meet with a strong score of 184.575, beating out Ithaca, who placed second with a score of 178.775. The host Springfield College came in third with 177.200 and Cortland took the fourth spot with 176.900.

"This is a good start for us," said Massachusetts coach Dave Kuzara. "The upperclassmen performed well."

UMass swept the balance beam event with senior Mandy Mosby winning the event (9.600) and junior Mary Moore placing second (9.550), while freshman Katie Teft finished in third place (9.525).

The Minutewomen took the vault event, as well, with freshman Jen Gendron winning the event (9.475) and Moore and Teft tying for second and third at 9.450.

"This was a great experience for our freshman," said Kuzara. "I thought they did a great job. Ten out of 24 of our routines are made up of freshmen. They all placed well."

Freshman Megan Donahue came in third in the all-around event with a score of 35.125, as junior Kyla Palombini came in third on floor exercise, scoring 9.575. Teft once again made her presence felt, winning the uneven bars with a mark of 9.775, while senior Rene Franklin finished third in the event at 9.100.

With the victory, the Minutewomen must now focus on the rest of the year, trying to build on last season's 11-7 record. In 1999, the women placed second in the Atlantic 10 Championships and made their sixth straight appearance in the NCAA Northeast Regionals, placing fifth out of six teams.

Kuzara will begin his seventh season as head coach for UMass. He has posted a record of 73-39 (.652), which places him second on the all-time winningest coach list. He has led the Minutewomen to back-to-back A-10 Championships in 1998 and 1997 and has taken UMass to six consecutive NCAA Northeast Regionals.

The Minutewomen squad for 2000 will include Mosby, the returning two-time A-10 Gymnast of the Year and Most Valuable Performer at the A-10 Championships. She finished first in the all-around at the conference chanipionships with a career-high 39.200 mark last year and placed 10th in the same event at the NCAA Region V Championships (37.950).

UMass has seven letter winners returning from last year, including Moore, who tied for seventh on the balance beam at the NCAA Region V Championships. Senior Betsy Colucci will return to the team after spending all of last season on the sidelines as a redshirt due to

Turn to WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS page C2

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Mary Moore and the women's gymnastics team head south for the winter when they take on Florida and Penn State in Gainesville.

Minuteman hoopsters hope to gain momentum for Atlantic 10 ball

It was beyond losing two of the three games. It was beyond allowing another team to avenge its own loss. It was beyond the fact that the only win was over a Division II school.

The Puerto Rico Holiday Classic from Dec. 21-23 was, quite simply, a nightmare for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

They were coming off of an exhilarating 69-60 victory over Florida State in the Orange Bowl Classic in Miami, Fla. on Dec. 18 in which sniper Monty Mack tallied 30 points. In fact, UMass was one marquee squad in the Classic that failed to match up to its billing.

It's a billing that the Minutemen have struggled to come to terms with in the past couple of years. They are not on that small bus full of schools with neat automatic feed lines to the NCAA Tournament. No longer are they a shoo-in for the Atlantic 10 Tournament title game. No longer do they have a dominatrix in the center that can sink the pretty jumper from 15 feet out or go strong to the basket at his will.

The crowds have depleted at the William D. Mullins Center as season ticket holders have dropped by almost a 1,000 in the last couple of years. Refuse to Lose is seen more often on Abercrombie and Fitch rip-off shirts than in UMass apparel. The number of days Flint will still be with the Minutemen is rumored to be dwindling.

But the effort is still there. And as the Minutemen head into the second half of their season, they know they have their work cut out for them in order to turn their season around. With the A-10 floating an automatic bid attached to a conference tournament championship in their faces, the hope that this season leads to an invitation to the Big Dance is not without sense.

As UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said in reference to the loss to Boston College, "We dug ourselves into such a big hole, we almost had to play perfect in the second half." The statement now applies to the rest of the season.

Puerto Rico proved to be a step in the wrong direction. In the first game against So. Illinois, three players scored 51 of the team's 63 points against a very balanced Saluki squad that had only Richy Cotlum reaching double digits with 16 points. UMass was outrebounded on the offensive boards by a telling 22-9 margin. With the 63-63 loss, the Minutemen flattened out to a 5-5 record.

Next up was a meeting with a 0-6 A.P.R. squad, which UMass silenced, 102-65. No more needed to be said.

Earlier in the season on Dec. 4, Massachusetts had convincingly beat Boston College, 74-67 in the Commonwealth Classic despite a strong uprising from freshman guard Troy Bell, who netted 29 points. On this day, however, the Minutemen were spanked 83-59 as Xavier Singletary came on strong for the Eagles with 26 points. Despite a 9-for-23 outing from behind the three-point line for BC, the Minutemen could not overcome their vengeful plan.

"We've been beating this these guys for the past five years," said Flint. "Sooner or later, they're going to get you back."

What came out of the island tournament? More questions, yes. But the offensive leaders emerged. The obvious one, Mack, rejoined with senior Chris Kirkland and sophomore guard Shannon Crooks.

Finishing out the millennium with a 61-60 loss to Providence, UMass kept the skid into the Jan. 6th 70-60 loss to St. Bonaventure in the A-10 opener. It seemed that the Bonnies, who had won seven of their last eight, were now on the other end of the seesaw with their best start in 27 years. Again, the triumvirate supplied the bulk of the points, totaling 49 points for 81 percent of the offense.

Yet there's a light at the end of this tunnel, as the Minutemen had regrouped from a 59-21 halftime deficit, proof of not only their desire, but of their capabilities to fight back.

Kirkland began cutting to the basket more often, raising his average to 15.1 points and 6.1 rebounds per game. With it, no longer does Mack (19.9 ppg) have to shoulder the bulk of the load. Mack's slashing of the Seminoles was the highest point total since last season when he strung together 34 points against the College of Charleston.

Crooks, who averages nearly 11 a game, has simmered into a constant sidekick for Mack in the backcourt, proving his worth with a game-winning trey over Villanova with 14.7 seconds left. Kitwana Rhymer has been a welcome surprise on the boards so far, raking in 7.4 rpg including a career-high 17 against Connecticut.

Flint has juggled lineups and dealt with the loss of swingman JoVann Johnson in an attempt to find the right formula, who has been missing in action since the Providence game. Senior co-captain Mike Babul, whose defense is more famous than his offense, provides hustle and the little things that make a team well rounded. Sharing the small forward position is junior Winston Smith, who has come on strong as of late to share in Babul's duties.

Freshman Micah Brand has nosed his way into more time at center as his confidence visibly grows with each game.

So it's too early to pack up your tickets and turn off the T.V. with key match-ups against Temple and Texas scheduled in time for the Minutemen to make a going of this season. It's time to start the running game.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

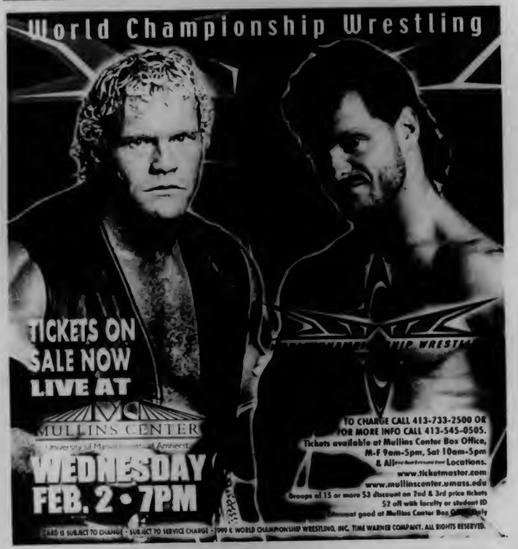
Minuteman Notes

■ women's gymnastics

continued from page C1

illness.

The Minutewomen welcome five freshman newcomers and they are believed to have an immediate impact on the program, as seen in Donoghue's showing in Springfield. Joining Donoghue are Jen Gendron, Kelly Hanson, Tiffany Slade, and Telt, who was a 1996 alternate on the U.S. Olympic team and a member of the 1995 U.S. Pan American Gold Medal winning team.



"We're a young team, but our outlook is very positive," said Kuzara.

"Sieve! Sieve! Sieve! Sieve! ..."

Support UMASS Hockey!

Jan 21 • UMASS vs Merrimack

Jan 26 • UMASS vs Providence

■ um hockey

continued from page C6

Maine retook a two-goal lead on a Doug Janik power play goal that late in the second period that was put in on a feed from Peter Metcalf.

Chris Heisten put the Minutemen away 5:52 into the third frame on a goal that gave Maine a 4-1 lead.

Sell cut the lead back to two goals with goal less than a minute later, but the deficit was too much to overcome.

1/14/00: Northeastern 4, UMass 2

Coming off their first loss in three weeks the Minutemen traveled to Matthews Arena for the front end of a weekend matchup with Northeastern. UMass fell to the Huskies in its second game of the season 4-2, and the results on this night would mirror that of the early-season contest.

Husky forward Willie Levesque scored a pair of goals and goalie Mike Gillooly made 42 saves in the win.

Levesque scored on breakaway 7:17 into the game on a UMass defensive lapse to give the Northeastern a 1-0 advantage. Billy Newson gave the Huskies a 2-0 lead midway through the second period when he finished on a great pass from two-sport star (hockey and baseball) Matt Keating right in front of the net.

The Minutemen battled back and cut the lead in half when Blanchard scored with 13:49 gone in the second period. Jeff Turner tied the game at 2-2 1:39 into the third period, but it was all the offense the Maroon and White would muster on this night.

Levesque put in the game-winner at the 12:17 and Chris Lynch got his third point of the night on an insurance goal with just over five minutes remaining.

1/15/00: Northeastern 3, UMass 2 (OT)

In the back end of the weekend series the Minutemen dropped a heartbreaker in overtime 3-2 on a Billy Newson goal at the 1:40 mark of the extra frame.

The Huskies came out strong, just as they did the previous night and scored the games first two goals. Ryan Zoller scored the first goal of the contest and his first of the season off a scramble in front of the UMass net with 4:08 remaining in the first period.

The score remained that way until the opening faceoff of the second period when Mike Izzefowicz won it and took it alone for a power play goal and a 2-0 Northeastern lead.

The Maroon and White would collect the next two goals to send the game to overtime with the first coming just four minutes later when Darcy King found the back of the net after retrieving the rebound of a Shaw shot. Sophomore defenseman Luke Duplessis scored his first goal of the season to tie the game at 2-2 on a shot from the blue line.

Duplessis scored what appeared to be the go-ahead goal late in the third period, but the goal was waived off because the net had been dislodged.

Neither team scored in the third period, which paved the way for Newson's overtime heroics. Newson took a pass from Roger Holecay and fired it on net. The puck found the smallest of opening between Helanen and the short side post and sent the Minutemen home with the loss.

Overall the Minutemen were 4-4-0 over the break with results of games against Merrimack not available at press time. The break was a great time for the Minutemen to get on track playing out the remainder of its schedule against Hockey East opponents.

The Maroon and White will be in action tonight at the Mullins Center when they take on Providence College, faceoff at 7:00.

■ um women's basketball

continued from page C6

1/14/00: Xavier 68, UMass 60

The sharp Musketeers handed the streaking UMass squad its first A-10 loss by taking this eight-point decision. Xavier did much of their damage in game from the free-throw line, connecting on 26 from the charity stripe. The story for the Minutewomen was once again their frontcourt, as Smith led the charge with 20 points to compliment Butler's ninth double-double of the season, with 10 points and 11 rebounds.

1/16/00: UMass 71, Dayton 65

Massachusetts returned to the winning track against a Flyer team that had an identical 3-1 conference record heading into the game. With a convincing 11-point lead with roughly a quarter of the game left to play, the Maroon and White had controlled the contest the entire way until Dayton freshman Stefanie Miller surprised the Mullins Center faithful by coming off the bench to hit three trifectas in four Flyer trips down the court. Building off of that influx of energy, the visitors rallied to take a two-point lead, 58-56, with 6:16 left in the game, making what had looked like a UMass blowout into a barnburner. Minutewoman coach Jeanie O'Brien called the team over to the bench to straighten things out, and they did. Working the ball underneath, with a series of calculated lobs, Massachusetts beat Dayton from the inside out. Nehls, who was quiet in the previous five games, averaging 2.2 points over that span, erupted for 18 and a venue record for blocks with six. In fairly routine fashion, Butler picked up 15 points and 13 rebounds, hitting her average remain above 11 in the latter, placing her second in the conference as only a freshman.

After that win, the Minutewomen hit the road again, taking on Fordham and St. Bonaventure on a New York excursion that featured two Atlantic 10 opponents.

Paid Officials Needed for Basketball & Wrestling

Basketball #1 (rules)- Jan. 26 @ 6p.m. (Boyden 251)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 27 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 28 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
(You must attend both clinics)
Wrestling Feb. 7 @ 6p.m. (Boyden223)

Dont miss the ACTION

Still Time to Enter: Basketball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 6 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX STAIRMASTER®•LIFECYCLES• TREADMILLS•LIFETOWER• CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRECOR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB

Use your UMASS ACUS Service from the convenience of your room on campus and save even more with new lower rates.

- You pay only 5 cents a minute when calling locations within the 413 area code.
- You pay only 12 cents a minute when calling other locations within the state.
- You pay only 15 cents a minute on all state-to-state calls.
- Make International calls? Get the one low rate international plan and pay one flat per minute rate to countries you can direct dial for a $3.00 monthly fee. Flat rate varies by country.
- Along with quality AT&T service, you get customer care at your fingertips 24/7 at www.acus.com. Access your account balance, current calls, rate and service information and much more. You can also view and pay your bills on-line with a credit card or you can pay using your UCard by visiting the UCard office located in the Franklin Dining Commons. Check it out today.

If you need a code to make calls from campus, call 1 800 445-6063.

UMASS

AT&T

Reliever Rocker is wrong, punishment should be pitching

Sam Wilkinson

Rocker, as a benefit to athletes everywhere in North America, aggressively made New Yorkers angry. He challenged them, yelled at them, cursed them, challenged them, taunted them, and frustrated them. New Yorkers hate John Rocker.

Then, like the deep-pocketed team that the Yankees are, they whipped the Braves in the World Series and Rocker's words mattered for nothing. And then Rocker took it to another level, spewing epithets decrying gays, foreigners, and Asians, among others. A cardinal sin in today's more sensitive world, as well it should be.

The response has been less than friendly. The NAACP has called for Rocker's release from the Braves while others have said that he should at the very least, be suspended for a year, fined, banned from baseball or forced to get psychiatric counseling. However, while Rocker is a complete moron, he shouldn't be punished in any of those ridiculously excessive ways and he put back on the mound when the Braves need him.

Rocker's got much to the chagrin of more caring people, every right to say every nasty thing he wants to say about any conceivable group. He can hate gays, hate blacks, hate Asians, hate whomever else that he wants to hate and his job shouldn't be threatened in any way at all.

After all, while the man has been stupid, he hasn't broken any rules, and if he hasn't broken any rules, how can he be punished so strictly? He can't be. Baseball has no argument against the First Amendment of the United States.

People who are getting angry about Rocker's idiotic comments are doing so for good reason, but to ask that a man (or, theoretically, a woman) lose his job, or even be suspended from it for a year, is utterly ridiculous to ask of somebody. Rocker has absolutely no responsibility to be sensitive in his job. He has a responsibility to pitch.

While public speaking obviously isn't his forte, pitching is something John Rocker can do. Thirty-eight saves last year, and for him, where he stands, that is the bottom line. But other groups feel that Rocker is something more, something bigger, something that needs to be vanquished if he can't live up to a certain standard off the field.

The NAACP, who wants to see Rocker immediately released, feels that the Braves are hiding behind Rocker's abilities as a pitcher, the logic being that if Rocker rode the pine, he would have been fired immediately. Whether or not that is true, Rocker isn't a bench warmer, and the Braves have every right to hold on to their solid reliever. That argument, however, only holds the proverbial water superficially.

Rocker spoke from his heart, and apparently, his heart is in fairly bad shape. In his slurs against gays and minorities and foreigners, Rocker revealed his own insecurities, his own fears, his own biases. Rocker, in speaking, has revealed himself to be an ass, a fool and nothing more than a man with horridly misguided stereotypes.

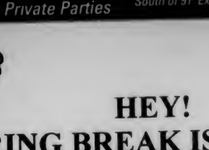
But in no way has the man earned a pink slip for his own personal issues with those with who are different. In no way has he earned his permanent removal from the sport that he has played his whole life. His career should not be taken from him because he cannot handle the people in the world who are different from him. Rocker was simply exercising rights given to him as an American citizen.

Instead, baseball needs to devise a better way to punish him, a more clever way, the kind of way that nobody but athletes themselves will ever truly understand. But while the NAACP and others who have called for the end of Rocker's career, Major League Baseball should instead leave the man to the unending mercy of the fans. After all, it was Rocker who said, in an interview after his comments initially came out, that he was attempting to exact revenge on fans that had angered him.

So give him to the fans. Let him play baseball. Let him try to pitch in stadiums where fans rarely give nasty reactions like those in Montreal and Cincinnati. Then let him try to pitch in the bigger stadiums in the harsher cities where fans are going to be less apathetic. Let him try to finish games in Chicago, San Francisco, Philadelphia and, of course, New York. The abuse that he will take as he attempts to do his job will prove more than sufficient to punish the man for his statements.

Groups that have protested Rocker's continued Braves employment won't like it if Major League Baseball decides to punish the relief pitcher in this way. They feel that they deserve to see something, to have something they can hold in their hands, something like a headline that says "Rocker's Been Released." But if MLB was smart, they wouldn't give those individuals that kind of satisfaction.

Nobody will be able to hold in his hands the pain Rocker will feel after being booed, day in and day out for what could span more than just a season. Nobody will know what it is like to be a hated part of a sport he loves. Nobody will know how it will affect Rocker for millions of fans that he's never known to pass judgment on him for being different unless those individuals are some of the millions of people that Rocker passed judgment on for being different. And if Rocker knows what that kind of judgment feels like, perhaps he will avoid such behavior in his later years.



Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist

Fly Wheels skate accessories
Belchertown, MA (413)323-5380
Free UMass delivered Inline, Speed, Roller Hockey Outdoor Specialists

STUDENTS • FLEXIBILITY • CONFIDENCE
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0006
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

www.DailyCollegian.com
Come check out our newly renovated website!

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need In a Gym and More!"
• Certified Personal Trainers
• Fitness Testing & Programming
• Nutritional Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Full Aerobics Programs Including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
Best! 1999 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
We've expanded our dumbbell area!
Semester Special $150
Good through 9/30
Other student rates available
Located in the Campus Plaza next to Liquors 44.
For more information call 253-7571
Cardiovascular Equipment
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbent Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
State-of-the-Art Strength Training Equipment
• Bodymasters & Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Castaway Lounge
I-91 to exit 24, south on Rte. 5
Whately, Mass., (413) 665-8733
We are now open on Mondays at 1pm
Entertainment starting at 5pm
6 Dancers
Food
Prizes
Beautiful girls 18 and over need money! Apply in person

Proudly will allow all students over 21 years old
Open Tuesday through Saturday 11am 1am
V.I.P. Room Always Available for Private Parties
North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & Turn left
South of 91 Exit 24, take Route 5 & 10 straight ahead

The University of Massachusetts'
Something Every Friday
Welcome Back to UMass
Comedian "Dean Edwards"
Comedian "Dean Edwards" has appeared on "Def Comedy Jam", "Showtime at the Apollo", and "Celebrity Deathmatch". He has also performed at "Carolines" in NYC and "Catch a Rising Star". Special skills: Stand-up, Impersonations; and Being on Time!
Bluewall Cafe
Friday January 28th at 8pm
The film "Blue Streak" will be shown: Wednesday in the CCA @8pm; and Friday after the show. "Double Jeopardy" will be shown: Thurday and Sunday in the CCA at 8pm. Free Give-A-Ways and Free Raffle.
Visit us on the web: http://www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm
This program is made possible by a grant from the auxiliary Services Department and the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs

HEY!
SPRING BREAK IS COMING
SO TO LOOK AND FEEL BETTER
YOU NEED A

BODY SHOP DISCOUNT MEMBERSHIP SPECIAL

COME TO EITHER THE BOYDEN 17 or THE TOTMAN 8 LOCATIONS BETWEEN JANUARY 26 - 29 FOR VIEWING & MEMBERSHIP SIGN-UPS

PAY ONLY
$60 FOR A FULL & UNLIMITED SPRING SEMESTER MEMBERSHIP

FULL WORKOUTS CAN BEGIN ON FEBRUARY 1
TO WORK EVERY MUSCLE IN YOUR BODY WITH POWERLINE® WEIGHT TRAINING MACHINES
LIFEFITNESS® STATIONARY BICYCLES & STAIR CLIMBERS CONCEPT II® ROWING MACHINES NORDIC TRACK® SKI MACHINES
LANDICE® TREADMILLS
PRECOR® EFX ELLIPTICAL TRAINER
And
FREE WEIGHTS

The Body Shop Fitness Center
DISCOUNT
EXPIRES 1/31/00

FULL REFUND AVAILABLE FOR 14 DAYS AFTER DATE OF PURCHASE WITH ORIGINAL RECEIPT AND YOUR UNIVERSITY IDENTIFICATION CARD

UMass swimming continues making splashes in New Year

Arsenault, Brown lead men to perfection

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Sweeping both the University of Miami on Jan. 8 and the Rhode Island Invitational on Jan. 14 and 15, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team started the New Year off on the right black.

Two Minutemen were honored within the Atlantic 10 Conference with Chris Arsenault of Peabody earning Performer of the Week and Ryan Zaucha of Auburn, Calif. receiving the Rookie of the Week accolades.

Against the Hurricanes, UMass easily came out on top, 179-81 behind a standout performance by Arsenault. The senior took home individual wins in the 200-yard butterfly (1:53.40), 100-yard fly (51.80) and in the 200-yard IM (1:43.79). Teammate Billy Brown of Fullerton, Calif. was also a winner for the Minutemen. The game was victorious in the 100-yard breaststroke (58.68), 200-yard breaststroke (2:08.96), and in the 200-yard individual medley (1:58.46).

Other winners include senior Henry Turner, who earned top honors in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 48.21. Avon native Mike Sabina finished first in the 50-yard freestyle (22.24) as Zaucha proved his worth in the 200-yard backstroke in 1:58.29 minutes.

The Minutemen breezed through the URI four-team meet with a score of 412.5, well ahead of the competition that included La Salle (322 points), Dartmouth (171.5 points) and Rhode Island (124).

Arsenault and Brown proved to be the backbone of the UMass squad, tacking up three individual wins apiece. Freshman Justin Houck of Wyomissing, Pa. captured first in the 200s-back in 1:56.53 minutes.

Arsenault broke free with top finishes in the 100s-backstroke (52.72), the 100y-freestyle (47.49), and in the 100y-butterfly (51.33). His times in the 100y-back and 100y-fly are the best by any UMass swimmer this season.

The Minutemen are coached by Russ Yarworth, who is in his 21st year of coaching at UMass after graduating in 1978. Under his tutelage, the team has posted an impressive 176-47 record prior to this season in dual-meets while capturing three consecutive Atlantic 20 crowns from 1996-98 to match the eight consecutive New England Championships from 1987-1994. During the 1995-96 season, the Minutemen won their first A-10 Championship title.

Risotto leads Minutewomen to win in FL

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Staving off adversity, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team had a successful break, training in Miami, Fla. to come away with a winning record.

Dropping a close one to the University of Miami on Jan. 8 by a margin of 135-127, the Minutewomen regrouped to capture the University of Rhode Island Invitational on Jan. 14 and 15. Last Saturday, UMass hosted the University of Maryland-Baltimore County at the Joseph R. Rogers Pool but results were not available at press time. On Saturday, Massachusetts will recharge to face Rutgers. One swimmer earned Atlantic 10 Weekly Honors for her outstanding performances. Senior Elizabeth Risotto was named Performer of the Week.

Down South, Risotto earned individual honors in the 100-yard breaststroke (12:00.80) and in the 200-yard backstroke (2:10.71). Also taking home the gold was a the 200-yard freestyle relay team in a time of 1:40.38. Junior Sarah Newell, a native of Dillsburg, Pa., finished second in the 100-yard breaststroke, clocking in the team's fastest time this season at 1:08.89.

In the URI meet, UMass blew away the competition, tallying 398 points to its closest competitor, URI, which totaled 256 points. LaSalle rounded out the meet with 220 points.

Sophomore Anne Dentloff captured first place in the 220y-free in a time of 1:56.15 minutes and in the 500y-free in 5:08.99. The native of Barrington, Ill. is the UMass record-holder in the 1000y-free and ranks third in the 500y and 1,650y-free.

Becky Hunnewell took home finished top shelf in the 100y-back with a time of 1:00.62 and Risotto equaled Hunnewell with a first-place finish in the 200y-back (2:08.86).

Other top performances were sophomore Andrea Kazanjian, who nabbed first in the 100y-fly with a time of 59.68 and junior Sarah Newell, who took home a team season-best of 1:08.27 in the 100y-breast.

In the relay match-ups, the Minutemen struck gold in the 400y-medley (4:03.27), 200y-medley relay (1:52.50), the 200y-free relay (1:39.82) and the 400y-free relay (3:40.09).

WIRELESS Hook-Ups
•Motorola Pagers: As low as $99 for pager and one year of service
•Largest selection of prepaid phonecards as low as 1 min
Great international rates as well.
We take phone orders
•100% digital cellphones (PCS) starting at $49
Prepay option available
Free weekend offer with contract
All phones have voicemail, caller ID, call waiting, call forwarding, and phone back.

Council Travel
America's Student Travel Leader for over 50 years
The journey is the reward....
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst
431-256-1261
www.counciltravel.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Paid Officials Needed for Basketball & Wrestling
Basketball #1 (rules)- Jan. 26 @ 6p.m. (Boyden 251)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 27 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 28 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
(You must attend both clinics)
Wrestling Feb. 7 @ 6p.m. (Boyden223)
Dont miss the ACTION
Still Time to Enter. Basketball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

MASS SKATE 'kick A skate park'
Route 202 • Westfield
(413) 534-1000
Monday & Sat- • BMX Sessions
Friday- • Live Punk Shows
COMPLETE SKATEBOARD, SNOWBOARD, & BMX SHOP.
WEEKDAYS $5 OFF with COLLEGE ID
LARGEST INDOOR PARK IN MASS.
OPEN 7 DAYS • NOON-NINE

BUB'S BAR-B-Q
'Pig Out In Style'
VOTED BEST BAR-B-Q AND BEST RIBS 15 CONSECUTIVE YEARS BY THE ADVOCATE
•(413) 548-9630•

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
FEB. 23-26 ANTHONY'S FAVORITE 65HHH NIKI KNOCKERS
VALENTINES SHOW!!
SUNDAY FEB. 13TH "THE CENTERFOLDS" ALL-MALE REVUE
DOORS OPEN 7PM
BUY TIX NOW - SAVE $!!
18+ SEATING
Now Recruiting Attractive Entertainers to Join Our Team!! NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY Call Scott Today at 413/532-3888
500 New Ludlow Rd. - South Hadley, MA
CLUBline 413/532-3621
HOTline 413/538-6969
Visit Us At — www.anthonys.net

PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
The Area's Most Complete Club 256-6446
Indoor Tennis & Basketball
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9• 2 Miles East of town Center
JOIN NOW FOR OUR 15 WEEK WINTER SPECIAL ($169) AND GET A FREE HFC T-SHIRT
WE ACCEPT MasterCard VISA

Braff's Royal Cleaners
The Royal Treatment
Shirt Tailoring
Laundry Department
Coin-Op Drycleaning (dry cleaning by the pound)
Suede and leather cleaning
Next Day Service
10% Discount with I.D.
103 N. Pleasant St., Amherst - Behind Bart's
256-8288

■ sylvander

continued from page C6

squads. He is assisted by coaches Jim Giroux and Audrey Iverson.

A 1963 grad, Murphy has trained 33 All-Americans and was awarded the NCAA District 1 Outdoor Track and Field Coach of the Year for the second consecutive year last season. Massachusetts has captured 16 conference championships, four New England titles and a pair of IC4A titles.

In the last three seasons, the Minutemen have taken home third-place or better in the NE Track & Field Championships, setting a difficult trend to maintain. Last winter, UMass reached the pinnacle with a blue-ribbon finish in the indoor championships.

"We've reached a level of success that is extremely hard to maintain, but now our guys expect to perform at that level," O'Brien said. "We've lost some real top performers off of last year's team, but we're much deeper at every event this year.

"We lost our number one athlete in 11 different events, but we have some newcomers that can step in and contribute in a big way and help us have another successful season," O'Brien continued.

Vic Morency continued his climb upward, tying his career-high in the weight throw with a distance of 55'9."

Key losses from last year include sprinters Tom Tove and Neil Concepcion, who combine for a total of four school records in relays and sprints. Looking to fill those voids will be Sylvander and sophomore dual-sport athlete Adrian Zullo, who owns the school record in the 100m with scorching time of 10.43. Zullo is also a key receiver on the football team.

Sylvander already ranks among the top five among UMass leaders in the 400m.

Sarah Newell took home the gold in the 100-yard breaststroke at the Rhode Island Invitational two weeks ago.

Penn State takes double-dip against talent-loaded UMass

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's gymnastics team brought two silver medals back to Amherst over the past few weeks. On January 8, the Minutemen went to New York to compete in the annual West Point Open, where they scored a 213.900, trailing Penn State's 222.850. And on January 15, UMass traveled to University Park, Pennsylvania to go head-to-head with the Nittany Lions, where it finished with a 214.200 behind Penn State's 224.550.

On the first day of competition at West Point, junior Andy Leis took second place on the horizontal bar (9.40) and third on the floor exercise (9.55), while snagging the sixth place spot on pommel horse with a score of 9.30. Junior Bryan McNulty placed seventh on the vault with a 9.35, and the tumbling powerhouse also finished fourth on the floor with a 9.50.

Placing at the top of the freshmen, Brian Peterson brought home a respectable 9.20 on the pommel horse, ranking him seventh place overall. And leading the Minutemen on the still rings, senior co-captain Jeff LaVallee finished sixth with an uncharacteristically low 9.35.

At the individual event finals, the Minutemen captured three fourth-place finishes. Leis came in fourth on pommels with a 9.40, while senior Jeff LaVallee grabbed the fourth place spot on rings with a 9.35. And "mutty" McNulty came through once again with a mark of 9.50 on vault, ranking him fourth overall.

And after the Maroon and White took a week off to recuperate, they faced Penn State once again. But this time the Minutemen meant business.

After some great performances during the first rotation, pommel horse, UMass was leading over Penn State. But the tides turned quickly for the Amherst boys as Penn State packed a mighty punch on each of the remaining five events. But that didn't stop some of the Minutemen from placing among the top athletes of the meet.

LaVallee placed third in the all-around competition with a 54.875 and won the vault with a score of 9.60. He also came in second on the rings with a respectable 9.625. Freshman Justin Hammar placed third on the pommel horse with a 9.625. And once again, McNulty brought in a high score for UMass, tying for the gold on floor with a 9.40.

All in all UMass has had a rather slow start this season. Although there have been a great number of high individual scores, the overall team performances have not been as high as in the past. Last year, UMass won its first ECAC title, competed in the NCAA East Regional, and LaVallee broke almost every school record. But this is still the beginning of the season. Like most teams, the Minutemen typically improve throughout the year, so everything is still in their reach.

Several key players like senior co-captain J.J. Hershey and sophomore Matt Plunser are injured, which puts some pressure on the squad as a whole, but the depth of talent on the remaining members of the team is practically endless. Once all the kinks are ironed out of the routines and more guys step up on each event, there's no telling how far they can go.

The Minutemen were led into battle by Jeff LaVallee, who was the leader in UMass' rise to the top of the ECAC last season.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Vegetarian Potato Skins 7.99 4.00
Sweet Potato Fries 5.99 3.00
Shrimp Tempura 6.99 3.50
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome 19-21
51 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES• TREADMILLS•LIFETOWER• CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRECOR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

Teacher's Aides
Join our instructional teams in Amherst! Small, innovative alternative schools (primary, middle and high school grades); tutor and supervise small groups (2-3) of students in a variety of academic subjects and activities. Training provided, full employment benefits. High school or equivalency required, college recommended. 185-day (school year) contract.
Salary range $10,500-$14,200
Send resume and letter to:
Dr. Elana Aitken
c/o ALPs, Hampshire Educational Collaborative
97 Hawley St.
Northampton, MA
549-9288
AA/EOE/ADA

Treadmills
Precore EFX cross-trainers
Exercise Bikes
Stair machines
Aerobics
Free weights
Circuit Weights
Personal Training
Basketball Volleyball Soccer on our full-sized Sport Court
Work out with the Fitness Experts!
Kinetic ADULT FITNESS at KIDSPORTS FAMILY FUN & FITNESS
586-0633
317 Russell St. (Rt.9) Hadley www.kidsportshadley.com

Newman Center Cafeteria
The cafeteria features a full service for Breakfast.(ALL DAY), Lunch and Dinner.
Card
Come visit the Newman Center and see for yourself: fast lines, friendly service and good food.
FOR A QUICK LUNCH, VISIT THE QUICK-LINE FROM 11-2

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10.

UM hockey completes solid winter on ice

UMass takes third in Mariucci Classic, Helanen named HE Player of Week

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

What more could a team ask for than a trip to Minnesota, the frozen heartland of America, for a pre-millennium matchup at the Mariucci Classic with No. 9 Northern Michigan?

To get on the right track for their upcoming Hockey East schedule? Whatever the motivation, the Massachusetts hockey team's end result was a streak that was unparalleled since its reinstatement to Amherst in 1993.

Here's how they did it:

12/29/99: Northern Michigan 3, UMass 0 (Mariucci Classic)

Facing the Wildcats was a formidable task for the Minuteman squad and the end result was a disheartening 3-0 loss. Goaltender Markus Helanen was inserted between the pipes in the opening game of the four-team tournament and was solid, turning aside 21 shots in the loss.

The Maroon and White offense was stymied by the Northern Michigan attack that only allowed 16 UMass shots to get to goaltender Dan Ragnetti.

After a scoreless first period, Wildcat forward Lee Ruff tallied what would prove to be the game-winner with 6:30 remaining in the second off a feed from Petet Michelutti, firing a low wrist shot to the back of the net. J.P. Vigier padded Northern Michigan's lead midway through the third period, scoring with 7:36 remaining in regulation. Tyson Holly added another insurance goal for NMU with just over a minute remaining in the game to send the Minutemen to the consolation game.

12/30/99: UMass 4, Harvard 2 (Mariucci Classic)

After being shut down against the Wildcats, UMass did not want to come back to Amherst pointless at a pivotal juncture in its schedule. Come home pointless, not for this team.

Minnesota native Mike Johnson was called upon to give the Minutemen an uplifting performance and that he did leading the Maroon and White to a 4-2 victory over cross-state rival Harvard. The sophomore turned aside 30 Crimson shots en route to his first victory of the season.

After a period that was reminiscent of the Northern Michigan game where both teams failed to find the back of the net, UMass came out storming in the second.

Jedd Crumb netted the game's first goal on the power play when he slipped a loose puck past Oliver Jonas on the power play just 4:37 into the frame. Kris Wallis tallied the Minutemen's second power play goal of the game when he fired a slapshot from between the circles, which put the score at 2-0.

Dominic Moore cut the Massachusetts lead to a single goal when he scored on a power play for Harvard with 4:15 left in the second period.

Sophomore forward Darcy King allowed the Minutemen to once again grab a two-goal lead with UMass' third power play goal of the game 3:44 into the third period on a shot that went through the five hole of Jonas. Senior forward Jeff Blanchard scored an insurance goal late in regulation to give the Minutemen its largest lead of the game. Harvard finished out the scoring on a power play goal by Jeff Stonehouse.

The win put the Minutemen back on track and on a streak that would gain them their first ever vote in the United States College Hockey Online poll.

1/2/00: UMass 3, St. Lawrence 2 (OT)

A hostile Mullins Center welcomed St. Lawrence for the Minutemen's first home game in a month, but the hosts were unkind, sending the guests back to Canton, NY with a gut-wrenching 3-2 overtime loss.

Jay Shaw scored the game-winner with just nine seconds remaining in the extra frame to complete the comeback and give UMass its second consecutive win.

Just as he had against Harvard, Crumb started the Maroon and White attack by firing a shot past Sean Coakley after intercepting an errant pass in the Saint zone.

St. Lawrence battled back, scoring the equalizer five minutes later when Charlie Daniels scored a power play goal to send the teams into the locker rooms knotted at one.

The Saints took the lead early in the second period when Brandon Dietrich collected a pass from Josh LeRoy directly in front of the UMass net and scored at 2:06 of the period.

The Minutemen would net the tying goal with 4:34 remaining in the third period when sophomore defenseman Randy Drohan slipped a feed from Crumb to the back of the net to send the game into overtime.

Jay Shaw scored his game-winning goal when a defenseman collapsed on senior Blanchard, who in turn dished the puck to Shaw for the overtime score.

1/7/00: UMass 2, Providence 1

UMass continued its winning ways by winning its first Hockey East game of the season by beating Providence twice in a home-and-home weekend series.

Freshman forward Brad Nizwantowski scored the game-winning goal, the first of his career, in just his third collegiate game to lead the Minutemen to a 2-1 win over the Friars.

Providence got on the scoreboard first with a goal by Shawn Weiman late in the first period. Weiman took what looked to like a harmless shot from the blue line, but it found its way past Helanen. The shot hit the junior goalie high and the puck bounce off his right shoulder and into the net to give the Friars a 1-0 lead.

UMass tied the game 1:51 into the second period when senior captain Nathan Sell took a feed from junior defenseman Joey Culgin and converted.

Nizwantowski's game-winner came early in the third period when he intercepted a clearing pass in the Providence defensive zone and walked in alone on goal and scored.

"I saw their defense get the puck and just turn around and he gave it to me in the high slot. I just came down and tried to snap it off quick an I fanned on it, but luckily it went five-hole," Nizwantowski said.

Helanen finished with 21 saves to earn his sixth win of the season and his second in as many outings.

1/8/00: UMass 3, Providence 1

In the back end of the home-and-home Helanen made 38 saves to lead UMass to a 3-1 win over the Friars.

After a scoreless first period, the Minutemen got on the scoreboard first when senior Blanchard scored his fourth shorthanded goal of the season. Blanchard put a rebound of a Nick Stephens shot in for a 1-0 lead. Providence tied the game at 1-1 just under two minutes later with a goal by Nick Lent that put in just between the right pad and right post of Helanen.

Shaw gave the Minutemen a 2-1 lead early in the third frame with a shot that just trickled through the pads of Friar goalie Boyd Ballard.

UMass took a 3-1 lead late in the period when Wallis took a feed from junior forward R.J. Gates and scored on a two-on-one break-in just after a Maroon and White penalty had been killed off.

1/11/00: Maine 4, UMass 2

Riding a four-game winning streak UMass had to contend with the defending National Champion and No. 3 ranked Maine Black Bears in order to keep with its winning ways. The streak was broken when Maine left Amherst with a 4-2 win.

Matt Yeats made 35 saves to lead the way in the win.

Maine took the first lead of the game when Niko Dimitrakos scored on a screen shot from the left point with 11:59 left in the first period off a feed from Cory Larose. The Black Bears took a 2-0 lead 5:35 into the second frame when Ben Guite tallied on the power play.

The Maroon and White answered just over a minute later with a power play goal of their own when a shot from the point by Wallis found its way through traffic and into the back of the net.

Turn to UM HOCKEY, page C2

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team welcomed the New Year with three consecutive victories, including a home-and-home sweep of Providence for its first Hockey East wins.

After slow start, UM women heat up in the cold weather

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

With a 2-6 record heading into winter break, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was doing statistically poorly. Popular reasoning suggests that whenever a team has three times as many losses as wins, there are serious problems.

In this case, however, when the Minutewomen's ninth contest rolled around, against Rhode Island at the William D. Mullins Center on Dec. 14, there was no cause for alarm. The Maroon and White, despite dropping its initial six games over a schedule that included No. 18 Boston College, had come out victorious against two straight opponents: New Mexico St. and, even more impressively, No. 22 Stanford, a two-time national champion in the 1990's. Taking this momentum with them, the Minutewomen bowled over Rhode Island to begin their Atlantic 10 schedule, winning by a 66-50 margin, due in large part to 13 points by forward Nekisi Smith and seven assists by point guard Kathy Cosner.

Here's how the Minutewomen got back on track over the break:

12/28/99: UMass 60, Furman 54

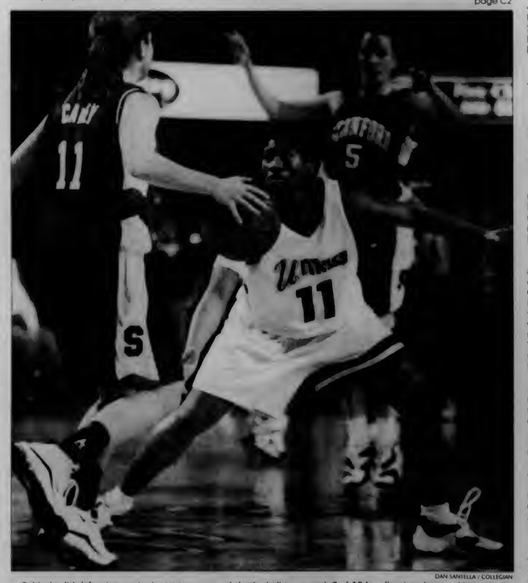
Despite losing Cosner to foot surgery, the Minutewomen begin the Blue Sky Restaurant Group Dartmouth Women's Basketball Classic with a win. In the starting guard's absence, senior Tonia Thomas led the squad with 16 points, while freshman center Jennifer Butler continued to impress in her rookie season, grabbing 18 rebounds and scoring 14 points. Guard Alison MacFarland and Caroline Nehis joined the two in double figure scoring, making for a convincing team win over the Paladins.

12/29/99: William & Mary 60, UMass 54

Massachusetts' six-point loss in the tournament final forced the Minutewomen to settle for the runner-up spot, but Thomas and Butler continued to pick up their games to make up for Coyner's loss. While Thomas had 13 points to complete the two-game stint with a total of 29, Butler set a new school record for rebounds in a game with an awe-striking count of 25. Former UMass stars Jerrie Bernier and Nadine Jackson each recorded 20 is games played in the early 1980's. Both Thomas and Butler snatched places on the All-Tourney team, completing the trip to Hanover, NH, in style. The Minutewomen outshot the Tribe 79-49, but were unable to take home the Blue Sky crown.

1/2/00: Rutgers 66, UMass 52

The Minutewomen stayed on the road to take on 12th-ranked Rutgers. The powerful Scarlet Knights were the only team to outrebound the feisty UMass frontcourt on the offensive end of the floor and used this advantage to contain their opponents to the tune of a 14 point victory. Rutgers pulled down six more offensive carems, grabbing 14 to Massachusetts' eight. In a surprise lead performance, freshman Amber Sneed, who had averaged only 3.3 points over the previous four games, broke out to top the Minutewomen with 15 points.



1/6/00: UMass 61, La Salle 57

UMass enjoyed the health return of Coyner, who burned two 3-pointers and recorded three assists in an eight-point comeback. The victory finished off a road trip that spanned four games. The versatile MacFarland, the team's leading scorer so far this season, poured in 15 points, followed by Smith, who tallied 12, and Butler, who put together yet another double-double, with 11 points and 10 rebounds. The Minutewomen tried their hand at pick-pocketing in this conference win, as well, making 18 steals.

1/9/00: UMass 65, St. Bonaventure 42

Massachusetts remained undefeated in A-10 action, rising to 3-0, with a dominating win over the Bonnies in a welcomed return to the Mullins Center. Smith was named conference Player of the Week with her 11-point, 15-board performance, while Thomas shelled SBU with 17. With the fatigue of the long absence taking its toll on Coyner, the point guard was limited to two points, but dished out six assists in a leadership role. Defensively, the Maroon and White held the visiting Bonnies to a miserable 13 of 58 shooting game where the SBU missed its first 21 shots before finally breaking in to the field goal column.

Turn to UM WOMEN'S BASKETBALL, page C2

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Behind solid defensive work, the UMass women's basketball team took 7 of 10 heading into last week's road trip.

Sylvander takes 400-meter to lead men's indoor in NH

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

A balanced effort led the Massachusetts men's indoor track team to a second-place finish with 75 points, 49 points behind host Dartmouth at the Challenge Cup Trials on Jan. 15.

UMass competed in the New England Championships on Jan. 21 but results were not available at press time. Next up for the Minutemen is a visit to New Hampshire with the Wildcats, Central Connecticut and Holy Cross on Saturday.

Junior Marc Sylvander of Chicopee took first in the 400-meters for the second straight time, clocking in at 49.26 seconds. Last month at Boston University, Sylvander qualified for the New England Championships and the IC4A Championships with a personal best of 48.85.

Senior Vic Morency nabbed second-place finishes in both the shot put and weight throws to bring home 10 of the Minutemen's points. The North Dartmouth native tossed a career-best 55 feet, 9 inches in the weight throw and hurled the shot 16 inches further than he had previously with a distance of 49 feet, 9.75 inches. Morency will join Sylvander at the NE and IC4A Championships.

In his college debut, freshman Stefan Russ of Neuhausen, Germany placed third in both the 200m (23.17) and the high jump with a leap of six-feet four-inches.

Other qualifiers for the NEC's are sophomore Steve Anderson and senior Sean Murphy. Anderson tied his career-best in the weight throw (32-feet, 2-inches) and Murphy paced his PR in the mile at 4:17.7.

UMass coach Ken Murphy begins his 33rd season at the helm of the Minutemen indoor and outdoor

Turn to SYLVANDER, page C5

Women's indoor takes 2nd after rough start at Rhody

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

After taking home sixth-place at the URI Pentathalon last month, the Massachusetts women's indoor track team improved to a second-place finish with 134 points at the New England Cup Challenge Trials on Jan. 14.

The Minutewomen also attended the finals of the New England Challenge Cup Trials in Hanover, NH last weekend but results were not available at time of publication. This Friday UMass will take on the Terriers of Boston University.

Junior Chrystal Murphy and sophomore Kristin Cisowski took home first-place crowns to lead Massachusetts. Murphy, a native of Trenton, NJ, leaned in for a 8.52 second time in the 55 meter hurdles. Murphy also staked out second place in the 500m in 1:21.32 minutes, which qualifies her for the New England Championships. Cisowski grabbed the top bill in the 800m with a season best clocking of 2:22.25.

Another top performance for the Minutewomen was Jamie Hedgecock, who nabbed second in the finals of the 55-meter dash (7.48) and third in the 200m with a time of 27.17.

Qualifiers for the NEC's from UMass are Monica Elmore (1000m), Sharon Tillotson (5000m), Elizabeth Sheptock (3000m), Rhianna DaCruz (pole vault), Giselle Nicholas (20 lb. weight throw), Shannon Hamilton (20 lb. weight throw) and Melissa Ward (peniathalon).

Losing just seven members of last year's stellar squad that captured first place in the Atlantic 10 Outdoor Championships and second in the Indoor Championships, the Minutewomen are posed for another strong season.

"We have a real good balance this year, we have quality athletes in every event which is always a primary goal for our program," said coach Julie LaFreniere, a 1977 graduate of UMass.

How successful has the program been?

In the last four years, the Massachusetts women have nailed down three A-10 titles, and scored either first or second place in each of the A-10 Championships dating all the way back to 1993.

The immediate goal for this indoor season is to compete well-enough to win the conference championship meet after clawing their way to first in the cross country conference championships. Long-term goal? To make it three in a row and bring home the outdoor championships, a feat no other Minutewomen team has ever accomplished.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sally Hirsch

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 2 Thursday, January 27, 2000

Students indifferent toward privatization

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Many University of Massachusetts students returning from intercession were surprised by new decision to privatize the University Store and Textbook Annex under Follett Higher Education Group. Despite their initial surprise, most students interviewed last night in the Campus Center said they have mixed feelings about the change.

Melissa Spinks, a freshman pre-nursing major, said she feels strongly against all of the debate and arguments over who gets to run the bookstore.

"What's the big deal?" Spinks said. "Who really cares who it's run by?"

Sophomore history major Samantha Singer agreed with Spinks and added that there isn't a problem over privatization as long as employees' benefits aren't lost.

"If the students who work there get the same benefits and employment, then it may not be bad because we may get a cost that is a reasonable price," Singer said.

Other students like junior theater major Julia Blight said they feel that privatizing the store would take away a part of the University from the students.

"Privatizing it would make it something like Barnes and Noble," Blight said. "It would no longer be a part of the university – it separates it in a way."

Some students like sophomore political science major Emily Ackman feel that the university should focus on privatizing goal, the first of its career, in just his third collegiate game to lead the Minutemen to a 2-1 win over the Friars.

Providence got on the scoreboard first with a goal by Shawn Weiman late in the first period. Weiman took what looked to like a harmless shot from the blue line, but it found its way past Helanen. The shot hit the junior goalie high and the puck bounce off his right shoulder and into the net to give the Friars a 1-0 lead.

UMass tied the game 1:51 into the second period when senior captain Nathan Sell took a feed from junior defenseman Joey Culgin and converted.

Nizwantowski's game-winner came early in the third period when he intercepted a clearing pass in the Providence defensive zone and walked in alone on goal and scored.

"I saw their defense get the puck and just turn around and he gave it to me in the high slot. I just came down and tried to snap it off quick an I fanned on it, but luckily it went five-hole," Nizwantowski said.

Helanen finished with 21 saves to earn his sixth win of the season and his second in as many outings.

1/8/00: UMass 3, Providence 1

In the back end of the home-and-home Helanen made 38 saves to lead UMass to a 3-1 win over the Friars.

After a scoreless first period, the Minutemen got on the scoreboard first when senior Blanchard scored his fourth shorthanded goal of the season. Blanchard put a rebound of a Nick Stephens shot in for a 1-0 lead. Providence tied the game at 1-1 just under two minutes later with a goal by Nick Lent that put in just between the right pad and right posy of Helanen.

Shaw gave the Minutemen a 2-1 lead early in the third frame with a shot that just trickled through the pads of Friar goalie Boyd Ballard.

UMass took a 3-1 lead late in the period when Wallis took a feed from junior forward R.J. Gates and scored on a two-on-one break-in just after a Maroon and White penalty had been killed off.

1/11/00: Maine 4, UMass 2

Riding a four-game winning streak UMass had to contend with the defending National Champion and No. 3 ranked Maine Black Bears in order to keep with its winning ways. The streak was broken when Maine left Amherst with a 4-2 win.

Matt Yeats made 35 saves to lead the way in the win.

Maine took the first lead of the game when Niko Dimitrakos scored on a screen shot from the left point with 11:59 left in the first period off a feed from Cory Larose. The Black Bears took a 2-0 lead 5:35 into the second frame when Ben Guite tallied on the power play.

The Maroon and White answered just over a minute later with a power play goal of their own when a shot from the point by Wallis found its way through traffic and into the back of the net.

Turn to UM HOCKEY, page C2

KARA TIGHE / COLLEGIAN

Plowing students, not snow
A snow plow works furiously to clear the walkways on campus as students walk from class in Thompson hall.

GEO speaks out on corporate ownership

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The long debated issue regarding privatization was finally laid to rest last week, when Chancellor David K. Scott announced that the campus would privatize both the University Store and Textbook Annex with a bookselling private corporation called the Follett Higher Education Group of Chicago.

Both the Board of Trustees and Chancellor Scott reviewed three different bids, submitted by Barnes and Noble, Follett, and the UMass Labor coalition. The University Selection Committee reviewed the bids, voting unanimously to recommend that the contract be awarded to Follett.

As part of the five-year contract, which is to take effect in the fall of 2000, the University will receive a guaranteed payment of $7.3 million. Also, the 26 current full and part time employees will be given the option of becoming Follett employees and retaining their same salary, or working for Follett and continuing as University employees with all the current benefits and years of service.

Students will be offered the same types of benefits that the current campus bookstore offers, with additional options. Students will still be able to exercise the option of selling their textbooks back after classes. They will receive 50 percent off of the current selling price of a new or used book.

James Shaw, president of Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), had negative comments about the recent decision to privatize.

"I think that it was a bad decision by the University," Shaw said.

The organization felt that the bid submitted by the union was not taken seriously and therefore the decision to privatize was made unfairly without every option taken into consideration, Shaw explained.

According to Shaw, the bid still has to be passed through the State Auditor's Office. The organization still hopes that the University will not privatize the store.

Some of the reasons cited by GEO against privatizing the UMass campus are both poor pay scales and less job security for the employees of the organization.

"The University will receive small benefits for a short amount of time," Shaw said.

Another reason the organization is against the privatization of businesses on campus is that they expect these private businesses to charge students more for products, hire fewer students, and not hire foreign students. In addition, Shaw explained that the new bookstore is not unionized.

"The University is placing profit over people," Shaw said.

The organization plans to keep the members of the union actively involved and to continue protesting against privatization in the future.

Admission process revised

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Last week, the University of Massachusetts announced the revised admissions procedures that are projected to take effect during the 2000-2001 school year.

The new admissions standards will more deeply emphasize the accomplishments of individual students during their high school years. The new process will admit students on their grade point average at their former school (GPA), and their SAT scores.

According to statements made by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos and the Task Force on Undergraduate Admissions, the major goals of this re-designed admissions process are to emphasize the weighted GPA and take into account factors such as leadership, patterns in achievement, and success in overcoming difficult challenges. In addition, the new standards will try to promote a diverse campus.

The current standards will shift away from the traditional focus on SAT scores and focus much more upon the students' GPA.

The new process is broken down into a system of points and point values. Incoming applications are first evaluated in terms of weighted high school grade point averages and a combined SAT score.

The applicants with the highest GPA's and SAT scores will be identified for review; the other group with lower GPA's and SAT scores will be identified for a point review.

Students are evaluated on a total of four factors for admission. The first factor is weighted GPA. The scale for the averages runs from 2.5 through 3.4, and students receive more positive points towards their application with each additional point on their GPA.

A possible 7.5 points can be obtained within this section of admissions.

The next section of admissions is factors regarding diversity. Students can obtain a total of 0.5 if they are international students, attended a low-income high school, are veterans, are the first generation of students to attend college in their families or are a racial/ethnic minority.

Students can also obtain 0.5 points if they are judged to have overcome significant adversity relevant to higher education. A possible 1.0 point can be derived from this portion of the application process.

Another section of the application is worth 0.5 points and relates to residency. Points are awarded to applicants satisfying criteria for Massachusetts residency for purposes of tuition classification.

In the final category, students can receive up to 1.0 point on their application point total. In the area of achievement students can receive a possible 0.5 points for academic honors and achievements, 0.25 points for possible pattern of achievement, and 0.25 points for demonstrated leadership.

Student points will be totaled and applications in the group will be rank-ordered. Applicants with the highest total points will be offered admission to the University. The remaining applicants with both lower GPA's and lower SAT scores will normally not be offered admission to the college.

The University is confident that the new admissions standards will allow for a more diverse and well-rounded student body.

Evaluations for applications of the upcoming fall class will begin this week and the new admissions evaluation method will be used.

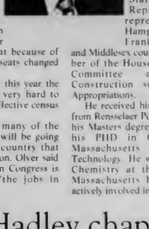
Congressman Olver looks at part politics play in society

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Congressman John Olver spoke to students at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst today about various issues effecting both world-wide and local politics.

One of the major issues addressed at the session was party politics and how they influence both elections and the process of daily government.

Olver explained that the dominant party chooses how many majority and minority seats are on each committee and this helps to influence political decisions in Congress.



"It's not good to be the minority," Olver said.

Staying along the lines of party politics Olver also explained to those in attendance the importance of the 2000 census.

During the last census, "some states had an undercount as high as two percent," Olver said. He explained that because of this undercount many seats changed hands.

According to Olver, this year the government is "trying very hard to put together the most effective census possible."

He explained that many of the seats that are shifting will be going towards areas in the country that have gained in population. Olver said the make-up of seats in Congress is changing because, "the jobs in essence are shifting."

There is a possibility of "about a dozen seats changing hands," Olver said.

Another issue that was covered in the session was the "big dig" of Boston and how it affects Western Massachusetts as a whole. He explained that the project was the "last big project handed out on a purely political basis."

He explained that the big dig was draining potential money from Western Massachusetts and that important projects were being slowed down in other parts of the state due to financial commitments that occurred in relation to the big dig. According to Olver, the state is forced to match the funding that the government allots and this process is causing the financial problem.

Olver is serving his fifth term to the United States House of Representatives and represents Berkshire, Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin, Worcester, and Middlesex counties. He is a member of the House Appropriations Committee and Military Construction subcommittee of Appropriations.

He received his Bachelors degree from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, his Masters degree from Tufts, and his PHD in Chemistry from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was a professor of Chemistry at the University of Massachusetts before becoming actively involved in politics.

Retail giant Wal-Mart begins its Hadley chapter

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

HADLEY - The town of Hadley welcomed the grand-opening of a new Wal-Mart yesterday after more than a month of construction and planning.

The nationwide-based corporation well known for it's "dropping prices" slogan, has established itself for the first time in the Hadley area. Some people, however, say they are skeptical of a large corporation being established in an area populated by smaller, locally owned businesses.

For his part, Store Manager Charles Hedden said he is happy for the community as well as Wal-Mart's employees. He said Wal-Mart offers the highest competition to other businesses.

"It's our commitment to have the lowest prices," Hedden said. "We do match prices and we are very competitive with our prices. We just want to offer our customers the lowest prices and the best service."

In addition to offering the lowest prices, the new store also offers a one-hour photo and pharmacy, and, said Co-Manager Sue Lienhard, they offer matching grants for charity. It is Wal-Mart policy to match funds raised by non-profit organizations through fundraisers.

"Wal-Mart will match what you make, up to $2,000," Lienhard said. "If you were to raise $2,000, Wal-Mart would match that $2,000."

Yesterday's grand-opening presentation helped raise $2,000 for the Amherst Survival Center and Wal-Mart matched that to contribute a total of $4,000 towards the charitable organization.

The store chooses to support a particular charity over a three-month period, Lienhard said, and the employees raise money through raffles, bake sales and other fundraisers.

"We're here to serve the community," Lienhard said. "Wal-Mart doesn't benefit from it [fundrasers]."

Wal-Mart gave donations to other charity organizations including the D.A.R.E. program in Hadley and Belchertown, the Amherst and Hadley Fire Departments, United Way, United Methodist Church, Hopkins Academy, the Amherst Hockey Association, the Hadley Conservation Commission and the Hadley Elementary School.

More than 250 workers are currently employed after a long process of training and hiring that began Dec. 6.

Vendors present at the opening included Coca-Cola, Pepsi, Wal-Mart credit-card company and other con-

Turn to WAL-MART, page 5

DAN MACHADO / COLLEGIAN

Yesterday marked the grand opening of the new Walmart in Hadley.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 22 LOW: 7	HIGH: 23 LOW: 6	HIGH: 32 LOW: 13

SOURCE: CNN.COM

Enjoy... Being Unemployed
The Coca-Cola Company plans on slashing 20 percent of its workforce in a major downsizing move. Read about this and other equally enlightening issues inside.
NEWS PAGE 3

Come back Down
Arts takes a look at some Sundance masterpieces as well as the not so good Down to You. Plus, Tube Notes returns with a look at the Golden Globes.
ARTS PAGE 6

Turning It Around
Jeff Turner netted a pair of goals, helping UMass grab hold of 11th place in Hockey East with a 4-3 victory over Providence last night at the Mullins Center.
SPORTS PAGE 18

Arts & Living 6
Comics 17
Crossword 17
Editorial 4
News 1
Sports 18

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Police Log

Accidents

Jan. 22

A two-vehicle accident was reported on University Drive. No injuries reported.

Jan. 23

A two-vehicle minor accident was reported on Kennedy Road.

Jan. 23

A vehicle was reported having struck a sawhorse on Kennedy Road.

Jan. 23

A two-vehicle minor accident was reported on Commonwealth Ave.

Arrests

Jan. 22

Jeffery T. Skowron, 22, of Waltham was arrested and charged with possession of alcohol, driving without an inspection sticker and failure to notify RMV of name and address change.

Larceny

Jan. 22

An internal CD-ROM was reported stolen in the Student Union

Jan. 23

A desk lamp and personal items were reported stolen from a dorm room in John Quincy Adams Dorm.

Clinton to Set Ambitious Agenda in State of the Union Speech

By Jonathon Weisman
The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON – When President Clinton strides into the Capitol tonight to deliver the final State of the Union speech of his presidency, gone will be the dramas of his past addresses, the impeachment trials, the exploding sex scandals, the sense of drift and disarray.

Without the melodrama or political intrigue of the past, this year's speech will offer an ambitious legislative agenda for Clinton's final year in office that not even his top aides believe will pass on his watch.

"He'll be laying out an agenda for the decade," said Sidney Blumenthal, a senior White House aide, "an agenda that understands the new realities, that's visionary and practical. They may not all be reached this year, but they will be reached."

For much of his tenure in office, Clinton has been a master of this venue, a rambling yet eloquent orator who has used his epic State of the Union addresses to re-energize his presidency. Each year, the image of Clinton evoking cheers from a joint session of Congress has lent his presidency a stateliness it otherwise did not always convey.

Last year, as an extraordinary Senate impeachment court stood in judgment of him, Clinton used the address to try to prove that an expected acquittal would not, in effect, end his tenure in office.

This year, no less an authority than Clinton himself says he is simply trying, in the waning months of his presidency, to stave off nostalgia for past triumphs.

"I do feel some nostalgia," he said this week. "It's something I'm very much trying to fight off, because I think the important thing is to keep the attention of the country focused on the future."

Any drift toward nostalgia is not for lack of legislative initiatives. In Thursday night's speech, and in his proposed 2001 federal budget to follow on Feb. 7, Clinton will offer a 10-year, $110 billion health care initiative to provide insurance for at least 5 million uncovered Americans, and to bring down the cost of insurance for those who are covered.

He will request an expansion of his signature AmeriCorps national service program, a $21 billion boost to the earned-income tax credit for the working poor, a $30 billion tax cut to defray the costs of college tuition, new efforts to combat infectious diseases and to find environmental causes of illnesses, an aviation safety initiative, and a program to bolster the enforcement of gun laws.

His education proposals will include $1.3 billion for the renovation of schools in poverty-stricken areas, a $120 million request to help districts create smaller schools, a $30 million program to enhance training for early childhood educators, and a new teacher quality initiative that Andy Rotherman, a Clinton education adviser, promised would be "eye catching."

The president will push Congress to approve China's inclusion in the World Trade Organization and to send Colombia an aid package to combat drug traffickers.

At the same time, Clinton hopes to head off any major Republican tax cut by diverting most of the expected budget surplus into federal debt reduction.

The most ambitious of those proposals have little chance of passage in a year when Congress will try to do as little as possible, hoping to avoid any missteps that would alienate the voters.

KARA STORES/COLLEGIAN

...and how does that make you feel?
Junior Psychology major Sam Brown takes a break between classes yesterday to let off some steam in the campus center video arcade.

East coast storm wreaks havoc

By Robert L. Jackson
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – An unexpected blizzard stunned the eastern United States on Tuesday, snarling traffic and shutting down schools and businesses from South Carolina to Maine. Most federal agencies in the nation's capital were closed.

Packing winds up to 40 miles per hour, the fast-moving storm disrupted air travel and closed many major airports, including New York's La Guardia and Washington's Ronald Reagan National Airport. Flights were canceled up and down the Eastern seaboard and air traffic was snarled over much of the nation.

Amtrak canceled operations south of Washington, including auto-train service to Florida, because of the storm, spokesman Cliff Black said. He said that rail travelers faced delays along the Washington-to-Boston corridor.

At least four people were killed in weather-related traffic accidents in the Carolinas, and a 5-year-old girl was missing and feared dead in Massachusetts after lalling into a river while walking to school in heavy snow.

Schools were closed from South Carolina to Maine, including nearly all schools in New Jersey and Maryland.

It was the worst snowstorm to hit Washington in four years, turning the downtown area into a ghost town. While the capital's Metro subway system remained operating, some commuters on cross-country skis could be seen traversing near-empty streets.

The only political battle at the White House was a snowball fight outside the West Wing between press secretary Joe Lockhart and his aides. Senate testimony by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, usually a much-anticipated event, was canceled.

"We knew it was coming. It just decided to hit us a day earlier than expected!," said U.S. Weather Service meteorologist Tim Morrin in New York. "It's an intense winter storm and it's hitting us with its full potential."

Fourteen inches of snow had fallen by early afternoon at Petersburg, Va., and snow piled up in 4- to 5-foot drifts outside Richmond. A foot had fallen at Jaffrey, N.H. The Baltimore-Washington International Airport got more than seven inches. Ten inches had accumulated outside Philadelphia in King of Prussia, Pa., and New York City measured 6 inches.

Up to 18 inches deep was expected in the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts.

The storm dumped a record 18.2 inches of snow at Raleigh-Durham International Airport. The snowfall amount eclipsed a record 17.8 inches of snow set on March 2, 1927. Central and eastern North Carolina had two feet of snow.

Snow was reported as far south as Myrtle Beach, a popular South Carolina resort community, where five inches fell on a community better known for golf courses and wide beaches.

"It's virtually a white-out," said North Carolina State Highway Patrol spokesman Robert Carver. "Looking out at the cars, snow is up to the wheel wells, wind blowing snow around. This is the kind of thing you just don't see in North Carolina."

North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt and Virginia Gov. Jim Gilmore declared states of emergency, mobilizing National Guard troops to provide emergency medical services, set up temporary power generators and help rescue stranded motorists.

Virginia hospitals appealed for volunteers with four-wheel-drive vehicles to take doctors and nurses to work. "We're having a great response," with about 50 volunteer drivers, said Mark Canada at Johnston-Willis Hospital north of Richmond.

Only "essential" government employees were asked to report to work in the nation's capital, such as some law enforcement officers, public health technicians and air traffic controllers. The Supreme Court stayed open until mid-afternoon on orders of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, a native of much snowier Wisconsin.

www.dailycollegian.com

KARA STORES/COLLEGIAN

Hey Mr. Driver man, don't be slow...
Students wait at the bus stop outside the campus center after the first day of class in the year 2000.

Coke to eliminate 6,000 jobs in major reshuffling

By Martha M. Hamilton
The Washington Post

Coca-Cola Co. said yesterday that it will slash 6,000 jobs – about 20 percent of its work force – in a bid to reduce the power of its Atlanta headquarters and transfer more authority to local units in more than 200 countries.

"The world in which we operate has changed dramatically," said Doug Daft, who will become chairman in April and is moving quickly to place his stamp on the struggling soft-drink company. Daft added that Coke "must take our business to where our business is."

About 40 percent of the headquarters work force – 2,500 jobs – will be eliminated. About 2,700 jobs will be cut outside the United States (about 14 percent of the company's non-U.S. work force) as well as 800 jobs in U.S. operations outside Atlanta.

"Coke has been very centralized in Atlanta. This is probably, in the long run, going to make them more nimble," said Skip Carpenter, a beverage industry analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. Still, Carpenter said, the layoffs will be painful and the company's outlook might include slower growth.

Coke shares fell more than four percent in heavy trading after the announcement, partly because of the short-term profit outlook, analysts said. In trading on the New York Stock Exchange, Coke closed at $63.00 1/4, down $2.81 1/4.

Daft was named last month to replace M. Douglas Ivester, who announced he would retire after two years as chairman and chief executive a period that included setbacks resulting from the Asian economic downturn, problems dealing with regulators in Western Europe over acquisitions and product recalls, and a sharp decline in the company's stock, once a darling of Wall Street.

Daft has moved quickly to change Coke's approach to managing the business "with a decentralized focus on local markets," said Carpenter, adding that he expects more changes.

"It's a huge, dramatic change," said John Sicher, editor and publish of The Beverage Digest. As the best-known brand name in the world, "the company has to be very close to hundreds of different markets," he said. "This will also allow them to have closer relations with local governments and regulators.

"Daft spent his career building and running the business in Asia," Sicher said. "He knows what the Coke troops on the ground can do and intends to give them a lot more power."

Coke also announced a fourth-quarter net loss of $45 million (2 cents per fully diluted share), and annual profits for 1999 of $2.43 billion (98 cents). Fourth-quarter 1998 earnings were $597 million (24 cents) and 1998 annual earnings were $3.53 billion ($1.42).

The company said it would have had a profit of 31 cents per share in the fourth quarter of 1999 except for restructuring items including the write-off of certain assets and the impact of the company's product withdrawal in Europe.

Coke estimated the job cuts will save $360 million a year but earnings this year would be reduced by $800 million before taxes to cover the cost of the realignment.

Protesters at WTO Plan D.C. Follow-Up

By John Burgess
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Activist groups that paralyzed downtown Seattle during the World Trade Organization conference late last year plan to converge here in April to protest a joint meeting of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund – with some groups pledging to "shut down" the gathering with civil disobedience.

More than 60 organizers met here last week to map out a week of political events aimed at keeping alive what they call "the spirit of Seattle." They plan to lobby in Congress, hold educational forums, stage peaceful demonstrations and physically block the meeting, organizers said.

The groups view the IMF and World Bank, both based here, as key institutions for an unjust global economic order that enriches some people but impoverishes others. The meetings have traditionally drawn protesters, but in smaller numbers than predicted for the one on April 16.

Many demonstrators will also use the occasion to fight the Clinton administration's efforts to persuade Congress to grant normal trade relations to China.

"There's tons of interest," said Julicite Beck, economic rights coordinator for Global Exchange, a San Francisco activist group. "We are shooting for a gathering of many thousands of people." She said her group would try to "shut down" the meeting by nonviolent means, with members willing to be arrested.

D.C. police said they're aware of the plans and have a team in place. "We anticipate that our city will not be shut down," said Terrance W. Gainer, executive assistant chief of the department.

"We'll be in good shape." Police Chief Charles H. Ramsey recently attended an FBI seminar on lessons from Seattle, Gainer added.

Organizers have been flying around the country to drum up support. Planners expect "spirit of Seattle" caravans will cross the country from Seattle and the San Francisco Bay area, and from along the East Coast.

On Nov. 30, armies of demonstrators linked arms to block access to the Seattle convention center where WTO delegates were to start a new round of global trade talks. Opening ceremonies were canceled, and cabinet ministers were trapped in their hotels. While most demonstrators were peaceful, a few vandals broke store windows, and chaos and tear gas reigned into the night. Three days later, the meeting ended in failure, with demonstrators claiming much of the credit.

Seattle police initially did little to interfere, its city government viewing civil disobedience as a legitimate form of political expression. Their loss of control of a large sector of downtown led to investigations and political invective. D.C. police flew to Seattle in the closing days to observe, Gainer said.

For groups on the streets, "Seattle is the 'Big Bang' of activism for the global economy that has now turned on so many people to the reality of what's happening," Beck said.

"It's not a top-down kind of thing," said Soren Ambrose, policy analyst for 50 Years Is Enough, which was founded in 1994 on the 50th anniversary of the IMF and World Bank and is now coordinating the planning. "It's a kind of chaos, with a center, and we are the center."

50 Years Is Enough said that many groups prominent in Seattle met last week at the University of the District of Columbia: the Ruckus Society, Global Exchange, Direct Action Network and Public Citizen's Global Trade Watch. Organizers have spoken with labor groups about getting them involved.

Global Trade Watch deputy director Mike Dolan, who spent months organizing the Seattle demonstrations, predicted the turnout here would be small. Planners expect "spirit of Seattle" caravans will cross the country from Seattle and the San Francisco Bay area, and from along the East Coast.

On Nov. 30, armies of demonstrators linked arms to block access to the Seattle convention center where WTO delegates were to start a new round of global trade talks. Opening ceremonies were canceled, and cabinet ministers were trapped in their hotels. While most demonstrators were peaceful, a few vandals broke store windows, and chaos and tear gas reigned into the night. Three days later, the meeting ended in failure, with demonstrators claiming much of the credit.

Seattle police initially did little to interfere, its city government viewing civil disobedience as a legitimate form

Dolan, who spent months organizing the Seattle demonstrations, predicted the turnout here would be small. Planners expect "spirit of Seattle" caravans will cross the country from Seattle and the San Francisco Bay area, and from along the East Coast.

On Nov. 30, armies of demonstrators linked arms to block access to the Seattle convention center where WTO delegates were to start a new round of global trade talks. Opening ceremonies were canceled, and cabinet ministers were trapped in their hotels. While most demonstrators were peaceful, a few vandals broke store windows, and chaos and tear gas reigned into the night. Three days later, the meeting ended in failure, with demonstrators claiming much of the credit.

Seattle police initially did little to interfere, its city government viewing civil disobedience as a legitimate form of political expression. Their loss of control of a large sector of downtown led to investigations and political invective. D.C. police flew to Seattle in the closing days to observe, Gainer said.

For groups on the streets, "Seattle is the 'Big Bang' of activism for the global economy that has now turned on so many people to the reality of what's happening," Beck said.

"It's not a top-down kind of thing," said Soren Ambrose, policy analyst for 50 Years Is Enough, which was founded in 1994 on the 50th anniversary of the IMF and World Bank and is now coordinating the planning. "It's a kind of chaos, with a center, and we are the center."

50 Years Is Enough said that many groups prominent in Seattle met last week at the University of the District of Columbia: the Ruckus Society, Global Exchange, Direct Action Network and Public Citizen's Global Trade Watch. Organizers have spoken with labor groups about getting them involved.

Global Trade Watch deputy director Mike

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

ID numbers should change
Our opinion

Nobody wants to be a number, but all Americans are, thanks to the United States government. Every American is given a Social Security number at birth, and this number stays with each person until he or she dies. At UMass, Social Security numbers are used as student identification numbers, for everything from billing and preregistration to grade reporting and parking permits. But this administrative practice should be changed.

Putting such an important number on an ID card that most students carry around with them all the time puts students at risk. Anyone can catch a glimpse of this important number, which can then be used for fraudulent purposes involving credit cards or accessing students' grades online. Students on this campus are sent quite a few credit card applications each semester, and many of them are misaddressed and end up lying unclaimed in residence hall lobbies. Because of this, students can be victimized; signing up for a credit card with someone else's name and social security number is easy, and racking up a big debt without paying the bill is easier still.

The incident of "cyberstalking" at UMass-Boston highlights the risk of this practice and has made that school reconsider its policy. Beng Ky, a UMass-Boston student, is accused of stalking a fellow student by using her Social Security number to tamper with her computer account, order credit cards in her name, and set up an Internet account in the name of her nephew, according to a January 8th Boston Globe article. While these circumstances highlight the larger issue of "cyberstalking," fraud that results from using others' Social Security numbers cannot be ignored.

While Social Security numbers are a convenient way for UMass to keep track of its students, randomly generated ID numbers are a better option. Student ID numbers should be just that; numbers that identify students during their time here at UMass. They should not be numbers that are used throughout a person's lifetime for many financial transactions and for identification.

UMass should reconsider the current way of identifying students and consider making a change. Mount Holyoke and Smith reconsidered using Social Security numbers as ID numbers in the past, and now students at those colleges have ID's with randomly generated numbers. Student safety was a concern in both instances.

UMass should join its neighbors and change the current system. While students have the option to have a randomly generated number, many students do not elect that option, either unaware of the danger or simply as a result of laziness. However, student safety would be increased if the University assigned everyone a random number. If students must be reduced to numbers, the University should not add injury to insult by putting students' security at risk.

The young and the wrestling

Every Monday night, my female roommates and I share a few hours of special bonding time. We call dibs on the TV and nestle together on the sofa for our special weekly "girl" time. Meanwhile the boys of the house roll their eyes and crack jokes about our Monday evening ritual. Before you start assuming (and we all know what that does), let me clear up any misunderstandings. No, we are not gathered around the tube watching one of those sappy melodramatic soap opera-inspired chick shows. No offense to those of you who do have too much time on your hands – and I do suspect that many of you are of the male persuasion. Nope, those ruddy poo candy-ass shows like Dawson's Crack and 90210 'ho' just don't cut it for my girls.

Now, if you are any kind of true wrestling fan, you probably caught that last clue and realized that I am talking about WWF RAW! Yes, we girls take our wrestling very seriously. Incoming phone calls during wrestling are highly frowned upon. Those foolish enough to try to reach one of us between nine and 11 o'clock are chastised and made to swear that they will think long and hard before calling our house on Monday nights. Few ever have to be told twice. One might mistakenly jump to the conclusion that we are obsessed fans. Not true, although someday I will marry the Rock (I changed my mind, Sarah ... I won't share). But in the interest of educating those of you out there, let me make my case for the WWF.

Wrestling is truly the sport for all Mankind. Where else can one be entertained by men in tight spandex? WWF wrestling offers something for everyone. Men are enticed by the wrestlers' breast-enhanced sidekicks like Miss Kitty (now the Cat) and the ever scantily clad Tori. For the women, there are a number of reasons to watch: The Rock, Test and the Edge just to name a few. For the kiddies, wrestling offers the amusement of watching mom run around the ring fighting in their skivvies. On second thought, maybe that one is for the women too, but I'm sure there's got to be some reason the kids watch.

Kristen Kennedy

Even the femi-Nazis have a reason to tune in. After all, seeing Chyna administer a below the belt chop to her male counterparts must be pretty gratifying for the man haters out there. The older folks, not to be forgotten, are represented by the always classy Mae Young. She's no spring chicken and the osteoporosis is kicking in, but I'd still hate to meet her face to face. If you were lucky enough to see The Royal Rumble on Sunday night you know just what I'm talking about! Keep your shirt on, honey.

I strongly suggest that if you aren't already a fan that you tune in some Monday night and see what you are missing. I guaran-damn-tee that if you watch once you will keep coming back. So give it a shot. I think you will agree that there is no show more entertaining that RAW! Once you have mastered the Monday night thing you may safely move onto W W F Smackdown on Thursdays and Heat on Sunday nights. For the buss fan, who cannot always make it to the couch on all three nights, Saturday morning Live Wire will catch you up on all of the important events of the week. So if you missed X-Pac giving The Big Show a bronco buster or you just can't wait until Sunday to see the People's Champ raise the people's eyebrow, Saturday mornings will provide a quick fix.

If after watching once you are not totally sold on the WWF, then I am sorry, but there is no hope for you. You are truly a lost soul. If after a single viewing you are interested but reluctant to admit to it, let me assure you that you are not alone. There are many closet wrestling fans out there that are afraid to come forward for fear of public scrutiny. Let me say this: you cannot hide forever. You will eventually give yourself away. It might be a small slip, like admitting to knowing some of the wrestlers' names or you might blow yourself out of the water and blurt out a quote from one of them. But the minute you start explaining the wrestling matches to other people, you are undeniably a fan (not to mention any names, Brett).

Someday soon you will find yourself channel surfing and during your clicking frenzy you may realize that you have paused a little too long on one of the WWF programs. You'll watch, but not before you look around to make sure that nobody can see you. Don't be afraid, give it a whirl, you just might be surprised. It may take a while to get acquainted with all of the craziness that is the WWF, but try to stick it out. Should you need help understanding anything, my girls and I are always willing to educate the amateur-wrestling fan. Just don't bother us during wrestling. Because if you do, then you can take your question, shine it up real nice, turn it sideways and shove it up your candy-ass!

Kristen "The Rock" Kennedy is a UMass student.

Get the word out... send your opinion to the Ed/Op page!

CRC urges take a stand

Here we go again. Upon returning for a new semester, we find that many of the evils of the last century are still with us. Never fear. Evil will not triumph. The ever-dynamic UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition is on the job.

For those who don't remember, last year the CRC collected signatures in conjunction with other college and local groups, in a bid to end marijuana prohibition (and to foster solidarity against the Town's anti-student hostility). We came very close, but we did not succeed. This year we will succeed – with your help.

The text of the proposal for the Mar. 28 town election calls for lobbying the state and federal governments to legalize marijuana, and in the interim, asks the police to "deprioritize" enforcement. We in humble Amherst have the potential to inspire people across the state, and across the country, to get moving and end the scourge of Prohibition.

The spring election also brings an added bonus – Hill Boss is up for re-election. We can take him out! This is vital for student well being, though I won't go as far as many do and say Hill Boss is the worst villain in human history. (I have to admit that he has some okay ideas on occasion.) But by and large, he is no friend of the student. Never forget Hobart Lane. Besides, until we get rid of him, we will never have any hope of removing from power Amherst's petty tyrant, Town Manager Barry Del Castillho.

Terry Franklin

Mr. Boss and Mr. Del Castillho believe in the use of force and violence against those who disagree with them and against those who it is merely convenient to use as scapegoats. They are practitioners of the politics of hatred and intolerance – and their victims are most often UMass students. The real bottom line is that Hill and Barry oversee and administer policies that result in police going to people's homes at night, taking them away in chains, and throwing them in cages.

In addition, Mr. Boss gets irritated at any criticism of his policies, and characterizes it as a "personal attack," somehow improper and unfair. This is more than a little odd coming from someone who has never been the least bit inhibited when it came to name calling of the vilest kind. Being annoyed by a little verbal criticism seems rather incongruous.

Now that you are updated on Amherst town politics, what can you do? You are sitting there in front of your PlayStation, fantasizing about "fighting the good fight" in the heroic battle against evil.

"I want to do this in reality," you say, "I've got to get off my ass, go out, and save the world!...but where do I begin?"

I'm glad you asked. Go to Farthfoods tonight at 6:30 pm. There will be a big exciting CRC General Meeting designed to get new petitioners moving and shaking. What have you got to lose? It's just one evening.

I know lots of folks are turned off by politics. But this is a political year – so you're going to have to make peace with it. Besides, the CRC isn't only for hard-core political activist types. All are welcome. Come socialize and make some new friends – even friends of the opposite sex. Make UMass famous nationwide. Make the world a better place to live in. Volunteer for America. Let Freedom ring!

Got you worked up, did I? Oops. I still see a few cynics out there. "Come to a meeting? Volunteer to save the world? Yeah, right." To you I can only say: did I mention the part about the opposite-sex?

If you just can't make it this evening, come to the CRC office sometime, or drop by their table on the Concourse.

On additional note: there were several statewide petitions circulating last fall pertaining to marijuana. This is a local one. It's new. You probably haven't seen it before (except in last year's incarnation). You can sign it, even if you signed the others.

But to sign it, you must be registered to vote – and registered in Amherst. I know it's embarrassing to say you are not registered, but claiming you are, and signing it, helps no one. It only screws up our numerical estimates. Just ask the petitioner for a voter registration card, and fill it out on the spot. It only takes two or three minutes. (Of course, you must be a U.S. citizen, and turn 18 by March 28.) Many students haven't accepted being out on their own yet, and are maintaining their voter registration at their parents' home address. Please consider switching your voter registration to your address here in Amherst. Does that other place have an election this spring as exciting as ours?

Also, kill the paranoia already. Don't be a wimp. Your name is only going to be one among 3000. If that doesn't help with your bravery problem, nothing ever will.

Finally, one last thing. Get out and vote on March 28. Don't forget. The prudes and busybodies never forget. And hey, this is a rare opportunity; I mean, how often is it that you (and your new friend of the opposite sex) go to vote in an election, and actually get to smile?

Terry Franklin is an Amherst resident.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Lenny Holston Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendone Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lillien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Chanele Dubofsky Jewish Affairs Editor
Lenny Holston Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Britt Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menichel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulien Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The night before X-mas

Don't take me as a cold-hearted person. I was just as stunned as the rest of my co-passengers on the flight when it happened. However, I was also depressed that the first person I informed told everyone else. It was the catchy story of my trip, yet a friend stole my thunder. I know – it's happened to all of us. It was just one of the hard lessons I learned on my flight home to Boston from Puerto Rico on Christmas Eve.

I should have known better than to fly on a seperate flight from the rest of my traveling entourage. Of course, planning the trip months in advance, I just wanted to get home as early as possible and I didn't really care how I got back to Logan International Airport. My main concern was to avoid being stuck on that sunny island for Christmas, alone while everybody else flew home in time.

Kathleen Ralls

I feel like I'm a fairly frequent flyer compared with the general American public. I've flown 22 times in my 21-year-long life, 36 times if you include the connectors. Luckily I've never had a flight canceled, though there have been some long delays. I've flown through thunderstorms, snow storms, over the Rocky Mountains and over two oceans. I've flown to different countries, within different countries, and back again. Moreover – not that I'm complaining – I'm always in coach or second-class.

Not one seatmate sticks out more than any other. No celebrity look-a-likes, no hot guys, nothing. Twice I've unknowingly flown on the same flight as acquaintances, making it a bit more interesting, though I had nothing to talk about with either party. In fact, it always strikes me as funny that the minute you exit the cabin of the plane, you couldn't care less about the person next to you and can't believe their lives actually occupied five hours of your life.

In any case, I had a 3 1/2 hour flight from San Juan to Kennedy Airport in New York with a connecting flight to Boston. Sitting in the window seat of the first row, I was fortunate to have a seat between some guy and me. For the life of me, I cannot remember his name.

While situating myself with my book, I watched as the flight attendants carried an overweight, elderly Puerto Rican woman in a gurney onto the plane to the row behind me. Much like I've seen it done on hospital television dramas, they lifted her into her seat with a "1-2-3" as she moaned and muttered in some form of Spanish. Behind the crew came her daughter and infant granddaughter, who where seated in the rear of the plane to give the old woman as much room as she needed.

After the ruckus and my conversation/magazine-swapping with the guy next door had ceased, I settled into a light nap while the movie was played. Waking up to one of the flight attendants announcing that we were preparing to land in New York, I sat upright as the flight attendants settled into their seats, facing me. Another flight attendant was making the last round up the aisle when he stopped short at the row behind me.

"Jean, um, have you checked on her recently?" he asked.

"No, she asked me for water an hour and a half ago, but that's it."

"She's slumped over and feels cold...."

Immediately, the guy next to me sprung around to take a better look at the old woman. Unbeknownst to anyone but the two of us, he was a doctor in the Armed Forces. As the plane began to descend, my temporary friend put two fingers to her pulse and asked if there were any defibrillators on the flight.

Suddenly, everyone knew something as a woman directly in front of the old woman said that she had grabbed her seat an hour ago but she was watching the movie and had not bothered to turn around. There were defibrillators on the plane but the doctor waved off the request, stating that it was no use.

The old woman had died mid-flight. She didn't need a storm, a loss of oxygen, a bomb or even a plane crash. It was just a case of natural causes in the midst of a very public place. I'm sure that I wasn't the only one wondering what the doctor would write for place of death. Delaware? In the air somewhere over the U.S.? Would it be the last place the plane had been on the ground? I don't think I will ever know.

It was also Christmas Eve, which made the situation even more devastating, especially since some family members were on the flight and they were not yet aware of her condition. Nobody wanted to tell them until we had landed, for fear of chaos. When we finally did land, paramedics rushed onto the plane and swiftly laid a blanket over the woman to somehow dignify her state as the rest of the passengers filed out past her.

I've already said that one good dooby passed my story on to everybody else who might be interested. Some people wanted to know if I was going to submit a claim that I was distraught and damaged after the experience. I'd have to say that I'm a little more distraught that one could even suggest that I use that experience as a reason to receive a free airline ticket, no matter how much money a ticket would save me for spring break.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

Runner up Virginia Tech debates value of academics or athletics

(U-WIRE) BLACKSBURG, Va. — Until this school year most people referred to Virginia Tech's national prominence solely in terms of academic excellence. However, after the Hokies football team went undefeated in the regular season and traveled to the Sugar Bowl to compete in the national championship game it appears athletics has taken center stage in Blacksburg.

This being the case, many individuals in the Tech community have expressed concern this supposed shift of focus is detracting from the university's academic atmosphere and reputation. In response to this recent influx of criticism concerning the balance of academics and athletics at Tech, former university President Paul Torgersen published an editorial in The Roanoke Times expressing the important role athletics can play at Tech.

The Collegiate Times (Virginia Tech)

However, the main focal point of his argument illustrated what is seemingly the overwhelming sentiment amongst all who are affiliated with the university; athletic success can provide a great deal of new and positive opportunities for the university and its students, but, the top priority at Tech will always remain the constant increase of scholastic advancement and achievement.

Just as it was in the past, Dr. Torgersen's statements still accurately portray the temperament of the majority of those in the Tech community.

It is seemingly common knowledge that academics at Tech have been and will continue to adhere to strict criteria and standards of excellence, while the same obviously cannot be said for the athletic aspect of the school. The recent attention brought to this community by the football team's achievements this past year has angered some people, but these individuals must comprehend and accept this is quite a normal occurrence in the realm of collegiate athletics.

Moreover, a great deal of good can result from this type of sudden attention if handled properly. Namely, next year's applicant pool of prospective students will expand exponentially allowing for the increase of already strict admissions criteria, one of many factors used in determining the scholastic ranking of universities throughout the nation.

Thus, it follows simple logic to discern that a smarter and more diversified student body collectively composes a better learning environment, and more importantly, a better university.

The positive opportunities rendered from this sudden success are not constrained to the university as an entity, but also to different facets of the student body.

For the achievements of athletics at a university such as Tech afford a number of opportunities for young individuals to attain college degrees, who in the absence these programs would never have the financial means to attend increasingly expensive universities.

Furthermore, athletics provide a forum in which the entire student body, past and present, can unify for a single cause – school spirit. One can only speculate as to the cohesiveness of the student body at universities without any athletic programs, but one must imagine that these institutions lack the congruity and cronyism as that which is constantly exhibited by Tech students, faculty, alumni, and fans throughout the year.

Surely no one will argue there is an inherent danger coinciding with athletic success at a collegiate level, but if steps are taken to ensure the proper conduct of players and coaches the risks can significantly reduce.

It appears this is the case at Tech, where the number of embarrassing incidents by those involved with the athletic program has been minuscule.

More importantly, those scandals which have come into public focus have been met with strict and swift action from top university administrators. Such actions are indeed necessary in ensure that Tech's fine reputation is not maligned by the actions of a few reckless individuals.

Attention photo technicians: There is a mandatory meeting this Friday at 3 PM to discuss teching schedules. Be there!

wal-mart

continued from page 1

tributors. Chief Hukowicz from the Hadley Police Department was the guest speaker during the ceremonies.

While there is some concern that the Wal-Mart could cause some businesses to go bankrupt, the University of Massachusetts students interviewed last night in the Campus Center said they approved of the new super-store.

Freshman computer science major Shahzad Sadozai is a former employee of a Wal-Mart store. He said the new super-store is good for the overall commerce of an area because it provides competition and keeps wages up.

"I think it's good because we need lower prices and it will heighten competition and it [Wal-Mart] has very good wages for students," Sadozai said.

Freshman undeclared major Andre Machado said he works at a Wal-Mart and that there's no intention by the corporation to drive other businesses bankrupt.

"I know their [Wal-Mart's] intention is not to run other people out of business," Machado said. "They tend to offer the lowest prices and other businesses run themselves out of business if they don't compete."

Machado added that it is difficult sometimes for a small business to compete with a large corporation like Wal-Mart. He said in these cases it's hard to put the blame on a large company they became successful because they offered the lowest possible prices.

Winter primaries leave rest out in cold

By Bryan Maxwell
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — I hope the people of New Hampshire think like I do. Because of the way the primary system is set up, they'll be deciding which presidential candidates I'll be able to vote for.

In a flawless system where "one man, one vote" was a reality, we all would get an equal say in the elections, both the primaries and the main election. But one of the flaws in our system is that primary elections are distributed unequally over the five-month primary season. The problem is, this makes some people's votes - those in states with early primaries, like Iowa and New Hampshire - count a lot more than others. I'm a resident of North Carolina, so I don't get to vote in a primary election until May 2, over three months from now. This wouldn't be a problem if nothing changed from the first primary to the last – after all, someone has to go first. But plenty does change in those few months.

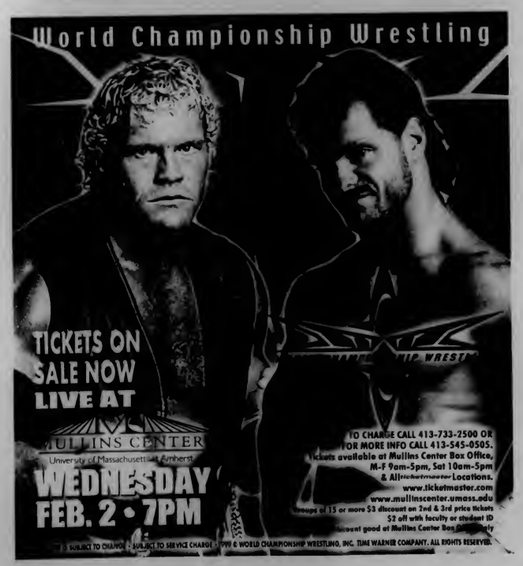
If underdog candidates don't do well in early primaries, they may be forced to end their campaigns. Some have speculated that if Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) doesn't win the New Hampshire primary on Feb. 1, he doesn't have a realistic hope of winning the nomination. If this happens, he might as well quit in February – before most citizens ever have the opportunity to vote for him.

The states that go first can't avoid being tests for the non-frontrunners. But if such states are going to determine a candidate's fate they should somehow represent the whole country. Voters in those states are making a decision that affects the rest of the country's options. And New Hampshire and Iowa are not such states.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, New Hampshire's population is only 1.5 percent minority, and Iowa's only 3.5 percent. On the other hand, the United States is 18 percent non-white. Only 58 percent of people in New Hampshire and 44 percent of Iowans live in metropolitan areas; in the United States it's 80 percent.

These small states, which are largely rural and overwhelmingly white, make choices that the rest of us have to live with. If the voters in New Hampshire and Iowa don't like John McCain, it probably won't matter whether voters in the other 48 states support him or not. He won't be in the race when it comes time for those states to vote.

New Hampshire and Iowa have been the first tests for candidates for years. But their importance hasn't increased as a result of changes in the pattern of primaries overall.



Because each state controls its primary date, there is an incentive for it to schedule the election strategically. Because later primaries are largely inconsequential, each state feels pressure to hold its primary earlier in order to make it count. As a result, there has been a rush-to-the-front-of-the-line trend among states.

Iowa's caucus was Monday, Jan. 24 – the earliest date ever. New Hampshire moved its primary to three weeks to Feb. 1 to avoid being preempted by other states. Many other states have followed, moving primaries earlier and earlier.

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount 18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441 Discount
Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $16.49 30/PK
Sam Adams Octoberfest $4.99 6/pk
Loon Pale Ale New Hampshire "Micro" $10.99 case/bottle
MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE $4.99 6/PK
Vodka 80 EVERYDAY PRICE $8.99 1.75 lt
Seafire Rum, Cab. Chard, Merlot $8.99 1.5 liter
"Saranac" 12 Beer Classic PK $9.99 12/pk
Brewery Hill
Pale, Black and Tan, Centennial Lager, Honey Amber, Raspberry and Pilsner.
$4.49/6pk
Wine Sale! 6 bots-10% 12-bots-15%
• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

The Sexiest Book in the Bible
A book in the Bible that talks about Sex, Dating, and Marriage? That's right. It is called the Song of Solomon and is full of practical wisdom that still applies today in the area of relationships. Here are just some of the topics that will be covered
♥ Keys for developing healthy dating relationships
♥ Ways to recover from hurtful relationships
♥ Secrets for establishing a life-long love
♥ Gateway to the ultimate sexual experience
This Sunday night
January 30th @ 6:00pm
in the Meeting room of the Jones Library
(43 Amity St. just west of the Amherst town common)
Brought to you by MERCYhouse – church of the next generation www.knowmercy.org

We Sell BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS
12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours
MONTAGUE MINI MART
We accept Visa & Mastercard
367-9551
60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Down to You goes nowhere but down...

Down to You
Directed by Kris Isacsson with Freddie Prinze, Jr., Julia Stiles
Playing at Showcase Cinemas

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

They'll sell you the whole seat, but you'll only need the aisle, because you can't watch more than ten minutes of this movie without wanting to walk out. I've seen some bad teen romance/comedies in my time, but nothing could have prepared me for how monumentally awful Down to You is.

Here's a quick plot run-through: Al (the nauseatingly sweet Freddie Prinze, Jr.) meets Imogen (Julia Stiles, who should jump off of the teen movie wagon now, or she'll ruin her career before it begins), they fall in love, they break up, and they get back together. So far so good – that's how all of these movies work. The secret to a successful romantic comedy lies in the chemistry between the main characters. If the audience can buy into their relationship, it's easy to overlook the fact that we've seen essentially the same movie a dozen other times.

The chemistry between Al and Imogen, however, is non-existent, owing to the painfully artificial dialogue. Neither character has any degree of credibility or personality, and at no point in the movie did I care at all what either of them was feeling. Making a bad situation worse is the thoroughly unwelcome technique of letting Al and Imogen talk to the camera. This obnoxious and insincere practice continues throughout the movie, and disrupts whatever momentum it had managed to attain. It is gimmicky, trite, and completely unnecessary.

Another key ingredient in the teenage romantic comedy is the amusing supporting cast, and here, too, Down to You comes up empty. The jokes simply were not funny. Henry Winkler as Al's TV-chef father is the only character able to bring some degree of amusement to the movie, but everything he did felt tacked-on and

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Julia Stiles and Freddie Prinze, Jr. were definitely not All That in Down to You unimportant to the story, merely a lukewarm distraction from the hollowness of the actual movie.

Even more distressing than the flat characters and boring story, though, is the movie's immature treatment of alcohol and drug use. As an example: Al and Imogen get drunk at a picnic, decide to drive home, crash their car into a tree, walk away with only a scratch, and it ends up jump-starting their relationship. The crash itself is treated as a joke. Call me old-fashioned, but something's wrong with that.

Any way you look at it, Down to You has nothing to offer. Avoid it at all costs. F

Sundance upstarts go for Hollywood gold

Bidding on many films has already begun at the annual Sundance Film Festival, as Hollywood studios look to reel in the next Blair Witch Project. Artisan scored perhaps the biggest Sundance coup ever, when it picked up the low-budget horror flick for less than $1 million at last year's event. The Blair Witch Project went on to become a summer smash, and now everyone's looking to cash in.

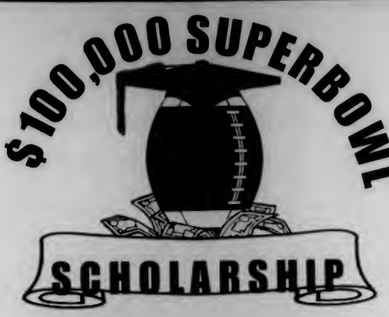
The Sundance Film Festival is a Mecca for independent filmmakers. Once a year these filmmakers, along with the press, major Hollywood stars and studio executives converge on the small skiing village of Park City, Utah for a 10-day bonanza. The filmmakers are worrying about the critics' reaction to their efforts. The press is there, covering the revelry. The Hollywood stars are promoting their next films or their Sundance efforts. And don't forget the studio executives, scouring the affair for the Blair Witch's second coming.

The most prized possession thus far has been the British picture Saving Grace, which was purchased by First Line for $4 million. The film stars Brenda Blethyn (Little Voice) as an English widower who discovers that her husband had a secret life, after inheriting his indebted estate. Apparently the movie, directed by Nigel Cole, takes a surprising turn when she starts growing marijuana in her greenhouse to stay financially afloat. Four million dollars is the highest price tag at Sundance so far this year, but Fine Line has had recent success with its

Turn to SUNDANCE page 10

There will be a mandatory Arts meeting on Tuesday Feb. 1 at 7:30 in the Campus Center basement for all new and returning writers. Anyone interested in writing for Arts this semester should attend this meeting.

Currently, the Arts and Living section is looking for people willing to write on a consistent basis. This includes:



- Someone willing to write weekly/bi-weekly CD reviews.
- Someone willing to write a weekly "alternative" music column.
- Someone willing to write weekly movie reviews.
- At least two people who want to cover campus Fine Arts events on a consistent basis.
- People eager to write regular feature articles on various entertainment happenings.
- People who want to cover local concerts.

Please bring a brief writing sample with you, if you have not written for the Collegian before. If you have any questions call Adam at 545-1361 or 546-2333.

TEST YOUR FOOTBALL KNOWLEDGE

Football Contest
FREE ENTRY!
Grand Prize
$100,000 SCHOLARSHIP
(OR CASH EQUIVALENT)
$20,000 GUARANTEED PAYOUT
For rules and contest entry visit www.pickyourteams.com
Must be 18 years or older. Void where prohibited.

Major U.S. retailers to take Visa, MasterCard to court over debit cards

By Abigail Goldman
Los Angeles Times

Some of the United States' biggest retailers will claim in federal court later this year that they have suffered $8.1 billion in damages as a result of Visa and MasterCard unfairly forcing them to accept their debit cards.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and Sears, Roebuck & Co., along with Safeway Stores Inc., Limited Inc., Circuit City Stores Inc. and others could recover triple damages of $24.3 billion, if they prove that Visa USA Inc. and MasterCard International violated antitrust laws.

In a series of rulings this month, a U.S. District Court in Brooklyn set a November trial date for the 1997 case and ruled against the card companies' request to prevent government lawyers, who have filed a similar lawsuit against Visa and MasterCard, from sharing the retailers' analysis of about 3 million pages of confidential credit-card company documents.

The retailers charge that Visa and MasterCard unfairly control the credit-card market in today's buy-now-pay-later economy, and that no merchant can get along without them.

They are joined in that claim by the Justice Department, which has filed a separate lawsuit against the credit-card companies for anti-competitive practices, alleging that the two giant card issuers account for 75 percent of credit-card purchases and are both controlled by the country's largest banks.

The card companies deny the allegations.

Retailers have taken their argument a step further, saying that Visa and MasterCard use their monopoly power to force retailers accepting Visa or MasterCard to also take other forms of the card, including so-called "check cards" that deduct money directly from the user's bank account.

The big banks' check cards, however, cost merchants more than traditional, regional ATM cards marked only with "Star" or other logos.

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $16.49 30/PK
Sam Adams Octoberfest $4.99 6/pk
Loon Pale Ale New Hampshire "Micro" $10.99 case/bots
MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE $4.99 6/PK
Vodka 80 EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 lt
Sutter Home Cab, Chard, Merlot $8.99 1.5 liter
"Saranac" 12 Beer Classic PK $9.99 12/pk
Brewery Hill
Pale Ale, Black and Tan, Centennial Lager, Honey Amber, Raspberry and Pilsner.
$4.49/6pk
Wine Sale! 6 bots-10% 12-bots-15%
• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

We take OCMP
DOMINO'S PIZZA
BUFFALO Wings
AMHERST/HADLEY
256-8911
Hours: Sun-Weds 11am-1am
Thurs-Sat 11 am-4 am
HELP WANTED :
Pays $60 to $120 Per Shift
1-TOPPING PIZZA PLUS 8 BREADSTICKS
$7.99 MEDIUM $10.99 LARGE $12.99 EX-LARGE
10 BUFFALO WINGS $3.99
1-TOPPING PIZZA & DOUBLE CHEESYBREAD
$8.99 MEDIUM $11.99 LARGE $13.99 EX-LARGE
TWO TOPPING PIZZAS
$12.99 MEDIUM $15.99 LARGE $18.99 EX-LARGE
3 TOPPING PIZZA
$6.99 MEDIUM $8.99 LARGE $10.99 EX-LARGE

This University of Massachusetts
Something Every Friday
Welcome Back to UMass
Comedian "Dean Edwards"

Comedian "Dean Edwards" has appeared on "Def Comedy Jam", "Showtime at the Apollo", and "Celebrity Deathmatch". He has also performed at "Carolines" in NYC and "Catch a Rising Star". Special skills: Stand-up, Impersonations; and Being on Time!
Bluewall Cafe
Friday January 28th at 8pm
The film "Blue Streak" will be shown: Wednesday in the CCA @8pm; and Friday after the show. "Double Jeopardy" will be shown: Thurday and Sunday in the CCA at 8pm. Free Give-A-Ways and Free Raffle.
Visit us on the web
http: www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm
This program is made possible by a grant from the Auxiliary Services Department and the Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs

Paid Officials Needed for Basketball & Wrestling
Basketball #1 (rules)- Jan. 26 @ 6p.m. (Boyden 251)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 27 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
Basketball #2 (mechanics)- Jan. 28 @ 7p.m. (Totman Gym)
(You must attend both clinics)
Wrestling Feb. 7 @ 6p.m. (Boyden223)
Dont miss the ACTION
Still Time to Enter: Basketball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS-CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0060

Teacher's Aides
Join our instructional teams in Amherst Small, innovative alternative schools (primary, middle and high school grades) tutor and supervise small groups (2-3) of students in a variety of academic subjects and activities. Training provided, full employment benefits. High school or equivalency required, college recommended. 185-day (school year) contract.
Salary range $10,500-$14,200
Send resume and letter to:
Dr. Elana Aitken
c/o ALPs, Hampshire Educational Collaborative
97 Hawley St.
Northampton, MA
549-9288
AA/EOE/ADA

Sopranos dominate Golden Globes

Like you may have expected, I have spent the past month watching television. Becoming re-acquainted with cable TV, after surviving the sub-par channel line-up that the resident halls offer, is like eating a nice home cooked dinner after three months of Dining Commons food. Yes, cable TV was very good to me over winter break. Besides having an opportunity to watch a lot of "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" NFL football, and the excellent new series, "Malcolm in the Middle," I had the great fortune to finally see the show that everyone has been raving about- "The Sopranos." HBO decided to pre-empt their entire programming for a week, and run all 13 episodes from the first season of the mob drama. As pathetic as it sounds, this was the highlight of my vacation.

This past weekend, "The Sopranos" became the well deserving king of the Golden Globe Awards. Among the many interesting aspects of the Golden Globes is that it tries to honor television's highlights from the previous season, while at the same time presenting awards to the best films of the year as well. The Golden Globes have often been criticized for not being too important; popular logic suggests that the film winners are all looking forward to the Academy Awards. And since the Emmy awards have already been presented for last season, the television portion of the show seems worthless. However, the truth is that the awards show is a blockbuster ratings scorer, and the stars truly come out, taking their chances to win very seriously. Therefore, I will take the Golden Globes seriously. Here's a breakdown of who were the winners and losers in the world of the tube.

The winner for absolutely everything was HBO, which took home both of the Golden Globes for best television series. The outstanding show "Sex in the City" staring Sarah Jessica Parker won two awards on the night. The first was the award for Best TV Series (Comedy), and the other consisted of a Best Actress in a TV Series (Comedy) for Parker. At last year's Emmy awards, Parker also won the award for Best Actress, but the series was beaten out by "Ally McBeal" for the Emmy award for Best Comedy Series. After three seasons on the air, "Sex in the City" has been critically acclaimed, but constantly overshadowed. With HBO creating great comedy series such as "Dream On" and "The Larry Sanders Show," and with the recent phenomenal hype over "The Sopranos," "Sex in the City" seemed to be something that was simply put on the back burner. This was the first time that the show has ever won a Best Comedy Series award for anything, and since it has put in enough time and effort, "Sex in the City" certainly deserves the award.

I'll give you two guesses what HBO's other winner was, and the second guess doesn't count. If you haven't seen "The Sopranos," you're missing out. In my opinion, this series is television's answer to Titanic. Michael Jordan and the Pope. There is simply nothing better on TV than "The Sopranos", and I don't think there has ever been anything as good. You can keep American Beauty, Being John Malcovich, and Toy Story 2. "The Sopranos" was not only the best show on television last year, but it was far superior to any film that was released as well. At this year's Golden Globe awards, "The Sopranos" was nominated for four awards, and without any trouble, it won all four. Three of the awards that it took home were for acting, and the other was for Best Television Series (Dramat.

At last year's Emmy Awards, the critics were not as generous, since the award only took one award home, which was Best Actress in a Drama Series for Edie Falco. However, the 2000 Golden Globe Awards proved to be a romp for "The Sopranos."

James Gandolfini, who plays crime boss, husband and father of two Tony Soprano, was honored by the Golden Globes as Best Actor in a Television Series (Drama). Gandolfini's character is simply the glue that holds everything about "The Sopranos" together. As an audience, we are forced to feel every single struggle that Tony has to encounter, and at times, even have to make decisions ourselves about his choices. Personally, I have decided that I don't like Tony Soprano. However, I'm not saying that I don't love the way that the character was designed, or don't think that the way he appears isn't terrific, but the fact that David Chase (writer and producer) was able to implant such hatred in a main character is something that is truly unique. James Gandolfini did not win this award at the Emmys, and he truly deserves it. He's much better than Dylan McDermott, who won the award last September.

James Gandollini accepts the award for best actor in a television drama series for his role in "The Sopranos".

Turn to GLOBES, page 12

UMASS
STUDENT PICK-UP SCHEDULE
9:00 AM – 4:30 PM – CURRY HICKS CAGE
9:00 AM – 2:00 PM – CAMPUS CENTER

PICK-UP DATE	SPORT	DATE OF GAME/OPPONENT
Monday, January 24,2000	Hockey	Jan. 26, 2000 vs. Providence
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 1, 2000 vs. Temple
	Hockey	Feb. 4, 2000 vs. Boston University
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 5, 2000 vs. Texas
Monday, January 31,2000	Hockey	Feb. 6, 2000 vs. UMass-Lowell
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 9, 2000 vs. La Salle
Monday, February 7,2000	Men's Basketball	Feb. 19, 2000 vs. St. Joseph's
Monday, February 14,2000	Hockey	Feb. 25, 2000 vs. Boston College
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 29, 2000 vs. George Washington
Monday, February 21,2000	Hockey	March 4, 2000 vs. New Hampshire

PICK-UP & GAME DATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. VALID UMASS STUDENT ID CARD NEEDED TO PICK-UP TICKETS. AUXILIARY FEE SHOULD HAVE ALREADY BEEN PAID.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-
COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 No. Amherst
256-0080

SUPERBOWL SUNDAY LITURGY
Come to Mass at 4 p.m. this Sunday, January 30, 2000 and be home in time for the game!!
Newman Center
472 N. Pleasant St.

■ sundance

continued from page 7

other indie pickups (Oscar nominee The Full Monty and Waking Ned Devine).

Lion's Gate (the folks who distributed Kevin Smith's Dogma) also did some shopping, picking up Two Family House. Directed by Raymond DeFelitta, this drama centers on a factory worker who buys a two-family house and converts it into a bar, so he can realize his dreams of becoming a singer. Lion's Gate picked up the film for an unpublished amount, after two well-received screenings.

Fine Line, Artisan, and Sundance veterans Miramax are battling for the rights to Girlfight. The drama about a female boxer currently has an asking price in the $1- $3 million range. Also praised and unclaimed is Love and Sex. The film pairs Famke Janssen with Jon Favreau in a story about a writer that becomes obsessed with her failed relationships much to the chagrin of her editor.

Following in the Blair Witch's vein of spooky midnight screening is this year's The Convent. In a plot straight from Urban Legend, a bunch of dumb college students decide to break into an abandoned Catholic school (to paint their Greek letters on the wall of course), where a mass murder occurred 40 years prior. However, the movie was not well received, even by its young screening audience.

This year's Sundance slate also includes the highly anticipated American Psycho, Sofia Coppola's Virgin Suicides, and another adaptation of Hamlet. The latter stars Ethan Hawke as the intellectually paralyzed Prince of Denmark, Julia Stiles (Ten Things I Hate About You) as Ophelia, and Bill Murray. Psycho, which stars Christian Bale as the Jeckyl and Hyde axmurderer, has recently been slapped with an NC-17 rating by the MPAA (no word on whether they will recut the film before theatrical release). Suicides, which wowed crows at Cannes Film Festival, is an adaptation of Jeffrey Eugenides' dark coming of age tale and Coppola's debut.

Other films to look for coming out of Sundance are:

Things You Can Tell Just By Looking at Her: A star studded female cast including Glen Close, Cameron Diaz, Calista Flockheart, Amy Brenneman and Holly Hunter discover (what else?) love and loss in Los Angeles. Happy Accidents stars Vincent D'Onofrio and Marisa Tomei. Joe Gould's Secret features Stanley Tucci as New Yorker writer Joseph Mitchell. The Big Kahuna, a Toronto Festival favorite, boasts Kevin Spacey, Danny DeVito and Peter Facinelli playing lubricant salesmen. And finally there is Rated X, which teams brothers Emilio Estevez and Charlie Sheen as the Mitchell brothers- San Francisco's ill-fated porn kings. (Let it never be said that Sundance isn't interesting)

So next summer, when everyone is talking about the smash independent film that you've never heard of, just look back to this winter film festival which took place somewhere in the middle of Utah.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian columnist.

Check the rhyme: 1999's hip-hop heavyweights

Dave Katzoff

Admittedly, 1999 was not a red-letter year for hip-hop. At times it downright reeked with over saturation and underground redundancy. However, avoiding the bah-hum-bugginess still lingering from the holidas season, here are my ten CD picks and recollections of the past year:

10) Full Clip – Gangstarr

Usually, a greatest hits compilation should not factor into "albums of the year," yet Guru and Primo's double-disk, decade commemoration is an unconventional effort. With some new tracks ("Discipline," "Full Clip," and "All For the Cash") and several unreleased/remixes ("So Wassup?" "Militia," and "You Know My Steez"), there is an entire EP within itself

9) Musical Massacre – Beatnuts

Psycho Les and JuJu cook up a gumbo of hearty beats and then spike their stew with sadistic, verbal slapstick. The results are humorously morbid and soundly satisfying.

8) Beneath the Surface – GZA

The wonderful cover-art of this album only pre-empts the delectability of the disk inside. Although it is a far cry from the magical Liquid Swords, the Genius compiles a lovely assortment of reverent rhymes, and stringy, bass-portli beats. I've got your "Publicity" right here!

7) Art of Storytelling – Slick Rick

The Ruler has officially returned. As one of rap's most revered wordsmiths, MC Ricky D captures that natural dance floor vibe with his singsong flow, hard-edged melodies, and solid guest performances.

6) Black On Both Sides – Mos Def

Perhaps not the groundbreaking achievement I was expecting, but undoubtedly among 1999s freshest rendrings.

5) Internal Affairs – Pharaoh Monch

Give Pharaoh his props. He has flirted with mainstream accessibility while maintaining his sub-level, street credibility. This album (especially the second half) stays constant in the stereos rotation.

4) Prince Among Thieves – Prince Paul

Conceptually, this is the most original hip-hop output in years. Eloquently executed, Paul's hip-hopera is filled with all-star lyricism, madly melodic rhythms, and a well-conceived street saga taboot.

3) The Roots Come Alive – The Roots

Although this can also be considered a compilation album, there is so much innovative energy that it is difficult to overlook. The live versions of familiar songs are revamped with such a distinct nuance. Come Alive is easily one of the year's most exciting listening experiences.

2) Things Fall Apart – The Roots

Yet another infallible effort from Philly's illustrious Fifth Dynasty – The Roots continue to prove they are hip-hop's most consistent crew…hands down.

1) Chronic 2001 – Dr. Dre

This album gets more potent and deliciously polyphonic with each spin. Hopefully, Dre will stay hungry (and angry) enough to hit us with at least one more solo before he retires. In the mean time, we salivate in anticipation anything Dre touches (especially Xzibit's third solo due out this spring!)

With that out of the way, it is time to move into the horizon of the new and approach the third millennium with a fresh slant and clean slate. Stay tuned as we begin the process…

Dave Katzoff is a Collegian columnist.

Save $ On TEXTBOOKS
We Have These U. MASS. Courses At Discounted Prices

ACCTG-221-1	ECON-102-2	JAPAN-246-1	PSYCH-100-W-1,2
ACCTG-222-1	ECON-103-1A	JOUR-300-1	PSYCH-100-1
ACCTG-311-1	ECON-104-1A	LATIN-120-1	PSYCH-100-2
ACCTG-312-1,2	ECON-104-2D,3C	LATIN-230-1	PSYCH-100-3
ACCTG-321-1	ECON-105-1	LATIN-240-1	PSYCH-213-1
ACCTG-331-1,2	ECON-203-1	LING-201-2,3,5	PSYCH-240-1A
ANTHRO-100-1A	ECON-203-2,3	MATH-100-1	PSYCH-240-3C,5
ANTHRO-150-1	ECON-203-4	MATH-101-1	PSYCH-241-1
ART-110-1	ECON-204-1	MATH-113-1	PSYCH-307-1
ART-111-1	ECON-204-3,4	MATH-121-1	PSYCH-330-1,2
ART-191-A	ECON-311-1	MATH-127-1	PSYCH-360-1
ASTRO-100-1,3,4,5,6	ED-325-1,2	MATH-128-1	PSYCH-380-1A
ASTRO-100-2	ENG WP-111-1	MATH-131-1	RES EC-102-1
ASTRO-105-1	ENG WP-112-1	MATH-132-1	RES EC-211-1
BIO-101-1,2	ENG WP-113-1	MATH-136-1	RES EC-212-1
BIO-102-1	ENT-104-1	MATH-235-1,2	RES EC-262-1
BIO-104-1A	EXCSCI-210-1	MATH-235-5	SOC-105-1
BIO-250-1	FOMGT-250-1	MGT-260-1	SOC-106-2B
BIO283-1	FOMGT-300-1	MGT-260-2	SOC-109-1
CEE-121-1	FOMGT-301-1	MGT-260-4,5	SOC-210-1
CEE-240-1	FOMGT-310-1,2,3	MKTG-301-1	SOC-211-1
CEE-241-1,2	FOMGT-320-1	MKTG437-1	SOC-212-1
CHEM-262-1	FOMGT-421-1,2	MUSIC-101-1,2	SOC-241-1
CHEM-266-1	FRENCH-120-1	MUSIC-160-1	SOC-242-1
CHEM-312-1	FRENCH-230-1	MUSIC-195-F	SOC-320-1
CHIN-110-1	GEO-100-1	NURS-100-1	SOM-210-1,2
CMPSCI-102-1	GEO-101-1	NURS-301-1	SOM-310-1
CMPSCI-105-1	GER-110-1	NUTR-130-1	SOM-497-5
CMPSCI-187-1	GER-230-1,2	PHYS-100-1,2	SOM-541-1
COMDIS-211-1	HIS-101-1	PHYS-151-1	SPAN-110-1
COMDIS-312-1	HIS-111-1	PHYS-152-1	SPAN-111-1
COMM-150-1	HIS-140-1	POL SC-101-1A	SPAN-120-1
COMM-180-1	HIS-141-1	POL SC-111-1	SPAN-126-1
COMM-218-1	HIS-151-1	POL SC-111-2	SPAN-230-1
COMM-250-1	HIS-170-1	POL SC-255-1	SPAN-322-1,2
COMM-260-5,6	HLTH DF-270-1	PORT-110-1	SPORT-200-1
COMM-342-1	ITAL-120-1	PORT-120-1	STAT-111-1
ECE-122-3,4	JAPAN-110-1	PORT-230-1	STAT-140-1
ECE-122-5,6			STAT-501-1

Jeffery Amherst College Store
(Behind Jeffery Amherst Bookstore)
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA
(413) 253-3870 253-7816

Good News!

A New Year's gift from Dining Services.

Starting this semester, students on the Residential Meal Plan can eat a limited number of meals at the Retail Food Service Outlets in the Campus Center and snack bars in addition to the Dining Halls.

Deluxe Meal Plan offers a 7 meal exchange per semester.
Value Meal Plan offers a 5 meal exchange per semester.
Basic Meal Plan offers a 3 meal exchange per semester.

Bluewall Starbucks Coffee Cart
Coffee Shop Whitmore Snack Bar
Hatch Food Court Hampden Snack Bar

How it works:
Student can use a meal exchange (cash value $5.50) at above locations.
Sorry, no reduction for meals of lesser cash value, and student is responsible for any additional charges over $5.50.

Enjoy the best food value on campus! www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices/ (413)545-2472

UMASS Food Services

Good News!

A New Year's gift from Dining Services.

Starting this semester, students on the Residential Meal Plan can eat a limited number of meals at the Retail Food Service Outlets in the Campus Center and snack bars in addition to the Dining Halls.

Deluxe Meal Plan offers a 7 meal exchange per semester.
Value Meal Plan offers a 5 meal exchange per semester.
Basic Meal Plan offers a 3 meal exchange per semester.

Bluewall Starbucks Coffee Cart
Coffee Shop Whitmore Snack Bar
Hatch Food Court Hampden Snack Bar

How it works:
Student can use a meal exchange (cash value $5.50) at above locations.
Sorry, no reduction for meals of lesser cash value, and student is responsible for any additional charges over $5.50.

Enjoy the best food value on campus!

UMASS Food Services

■ globes

continued from page 9

As I said before, this is the second award won by Edie Falco. Falco, who plays Tony's wife Carmela, is wonderful as the perfect counter personality to her husband's irrationality. She is smart and sexy, and is the true leader of the Soprano family.

The third acting award, which was a supporting actress award also won by "The Sopranos," was by Nancy Marchand. Marchand plays Livia Soprano, Tony's mother, who put a hit on her son at the end of last season. This excellent character put a wonderful twist on immediate family life in a mob drama, and she certainly deserved the award.

All together, "The Sopranos" deserved everything that it won, particularly its award for Best Television Series (Drama). When the Emmys picked "The Practice" for this award last fall, they were simply mistaken. The most emotional moment of the night was also the same time that the only major television award was not won by HBO. Michael J. Fox added one more Best Actor in a Television Series (Comedy) to his extensive collection for his leading role in ABC's "Spin City." Fox, who has announced that he will be leaving the show at the end of the season because of his worsening battle with Parkinson's disease, was extremely grateful for the award, and couldn't thank loyal fans enough for their support. He will be sadly missed on "Spin City," and it will be interesting to see how the show will survive without him.

The Golden Globe is much more cherished for its film awards than its awards for television. However, there were some high points. Unfortunately, I was not able to watch the Golden Globe awards this year because the cable went out in the residence halls. I guess the only positive side to not having TV for one night is that it's one night without "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?"

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Edie Falco is relieved after accepting the award for best actress in a television drama series for her role in "The Sopranos".

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Jon Favreau and Famke Janssen star in the Sundance hit Sex and Love.

NAACP brass Mfuming over lack of TV diversity

By Brian Lowry
Los Angeles Times

NEW ORLEANS – NAACP President Kweisi Mfume said he would consider pressing for government regulation to increase diversity at the major television networks and plans to broaden the scope of his efforts to include additional segments of the television industry, such as talent agencies.

Speaking at the National Association of Television Program Executives convention here Wednesday, Mfume said the group's lobbying for greater racial diversity in TV could seek "some kind of content-neutral rule" similar to the Children's Television Act, which mandates that broadcasters provide three hours per week of educational children's programming.

Such an approach could be tied, he said, to public-service requirements related to the advent of digital television, which will potentially allow broadcasters to split their signals into multiple channels – some of which could set aside time, theoretically, as a showcase for minority talent. Mfume conceded after his presentation that such legislation was a longshot given the prevailing deregulatory mood in Congress, but he said it is "something that continues to loom as an option if there are further impasses."

As for expanding the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People campaign to target talent agencies, he said, "If there's a problem with the networks, there's also a problem with agencies. ... It's not enough to point the finger at the networks. This is a multifaceted industry."

The NAACP has already scored a significant coup by getting NBC and ABC into signing initiatives designed to promote diversity in front of and behind the camera. A similar agreement with Fox will likely be formalized next week, with CBS to follow.

Mfume acknowledged he chose this particular battle in part because it was a headline-grabbing issue, clearly winnable in the court of public opinion and good publicity for the organization. He then added, "It's (also) the right thing to do." Given similar complaints in the past that quickly fizzled – among them a boycott threat by the Rev. Jesse Jackson – Mfume said it was easy for the networks to assume that "given the history of this, they're going to go away." Still, he stressed the concessions made are only a first step – as he put it, "a beginning, not an end."

The same theme was seized upon in a subsequent panel titled "Diversity in Prime Time." Jacqueline Kong, executive creative director of Asian-American Media Development, insisted any victories won thus far could wind up being hollow without a vice president of diversity at each network, reporting to the chief executive, to ensure the goals are implemented. "Otherwise, this could be just lip service," she said.

Come to the Arts meeting Tuesday night at 7:30 in the Campus Center basement!!!!!

Guy finally returns after inner turmoil

By Richard Harrington
The Washington Post

Talk about a long gap between albums! "Guy III" arrives a full decade after the group's sophomore effort, The Future, and a dozen years after Guy's seminal debut. Seminal because founder/producer/multi-instrumentalist Teddy Riley used the group's first album, Guy, to introduce new jack swing, a melding of traditional R&B vocals with hip-hop beats that became a dominant sound well into the '90s.

So why the long wait in a business where it's best to follow up while your reputation's still warm? The bio accompanying Guy III blames acrimonious contractual battles with former manager Gene Griffin that led to the group's 1990 breakup. And it's not as if Riley went into hibernation: In 1994, he formed another successful group, Blackstreet, and wrote for and produced such acts as Michael Jackson, Mary J. Blige, SWV, Whitney Houston and the Rolling Stones. Singers Aaron and Damion Hall also released solo albums.

But there's apparently some unfinished business at the root of Guy III, something as simple as demanding respect. On the opening track, "We're Comin'," Riley takes the lead, singing, "We're back on top/ Better run for cover/ 'Cause we can't be stopped." As comeback anthems go, it's pretty generic, and that's the problem with "Guy III" as a whole. Though production credits are spread among 15 people, the album sounds uniformly good. But it also sounds dated, particularly after a half-decade of Blackstreet, R. Kelly and K-Ci & Jo-Jo. Except for one new song that interpolates Internet imagery, the material shows no particular advance over its predecessors.

"Teddy's Jam III" pays homage to Zapp's fuzzy funk and the memory of Roger and Larry Troutman, the group's founders who died last year in a tragic murder-suicide. The track incorporates Zapp's early '80s hits, "Dance Floor" and "I Can Make You Dance," and its rippling disco funk groove is as liberating now as it was then, as is the Princelike future funk of "2004." There are a couple of rap-centered tracks, the best being "Do It," which has faint echoes of A Tribe Called Quest and Digital Underground.

But most of "Guy III" consists of sensual slow jams sung by the Hall brothers. Among the better ones: the sweet come-on of "Dancin'," the fervent "Rescue Me," romantically obsessive "Not a Day" and "Don't U Miss Me," built on Richard Williams' acoustic guitar flourishes.

Write for Arts!

summer sessions hawai'i
www.outreach.hawaii.edu • toll-free 1 (800) 862-6628
University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. Summer Sessions

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
TICKETS FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
You Say You Want a Revolution
1776
The vital Tony Award-winning musical makes the case that the founding of our country was hilarious, heartwarming and full of music and dance. American history has never been so memorable!
THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 7:30PM
CONCERT HALL
So Hot She's Cool
Regina Carter Quintet
Jazz Violin
$5 $7 $9
Catch this rising star when she comes to the Valley with her rare ability to fuse jazz, funk, African, Brazilian and soul music. Hear why she's galvanized the jazz world, including Downbeat Magazine which named her the #1 Jazz Violinist in its 46th annual poll!
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 7:30PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM
The 2nd Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency sponsored by Barnes & Noble, The Women's Times, and WFCR's Jazz à la Mode 88.5 FM
Enchanting Melodies and Brilliant Pageantry
The Beijing Kunju Opera Theatre
China's oldest opera tradition comes alive in a spectacular display of melody, mime, glorious costumes, and amazing acrobatics. Fascinating fun for the whole family.
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 7:30 PM
CONCERT HALL
In collaboration with the Asian Dance & Music Program. Sponsored by The Valley Advocate
The Sound and Soul of Senegal
THE DRUMMERS OF WEST AFRICA
One of the world's most renowned percussion orchestras in the world, this is the group from which Kodo takes its inspiration. Led by the living legend Doudou N'Diaye Rose, this 35-member ensemble from Dakar, Senegal, delivers a pulsating, unforgettable experience.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 7:30 PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by The River 95.5
Puppet Masters
Salzburg Marionette Theatre presents
The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni
Enchanting, magical, masterful Mozart as you've never seen it before! The Salzburg Marionettes are among the oldest and most famous puppet troupes in the world with skill and artistry that sets standards and charms audiences of all ages.
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, THE MAGIC FLUTE, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Join us for a Talkback with the artists after this performance
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, DON GIOVANNI, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Sponsored by Florence Savings Bank and WRNX 100.9 FM
We bring the arts home
PLEASE NOTE NEW TIME: WEEKNIGHT PERFORMANCES BEGIN AT 7:30PM.
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

SPRING BREAK
Cancun
Get $100 discount per room
Discounted 2nd Semester Prices!
Free Parties, Beverages, Prizes!
CALL NOW!
Limited Space Remaining!
800/328-1509
www.classtravelintl.com

Met-Rx....EAS....ProLab...Twinlab...Muscletech...Solgar...
Get in Shape with...
Supplement Discounter
Spring Break
www.inshapeonline.com

Can you talk the tech?
At RCN, we've become a telecommunications powerhouse through the exceptional customer service we provide. And there's no end in sight to our growth. In fact, we're opening a new 24 hour state-of-the-art call center in Springfield, MA and are currently seeking additional agents to provide superior technical support to our Internet subscribers.
TECHNICAL SUPPORT AGENTS ALL SHIFTS
Using your highly polished customer service and problem solving skills, you will work via the telephone to interpret, understand and resolve customer issues. Your background must include a technical knowledge of PC and Mac configurations to the Internet a working knowledge of DOS, Windows 3.1, Windows 95/98 and Mac Operating Systems as well as a demonstrated familiarity with Internet software. Previous support experience is a plus.
These exciting positions offer a competitive pay rate, excellent benefits, paid training and growth opportunities...all in a business casual environment. Please forward your resume to: Human Resources, JavaNet, 1 Federal St., Springfield, MA 01105, Fax (413) 846-6505, E-mail dpunch@javanet.com EOE
RCN The live way of communications
www.rcn.com

Minutemen take three key points in HE play

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

In the perils of Hockey East, every point can make a difference in the play off race. With five teams battling for four spots, protecting home ice is essential. The Massachusetts hockey team did just that this past weekend, in two pivotal matchups against Merrimack College.

On the heels of a three game losing streak, the Minutemen saw themselves jockeying for playoff position and in some cases their playoff lives; to the occasion they rose beating the Warriors Friday night at the Mullins Center, 5-3, and skating to a scoreless tie at the Volpe Complex.

In the 5-3 win on Friday night, the Maroon and White attack was led by the Turner brothers. Jeff Turner netted a pair of goals, including the game winner, and Tim Turner added a goal and two assists en route to the victory.

"As the season's going on we're learning each other a little more," J. Turner said. "We've always complemented pretty good in everything we've done."

In the seesaw battle, UMass fought valiantly back from 1-0 and 2-1 deficits. The Minutemen notched two goals, thirteen seconds apart late in the first period, to escape into the locker room with a 3-2 advantage.

"I haven't seen that in a while. Darcy King has been a real good offensive player for us and really makes a nice goal," coach Joe Mallen said. "Right after that Tim Turner scored... and now your getting some leadership from your younger guys."

Merrimack stormed back, netting the tying goal at 15:16 of the second period, but Markus Helanen would let no more pucks behind him on this night. J. Turner notched the eventual game-winner just 1:20 seconds later. on T. Turner's second assist of the night. Captain Nathan Sell added an insurance goal midway through the third period to ensure the Maroon and White its eighth victory overall and third in HE play.

In the win, Helanen made 26 saves to improve his record to 8-9-1.

One night after UMass netted five, the squad traveled east to face the Warriors again, and what a difference a night makes. With a win the Minutemen could volt past Merrimack into sixth place in HE, but at games end they would find themselves scratching their heads as to how they failed to dent the twine a night after posting five goals.

Coach Mallen gave Helanen the night off, and in stepped Mike Johnson. Like yeast, he rose to the occasion, making 35 saves in his first start since a win against Harvard in the Mariucci Classic on Dec. 30.

UMass' best scoring chance came on a shorthanded breakaway, in which J. Turner fired a shot that hit the side of the net to keep the game scoreless.

The always strong Maroon and White penalty killing unit stopped six Merrimack chances, to leave North Andover with their eight point in Hockey East.

Cris Classen made 28 stops a goal for the Warriors.

The lock moved UMass into a tie with Providence College for seventh place in HE, a team that the Minutemen swept in a series in early January for their first HE wins of the season.

Attention!!!

To all staff members and aspiring sports journalists...

There is a meeting tonight at 5PM in the Collegian office to discuss winter positions. So please please please attend!!!

If you have any questions contact Brett or Adam at 545-1749

$$ SAVE MONEY $$
ON MAGAZINE JOURNAL SUBSCRIPTIONS!
Access to over 250,000 publications for new, renewal or gift subscriptions at money saving rates!
• Student/Educator and business discounts.
• Great fundraising idea for your group or organization!
Call or fax toll-free for info and price quotes!
Why pay more? Call us today!
J & J MAGAZINE SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE
(877) 326-4098

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0000

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in a Gym and More!"
• Certified Personal Trainers
• Fitness Testing & Programming
• Nutritional Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Full Aerobics Programs including: -Cardio Kickboxing -Sports Step -and many more
Best! 1999 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
We've expanded our dumbbell area!
Semester Special $150
Other student rates available
Located in the Campus Plaza next to Liquors 44.
For more information call 253-7571
Cardiovascular Equipment
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbent Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
State-of-the-Art Strength Training Equipment
• Bodymasters & Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Hurry down...
January Sidewalk Sale
(indoors, of course)
Wednesday Jan. 26 - Saturday Jan. 29
ZAVVA
downtown Amherst

Rams hope for Titan-ic triumph in sleeper showcase

The long NFL season is almost at its climax as Super Bowl XXXIV, from the Georgia Dome in Atlanta, is just three days away.

The game will involve the Tennessee Titans and the St. Louis Rams. It will be a tough battle involving...

Wait a minute – did I say the Tennessee Titans and the St. Louis Rams are going to play in the Super Bowl?

This must be some sort of mistake. This Super Bowl matchup is about as likely as Tony Pena hitting over .200 for a full baseball season.

However, some people have little faith out there. I knew all along that the Titans, a team with four straight .500 or worse seasons, would finally get as a team. I also foresaw that Eddie George would become a legitimate double threat, at running back and catching passes out of the backfield.

Another hunch was that the Tennessee defense would freak out offenses all year long. I always thought that the Titans would win three playoffs games against teams with a combined 38 wins during the regular season, with two of those wins coming on the road.

David Rose

After watching that kickoff return that they pulled against the Bills work to perfection, I knew right then that I was a genius. And if you think Bills fans are still not mad about that game, ask a waiter up in Buffalo who must have said 35,000 times that the Bills got "Buffaloed" out of the playoffs. (Note: This whack job is still mad about the Sabres/Stars Stanley Cup Finals. When hearing of this, my friend, who we will call John B., no, that's too obvious, lets call him J. Bachmann, said "Brett Hull rules" and that almost got us killed.)

The thing that I am most proud of was my prediction that the St. Louis Rams would turn from 4-12 and fans wanting Dick Vermeil's head, to 13-3 and the third highest scoring offense in history. From the time I saw Kurt Warner play for the Iowa Barnstormers of the Arena Football League, I knew that he would be an NFL MVP one day. That prediction came true with 41 touchdown passes. See, all my predictions came true.

Then again, everyone is starting to sound like me. Everyone saw this Super Bowl matchup coming.

What you talkin' bout, Willis? I was fooled. Everybody else was fooled. Nobody knew this was coming.

The next thing that they are going to tell me is that actors and actresses on soap operas can act better than Mr. Hanky The Christmas Poo. That will be the day.

ABC executives were spared from jumping out of 30th story windows Sunday Night when St. Louis got six runs in the bottom of the eighth to defeat Tampa Bay in the NFC Championship Game 11-6. Ricky Proehl was the savior in the Gateway City with the game-winning score. The AFC Championship Game was a different story, as the Titans danced with their favorite partner of the last two years, the Jacksonville Jaguars, and continued their domination in a 33-14 final.

As for the two losers on Sunday, the Jaguars wish that they will never have to see the Tennessee franchise again. In the last two seasons, Tennessee is 4-1 against their AFC Central counterparts, including 3-0 against Jacksonville. Maybe the Jags could blame this past loss on the two weeks off they had beforehand (one bye and then another bye against Miami in the game to be forever known as "the greatest television comedy ever.")

For the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' defense, it is a sad song. It deserved better.

On the road, Warren Sapp and the rest of the defense held the NFL's best offense to nine points, with the other two coming on a safety. After all of this, the Bucs still lost the game.

They must feel like they want to take a crowbar to the heads of the offense. They also might have felt like people watching an Al Gore press conference: tired, bored, and ultimately put to sleep. However, I feel the Buccaneers will be back. Give Shaun King a couple of years, and they will have that quarterback that they need to combine with that defense. But that is the future. This is now.

This game is a rematch of Tennessee's 24-21 win on Halloween day in Nashville. In that game, the Titans jumped out to a 21-0 lead and held on as the Rams' Jeff Wilkins last-second field goal from 38 yards out sailed wide right. In this Super Bowl, the Rams defense will see something it did not see last week, an actual offense on the field.

Warner proved on Sunday that great players don't always have to play great, just great when they need to be. If he has the same performance against Tennessee in the Georgia Dome, the Rams will have a long night in Atlanta.

The game will be played on artificial turf, which is a faster playing surface than natural grass. This gives an advantage to the Rams' receiving corp of Torry Holt, Isaac Bruce, and Az Zahir-Hakim. Rams' Pro Bowl running back Marshall Faulk has had a tough postseason up to this point. In the first meeting with the Titans, Faulk had 16 carries for 90 yards and six receptions for 94 yards including a 57-yard touchdown reception. The Rams will need that type of performance from Faulk on Sunday.

The Rams' defense stepped out of the offense's long shadow with a dominating performance against Tampa. This defense was built in the mode of the Dallas Cowboys' defense of the early 1990's. They are ball hawks and very fast. Linebackers London Fletcher and Mike Jones will be key in stopping the run. Jones also had two interception returns for touchdowns on the season.

Defensive end Grant Wistrom and the rest of the Rams' defensive line will have to control the line of scrimmage, something that did not happen in the first quarter of the first meeting between the two teams. Stop the run and the Rams will force the Titans to beat them with the pass, something that Dick Vermeil would love to see.

For the Titans on offense, wide receiver Yancey Thigpen (broken foot) is doubtful for the game. Look for rookie Isaac Byrd to replace him in the starting lineup. Thigpen's injury means even more pressure on Eddie George. George, the Heisman Trophy winner in 1995 at Ohio State, has 80 carries for 354 yards in three playoff games. The Titans would like to see that number increase by at least 30 carries and 150 yards on Sunday.

If Steve McNair can continue to play mistake-free and run the ball as effectively as he did versus Jacksonville, then the Titans can control the clock on the offensive side of the ball.

Tennessee's defense suffered a major blow as safety Marcus Robertson (broken fibula) will not play in the Super Bowl. Robertson's absence will be especially key if the Rams can get some big plays early. His replacement will be fourth year pro Anthony Dorsett out of the University of Pittsburgh. That last name should ring a bell, as his father Tony has played in a lot of big games in his career, including a pair of Super Bowls. This might come in handy, as Dorsett might not fall victim to the pressure of the media surrounding the Greatest Show on Earth.

The key for the Tennessee defense will be all about getting to Warner early. The first time these two teams met, the Titans sacked the St. Louis signal caller six times and forced two first quarter turnovers inside the Rams' 30-yard line. The result was two touchdowns for the Titans. Tampa's defense was able to do the same thing last week by intercepting the first pass Warner threw.

Defensive Rookie of the Year Jevon Kearse will have to have a big day for the Titans, and the secondary will have to make up for the loss of Robertson and not allow the big play. In essence, the Titan defense will have to steal the Bucs' strategy and make the Rams drive down the field instead of getting 30-40 yards a pop.

In a game that has a lot of star players on both ends of the field, look for the special teams to play a major factor in this one (I think the last time I said that was before Super Bowl XXXI, Patriots' fans, is that game still haunting you? Here's the kick, Desmond Howard from the one, oh no!).

Derrick Mason returned a kick last week for a touchdown for Tennessee, while Tony Horne returned the second-half kickoff for a touchdown against Minnesota.

Rams place kicker Jeff Wilkins was 20-28 on field goal attempts, but still has tendonitis of his left leg and that could affect his kicking. Al Del Greco, who made 21-25 field goal attempts this season, was 4-4 against Indianapolis, and has been consistent his entire career for the Tennessee franchise.

This has been one of the wildest seasons in NFL history and it is fitting that two teams would come out of the cold to play for the world championship of professional football. Regardless of who wins, it will mark the first time since the New York Giants won Super Bowl XXI that we will have a first-time winner.

My prediction on the game... it will be tight all the way through. Tennessee can run the ball on this defense, and look for the Rams to hit one big play in this game. In the end, it will be Eddie George's running of the ball that will make Dick Vermeil cry tears of agony at the post-game press conference.

Final score: Houston 27, Los Angeles 21.

David Rose is a Collegian correspondent

Road sweet road as Minutemen go south for date with Duquesne

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Maybe it's a break. It's not supposed to work this way, so perhaps leaving a bad thing behind will be a break.

Massachusetts men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint has said all along that the Mullins Center has proven detrimental rather than beneficial in the case of the Maroon and White. He's said that the Minutemen (9-8 overall, 3-2 Atlantic 10) just can't shoot in front of their own fans. After taking 1 of 2 at home last week, Flint leads his troops south tonight to lock up with Duquesne, whose home court has been a saving grace.

Monty Mack

The Dukes (8-9 overall, 3-3 Atlantic 10) come in on a two-game skid yet still tied for second in the A-10 West. Just a week ago, they knocked off Xavier to move to 6-0 in the Palumbo Center before falling to St. Joseph's this weekend, 62-59. While seemingly mediocre for this campaign, it is certainly a far cry from last year's 5-23 disaster, which included two losses to UMass.

Flint hopes his team can ride the momentum of a 39-point destruction of Rhode Island in which the lead grew to as big as 46 in an 89-50 win. Leading by just 15 at halftime, the Minutemen fended off memories of last Thursday's second half collapse against Dayton and put away the Rams before the lead was even in question. Against the Flyers, UMass built its 12-point halftime lead to 14 in the early stages of round two before UD came roaring back to escape the Mullins Center with a 57-52 win.

URI was no match for the Minutemen's full-court pressure, as the Rams were forced into 21 turnovers, which included 14 UMass steals. The Minutemen got a superb night from point guard Jonathan DePina, who flirted with a triple-double by scoring seven points while adding a team-high six rebounds and a career-best nine assists.

Duquesne's rise came with great surprise, as the Dukes seemed doomed for another season in the cellar. Returning just two starters and head coach Darelle Porter fielding just one senior, Duquesne has witnessed a complete turnaround after winning just one conference game last season. On top of its A-10 woes, the Dukes lost 23 of their final 25 games after taking their first three. The futility looked as though it would bleed into the 1999-2000 campaign, after the Dukes took just one of their first five games. Duquesne turned things around, scoring victories in five of its next six, including an 85-78 disposal of Xavier at Palumbo just two weeks ago.

Kitwana Rhymer

If not the environment, UMass certainly has history on its side. The Minutemen have taken their last 13 games against the Dukes, dating back to February of 1991, when Duquesne nipped the visiting Minutemen in Pittsburgh, 68-67.

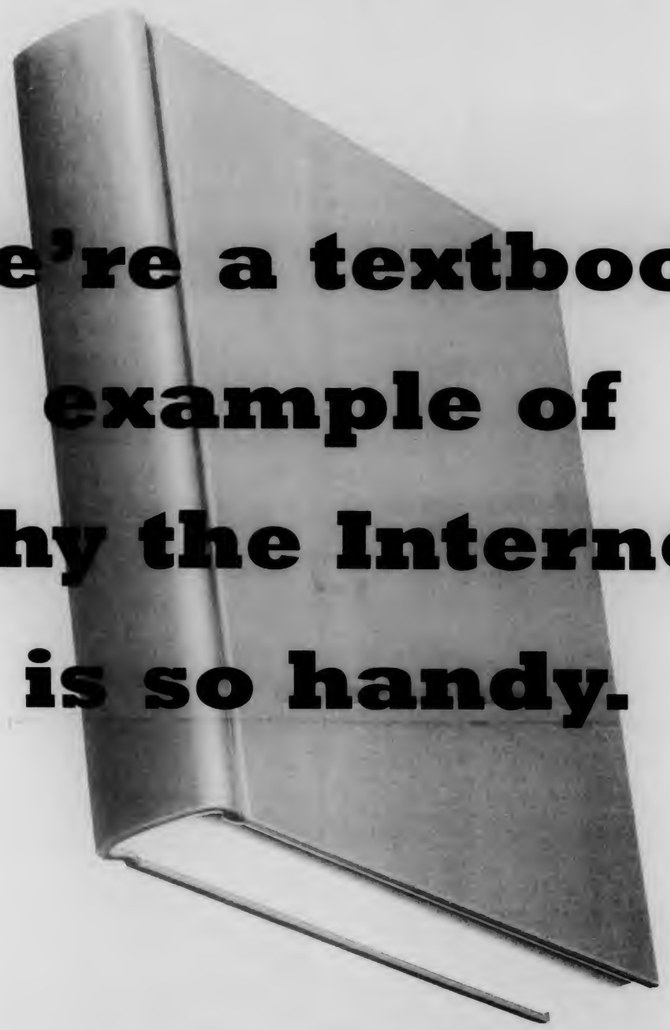
The Minutemen have played just one game away from home since making the turn into 2000. In its lone appearance away from Amherst, UMass squeaked out of Hawk Hill with 73-69 over St. Joe's on January 8th. Despite shooting just 13 for 20 from the line, Kitwana Rhymer dropped a pair of freebies down the stretch to ice it for UMass.

In last year's postseason meeting, it was the free throw line that bailed the Minutemen out, as the team converted on 24 of 37 attempts for charity while Duquesne managed just 11 makes from the line. This year, UMass might not be so lucky, as Flint and Co. stands alone in the conference cellar in the category. Shooting just 63 percent at the line, the Minutemen's woes continued through to A-10 play as UMass has shot just a shade under its average in five games.

UMass needed a second half surge in last year's opening round of the Atlantic 10 Championships to knock off the sixth-seeded Dukes. UMass shot 55 percent from the field in last year's 80-70 win In Philadelphia, this after Duquesne took a 2-point lead through the game's first 20 minutes. Monty Mack racked up 27 points to pace the Maroon and White, which took the lead for good eight minutes in behind a Mack bomb from international waters.

Falling short in last year's A-10 Rookie of the Year running, Duquesne's Wayne Smith has continued his dominance in his sophomore campaign, averaging 19 points a game, good for second in the conference behind George Washington's SirValiant Brown. In addition, the 6-foot-7 swingman averages eight rebounds and three assists per contest. He will likely draw UMass senior co-captain Mike Babul, who notoriously picks up the opposition's leading scorer. Babul held UConn's Kevin Freeman to just two points while Iona's Tariq Kirksay could manage just five points in the game's deciding second half.

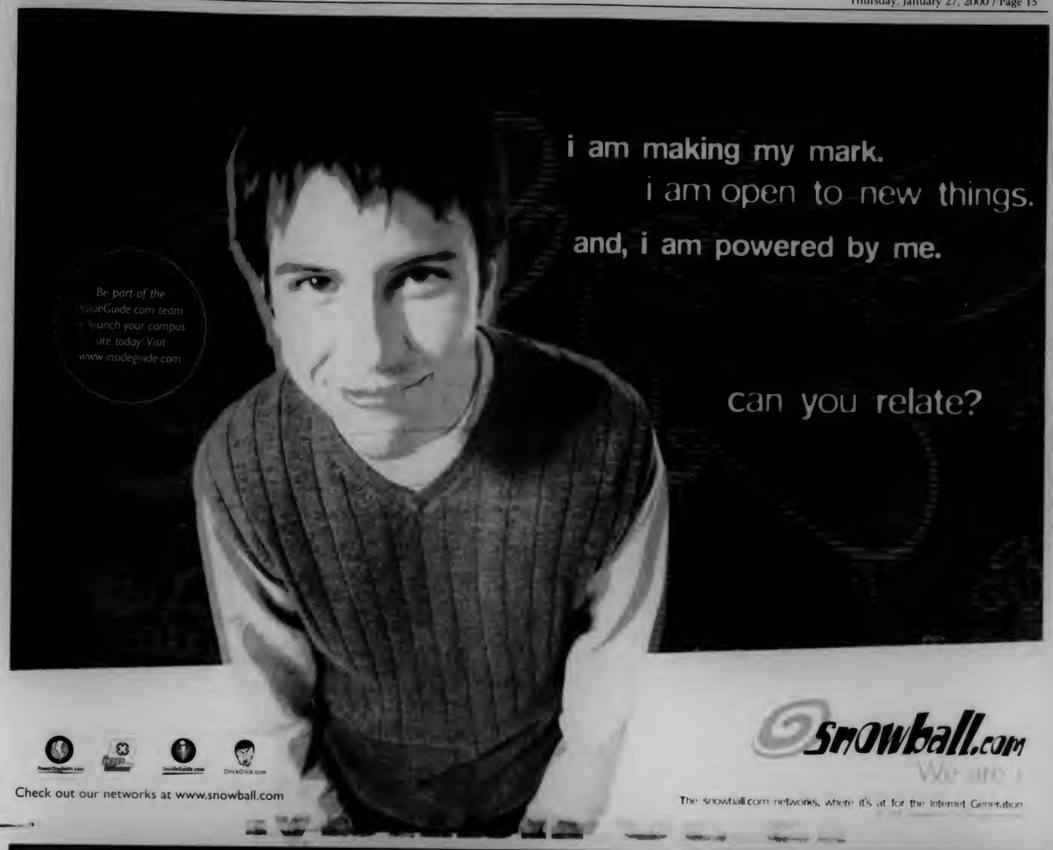
Smith pairs up with Courtney Wallace to form one of the conference's most lethal tandems. Last season, the duo combined for 31 points a game, or half of the Dukes' scoring punch. Wallace tallied 26 points and seven rebounds before fouling out in the teams' second meeting.



UMass ATHLETICS
STUDENT TICKET SCHEDULE
LIMITED STUDENT TICKETS WILL BE AVAILABLE AT THE DOOR AT THE MULLINS CENTER
ONE STUDENT MAY PICK UP 2 TICKETS WITH 2 VALID UMASS STUDENT ID'S
TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW UNTIL GAME TIME
(AT CURRY HICKS CAGE 9:00 AM - 4:30 PM & CAMPUS CENTER 9:00 AM - 3:00 PM)
UMass TEMPLE February 1,2000 9:30 PM
February 5,2000 3:00 PM TEXAS
UMass Hockey
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
February 4, 2000
7:00 PM

GOT THE WINTER "BLAHS", COME IN TODAY & SAVE!!!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink and Drive
Everyday Pricing
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, BUD ICE, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, AMBER BOCK, COORS LIGHT, COORS $39.99 +dep
1/2 KEGS NATURAL, NATURALICE, $34.99 +dep
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING STEEL RAIL, PORTER, TRADITIONAL, I.P.A. $82.99 +dep
COORS LIGHT & COORS CASE OF 30-12 OZ CANS 30 PACK $16.49 +dep
BUSCH LIGHT & BUSCH CASE OF 30-12 OZ CANS 30 PACK $11.49 +dep
ROLLING ROCK CASE 2-12 PK. BOTTLES $14.49 +dep
SAM ADAMS 12 PK BOTTLES 12 PACK $9.99 +dep
LABATTS CASE OF 2-12 PK BOTTLES $14.99 +dep
MILWAUKEE'S BEST CASE OF 30-12 OZ. CANS 30 PACK $9.49 +dep
OTTER CREEK 6 PK. BOTTLES $4.99 +dep
FRANZIA 1.5L $6.99
BERINGER 1.5L $8.49
NATHANSON CREEK 1.5L $6.99
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO 1.5L $9.49
PICCINI CHIANTI 750 ML $4.99
KENDALL JACKSON VINTNERS 750 ML $10.99
JACK DANIELS COUNTRY COCKTAILS 4 PK $3.69
CAPE MORGAN SPICED RUM $18.99
TANQUERAY GIN 1.75L $23.99
CANADIAN MIST 1.75L $12.99
RUBINOFF VODKA 1.75L $8.99
KAHLUA COFFEE LIQUEUR 750 ML $13.99
JOSE CUERVO GOLD TEQUILA 1.75L $12.99
CHIVAS REGAL SCOTCH 750 ML $22.99
Discounts Available on Cases of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 1/27/00 THRU WED. 2/2/00

© 1999 VarsityBooks.com, Inc.



We're a textbook example of why the Internet is so handy.

We realize we don't have to waste your time explaining the virtues of the Internet. Let's just say that at VarsityBooks.com we've made the most of it. Not only can you save up to 40% on your textbooks, but you'll also receive them in just one to three business days. All on a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. What more do you need to know?

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS.

VarsityBooks.com

Try Your Campus Meal Plan and we guarantee you'll eat with us again.

Give us your opinion and we'll give you 5 free meals on campus.

UMASS

Simply purchase a meal plan from Your Campus Meal Plan (Commuter or Economy) by February 5, use the meal plan and tell us what you think by February 21, 2000. We'll give you 5 free meals to be used at any retail food outlet on campus, including snack bars. Guaranteed! To find out more about Your Campus Meal Plan, please call the Meal Plan Office at 545-1362 or visit our website www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices.

Terms & Conditions: To qualify, you must purchase a Commuter or Economy meal plan by February 5, 2000. Feedback must be submitted no later than February 21, 2000 by completing a customer satisfaction questionnaire available at cashier stations and at the Meal Plan Office. Return the questionnaire to the Meal Plan Office in Franklin Dining Hall by mail or in person and the 5 free meals will be posted to Your Campus Meal Plan account within 72 hours. All meals must be used before May 19, 2000. Any unused meals will be void after May 19, 2000. Your Campus Meal Plan is only available to juniors (with 54 or more credits), seniors, grads and commuter students.

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

COMPUTERS

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL!

IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Paraprofessionals Special education and regular education paras needed on elementary and secondary levels. Send resumes to: Superintendents Office, Amherst Regional Schools, 170 Chesnut St, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute Teachers elementary, secondary and RN substitutes needed. Send resume to: Superintendent's Office, Amherst public Schools, 170 Chesnut st, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

Flexible Part-time. ABT Associates in nearby Hadley, Ma has openings for Telephone Research Interviewers for evening and weekend hours. We require a minimum of 20 hrs/wk with flexible scheduling. applicants must have excellent reading/communication skills, some computer knowledge and a solid work ethic. we offer $6.75/hr to start, regular merit increases to $8.00, health and dental benefits, holiday pay and free shuttle service from the Hampshire Mall PVTA stop. for more information or to arrange a personal interview please contact: Paul R. Bebo, Recruiting Coordinator. 1-800-792-4514.

Work study or substitute teachers positions available. $7.00 per hour. Children 18 months to 5 years old. Experience with young children preferred. Call Ellen at 549-1167.

EMPLOYMENT

Work for an exciting College focused Internet company at your school! Looking for motivated individuals with strong leadership, entrepeneurial and busssiness skills. Tech skills not equired. Great experience, pay and options! Contact info@uconnections.com.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campus-fundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Get Paid to Surf the web. its absolutely free. See for yourself. www.geocities.com/eureka/suite/1969

EMPLOYMENT

Undergraduate Bussiness Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills and General Bussiness Experience. !0-15 hours per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Bussiness, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2166.

Summer Internships/Jobs: meaningful, rewarding, unique! 4 GREAT Co-ed Children's Camps in NY, PA and ME are looking for fun-loving, children-focused staff. Swim, water-ski, boating, tennis, outdoor leaders, media, land-sports, creative and performing arts specialists, plus Cabin and Group leaders. ACA-accredited programs. Benefits: Salary, Room, Board, Travel and Laundry. Apply to all 4 via 1 form, at www.horizon-camps.com or call (800)544-5448 for info.

EMPLOYMENT

Like Kids? Work study/childcare worker and/or babysitters needed on Monday evenings throughout the semester. $7.00/hour. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union, or call 545-0865.

Movers Part time positions available for winter intersession and spring semester. Starting pay $8.00 per hour. Located close to UMASS. Call 584-4746

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

WANTED TO RENT

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

Lockers for rent. Cheap! Come to Commuter services, 428 Student Union.

FOR SALE

FOR SALE

Americard phone cards 3.9 cents per minute. Still the best for calls to family and friends at the University Store.

INSTRUCTIONS

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

ROOM FOR RENT

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room with private bath. Quiet Country setting. $350 a month. 413-367-9286.

SERVICES

SERVICES

Cheap heating oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Coop. Come to commuter Services, 428 Student union or call 545-0865.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Aiwa Stereo System. 3cds very powerful. Originally $700 buy for $300 or B/O. Call 6-3489.

Competition-Series Equipment at sick prices that need to go FAST- Orion XTR-series separates, amplifier, sub, alpine deck, Boston acoustic pro-series separates; Denon receiver as well: call Will @ 665-0343.

TRAVEL

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummer-tours.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endless-summertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Place your ads here in The Collegian!! Call us at 545-3500

Hey! You! Visit our web-site: www.dailycollegian.com

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, JAN. 27

Discussion — The League of Women Voters of Amherst will be holding a discussion group on the United Nations starting at noon. The event takes place in the Amherst Room of Jones Library. Call 549-7443 for more information.

Lecture — Sean P. O'Connell will present a lecture entitled "Telling Tales in School: A Queer Response to the Heterosexist Narrative in Higher Education" at 12:30 p.m. in rooms 804-808 of the Campus Center.

NOTICES

Auditions — Auditions for the Chorale Chamber Choir and Women's Choir will be held all week. Sign up for a time outside FAC 253. Musical excerpts to use in preparation for the audition can be picked up in the music office. Call 545-0437 or 545-2227 for more information.

Community — All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help — Student volunteers from SOM will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns from February 15-April 15 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Call 545-5000 for more information.

Support — A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape, childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before February 15.

Support — AL-ANON and ALA-TEEN are offering local meetings to those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Join our team!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is always looking for writers who are willing to cover news stories.

If you are interested please contact Mary at 545-1762

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Govel to Govel
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WOOH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/ New Haven		35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — JANUARY 27, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	32 Odysseymoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		National Geographic's Africa		Mystery! "Touching Evil"		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Popular "Hope in a Jar"		Charmed "Reckless Abandon"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (R)	Frasier (R)	State of the Union Address (Live)				News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Jim Cellhoun	College Basketball	Providence at Connecticut, (Live)		Post Game	News		Reel TV (R)	College Basketball (R)
WVIT	9		NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Friends (R)	Frasier (R)		State of the Union Address (Live)		News		Friends	Tonight Show
WTIC	10	11 Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	To Be Announced				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	11	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (R)	Frasier (R)	State of the Union Address (Live)				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	12	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This City Now		Mystery! "Touching Evil"		Antiques Roadshow		State of the Union Address
WGGB	13	29 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WSBK	14	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	15	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Consumed" (1963, Adventure) Roger Moore, Maud Adams,						"Never Say Never Again" (1983)
A&E	16	L.A. Law "Dances With Sharks"		Law & Order		Biography "Aristotle Onassis"		Investigative Reports		Inside Story		Law & Order
CNN	17	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		State of the Union Address (Live)			Larry King	Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	18	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	"Top Secret!" (1984, Comedy) Val Kilmer, Lucy Gutteridge,				Stein's Money	Turn Ben	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	21	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery	Alaskan Wild	On the Inside "Prison Tech" (R)		Mysteries of the Twilight Zone		Into the Unknown (R)		On the Inside "Prison Tech" (R)
ESPN	13	Sportscenter		NFL Dream Season (R)		NFL Dream Season (R)		College Basketball: Cincinnati at Louisville, (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	14	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope (In Stereo)		"Have You Seen My Son?" (1996, Drama) Lisa Hartman Black,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	13	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Sensaless	Undressed (R)	Loveline
NICK	13	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Skeeter	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies
SCIFI	15	Sliders "Murder Most Foul"		"Lifeshrek" (1997, Science Fiction) Jason James Richter,				"Barb Wire" (1996, Adventure) Pamela Anderson Lee,				"Barb Wire" (1996)
TLC	22	28 Home Again	Home Again	Mega Tech (R)		Oklahoma Fury (R)		Forgotten Secrets (R)		Heaven's Mirror (R)		Oklahoma Fury (R)
TNT	15	In the Heat of the Night		ER "Something New" (In Stereo)		"Dumb & Dumber" (1994, Comedy) Jim Carrey, Jeff Daniels,						"Dumb & Dumber" (1994) Jim Carrey,
USA	19	Baywatch "Coronado del Sol"		JAG "Cowboys & Cossacks"		Walker, Texas Ranger				Walker, Texas Ranger		Walker, Texas Ranger
HBO	33	(5:45) "Dead Poets Society" (1989) Robin Williams, PG				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		"The Siege" (1998, Suspense) Denzel Washington, R				Real Sex 18 (R) (In Stereo)
MAX	44	(4:30) "Titanic" (1997, Drama) Leonardo DiCaprio, PG-13				"Shattered Image" (1994, Drama) Bo Derek, (In Stereo) R				"Home Fries" (1998) Drew Barrymore,		Erotic
SHOW	55	"Looking for Lola" (1997, Comedy) Mark Krassenbaum, PG				"The Mask of Zorro" (1998) Antonio Banderas, PG-13				"Eyeball" (1998, Adventure) F. Murray Abraham, R

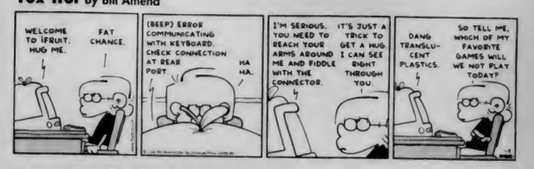
Baldердash By Tim Dwyer

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Gary Trudeau



Welcome to the world By Ryan O'Donnell

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Gary Trudeau

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Gary Trudeau

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're starting to feel ignored lately, like people don't exactly value your opinion. Which they don't.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Those around you may seem overwhelmed by your vast knowledge, but don't worry. Genius is often misunderstood, and always envied.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – "Quality time" is something you've been thinking a lot about lately. You can have it today if you choose your companions well.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – The weather outside may be frightful, but you are bringing feelings of delight to others with your sunny charm. When you have time today, take a long look in the mirror and concentrate on how sexy you truly are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll discover one or two very good reasons to "stick with it" today, no matter what "it" may be. Serious dangers are easily avoided.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may demonstrate yourself to be very much the product of your times today. You may want to try something in a new and daring way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone may be leading you on at this time, and it's important for you to free yourself from any undue influences as quickly as possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can inject a great deal of fun into the workplace before the day is out, though not everyone may trust your motives or your methods.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The research you do today will surely pay off tomorrow or the next day. Now is the time to make sure you "know your stuff."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can impress those around you today with a demonstration of a skill that you usually take for granted. You have something special!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Think about all you've accomplished in recent days or weeks. You'll realize that the course you've chosen is the right one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Stay away from the Campus Center concourse today. Someone will make you a dangerous offer there, one that you will have a hard time refusing.

Quote of the Day

"Smoking kills, and if you're killed, you've lost a very important part of your life."

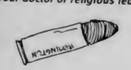
-Anti-smoking spokesperson and Princeton graduate Brooke Shields

Close to Home By John McPherson

"At last, paint sample chips big enough to give you a feel for how the color will look."

Leold www.leold.com by Roger and Salem Salloom© 1999

I just saw an ad for a drug on TV.



It said,

"For allergy symptoms' relief, take Flipex-- the clear your nose and eyes drug."

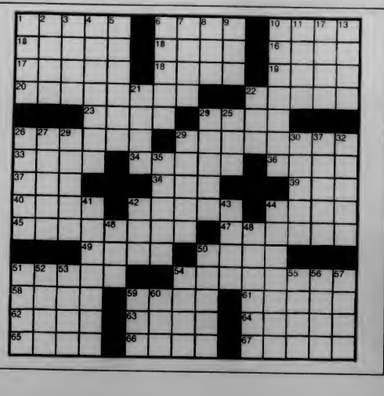
Then the announcer said real fast...

"Some side effects could include temporary loss of eyesight,... in field trials 86% developed lower body paralysis, but only 6% experienced death.

Before taking Flipex consult your doctor or religious leader."

ACROSS

1 Beer ingredient
6 Applaud
10 Sheep's coat
14 Overact
15 Gardening need
16 Qualified
17 Fabric made from flax
18 From a distance
19 Team
20 Enjoyable
22 Kasparov's game
23 Dissolve
24 Bad mood
26 Accent
29 Book by P.D. James, e.g.
33 Excursion
34 Spicy stews
36 Like some skinny people
37 Jackie's second
38 Above, to Keats
39 Traveler's need
40 — It Romantic?"
42 Capri and Man
44 Charlie Chaplin prop
45 Like some book pages
47 Fused together
49 Caustic ingredients
50 Boy or man
51 Dipper
54 Kind of orange
58 Woodwind
59 Young kangaroo
61 Wash away
62 Oaf
63 Atmosphere
64 Vends
65 Totals
66 Brownish-gray bird
67 Oaks and maples



DOWN

1 Squeal
2 Jannings or Zatopek
3 Top-notch
4 Veggie cooker
5 Past and present
6 Intone
7 Soho apartment
8 Fit-fiddle connector
9 Each
10 Basement sink
11 Oscar's cousin
12 Early automaker
13 Sediment
21 Too
22 Spanish hero El —
24 Terra firma
25 Negative votes
26 Sedate
27 Weightlifter's pride
28 Bemoaning
29 Brandish
30 Wanderer
31 Nonsensical
32 Used the keyboard
35 Forfeits
41 Bank clerks
42 Fierce anger
43 Ugly Duckling, really
44 Plainer
46 Reply to the captain
48 First-born
50 Yucatan dweller
51 Tennis shots
52 — Ben Adhem
53 Fate
54 Only
55 Part to play
56 Unemployed
57 Loch — monster
59 Face part
60 "— Town"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	T	Y		L	O	T	T	O		W	I	C	K	S
C	O	O		A	S	I	A	N		A	V	A	I	L
A	D	U	L	T	E	R	A	T	E		D	I	R	T
L	U	R	E	D		B	A	S	E	D
P	E	E	L		T	E	E	T	H		D	I	M	E
			H	E	A	R	S	A	Y		G	I	N
I	M	P	L	A	N	T	S		E	L	A	N	D
M	A	U	D	L	I	N		R	E	S	I	N	E
A	L	I	G	N		A	P	P	E	A	S	E	D
G	A	M		T	A	M	P	E	R	S
E	Y	R	E		M	A	T	E	Y		O	B	E	S
			O	B	E	A	D		R	A	I	S	E
A	S	S	A	Y		R	E	I	T	E	R	A	T	E
G	E	E	S	E		I	R	K	E	D		N	E	D
O	A	S	E	S		D	R	E	A	D		A	R	S

1-8-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Kara Stokes
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff	Dan McGuinness-Rossi, Seth Koenig, Katie Ross

UMass ice hockey downs Providence; Minutemen sweep series from Friars

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The scene that played out in the final six seconds of last night's Hockey East matchup between the Massachusetts and Providence College picksters was one that was all too familiar for the host Minutemen.

Trailing 4-3 late in the final period, it appeared that UMass allowed the game-tying goal with 5.7 seconds remaining. With the Friars celebrating along the boards, referee Jim Benedetto waved off the score because the goal judge claimed the puck had never crossed the line.

So, instead of another heartbreaking incident in which the Minutemen gave up a goal late in regulation that cost them either a win or a tie, UMass caught a break this time around in a 4-3 victory.

UMass	4
PC	3

This was not a game where the Maroon and White battled to put themselves in a position to win, only to see the chance to earn two points fall by the wayside when all was said and done. Rather, this was a game where UMass rebounded from a 3-1 second period deficit and earned two crucial Hockey East points in the process.

"From where I was standing, the puck didn't go in. It was tough to tell if it hit the bar or went in because it was a wobbly puck," said junior Jeff Turner, who was centering the line that was on the ice at the time of the incident.

UMass [10-12-3, 4-9-2 in Hockey East] capped off a three-goal second period at the 16:29 mark of the middle frame. With the game tied at 3-3, senior alternate captain Jeff Blanchard set up the tally on a rush into the Providence zone. He stopped quickly to sidestep a PC defender, then led a crossslce pass to Randy Drohan at the right point. Drohan then faked a shot, instead sliding a pass to a streaking Nathan Sell, who tipped the disc over PC goalie Boyd Ballard for the game-winning goal.

"I thought that was a major league play, an NHL play by Blanchard, to pull up like that and make the pass to Drohan," UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen said. "I thought that Randy was going to shoot, but he had good vision and saw Sellzy in position and he made a nice tip."

"I have to give Nathan Sell credit. Here's a guy who has four goals in Hockey East play since the start of the new year," added Mallen. "That's what you captain is there for, to score big goals. Sellzy, Jeff Blanchard and Jeff Turner all did that tonight."

Peter Fregoe put PC ahead 3-1 only 0:49 into the second period on a shot that just went under the crossbar. That goal spelled the end of the night for UMass goalie Mike Johnson, who allowed three goals on six shots.

The Minutemen rallied back only 35 seconds later to hang in the game. Jeff Turner scored his first of two goals on the night on the rebound of a shot by his younger brother, Tim. Kevin Poulin also assisted on the score.

Turner would then net the equalizer at the 11:24 mark of the stanza. The junior forward found himself alone in the slot, but his original shot was stopped by Ballard. However, Turner stayed with the rebound and tucked home a shot that deflected off the PC goalie and into the net.

"It looked like we were digging ourselves in a hole. They scored so early in the period to make it 3-1, but our guys really took control [of the game] in the second period," Mallen said. "When you're down two goals, you need to get the next one to cut it to one goal, and we did that. With the type of defensive system that we play, we feel that we can recover that goal if we're behind in a one-goal game."

Junior netminder Markus Helanen then made Sell's game-winner stand up the rest of the way. The Finn made 17 saves in goal to earn his ninth win of the season.

"It was a tough start for Mike, but I just tried to go in and stay focused," Helanen said. "It's always tough to go in [when you're not starting], but I was more comfortable once I got the blood flowing."

Providence [12-12-1, 4-9 in HE] jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first period. Jon DiSalvatore opened the scoring 16:34 into the frame before Drew Omicioli tacked on another goal 72 seconds later. However, the Minutemen trimmed the lead in half on a goal by Toni Soderholm with 1:17 remaining in the opening stanza.

UMass moved into a tie for sixth place in the conference with Merrimack thanks to the victory, one that also propelled the Minutemen to a season sweep over the Friars. The three consecutive wins against PC this season marked the second straight year that the Minutemen have taken a season series from a Hockey East opponent. UMass swept all three games with Merrimack last year.

DAN SANTELLA
Nathan Sell and the UMass hockey team prevailed in a 4-3 win over Providence in Hockey East action last night

UMass student approaches top of perilous Toughman mountain

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

Roughly a year ago, University of Massachusetts senior Salah Zabian was given a simple suggestion. Now he is one of an elite few in the nation.

"Last year, I was at home in Lenox, and I had a friend who went over to Albany, New York," Zabian said. "He went to the Toughman Competition there and he stated that I should do it. I basically took the year off and didn't want to do it, but then I was working in Boston and it started to come on television, on EX. I decided then, while I was sitting in my office, that I was going to go do it."

A choice and six unanimous decisions later, and the UMass strongman had dropped whittle a huge field of fighters down to a precious handful. And Zahian, who will fight on pay-per-view on Feb. 11 for all the marbles, wants to bring the title back to Massachusetts.

"I trained, and then I went down and fought in the quarterfinals down in Florida," Zabian said. "I had to fight once on a Friday night and three times on a Saturday night in order to win. You had to win all of your fights in order to make it to the next level, which was the semifinals. The semifinals consisted of two fights – one on a Thursday and one on a Friday – and you had to win both of them to make it to the finals... Basically, when we started out in the national tournament, there was between 400 and 500 participants, and now it's down to 16."

The senior, who is participating in the University Without Walls program, concentrating in finance and sport management, has not only gained the attention of a country's worth of competitors, but also the corporate world. With his performance in the ring, Zahian has received sponsorship offers from, among others, Otomix Shoe Company.

In the Toughman Competition, which is a series of boxing-style matches that consist of three one-minute rounds, Zabian hasn't had it all handed to him on a silver platter.

"The toughest guy I had to fight was probably the first fight in the semifinal round," Zabian said. "I won on a unanimous decision, but I believe I lost the first round. I don't know if I lost concentration or took the guy too lightly, but I just didn't come out fighting the first round. I almost got knocked out and almost got beat, but I went back to the corner and regrouped. I came back out and won the second and third rounds."

To make it past that opponent, and most others on the path to the finals, the Minuteman bruiser sticks to a calculated strategic rhythm.

"Staying relaxed and working my jab is my main thing," Zabian said. "Using the jabs and working with combinations."

And with a junior college Division III National Championship playing left field at Massasoit Junior College in 1993, and two Golden Gloves over a 12-year stint as an amateur boxer, it wouldn't come as a complete surprise if the 26-year old 180-pounder took the title. If that is the case, Zabian will consider a career in professional boxing and, in giving back to the organization that helped him toward success, commentating and endorsing future Toughman tournaments.

"Being a Toughman World Champion gives someone credentials and exposure and the money [to continue]," Zabian said.

In an organization that encourages outrageous antics to gain popularity, the Minuteman slugger has represented the University as hard-working and humble.

"I guess the most creative thing I've ever done, you'll see on TV, is jump up on the top rope," Zabian said. "[My personal is pretty much vocal – on TV after I've won."

With that in mind, Zabian will hopefully win over the nation with what happens after the bell rings – and the nation will be watching. The Toughman Competition is currently the No. 1 show on FX, and the semifinal rounds will be shown tomorrow night and also on Feb. 4th. The final 16 will do battle on Feb. 11th on pay-per-view.

COURTESY SALAH ZABIAN
Senior Salah Zabian (right) hopes to continue his rise in this year's Toughman competition when he suits up again tomorrow night.

Hilly UM season lands back in Amherst for battle with Temple

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts women's basketball team can recreate its first-half performance from Sunday's overtime loss to St. Bonaventure, and make it last for two halves, then tonight's 7 p.m. home clash against Temple promises a favorable outcome.

But if the Minutewomen fail to correct their second-half showing against the Bonnies – when they blew a 17-point lead with 15 minutes remaining – then the visiting Owls, who stand at 5-13, could make UMass look like the team approaching three times as many losses as wins.

"We had a chance to put them away early in the first half and we didn't do that. We kind of let them hang around and they got their confidence back," Minutewoman coach Joanie O'Brien said on her WMUA-FM (91.1) radio show Wednesday night. "I thought we played well for the first 16 minutes but after that we really struggled."

After opening the season with six consecutive losses, UMass rallied for six wins in its next eight contests, including a landmark victory over Stanford, which was ranked 21st in the nation at the time. Yet just as they seemed primed to pull above .500, the Minutewomen became susceptible to bouts of inconsistency, winning only two of next last four.

Temple finds itself in a similar predicament, having suffered a close defeat to Duquesne, 61-51, in its most recent contest. Both programs could use a win tonight to get back on track, especially UMass, which is vying for first place in the Atlantic 10 East foe St. Joseph's. The Minutewomen stand at 5-2 in the conference, while the Hawks boast an impressive 6-1 mark.

"[The loss to St. Bonaventure] was probably one of the worst losses we've had," O'Brien also said. "We had the game completely under control. We were playing for first place... it's a tough pill to swallow. If we don't learn from it, the rest of the season will be a struggle."

After UMass sophomore forward Nekole Smith forced overtime with a late basket in regulation, the Minutewomen had an opportunity to again tie the game at the end of overtime but failed to capitalize with a missed lay-up and two errant free throws as time expired.

Among the many opening-half positives that O'Brien wishes to draw from the loss to the Bonnies are the strong performances of sophomore forward Caroline Nehls (16 points, six rebounds) and her three teammates that scored double figures. Nehls' frontcourt mates, Jennifer Butler and Smith combined for 25 points, and senior guard/forward Alison MacFarland added 13 for the Minutewomen, who fell to 8-10 with the defeat.

Although Temple boasts no scorer that averages over 10 points per game, the Owls have been helped by the hot shooting of senior guard Nicole Chaszar, who connected on five 3-pointers and scored 20 points in their most recent loss to Duquesne.

As far as the Temple frontcourt is concerned, sophomore forward Lisa Jakubowicz poses an interior threat, pulling in 6.1 points, 9 rebound performance against the Dukes.

Minutewomen notes – Now that UMass junior point guard Kathy Coyner seems to have fully recovered from ankle surgery in December, the Minutewoman backcourt has enjoyed a surge in production. Coyner played well against the Bonnies, handing out a game-high 11 assists, while shooting guard Tonia Thomas added a career-high seven assists. While Coyner was injured, both Thomas and freshman reserve Ebony Pegues assumed much of the ball-handling duties.

The free-throw line seems to be the newest albatross for the Minutewomen, who lost to St. Bonaventure by only four points in overtime. While the Bonnies shot 89.7 percent from the free-throw line in the game, UMass mustered a mere 56.3 percent.

FILE PHOTO
Caroline Nehls and the women's basketball team take the floor against Temple tonight at the Mullins Center at 7 p.m

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CCVI Issue 11 Friday, January 28, 2000

Safety violations close fraternity house

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst has shut down the University of Massachusetts Delta Chi fraternity chapter for the second time within five months. The fraternity was closed last week after an investigation of the housing complex deemed it unsafe.

Amherst Building Inspector Richard Gormely shut down the Delta Chi house, at 118 Sunset Ave., for the first time in two years in early September.

He cited the fraternity for violations that included a damaged fire alarm and sprinkler system, missing hand railings, dead lights and inoperable exit signs. They were informed that the building would remain closed until all problems were repaired.

At the same time, the Pi Kappa Alpha house, at 498 North Pleasant Street, was cited for violations that Gormely said were more severe than Delta Chi, including broken windows, a damaged alarm system and toilets clogged with human excrement.

Pi Kappa Alpha remained closed throughout the semester under the authorization of the Greek Affairs Office. Authorities informed Delta Chi that they could re-open when most violations were repaired and were re-granted their Certificate of Occupancy.

The thorough inspection of the facility over intercession, when all fraternity members were on break, deemed the facility once again unsuitable for living, Gormely said.

According to him, the Amherst Fire Department notified him that Delta Chi's building contained no water and heat. Gormely said the problem started when there was no oil in the boiler system.

"When the boiler wasn't working, the heat was lost and all of the pipes froze," Gormely said.

As a result, the heat shut down in the entire building and Gormely said that's when the violations occurred.

"I had to close it down because it was unfit for them [the brothers] to be in there because they had no water," Gormely said. "The sprinklers were down because they were frozen and that put the alarm system in trouble and therefore they had no alarm system also."

He said that he also observed that the emergency lights and exit signs inside the fraternity were out and this posed a safety hazard.

According to Gormely, there were other issues in violation of the safety code, but he refused to state what they were at the present time.

He commented that Delta Chi had only lost their certificate of occupancy and that it would be re-granted to them when all problems had been resolved.

"At some point when all the violations have been corrected and approved by any of the inspectors involved, I will re-issue their occupancy," Gormely said.

"It's unfortunate," Gormely said in a past article. "Sometimes the houses have such severe problems that no one wants to take responsibility."

Greek Affairs was not available for comment at press time.

Delta Chi member Mike Carlin declined comment.

KARA STORELLI COLLEGIAN
Delta Chi fraternity house was closed down last week due to safety violations.

Privatization uproar

KARA STORELLI COLLEGIAN
Thomas Coish, the President of the UMass Chapter of Service Employees International Union, spoke out yesterday in the campus center in opposition to the recent decision to privatize the University Store and the Textbook Annex.

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

In opposition to the administration's recent decision to privatize the University Store and Textbook Annex, the UMass Labor Coalition held a press conference yesterday in the Campus Center Concourse.

Union leaders and employees provided handouts to those in attendance explaining that Independent stores sell the most popular items for less.

"We have evidence that private stores are more expensive for students and customers and reduce the availability of products," Thomas Coish, President of the UMass Chapter of Service Employees International Union Local 509 said.

He also commented that while the focus of larger bookstores is primarily on financial issues, the university employees are interested in serving the students. "[The U-Store] has been successful at serving the community and making money," Coish said.

Scott Cashman, manager of the Textbook Annex, also mentioned that prices would likely rise with the new bookstore. He commented that information obtained by a circulated survey indicated that an overall 14 percent increase on books would occur. He went on to say that a 2.5 percent increase was to be expected on new books and a four percent increase on used books from the current book costs.

He also explained that students would no longer be able to receive the student rebate that is currently offered by Annex and that instead Follett would be offering a 10 percent discount for faculty and staff members of the University.

"Frankly if you are going to discount materials, students need the discount more than faculty and staff," Cashman said. "I think that they should reconsider."

Another issue brought up at the press conference was whether or not the union bid was treated fairly by the committee.

"The bid submitted by the employees was superior to that submitted by the private sector," Coish explained.

The UMass Antiprivatization Labor Coalition, comprised of AFSCME Local 1779, SEIU Local 509, GFO/AW Local 2322, commented that, "The employees' bid included a projection of an overall increase in return to the University of about 14 percent of total sales over the five-year life of the contract versus 9.1 percent in the Follett bid."

"They [the administration] don't consider our ideas to be worthwhile, so they're turning it over to the private sector," Coish said.

Cashman also commented that the union bid was not treated fairly. The other submitted bids "were not a true reflection and showed a lack of vision towards what a store could be."

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Paul Page commented in a statement to the press that all of the bids were looked over and judged fairly. "Each of the three bids submitted to operate the campus bookstore were thoroughly and fairly reviewed by a selection committee comprised of a cross-section of the campus community. In addition to financial returns, bids were evaluated according to several other important criteria including options for employee retention, capital investment, corporate strength, expertise, and market position."

According to Cashman, Follett bookstore also lacks in utilizing technological advances. He explained that the bookstore does not use new technology in its bookstores located on other campuses and that it does not plan to use new technology on the UMass campus.

Members of the UMass Union Labor Coalition also commented that the issue of the impact upon current bookstore employees was being drastically downplayed. "The administration touts the option they will be given the option of remaining university employees or becoming employees of Follett. What this really means is that they will have the choice of taking a job with Follett at lower salaries and eventually reduced benefits, or remaining University employees with the prospect that they will be laid off within five years."

Overall, the union feels that the University is not looking out for the best interests of the students. Graduate Employee Organization president James A.W. Shaw commented at the press conference, "The University's attempt to turn the UStore and the Texthook Annex over to a corporate vendor is not a singular instance of misguided politics. It is a dire shift from a quality public education to academic capitalism and a corporatized campus."

Erica Mattison also contributed to this article.

Graduates online

New masters programs offered

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Graduate Students at the University of Massachusetts will have new opportunities this spring with the launch of three online graduate degree programs.

The new programs, which are the first to be offered by the campus, are a conjunctive effort between the Isenberg School of Management, the School of Public and Heath Sciences, the School of Nursing, and the UMass Division of Continuing Education. All of these groups have joined together with eCollege.com, an online education provider.

One degree that will be offered to students is a Professional Master of Business Administration. The MBA program, which is accredited by the International Association for Management Education (AACSB), is intended to be for students who wish to continue their education in management.

Another online degree offered is a Master of Science (Nursing) in Community/School Health. This degree helps to prepare advanced-practice nurses as expert clinicians in the care of children, adolescents, and their families in diverse community and school health settings.

The final degree being offered online is the Master of Public Health. The degree provides students with public health experience that is relevant to their careers.

These programs are offered in conjunction with eCollege.com, a group that specializes in building virtual colleges and universities online around the world.

The group as a whole is made up of educators and technologists that aim at delivering high quality classes to students online.

Distance learning classes for the entire University system have been in place since 1995. The classes are taught by UMass faculty and meet the same academic requirements that other traditional campus classes are required to meet.

According to the mission statement of the Department of Continuing Education, distance learning courses were designed to meet the needs of working professionals, military personnel, students with disabilities, parents with small children, and for those whom either time or transportation are unavailable.

In order to take these classes students must gain admittance to the UMass Graduate School.

The University currently offers associate degrees in six areas, bachelor's degrees in nearly 90, master's degrees in more than 70, and doctorate degrees in more than 50 areas of study within the campus.

The new courses that are offered in connection to this program will be located on the University's virtual campus this spring and can be accessed at www.UMAmherstOnline.org.

Theater gets new prof

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

The UMass Theater Department is welcoming Gilbert McCauley, an established actor and director, to its staff. The new professor will bring into the department many years of varied experience to pass on to his students.

McCauley attended Oklahoma City University for his undergraduate work and then went on to act with the St. Louis Repertory Theater, before returning to the University of Illinois for his post-graduate studies. He has served on the theater faculty of URI Kingston, the University of California Berkely, the University of Michigan Ann-Arbor and has also done work at Brown University.

While at Brown, McCauley was the resident director at Rites and Reason, a developmental research theater company. He has worked all over the country, including New York, Seattle, Washington D.C. and Chicago. McCauley served as the Artistic Director of the Oakland Ensemble and the program coordinator of Kaiser Permanente's Educational Theater Programs.

He has done off Broadway work at regional theaters around the country, including Arena Stage, Goodman Theater, Old Globe Theater, Oregon Shakespeare Festival and Playrights Horizons.

He also directed the world premieres of Cheryl West's Jar the Floor, Puddin' 'n Pete, Ossie Davis's Sybil, J.E. Franklin's Borderline Fool and Ari Roth's Goodnight Irene, as well as the West African premiere of August Wilson's Joe Turner's Come and Gone at the National Theater of Ghana in Accra, commissioned by the United States Information Service.

McCauley said he was drawn to the theater at a young age because of a self-described, "love of expression." He went on to say that his favorite thing to see in a young actor is the moment "they stand on the stage and come alive when they express themselves."

The department is currently working on, The Bacchae by Euripides (translated by Wole Soyinla). The play is being directed by Judyie Al Bilali and choreographed by Marlies Yearby. McCauley's best advice for budding theater students is "to come out for the plays, audition and get involved."

Upcoming events in the Theater Department include. Hamlet Machine by Heiner Muller. The second upcoming event is Polaroid Stories by Naomi Iizuka.

It is a modern retelling of Ovid's Metamorphoses where Zeus, Narcissus, Echo, Orpheus and other mythical characters are portrayed as drug addicts, punk rockers and homeless children.

Polaroid Stories is the first directing task that Gilbert McCauley will undertake here at the university.

Ships smuggling human cargo pose risks for U.S. Coast Guard

By Roberto Suro
The Washington Post

After the U.S. Coast Guard intercepted the freighter Wing Fung Lung on the high seas last month, the smugglers who were bringing 249 illegal Chinese immigrants to America attempted to sink the ship. When that failed, they tried to blend in with the immigrants, start a riot, set fires, and overpower U.S. sailors.

On his first night aboard this floating nightmare, the commander of the Coast Guard boarding party, Lt. j.g. Robert Borowczak, lay awake worrying that his crew might not have captured all of the smugglers, known as "snakeheads," and wondering what mayhem might come next.

The rust bucket and its desperate human cargo were intercepted Dec. 9 about 300 miles off the coast of Guatemala, the most recent in a series of incidents that have caused the Coast Guard to declare that intercepting illegal migrants has become a more dangerous business than running down drug smugglers.

"As smuggling in human cargo becomes more lucrative, the propensity for violence has risen, and in addition to the smugglers using force, the migrants have become more willing to jeopardize life and limb," said Cmdr. Jim McPherson, a Coast Guard spokesman.

For six days and nights, the crew of the Coast Guard cutter Munro provided food, water and medical attention to the migrants who had spent two months jammed on the Wing Fung Lung in a doomed effort to enter the United States. But keeping order proved the greatest challenge. The boarding party had to resort numerous times to batons, pepper spray and handcuffs, according to Borowczak and other crew members who returned to their home base at Alameda, Calif., on Monday night and provided the first full accounts of the incident in telephone interviews this week.

Since a surge in the number of Chinese smuggling vessels crossing the Pacific began last spring, the Immigration and Naturalization Service has repatriated 872 migrants to China. Dozens more have been caught in U.S. ports, and unknown hundreds have made it to America, where many end up working in sweatshops or kitchens to pay off debts of $30,000 or more for the illicit passage. Along the way, the Coast Guard has recorded 18 incidents of violence – compared to only one in the whole of 1997 - during missions to stop illegal immigration.

Chinese snakeheads, often associated with criminal gangs, are not the only culprits. Cuban migrants intent

Turn to SMUGGLING, page 3

COURTESY OF UNIVERSITY GALLERY

No, this really is a painting...

This weekend the University Gallery will open a retrospective show featuring the paintings of Scott Prior entitled Light on the Familiar. More information on the show, including gallery hours, can be found on page seven.

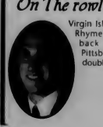
EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 18 LOW: 5	HIGH: 29 LOW: 13	HIGH: 38 LOW: 22

What Are Your Plans

Look inside and see what fellow students are setting as goals and looking to accomplish this semester.

PAGE 3



Color And Light

In Arts today: this week's video pick, insight on Letterman's heart, and see what's opening at the University Gallery. Take a look. We'll make it worth your while.

PAGE 5

Kit-Kat On The rowl

Virgin Islands native Kitwana Rhymer broke Duquense's back last night in Pittsburgh with a double-double.

PAGE 12

Arts & Living 5
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

YAHOO! OUTLOUD presented by DORITOS featuring
SMASHMOUTH
plus
LUSCIOUS JACKSON
SHOW UP EARLY - GET FREE STUFF GO TO
outloud.yahoo.com
Win stuff! Get tour info! Buy tix!
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
FEBRUARY 28
7PM SHOW • ALL AGES
ALL OTHER TICKETS $15*
ON SALE TODAY AT 10AM!
LIMITED TICKETS $10 with student ID • Box Office Only >>freescholarships.com
TEXTBOOKS.COM
CALL FOR TICKETS ticketmaster (413) 773-2500 • (617) 931-2000
Tickets available at Mullins Center Box Office and at all Ticketmaster locations. Please note: Dates & time subject to change without notice.
www.dlclive.com
FROM SFX ENTERTAINMENT
DORITOS and DORITOS Logo are trademarks used by Frito Lay Inc. Rocat Inc 2000

Campus Perspectives

What are your goals for the semester?

Compiled by Mary Grein • Photos by Kara Stokes

"To get into all my courses, study hard and enjoy myself."
Esha Ray, Sophomore, Computer Science

"Live through Cancun. I'm turning 21 while in Cancun so I hope I make it through."
Damian Ortelli, Junior, Exercise Science

"Stay out of the cold and get into a class or two."
David Freylikhman, Junior, Legal Studies

"To get good grades and survive the cold."
Laura Jones, Sophomore, Hotel, Restaurant, Travel and Administration

"To take things one step at a time and set achievable goals. I'm a full time student, with a part time job, but it's my senior year and I want to have fun as well."
Randy Seymour, Senior, Building Materials and Wood Technology

"To finish up my last semester of college here."
Erin Callahan, Senior, Communications

Perusing posters

Undeclared freshman Erin Benson and freshman business major Kevin Sheely opt for fine art posters at the poster sale in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday.

Cuban grandmothers visit Elian

By Mike Clary
Los Angeles Times

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Elian Gonzalez was reunited with his two Cuban grandmothers here Wednesday in a private, tearful meeting that seems only to underscore the bitter and highly political battle being waged over the fate of the 6-year-old child.

"It is very definitely a family affair that has somehow turned into political agendas that it is difficult for us to understand," said Sister Jeanne O'Laughlin, the Dominican nun and Barry University president who hosted the reunion at her home. "There was pain on both sides, hurt on both sides. The greatest element, however, was that of fear."

The grandmothers did not come face to face with the Miami relatives who have been caring for Elian since he arrived here Nov. 25, one of three survivors when a small boat from Cuba capsized and his mother and 10 others drowned.

But they did get to hug Elian, a child they both helped to raise. "When Elian saw his grandmothers, they were elated," said Sister Jeanne Lenard, a Cuban-born nun who attended the private get-together in an upstairs room of the estate owned by the university. They picked him up, they hugged him. They were shaking. They were thrilled. It was like a sacred moment."

Sitting around a table, the grandmothers showed Elian pictures of the family in Cuba, as well as drawings, pictures and letters from his schoolmates in his hometown of Cardenas.

Waiting downstairs in the house were Elian's great uncle Lazaro Gonzalez, his daughter Marisleysis, a second great uncle, Delphine Gonzalez, and various lawyers and advisers who have been fighting to prevent U.S. immigration officials from returning the child to his father in Cuba.

O'Laughlin said that both sides of the divided family refused an invitation to sit down together at a Cuban meal the university staff had prepared. "I think you know the fear and mistrust on both sides," O'Laughlin told reporters Wednesday evening after the grandmothers departed for the airport and a return flight to Washington aboard a jet chartered by the U.S. National Council of Churches.

The grandmothers, Mariela Quintana and Raquel Rodriguez, had flown to Miami Monday but returned to Washington when a neutral site for a meeting with Elian could not be arranged.

They did not comment publicly after their meeting. Immigration and Naturalization Service ruling that the boy should be returned to the custody of his father.

Elian's Miami relatives have challenged that ruling.

■ smuggling

continued from page 1

on making it to Florida have repeatedly threatened Coast Guard personnel with machetes in recent months.

"Over the years, I have handled thousands of migrants — Haitians, Cubans, Chinese and others — and in the past, they were always complium and pretts much resigned to their fates. But now you see people who are absolutely determined to reach their destination, and they'll fight back when they realize you are going to stop them," said Capt. Wayne Justice, a 22-year veteran of the Coast Guard.

Justice was in command of the Munro, on a drug patrol in the eastern Pacific, when a Coast Guard plane spotted a suspicious freighter. The Munro came alongside the vessel that night and sent a boat to investigate.

The freighter's crew said they were carrying rice, then plywood.

They said only six people were on board, but at least that many could be seen looking out portholes. The master of the Wing Fung I ung refused a request to inspect the ship. The Munro fell back to follow at a distance as the Coast Guard checked the ship's registry. After a day, Justice learned that the freighter was not a Taiwanese vessel as its crew had claimed.

At that point, it was legally a "stateless vessel" and the Coast Guard had authority to board it under international law.

At first light, the next morning the Munro launched its helicopter to take another look - and the chopper reported hundreds of people on the deck. By the time the cutter closed in on the freighter a few hours later, the Wing Fung I ung was wallowing in the sea, and there seemed to be panic onboard.

As he led a boarding party of 25 onto the freighter, Borowczak immediately ordered engineers to determine whether the ship was safe. They discovered a foot of water in the engine room and valves that had been opened to scuttle the ship. On the fantail, the only functioning life raft was partially inflated.

"After they saw our helicopter, the smugglers apparently concluded we were coming after them and decided to sink the ship right there, leaving more than 200 people to their fates while they escaped," said Justice. The Coast Guard crew made repairs and pumped out the freighter, which the Munro took under tow.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER-NAUTILUS-CYBEX STAIRMASTERS-LIFECYCLES-TREADMILLS-LIFEROWER-CARDIO KICKBOXING-PRECOR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0060

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in a Gym and More!"
• Certified Personal Trainers
• Fitness Testing & Programming
• Nutritional Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
Best! 1999 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
We've expanded our dumbbell area!
Semester Special $150
Other student rates available
Located in the Campus Plaza next to Liquors 44.
For more information call 253-7571
Cardiovascular Equipment
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbent Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
State-of-the-Art Strength Training Equipment
• Bodymasters & Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

The University of Massachusetts
Something Every Friday
Welcome Back to UMass
Comedian "Dean Edwards"

Comedian "Dean Edwards" has appeared on "Def Comedy Jam", "Showtime at the Apollo", and "Celebrity Deathmatch". He has also performed at "Carolines" in NYC and "Catch a Rising Star". Special skills: Stand-up, Impersonations; and Being on Time!
Bluewall Cafe
Friday January 28th at 8pm
The film "Blue Streak" will be shown: Wednesday in the CCA @8pm; and Friday after the show. "Double Jeopardy" will be shown: Thurday and Sunday in the CCA at 8pm. Free Give-A-Ways and Free Raffle.

Our Opinion
State of the Election

In his yearly speech to the nation, last night's State of the Union address, President Bill Clinton proposed a net $250 billion dollar tax cut over the next 10 years, according to the White House.

A White House economic advisor, Gene Sperling, said in a story from the Associated Press yesterday that the new tax cuts would be aimed to benefit working families, encourage retirement savings, and would ultimately gross about $350 billion dollars, which was very similar to Clinton's proposal for last year.

Clinton also told reporters that his proposed budget for the year 2001 will point the country toward paying off the national debt of $3.6 trillion dollars two years ahead of schedule in 2013. Along the way, the country will reportedly spend money on education, the environment and science, and technology. Tax deductions to encourage philanthropy and well as a possible $10,000 break for college tuition were also mentioned. The plan also includes a system wherein the government would increase the deduction for two-income couples to twice that of single filers.

This State of the Union Address will be the President's last, as a year from now, one of the foursome of Bill Bradley, Al Gore, George W. Bush and John McCain will likely be the center of attention.

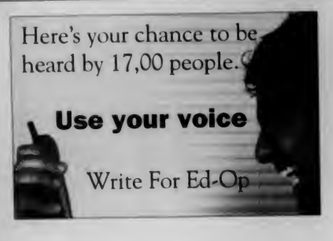
As expected, the State of the Union concentrated heavily on administration victories and detailed a plan for the future that seems to benefit all the right people. The major question we as citizens must ask ourselves, is whether or not these advancements are plausible, and if not, how long will we put up with empty promises and skeleton proposals?

Here at the Daily Collegian, we question the basic math of the reported plans. Quite simply, if there is a $250 billion tax cut, even staggered over 10 years, the country would theoretically not be able to concentrate spending on the environment, education, science and technology while also making up $3.6 trillion in roughly a dozen years. If the income is cut and the spending is increased, hypothetically speaking, the nation should fall into further debt.

If that is not what is going to happen, and we are, in fact, going to erase our debt in sooner rather than later, something has to give. Either national spending in another area is going to take dramatic hits or another faction – other than the working class and the elderly – of the population will be buried in new or higher taxes. This part of the equation will likely be ignored for as long as possible, as Clinton tries to lay a euphorically optimistic groundwork for Gore, his vice-president, to move ahead of his opponent, Bradley, in the race for the Democratic nomination for the 2000 election.

One place that the White House has taken heat during the primaries is in its surplus spending, which has been described as irresponsible by some presidential hopefuls and political theorists.

McCain, an Arizona Senator struggling for the Republican nomination, asked that 62 percent of the current surplus be put into Social Security to "make it solvent" and "keep Congress' hands off it" in a debate held in the fall in Tempe, AZ. The Senator followed up his arguably conservative spending theories with a proposed five-year, $237-billion dollar tax cut.



This, his opponent, Bush, the Governor of Texas, in comparison has offered a lofty $460-billion dollar tax-cut plan over five years.

It remains to be seen if any of these plans are plausible.

While the country is used to the vacant speech of the Republicans and Democrats alike, it does not have to continue to go along with it. National complacency has become routine, and as a result, we will continue to be left in the dark about what's going on with our nation's government, legally and economically.

While the process of changing this is a long one, the Collegian recommends that listeners do their research on the candidates and vote in the coming elections. Vote against empty promises and one-liners, until the plans offered are realistic.

Here's your chance to be heard by 17,00 people.

Use your voice

Write For Ed-Op

Drunk and disappointed: Y2K remembered

Yes, the Four Horsemen are still safely locked in the stable. Y2K is over. We made it. The world is still intact. Thirty years from now when our grandchildren ask us what we did and what we were thinking about at the turn of the millenium, this is what we'll say. At least this is what people who hang around Webster and Grayson will say:

"We turned on the computer and sat in front of it during the count down. We wanted to see if it would explode."

"I really wish the lights had gone out. I wanted it to be special, but it was just like every other stupid New Year's."

"My friends and I sat in the living room watching movies. We covered up all the clocks so we wouldn't know when it was midnight. It was the anti-New Year's."

"We went to my boyfriend's brother's house. I kissed my boyfriend at midnight."

"I had a party at my house. We ate one of those giant sandwiches from Subway."

"I was in the living room with a bunch of screaming people who were throwing champagne around. We watched the Times Square celebration on TV. I didn't actually see the ball drop because there were too many people in the way."

"I went to bed at 11:30 'cause I didn't give a s—."

Richard Anderson

"I stayed home and made a quilt. My mom wouldn't let me go out 'cause of all the crazies."

"I went to a party at my friend's house. There were too many people there and she kicked us out at 11:40. So we drove to another party and ended up listening to the ball drop in the car on KISS 108."

"I celebrated my grandparents' 59th wedding anniversary on Cape Cod. We played poker 'til twelve, watched the ball drop, and kept playing."

"I tried to get drunk, but it didn't work."

"I went to see Phish in Florida! I was there! I was there! (pumps fist) Did lots of drugs. I saw a guy flip on acid. He got naked and tried humpin' a Budget rental truck."

"I went to Cape Cod because I was phobic about psychos destroying society." (The writer wonders how being in Cape Cod would have served as protection.)

"I went to Portland, Maine. There were all these people waving signs at us and yelling, 'Jesus is coming! Jesus is coming!' And we yelled back, 'He ain't coming!'"

"My friend lit his jacket on fire with a cigar."

"I went to First Night in Boston and danced with Hare Krishnas. Well not really, but last year I did."

"I went to a Heaven and Hell party. It's a theme party where the top floor of the house is Heaven, the first floor is Eden, and the basement is Hell. There are mixed drinks in heaven, a keg in Eden, and hard liquor in Hell. There was lots of debauchery and nudity." (The writer wishes he had been there.)

"We ran outside at midnight and looked at the sky and waited for something exciting to happen."

"I got sh—faced in Boston."

"I was on the beach in Cape Cod drinking champagne and watching fireworks in the distance. It was freezing but we were too drunk to notice."

"I got to pet a dog."

"I went to Quebec City. We went to the hottest club in town. It's called Chez Dagobert. That place was crazy! Tourists and locals gettin' buck wild."

"I went to some guy's mansion in Greenwich, Connecticut." (The writer is very curious.)

"I had a party. A lot of people I didn't like showed up. I got drunk and danced around my family room."

"I worked in a grocery store selling shrimp to a lot of people who wanted to splurge on seafood. I don't know. It seems like New Year's is a big night for seafood."

"I went to Florida. It was nothing to write about."

"I went to a party in Alaska."

"We watched 'Entrapment' and got so into it that we missed the countdown. I think every millenium should involve Sean Connery." (Another respondent reported watching "Entrapment." Hmmm.)

"I went to a 'decade party. I was a disco guy, representing the 70's."

"I'm a very sad person. I hung out with my grandmother. She went to bed at 10:30. I watched TV until midnight." (The writer lauds this dedication to family.)

"We rented 'Ragtime' and watched various ball-droppings on TV." (The writer's parents)

"I toasted champagne and drank lemon liqueur in the hot tub."

"I had three different promises to fulfill so I went to three different parties. At midnight I flipped off the lights and everybody freaked. They were too drunk to notice that the TV was still working."

"I watched the date on my watch go from '99 to '00. It was pretty intense."

"As I threw up in the bathroom I heard them chanting, '5, 4, 3, 2, 1!'"

So there you have it. After all the hype, all the buzz, all the hysteria, the millenium comes and you find yourself wretching violently in the toilet. Do your grandkids a favor. Tell them that when the next millenium roles around they should try to remember that it's no big deal.

Richard Anderson is a Collegian Columnist.

I did it all for the nookie; the nookie.

I don't particularly like Limp Bizkit. I don't mind if you do, but I just haven't been able to take a real liking to them. However, as a lover of music I like to keep up on news from the industry. Every now and then I read Rolling Stone and I never miss an MTV 1515. Over break there was a Limp Bizkit story that had my hometown of Ecalpemos, Connecticut and the surrounding towns in a complete uproar. It has to do with the crime and the ensuing court case. A ground breaking legal event occurred as a result of this crime.

I'll start with the court case that occurred two towns away from mine in Danbury, CT. On the first day back to school after Christmas break, one of the worst tragedies in state history occurred. During the previous night someone had broken into the warehouse where the school buses are kept. Upon entering, the individual tampered with the brakes on four of the buses, unbeknownst to the drivers who began their work the next morning. The bus station has its own on ramp to the highway, so each of the buses starts its daily journey by launching onto the interstate. After about two miles, there is a rotary where all of the buses go their separate ways to pick up all of the children. This is where the tragedy occurred.

As all of the buses were entering the rotary, four of the drivers realized what was about to happen. When they tried to brake, they realized that their brakes were not functioning and that they were about to collide with the buses in front of them and were sure to be rear ended by the buses behind them. This mass collision did occur. There was extensive damage to all of the buses. Most of the bus drivers were unconscious, but none were believed to be dead until the explosions occurred. Many of the gas tanks had been damaged and this caused one of the biggest fireballs in Connecticut history. All of the drivers were killed.

Jorma Kansanen

The real tragedy, however, was that many of the buses which were destroyed were set to bring students on a field trip to the post office that day. The local news was covered with video footage of kids outside of their houses crying and being consoled by their parents because this year there would be no field trip to their town's fabled local post office. One brave young boy was quoted as saying, "My daddy and his daddy before him both went on the post office field trip when they were in third grade, then went on to become letter carriers for the U.S. Post Office. Now I may never have a chance. It's as though I have lost my sight. I no longer know where I am going in life."

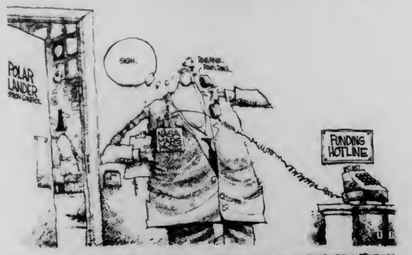
It's tragic that because of some criminal's sick prank this young man will never be able will never be able to realize his dream. Because of the prankster's actions, hundreds of innocent kids will not be able to see how the glue that holds our country together – the U.S. Postal Service- actually works. It's also kind of a bummer that twelve bus drivers died fiery deaths.

Here is where Limp Bizkit comes in. In less than a week the perpetrator was located. Turns out that the surveillance camera from the bank across the street caught him leaving the building. He then went over to the bank and withdrew money from the ATM. Sydney had video of the man and his name because of his monetary transaction.

That night the cops went to his home intending to take him into custody. As they got close to his door they could hear Limp Bizkit blaring. They busted down the door and found him lying on his couch wearing nothing but a backwards, red Yankees hat. They grabbed him, shook 'em up a bit and then brought him downtown. Then they put him in an interrogating room and supplied him with milk and cookies. (The Danbury police have an unorthodox way of working. Every suspect is given milk and cookies during their interrogation because they want to keep the suspects as relaxed as possible, in the hopes that this relaxation will lead to a simpler interrogation.)

Once everyone was in the room the questioning began. The police had no problem getting a confession out of the man. However, the answer to one of the questions set the law world on its ear. The exact exchange goes as follows.

Police: Why did you commit this atrocious crime?



Suspect: I did it all for the nookie; the nookie. So you can take that cookie and stick it up your, yeah. Stick it up your, yeah.

The police were shocked. They had no idea what the hell the man was talking about. He gave the same answer to the following thirty questions. He never showed any remorse, except that he flinched a little when he found out that he caused hundreds of kids to miss the annual field trip to the local post office.

This man's tactic has come to be known as The Limp Bizkit defense. The trial starts in a couple weeks. No one knows what to expect. A lot of law authorities believe that his defense team will use The Limp Bizkit defense as a form of an insanity plea. They're going to try to convince the jury that he was driven insane by Limp Bizkit and their song "Nookie."

I'm not here to give any legal or life advice; however, if you screw up and get caught, just find some innocent, pop culture medium upon which to lay the blame. If you can't think of anything on your own then just jump on the Limp Bizkit bandwagon, and blame it all on the nookie you hoped to attain.

Dan Vjens is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Lenny Holston Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lillien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Chanele Dubofsky Jewish Affairs Editor
Lenny Holston Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

New Year's Rockin' Eve

With all of the hype for New Year's Eve because of the millennium celebration, you would expect that for once I would actually have plans for the big night. Well, just like every year in the past, I realized on December 30 that I had absolutely nothing scheduled for New Years. There was such a buildup to the celebration that I just assumed that there would be something to do besides watching Dick Clark's New Year's Rockin' Eve, like I have done every year since I was six.

Laura Siciliano

Late December 30 I was invited to a party for the following evening. Finally, I thought of something to do. However, the party was almost an hour away, and the prospect of having to drive home in the middle of the night because I had to work the next day was not very attractive. My first mistake was leaving my plans until the last minute. My second mistake was agreeing not only to work on New Year's Day, but to work from opening to closing.

When wind of another party came my way, things started to look up. It was supposed to be a small gathering, with some close friends; it sounded like the perfect New Year's Eve party. Even better, it was only about 20 minutes from my house in the next town, so I would have no problem getting home – or so I thought.

The party itself was great, with all of the elements of a great get-together. The music was good, everyone was in a festive mood, and at midnight, the host even gave a touching toast to each of us. I had a blast, and decided that it was my best New Year's Eve ever. However, by 1:30, I began to realize that I had to be up for work in just a few hours and that I really should be getting home. I asked my designated driver (we are a safe crowd) if he was all set, and he said that he didn't mind leaving. We said our goodbyes and headed out. As we approached his car, he remarked that he was kind of low on gas, but that he had plenty to get home. I looked at his gas gauge, which was definitely on empty, and leaning more towards the negative side, but thought, against my better instincts, Everyone's gauge is different. I was sure that we would be fine.

Wrong! We had driven about two miles of our 10 mile journey, when the car began to putter and then stalled. My friend pulled off to the side of the road near the center of Shirley, MA. If you have ever been to the Shirley town common, you know what I mean when I say it is dead. If you have never been, do not bother going, because there is nothing there except an old church and some colonial houses. You expect to see Paul Revere ride by, shouting "The Redcoats are coming!" at any moment, or at least see houses without electricity or indoor plumbing.

However, there was at least one house with electricity and a light on. My friend proceeded to bang on their window for approximately 15 minutes. He could see a really old couple sitting in their rocking chairs in front of the fireplace. They were about 80 years old, and apparently they were deaf as well, because they did not hear him banging. Meanwhile, I sat in the car struggling to stay warm, until I saw a car approaching. I jumped out of the car and began to wave my arms. I saw that it was a police car as it came closer, so I was sure that we would be rescued then. However, the cruiser drove right past me, as I flagged it down beside a car with its hazards blinking.

The elderly couple finally heard my friend banging on their windows, and became a terrified, deaf, elderly couple. My friend repeatedly shouted through the window "Can I use your phone? I am broken down." He began using hand gestures, hoping that they would understand. Finally, after we had been broken down for almost 20 minutes, the couple opened their door and tossed a cordless phone at my friend and quickly shut their door. My friend called for help and the elderly man said "Tough break, lad" as he took his phone back. I think the couple was Mr. and Mrs. Walton, but I am not sure.

My friend's mother had to go get gas before she could come rescue us, but since there is nothing in Shirley, she had to go in the opposite direction to find a station that was open. So, after 45 minutes, she arrived and I thought, finally, I can go home and try to get some sleep. This became my third, fourth or fifth mistake concerning New Year's Eve (I had lost count at this point). I should have known that just being able to go once we got the gas would have been asking too much.

You see, my friend had not wanted us to get hit as we were parked on the side of the road and was concerned that his hazards would not be enough. So, he left his lights on, and me, in my cold stupor had not picked up on it. We now needed a jump, as the battery was dead. When we were finally ready to go home, I rode with his mother. I was not taking any more chances. I arrived home some time around 3 a.m.; my 20 minute ride home had grown into an epic hour and a half journey. Yet all in all, my night was good. I had fun at the party, the ride home certainly made things more interesting, and I did not see Dick Clark at all. And in my book, that made the evening a roaring success.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Letterman and a sidekick?

By Verne Gay
LA Times

NEW YORK—The debate rages, churns and roils. Friendships are strained. The subject just won't die. The New Hamashire primary? The stock market? Susan Lucci's future on Broadway? No silly. Really important stuff: Should Dave have a guest host?

Somewhere in the New York area, David Letterman is recuperating from open-heart surgery. He is doing well, very well, and his eventual return is measured in weeks. In the meantime, there's a show to put on and a February sweeps looming. And so, the Second Big Question: Should CBS and Letterman squander the recent ratings gains by airing repeats? (Everyone agrees that even a roomful of chimps could easily pick any number of top-flight episodes.)

The answer is ridiculously obvious. Yes. "Late Show With David Letteman" should have guest hosts. More the merrier. Sooner the better. And just to add a little edge to this debate: Letterman also might want to consider a semi-permanent guest host after he returns.

At this moment, Letterman and his trusted lieutenant, Rob Burnett, are cogferring on the "guest host" issue. Burnett, executive producer, said last week that they "have never been opposed to the idea of a guest host, (and) it's something we'll consider along with a lot of other options."

"Late Show" aficionados have had ntemperate disagreements on the subject. Columnist Aaron Barbhart recently posted a diatribe against the idea on his respected tvbarn.com Web site, noting that a guest host "is one of those ideas that sounds fine in the knee—that is, until somebody actually ties it."

Now, I offer eight reasons why this would be a brilliant idea. (Not 10? Sorry, this was all I could think of.)

1. Rotating hosts would be fun for viewers. Bring a different one in each night, and repeat the process the following week. Keep each night's guest host a closely guarded secret. Even the studio audience won't know until he or she walks out onstage, and, of course, viewers will tune in just to see that night's face. This could make for absurd fun: Any idiot can do this job one night, and viewers could judge just how competent a guest host is. If they're utterly incompetent, all the better.

2. No usual suspects, please. Regis Philbin is a wonderful dude, but he's also overexposed. Why not the unexpected: a sports figure (Derek Jeter), or news (Tom Brokaw), or quasi-singer (Kathie Lee Gifford, an amusing guest over the years), or TV star (Bill Cosby), or reclusive movie star (Paul Newman, who's a Letterman pal).

3. OK, usual suspects please. Fine, if it's usual suspects you want, then there are a boatload of 'em. Jerry Seinfeld (his name has been mentioned about 885 times so far). Bill Murray (the classic Letterman guest). Tony Randall (in recent years, it seems, his only job has been to appear on "Late Show").

4. Give Chris Elliott a one-nighter (but no more). Chris who? One of the more amusing Letterman regulars from years past (the Panicky Guy, the Guy Under the Seats, Marlon Brando). That's who. Elliott would be a nice blast from the past and could introduce taped highlights of some golden oldies (the Monkey Cam; the Velcro Suit).

5. Alternate guest hosts in studios on each coast. No need to do "Late Show" each night from the Ed Sullivan Theater; warm up that fancy one CBS built for Dave at CBS' Television City when he joined the network in '93. This way, the show could avail itself of Left Coast guest hosts who might be otherwise averse to making a cross-country trek for a one- or two-night stand.

6. Two words: Johnny Carson. Yes, the Great Carnac has been widely mentioned as a possible guest host, to which I say this: A singularly brilliant idea. We're not asking you to come to New York, Johnny. Just put down the tennis racket, get in the limo and go over to the CBS lot. Don't even stay for the whole show. Just come out. Bow. Accept the adoring applause. Let people see that you are still in roughly sonable health (are you?). Tell a couple of jokes. Accept more adoring applause. And then ...do whatever you want. Every paper in the country will cover this lavishly. It will be one of the TV events of the year.

7. Do a few all-music shows. Give the night over to Paul Shaffer and the CBS Orchestra, and let Paul introduce a few choice acts. Dave's favorites? Blues Traveler, David Sanborn, Lou Reed, among others.

8. And, yes, this could warm Dave up to the idea of a permanent guest host after he returns. We love ya, Dave, but the hard truth is, you just had a quintuple bypass and you are not immortal.

Why not lay off your grueling schedule just a bit? A guest host could help. In an interview several years ago, Letterman told me, "Everybody has a built-in viability, and I know I'm not kidding myself. I can't work into my mid-60s the way Carson did. My father was dead by the time he was 53, so I don't want this job to kill me."

In anybody's life you look at these landmarks as they come and you act on them as they come or you don't ... How much longer would (I) like to do this? Well, my contract runs through the year 2000. We'll see what happens then." (Note to worried readers: His contract has been extended past this year.)

Out renting? Sneakers still masterful

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Hollywood cranks out thriller movies at an incredible rate, throwing a new serial killer, crazed international terrorist, or evil crime syndicate at us every few months. Most of these movies fade from our memory faster than you can say Bone Collector, but every now and then one comes along that reminds us what the genre is capable of when handled with talent and style. 1992's Sneakers is one such movie, boasting an all-star cast, a great sense of humor, and a slick, gripping storyline.

Robert Redford stars as Martin Brice, a middle-aged man who became a fugitive from the law during college when he and his friend Cosmo (Ben Kingsley) routinely broke into political organizations' bank accounts through their computer and distributed money to whatever charitable organizations they felt were worthy. Cosmo was captured and incarcerated, but Martin managed to escape to Canada, eventually moving back to the U.S. where he now lives a second life as Martin Bishop.

As Bishop, he heads a small firm that tests security systems for large companies, banks, etc.; essentially, people hire them to break into their buildings in order to discover that building's security weaknesses. His team includes ex-CIA operative Donald Crease (Sidney Poitier), electronics wizard "Mother" (Dan Aykroyd), blind soundman Erwin "Whistler" Emory (David Strathairn), and gadgetry handyman Carl Arbegast (River Phoenix).

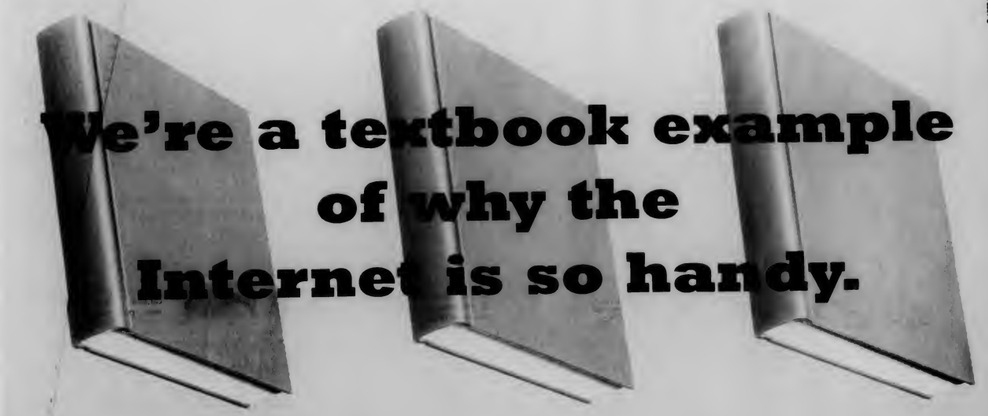
The team of "Sneakers" accepts a contract to steal a mysterious encryption-busting black box from a think tank and finds itself assailed from all sides by factions interested in obtaining the box. Martin's past begins to catch up with him, and he and his team, along with his ex-girlfriend Liz (Mary McDonnell) must undertake the most difficult sneak of their careers in order to save themselves from relentless government and private sector operatives.

Outstanding acting is primarily to thank for elevating this movie above the sea of look-a-likes. Redford is charming, witty and intense when appropriate, while at the same time, perfectly portraying a man tired from a lifetime of running and hiding from his past. Poitier's character overflows with both loyalty and volatility, giving one of the movie's most memorable performances. Aykroyd proves himself a master of deadpan humor, while remaining a credible and mature character. The late River Phoenix deserves credit for blending perfectly with his older and more experienced co-stars.

The plot of Sneakers can be difficult to follow at times, keeping the audience on its toes and seldom stopping for long-winded explications. A thoughtful and interested viewer, however, should have little trouble understanding what's going on. And frankly, even if some minor plot points slip past you, Sneakers is so much fun to watch that it really doesn't matter. This isn't an all-frowns Schwarzenegger action flick with super-human characters and a storyline that defies belief; much the opposite, the humanity of the characters is extremely well developed, humor and all. By losing themselves in their roles, the cast clearly enjoyed making the movie. And the results of this are undeniable.

Also going to the movie's credit is its tasteful use of electronic gadgetry; it doesn't drown the viewer in bizarre sci-fi technology, nor does it involve much dated computer use. The movie still stands up incredibly well in today's computer-savvy culture. Everything the characters do comes across as entirely plausible, so the action never seems too out-there, technologically speaking.

I should also note how beautiful and appropriate the direction is in Sneakers, with dim lighting and wonderfully eerie corporate innersanctum sets. The musical score is equally fantastic, a lone alto sax tracing haunting melodies with thin piano and orchestral backing. Everything about this movie exudes maturity, professionalism, and artistry; it combines the best aspects of mystery, suspense, action and drama, and I cannot recommend it strongly enough.



COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Robert Redford stars as Martin Brice in Sneakers, this week's video pick. Rent it now, before the NSA catches you.

Dentists recommend Collegian Arts to prevent tooth decay.

We're a textbook example of why the Internet is so handy.

We realize we don't have to waste your time explaining the virtues of the Internet. Let's just say that at VarsityBooks.com we've made the most of it.

Not only can you save up to 40% on your textbooks, but you'll also receive them in just one to three business days.

All on a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. What more do you need to know?

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS. VarsityBooks.com

LIVE IN CONCERT

RED HOT CHILI PEPPERS

WITH SPECIAL GUEST

Foo Fighters

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst

PRESENTED BY MTV MUSIC TELEVISION

www.redhotchilipeppers.com
www.FooFighters.com

Games Let You Do the Impossible

By Aaron Curtiss
Los Angeles Times

Only in a video game will I ever run a 100-meter dash in less than 10 seconds. With out getting off the couch. Or spilling my soda.

"International Track & Field 2000" for Sony PlayStation delivers Olympic-style action as old as the modern video game era with a dozen events ranging from cycling to canoeing. True, neither of those sports fall under the traditional umbrella of track and field—in fact, a majority of the events don't—but the result is nonetheless satisfying when played against a human opponent.

Played against a flesh-and-blood foe, "International Track & Field 2000" transforms from a monotonous wrist wrecker to a fairly exciting contest that measures the strength and coordination not of the entire body, but of two button punching fingers. Despite all the advances in graphics and memory, play on most modern track and field games remain as punishing as in the early days in the arcades.

"International Track & Field 2000" is no exception. It's simple. To run, players tap alternating buttons. The faster the buttons get tapped, the faster the character on the screen runs, swims, pedals or paddles.

Konami, the game's publisher, boasts that "International Track & Field 2000" is the only track and field game available for PlayStation. It's not hard to figure out why, as demand for the genre can't be too high.

Even so, the game's graphics are quite good. Not stellar, but better than most. Play itself is quick and tight. Each event begins with television-style introductions, and the realistic camera shots that follow the players look like they come right off "Wide World of Sports."

"International Track & Field 2000" is a great party game. It's easy to learn, and it's fast enough that others probably won't mind watching and cheering. But it's not the kind of game that commands or deserves hours of one-on-one attention.

They just don't get any more predictable than "Armorines: Project SWARM" for Nintendo 64, a first-person shooter that rips off everything from "Starship Troopers" to just about every other first-person game that came before. Yet it retains a single novel virtue that is its salvation.

After centuries of conflict, Earth has finally gotten its act together as nations denounce warfare and establish a new era of optimism and peace. But because this is a first-person shooter and not a first-person hugger, the optimism and peace can't last for long. It doesn't. Humanity faces extinction from giant interstellar insects that decide that Earth looks like a nice place to destroy.

As the planet's defenses are overwhelmed, the top-secret Armorines are called in. Basically, the Armorines are futuristic Marines with fancy mechanical suits and a high-tech arsenal designed to kill bugs.

Through snowcapped mountains, dense jungles, broiling volcanoes and sprawling desert bases, the Armorines chase the bugs. In an effort to make the story more interesting, each level has a mission objective. But most involve little more than blasting from start to finish.

The one redeeming feature of "Armorines" is the ability to play together with a friend. Sure, the game includes the standard death match mode for up to four players. But two players can strap on their gear and fight the invading bugs together. As a team, players follow the single-player adventure, but cooperate to complete each level.

For that alone, the game has promise.

A fighting game that features psychics as combatants has the potential to be about as exciting as watching paint dry. "Psychic Force 2012" for Sega Dreamcast is only marginally more interesting.

In the future, psychics are rounded up by the military and pitted against each other in an attempt to find a weapon even deadlier than nuclear warheads. The psychics rebel, but then split into their own factions and duel with their minds in gravity-free venues of the mind called Psy-Arenas.

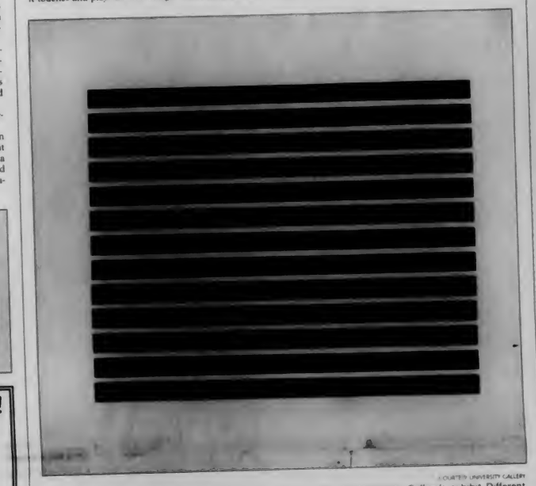
"Psychic Force 2012" pits players against each other—or computerized opponents—in completely three-dimensional fighting environments. As combatants flit from corner to corner of the arena, they trade physical punches along with psychic blasts of everything from electricity and flames to gusts of wind and gushes of water.

Each character possesses the ability to channel an element as a weapon.

That's neat, but not nearly neat enough to hang an entire game on. The fact remains that much of the combat is standard punch-and-kick fare. That it all unfolds in a three-dimensional arena makes it trickier to traverse, and ultimately that becomes more of an annoyance than a feature.

Gallery brings in the new

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff



This weekend the University Gallery will open a new exhibit featuring the work of artist Scott Prior with Light on the Familiar. The collection is a retrospective variety of 45 paintings completed between 1971 and 1999. Light on the Familiar includes a wide range of styles and approaches in the artist's earlier surreal paintings and more recent recreations of people, interiors, places and objects. The premiere of the work will be celebrated with the artist present at the University Gallery between 5 p.m.-7 p.m. today. Prior will return to the Gallery on Feb. 9th at 7:30 p.m. to conduct a slide lecture about the collection.

Prior is a UMass alumnus, having finished with a degree in printmaking. After graduation he taught himself to paint and worked among the noted "Valley Realists" who highlight contemporary subject matter. After 1980 his work shifted towards the natural observing light as it bathes places and things, how it alters during time of day or changes of season. Said of his later work, he was "particularly interested in depicting solitude and light; solitude because it can be illuminating and light because it is like God's voice- the way it touches and plays all over things." Prior finds his subjects from both photographs and life. Light on the Familiar captures a sense of propinquity and tranquility.

Also being ushered in by the University Gallery on Jan. 29th is Different Strokes: Selections from the Permanent Collection. This, the second new exhibit, features work in which the linear component occupies a vital role in describing a variety of forms, both abstract and representational. The collection is mostly comprised of prints and drawings, gathering samples from such artists as Doris Attie, William Bailey, Lester Johnson and Robert Motherwell.

The subjects in Different Strokes encompass a wide range as does the use of line in their depiction. For example, Bailey's 1968 portrait of a young girl— distinctly an individual occupying the artist's space— highly contrasts that of the broad stroked description of a man's head done by Johnson in 1966— a singularly intense interpretation of the human situations that he absorbed on New York's lower East Side.

The University Gallery is located in the lower level of the infamously designed Fine Arts Center. It is free to the public Tuesday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and on weekends from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. It is also open during all performances in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. For more information please call 545-3670.

COURTESY UNIVERSITY GALLERY

Donald Judd's untitled painting is opening this weekend with the University Gallery's exhibit Different Strokes: Selections from the Permanent Collection

Adam sez:

"Hey Arts People: Meeting Thursday at 7:30 pm. You should go!"

Attention Photo Techs:

There is a mandatory meeting today at 3pm.

BE THERE!

OR RISK FACING KARA'S WRATH...

Bartenders Have More Spirit!

Why not be a bartender?

- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield

Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0900
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

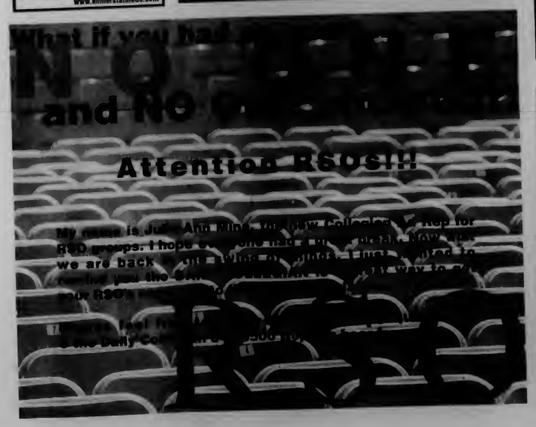
Met-Rx... EAS... ProLab... Twinlab... Muscletech... Solgar...

Get In Shape with...
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
Nutrition Supplement Discounter
Spring Break

- Largest selection of fat burners and sport supplements in Western, Mass.
- Huge selection of vitamins and herbs
- Register here to win a trip to the Bahamas!!

Coupons available online @ www.inshapeonline.com
66 University Dr. Amherst, MA (413) 549-7434

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE



Now Featuring Drink Specials

Bud + Bud Light Bottles $2.25
Rum + Coke $2.00

THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE

WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House, Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY-S&B Productions DJ's Fooz, Cromo, and Uncel

63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

Teacher's Aides

Join our instructional team in Amherst! Small, innovative alternative [illegible] (infants, toddlers and [illegible] school grades); tutor and supervise small groups [illegible] academic subjects and activities. Training provided. [illegible] high school or equivalency required, college recommended. 10.5-July (school year) contract.

Salary range $10,500-$14,200

Send resume and letter to:
Dr. Elana Aitken
c/o ALPs, Hampshire Educational Collaborative
97 Hawley St.
Northampton, MA
549-9288

AA/EOE/ADA

Pool wars continue as UMass heads off to battle New Jersey

By Matt Cracker
Collegian Staff

Since the ball dropped commemorating the turning of the century, except for a few minor problems, the world did not feel the sting of any millennium bug. The same goes for the Y2K-compliant Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team, who have been running smoothly and nearly glitch-free in the year 2000.

Although dropping a close meet to the Miami Hurricanes, where only eight points separated the two teams, the Minutewomen have since been unstoppable, dominating their competition in both the Rhode Island Invitational and a single meet against the University of Maryland-Baltimore County earlier this month.

For the third consecutive year, UMass swam away as the top team in Rhode Island, defeating a field of competitors that included the Rams and the LaSalle Explorers.

UMass took four of the competition's relay events, and among the individual winners, sophomore Anne Dettloff was the big finisher on the day, as she secured two first-place finishes in the 200 and 500 freestyle events.

Yet, Dettloff did not act alone as senior teammate Elizabeth Risotto took home the 200-yard backstroke, and fellow sophomores Andrea Kazanjian and Becky Hunnewell both came in first in their events.

Junior Sarah Newell also found victory in the 100 breast with the Minutewomen's top season time of 1:08.27.

This victory ushered the Minutewomen into their contest with the University of Maryland Baltimore County, where UMass handily defeated the Terriers, 137-106.

Kazanjian again captured the 100 freestyle and added the 50 free to her list of victories as well.

Risotto duplicated her performance in Rhode Island, again taking home the 200-yard backstroke, while Dettloff garnered a win in the 200-yard freestyle with a season-best time of 1:55.27.

Dettloff and Kazanjian would later return with Hunnewell and Lyndsay Crenshaw to defeat all comers in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

Moving above the water, Robin Velona delivered a performance that would earn her first place in the one-meter event while freshman Kate Allery had the stuff to take home the day's three-meter event.

This weekend the Maroon and White mermaids will journey to the Garden State to meet up with the Rutgers Scarlet Knights. If everything goes as planned, UMass will continue its winning ways, further dispelling any fears and laughing in the face of any Y2k hype, as they will not allow any millennium bug bites.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Elizabeth Risotto is fresh off a 200-yard backstroke victory against UMBC, beating all Terriers to the wall with a time of 2:08.09.

Men's swim hopes to scat away sour taste in trip to Piscataway

By Farrah Alexander
Collegian Staff

It appeared as though the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team was on a roll, winning three out of its last four, but last Saturday they suffered a setback when the University of Maryland-Baltimore County defeated the Minutemen at the Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool.

However, the Maroon and White didn't make it easy for the Terriers to walk away with the win. After taking an early deficit, UMass fought back before falling in a close 121-116 decision.

Now, the Minutemen will test their merits when they travel to Rutgers for their final road meet prior to the postseason. The Scarlet Knights escaped Boyden with a 121-114 victory last year, this a week before UMass ended its 1998-99 campaign with a healthy win over Fordham, who the Minutemen will challenge in its regular season finale once again.

Against the Terriers, UMass benefited from the experience of senior diving standout Ed Hefferon of Stratford, CT., who seized an individual first place finish. Hefferon surpassed his own previous best scores with 327.75 and 360.9 in the 1-meter and 3-meter diving events, respectively.

Also coming through for the Minutemen was junior Chris Arsenault, who captured first place finishes in both the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard butterfly. Arsenault's time of 1:42.06 in the 200-yard freestyle is UMass' best this season, and also surpasses his own previous best time of 1:42.29. And, he didn't stop there. Instead, he went on to improve his own best time of 1:55.40 in the 200-yard butterfly, with a new time of 1:54.35. The mark is 7th all-time in the UMass record books and the team's best this season.

Freshman Tommy Keane of Melrose, MA. tried to help stop the descent of the Minutemen by capturing two victories. His first victory was in the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 4:43.41, and his second was as part of the 800-yard freestyle relay team of Arsenault, Anthony Bianchini of Westfield and freshman Justin Houck.

After the Minutemen's victory last week at the Rhode Island Invitational held in Kingston, R.I., Houck was named the Atlantic 10 Conference Men's Swimming Rookie of the Week. Houck was honored for his impressive performance at the R.I. Invitational where he seized the first place spot in the 200-yard backstroke with the season-best time of 1:56.53, and placed fourth in the 400-yard individual medley with a time of 4:19.30.

The Minutemen won the Invitational convincingly with an overall score of 412.5 points, coming in ahead of LaSalle who came in second with 322 points. Dartmouth who finished third with 171.5 points and Rhode Island who finished fourth with 124 points.

Also honored during the month of December for his outstanding performance was junior Billy Brown, of Fullerton, CA., who was named the Atlantic 10 Conference's men's swimming and diving Performer of the Week.

Brown who has been consistently setting records, most recently did so at Syracuse in both the 100 and 200 breaststroke, where his time of 2:05.77 ranked first in the Atlantic 10 this season. Brown also ranks second in the conference this season for his time of 58.08 in the 100-breast.

The Minutemen only have two more meets in front of them before they will head to the Atlantic 10 Championship, February 17th, which will be held at Buffalo, N.Y. This Saturday, the 29th, they'll be traveling to Rutgers, and on February 5th, they'll face Fordham.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Chris Arsenault landed a pair of victories against UMBC, but the Minutemen fell five points short of victory against the Terriers. They retake the pool this weekend against the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers.

hockey

continued from page 12

action with the River Hawks. Turner is the team leader in points [11-14-25], while Blanchard [8-15-23] is right behind him on the scoresheet.

Other top offensive threats for UMass include freshman Tim Turner [3-13-16], sophomore Jedd Crumb [7-5-12], junior Kris Wallis [5-7-12] and senior captain Nathan Sell, who has scored four goals in Hockey East play since the start of the new year.

Lowell defeated Princeton in its last outing 6-2. Senior forward Chris Bell led the River Hawks with a goal and two assists in the victory. Bell is the top scorer for Lowell with 21 points [8-13] thus far. Freshman Ed McGrane is second on the club with 13 points.

The last Hockey East win for Lowell came back on Jan. 9, a 3-2 overtime win against Merrimack. Overall, the hawks have only won twice in their last 10 outings. The River Hawks will also play Providence on Friday night in a tune-up for the matchup with the Minutemen.

Don't drop the ball...
catch up on UMass sports on the internet!
www.dailycollegian.com
&
www.umassathletics.com

We take OCMP
BUFFALO Wings
DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY
256-8911
Hours: Sun.-Wed. 11 am-3am
Thurs.-Sat. 11 am-4 am
HELP WANTED :
Pays $60 to $120 Per Shift
1 TOPPING PIZZA PLUS 8 BREADSTICKS
$7.99 MEDIUM $10.99 LARGE $12.99 EX-LARGE
10 BUFFALO WINGS $5.99
1 TOPPING PIZZA & DOUBLE CHEESYBREAD
$8.99 MEDIUM $11.99 LARGE $13.99 EX-LARGE
TWO 1 TOPPING PIZZAS
$12.99 MEDIUM $15.99 LARGE $18.99 EX-LARGE
1 TOPPING PIZZA
$6.99 MEDIUM $8.99 LARGE $10.99 EX-LARGE

Collegian Sports
awww yeah baby.

cover your butt.
better yet, help cover your
[tuition].
College can mean maneuvering through a lot of different obstacles, but tuition payments shouldn't be one of them. In Army ROTC, you'll have a shot at a scholarship worth thousands. And make friends you can count on. Talk to an Army ROTC advisor today. We've got you covered.
LEADERSHIP EXCELL
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
To start your adventure, call the UMASS Army ROTC Department at 545-2321.

Earn your Master's degree in one year...
and see the world!
Let La Salle University show you the way.
The Master's of Science in Global Management of Technology is your one-of-a-kind opportunity.
- Live and study here and abroad
- Intern at an international company
- Earn your Master's degree in one year

Limited enrollment—don't delay!
Send for your FREE information packet now!
(888) LSU-7480
or e-mail gmt@lasalle.edu
La Salle University • 1900 West Olney Avenue • Box 826 • Philadelphia, PA 19141
www.lasalle.edu/gmt

UM men's indoor take fourth place finish in to New England-riddled quad-meet in Durham

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

After a storybook 12-2 season, Massachusetts men's indoor track coach Ken O'Brien never expected the 2000 edition of the squad to duplicate the success of last year. After all, O'Brien reasoned, the team had lost several key players to graduation, and while the new crop of rookies seemed promising, they were untested at the collegiate level.

"I tried to be very open-minded with this team," O'Brien mused, thinking back to his pre-season mindset. "I was trying to guard against setting an unrealistic set of expectations. I didn't want [the team] to feel as though they had to match last year's performances right off the bat."

Fast-forward two months. On the heels of three solid performances, it seems as though the Minutemen have picked up right where they left off last year. At the New England Challenge Cup Finals on Jan. 21, the Maroon and White finished a respectable fourth among an extremely competitive field. Considering the tenacity of the opponents, O'Brien was pleased with the result.

"Against the best teams in New England, there's no breathing room in any of the events for any of the athletes," he noted. "They're under a real severe test regardless of what event they have to be in. We ended up finishing just about where we felt we could."

Next up for the squad is a trip to Durham, N.H., where the Minutemen will test their skills against New Hampshire, Holy Cross and Central Connecticut. O'Brien is eagerly awaiting the trip, since the meet, which is referred to as the "Border War," is one steeped in tradition.

"It kind of represents one of those old-fashioned rivalry weekends," O'Brien mused. "We've had this meet for 10 years, and I don't think it's going to be decided by more than three or four points."

Last year, the Maroon and White placed ahead of the pack, and O'Brien feels that his team has a chance to excel again. "I think it's a nice level of competition for us right now," he said. "It gets us away from the bigger meets, but it's still very intense."

At the Finals, junior Hugh Reid placed third in the 500-meter with a time of 1:06.08, while junior Marc Sylvander racked up another solid showing in the 400-meter, placing third with a time of 49.85.

Meanwhile, senior Vic Morency continued to shine as he has all season, setting yet another shot put personal record with a toss of 51'8.25".

O'Brien beamed about the success of his star thrower. "He has great athletic ability and has just applied himself over his four years here with the greatest work ethic you can imagine," O'Brien observed. "You basically have an athlete that can do all four throwing events [javelin, discus, shot put, and weight throw] probably as well as any person in the country."

While the success of the squad weighs heavily on the shoulders returning players, the rookies have held their own in the shadows of their more experienced elders. Several first-year players displayed poise and talent, despite their lack of experience against collegiate-level competition.

"The rookies have been a pleasant surprise," O'Brien commented. "We have a couple of people who have stepped up, and that's always nice to see with a first-year performer. They're our insurance policy for the future."

One notable rookie showing was freshman Reggie Oden's first place finish in the triple jump at BU, with a jump of 43.7". Freshman Dan Closon also thrived during his college debut at BU, placing second in long jump (21'10.75") and third in triple jump (42'4.25").

Since the season is young, O'Brien exudes a prudent sense of optimism about his squad. "I'm very pleasantly surprised," he said, "and I feel as though we're well on the way to becoming a great team."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Vic Morency and the men's indoor track squad take on three New England rivals this weekend in Durham, N.H.

Goten
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE
HOURS:
Tuesday - Sunday
Tue., Weds., Thur., Fri. and Sat. 5:30 till close
Sunday - 2 till close
Come sit and relax as our chefs exhibit their talents in preparing for you the finest foods at your table.
For nearly 30 years our large sized tables and private dining room have made Goten a favorite for birthdays anniversaries, meetings and private functions of all kinds
Affordable seafood, chicken, and steak dinner specials are available daily except Saturday so come in today and try our fine Japanese cuisine
Now accepting OCMP
Open for Valentines Day
104 Old Amherst Road • Off Route 116 • On bus route Sunderland • (413) 665-3628 ben harper

& the innocent criminals
THUR FEB. 3 8:00PM
John M. Greene Hall
Smith College - Northampton
Advance tickets available at B-Side Records in Northampton.
For The Record in Amherst, and all Strawberries Record Stores.
To charge-by-phone call ProTix at 1 (800) 477-6849.
Purchase online at tickets.com.
Presented by Monty Concerts

SURERBOWL SUNDAY LITURGY
Come to Mass at 4 p.m. this Sunday, January 30, 2000 and be home in time for the game!!
Newman Center
472 N. Pleasant St.

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
Announcing the Opening on
FRIDAY, JANUARY 28
Visit us for a great selection at a great price, conveniently located at University Drive, across the street from Rafters.
Friday, January 28
UNIVERSITY LIQUORS

The Sexiest Book in the Bible
A book in the Bible that talks about Sex, Dating, and Marriage? That's right. It is called the Song of Solomon and is full of practical wisdom that still applies today in the area of relationships. Here are just some of the topics that will be covered:
- Keys for developing healthy dating relationships
- Ways to recover from hurtful relationships
- Secrets for establishing a life-long love
- Gateway to the ultimate sexual experience

This Sunday night
January 30th @ 6:00pm
in the Meeting room of the Jones Library
(43 Amity St.; just west of the Amherst town common)
Brought to you by MERCYhouse - church of the next generation www.knowmercy.org

Men's gym sinks Middies, eyes weekend with M.I.T.

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

Last weekend, at its first home meet of the New Year, Massachusetts men's gymnastics team deep-sixed the Navy Midshipmen. The Minutemen took the gold with a season high of 222.050 against Navy's 214.800.

"I think we're doing great," said head coach Roy Johnson. "We hit 66 percent of our routines last weekend – just about where we stood this time last year. A lot of the guys are starting to step up and it showed at the meet."

Among those top finishers for the Minutemen was senior co-captain Jeff LaVallee who won the all-around competition with a 56.800 and captured four first-place finishes on individual events. He placed first on both the parallel bars with a 9.40 and the still rings with a 9.75, while sporting a mark of 9.85 to take the blue ribbon on the horizontal bar. And the Stafford Springs, Conn. native took the first place spot, breaking the school record, on the pommel horse with a near perfect 9.95.

But LaVallee was certainly not the only one to bring in some high scores for the Maroon and White. Junior Clayton Kent took second on floor with a 9.40 and Junior Bryan McNulty won the event with a high 9.60. And representing the freshmen were some great pommel horse scores brought in by Justin Hammar (9.55) and Brett Nelligan (9.50), who finished second and fourth respectively.

Recovering from a back injury, sophomore Matt Plumner was ready to come out and play. The New Jersey native took third on pommel horse (9.35) and tied for third on parallel bars (9.20), showing the team that he means business.

Both juniors Mike Alexander and Andy Leis posted some good scores as well last weekend. Leis claimed two second-place finishes on the parallel bars (9.30) and the high bar (9.30) while Alexander took the silver on vault with a 9.25.

So the Minutemen are off to a good start. They are six points away from their school record, which can easily be beaten this year. "It's still early in the season," said Johnson. "We have a fairly young team and some of the older guys are starting out a little slow. But we're trying to upgrade our routines a bit so we can peak when Michigan comes here. It'll be great to have the defending National Champions here in Amherst."

The Michigan Wolverines will go against the Minutemen on Feb. 19, but there are several meets for UMass to conquer in the meantime. Tomorrow, the squad will travel to Boston to go head-to-head with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's a team that UMass should handle easily.

"We're going to try to improve our hitting percentage this weekend," Johnson said. "And we're going to try out some of the new guys on each of the events."

So, the Minutemen will be in action again in only a day, but they hope to peak in about three weeks. Michigan will be a tough competitor and UMass a valiant opponent, but, even still, Johnson said that the Maroon and White have a 1 in 10 chance of beating them.

The Minutemen are hoping he's wrong.

Eddie's ready to carry bulk of load for underdog Tennessee

By Richard Oliver
Newsday

ATLANTA – At a chiseled 6-3 and 240 pounds, Tennessee running back Eddie George is built to bulldoze. Or, in the case of the upstart Titans, to shoulder unlikely hopes.

"He's going to do every single thing in his power to get us where we've got to go," Titans General Manager Floyd Reese said. "Eddie brings us a little something."

In Sunday's Super Bowl XXXIV against the St. Louis Rams, George will be asked to bring a lot of that little something. The Titans, 7-point underdogs, are 13-0 when George carries the ball at least 27 times. There's little doubt that Coach Jeff Fisher will survey that past when considering the present.

"Everyone in America knows that we've got Eddie George," fullback Lorenzo Neal said Wednesday, with his breath coming out in foggy wisps in near-freezing temperatures outside the team's hotel. "He can run the ball and is very physical. We know that it has to be a big key for us."

George touched the ball 20 times in a 24-21 victory over the Rams Oct. 31 at Nashville. He gained 68 yards on 17 carries and added 35 on three catches, including a 17-yard touchdown reception.

Bad news for the Rams: George, 26, is better now than then. In contrast to the first three years of his career, the 1995 Heisman Trophy winner for Ohio State has gathered steam in the stretch this season. After averaging 3.6 yards per carry over the first half of the schedule, he averaged almost 4.6 yards in the final eight regular-season games, his best career average in any half-season.

George, whose offseason workouts include exhausting uphill sprints, marathon weightlifting sessions and a strict diet, has four of his five 100-yard games this season in the past eight games, including two in the playoffs. He's averaged 4.4 yards on 80 postseason carries, including a 68-yard TD.

"I think Eddie has done the work," Fisher said. "He has thought about what he wants to do, how he wants to go about it. He wants to be the best and has started to think about what that means. That's a good sign, I think."

Except for the Rams' defense, of course. St. Louis led the league in rushing defense, only 74.3 yards per game. However, with the Rams winning games by an average of almost three touchdowns, opponents have run almost 100 times less than St. Louis.

"I learned Eddie George is all that they say he is," Rams defensive tackle D'Marco Farr said of his first game against him. "When you run into him, it hurts."

"I don't like tackling him," Saints cornerback Ashley Ambrose said after George battered New Orleans for 155 yards on 28 attempts in a 24-21 victory Oct. 17 at the Superdome. "A guy like that gets in the secondary. ... Look at me, I'm 180. I'm trying to bring that guy down by myself and it's tough."

That's part of the game plan, of course, for a runner whose national profile is growing with every lick laid on a defender. This week, George has the opportunity to shed the label of being the best running back almost no one has seen.

"I don't know if he's underappreciated," Titans offensive tackle Brad Hopkins said. "I guess it's almost a lack of exposure. People know who he is, they know what he's done and that he's had successful seasons consecutively. But they don't really know who he is or what this team is about.

"They don't know what motivates him and gets him moving down the field like he does. But I can definitely say that the last three or four weeks, people are starting to recognize that, and hopefully, they'll recognize it more so on Sunday."

That will come. George thinks, if the ball comes to him time and again. He's counting on it. "I would hope to get 25 to 30 carries, because that means we're doing what we want to do," he said. "It's good to know you're wearing the defense down."

And carrying a team to heights it never expected.

amc
Silence is Golden
No child under 5 to any PG-13 or R rated film after 6PM.
Mt. Farms 4 • Mt. Farms Mall
584-9153
THE HURRICANE: R
Today at (4:10 @ $3.50) 7:10 10:10
Sat 12:30 (4:10@ $3.50) 7:10 10:10
Sun at 12:30 (4:10 @ $3.50) 7:40
Mon - Thur at (4:30 @ $3.50) 8:00
PLAY IT TO THE BONE: R
Today at (4:20 @ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sat at 12:40 (4:20 @ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sunday at 12:40 (4:20 @ $3.50) 7:50
Mon - Thur at (5:10 @ $3.50) 8:10
STUART LITTLE: PG
Today at (4:40@ $3.50)
Sat at 12:10 2:30 (4:40@ $3.50) 7:20 9:20
Sun at 12:10 2:30 (4:50 @ $3.50) 7:30
Mon - Thur (5:30@3.50) 7:30
THE GREEN MILE: R
Today at (4:00@ $3.50) 7:50
Sat at 12:00 (4:00@ $3.50)7:50
Sun at 12:00 (4:00 @ $3.50) 7:30
Mon - Thur (4:20@ $3.50) 7:30
$3.50 'Twi-lite' Show Daily!

www.DailyCollegian.com

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons aat www.cantones.com

BASSES and TENORS! Thursday February 3 is your chance to audition for MASS APPEAL, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass. Email Erica TODAY at massappeal@mailcity.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000 Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

Need a credit? Enjoy small classes? Try a one-credit course at the Hillel House. JS 191L Woman in Judaism, JS 191M Theatre and the Holocaust, JS 191P Israeli Dancing, JS 191R Wrestling with the Book of Job, JS 191I Writes of Spirit: a journey to the self, JS 191Q Exploring Jewish Identity, JS 192G Jewish Stories and Storytelling. Sign up today! Call 549-1710 for more information.

EMPLOYMENT

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Paraprofessionals Special education and regular education paras needed on elementary and secondary levels. Send resumes to: Superintendents Office, Amherst Regional Schools, 170 Chesnut St, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

Substitute Teachers elementary, secondary and RN substitutes needed. Send resume to: Superintendent's Office, Amherst public Schools, 170 Chesnut st, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work for an exciting College focused Internet company at your school! Looking for motivated individuals with strong leadership, entrepeneurial and busssiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay and options! Contact info@uconnections.com.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Work study or substitute teachers positions available. $7.00 per hour. Children 18 months to 5 years old. Experience with young children preferred. Call Ellen at 549-1167.

Undergraduate Bussiness Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills and General Bussiness Experience. 10-15 hours per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Bussiness, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2166.

Like Kids? Work study/childcare worker and/or babysitters needed on Monday evenings throughout the semester. $7.00/hour. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union, or call 545-0865.

Get Paid to Surf the web. its absolutely free. See for yourself. www.geocities.com/eureka/suite/1969

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Internships/Jobs: meaningful, rewarding, unique! 4 GREAT Co-ed Children's Camps in NY, PA and ME are looking for fun-loving, children-focused staff. Swim, water-ski, boating, tennis, outdoor leaders, media, land-sports, creative and performing arts specialists, plus Cabin and Group leaders. ACA-accredited programs. Benefits: Salary, Room, Board, Travel and Laundry. Apply to all 4 via 1 form, at www.horizoncamps.com or call (800)544-5448 for info.

Movers Part time positions available for winter intersession and spring semester. Starting pay $8.00 per hour. Located close to UMASS. Call 584-4746

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

Lockers for rent. Cheap! Come to Commuter services, 428 Student Union.

FOR SALE

SNOWBOARD BOOTS FOR SALE! Women's BURTON Rulers. Excellent condition. $75 Caroline 397-0922.

Americard phone cards 3.9 cents per minute. Still the best for calls to family and friends at the University Store.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom in 2 Bedroom apartment. Looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker. 3/4 mile from campus. Effective Immediately! Call Alissa 253-4275.

Large Furnished Room with private bath. Quiet Country setting. $350 a month. 413-367-9286.

ROOMATE WANTED

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Cheap heating oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Coop. Come to commuter Services, 428 Student union or call 545-0865.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Aiwa Stereo System. 3cds very powerful. Originally $700 buy for $300 or B/O. Call 6-3489.

Competition-Series Equipment at sick prices that need to go FAST- Orion XTR-series separates, amplifier, sub, alpine deck, Boston acoustic pro-series separates; Denon receiver as well: call Will @ 665-0343.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Come place ads here in The Collegian

Please call us at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

STAURDAY, JAN. 29

Comedy—MISSION IMPROVable; the UMass improvisational troupe, will perform in room 163 of the Campus Center at 8 p.m. All are welcome.
Auditions – Auditions for the Chorale

NOTICES

Chamber Choir and Women's Choir will be held all week. Sign-up for a time outside FAC 253. Musical excerpts to prepare for the audition can be picked up in the music office. Call 545-0457 or 545-2227 for more information.
Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.
Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from SOM will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.
Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape, and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.
Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings to those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Your announcement could fit this space

Join our team!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is always looking for writers who are willing to cover news stories.

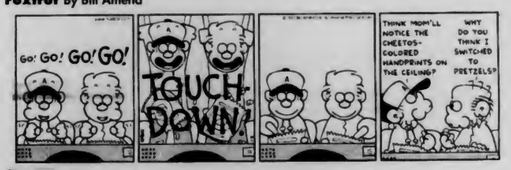
If you are interested please contact Mary at 545-1762

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — JANUARY 28, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Schools: Good Enough for All			Digital Divide		People-Here
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Kids-Darndest	Cosby	Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)	News		Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Kids-Darndest	Cosby	Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)	News		Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Boy-World	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Hughleys	20/20	News		Nightline
WLVI		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Jamie Foxx	Jamie Foxx	Steve Harvey	For Your Love	News	Friends		Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (R) (In Stereo)		Figure Skating World Pro Championship – Technical Program. (R)		News			Tonight Show
WTXX	9	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Sheets (R)	Dilbert (R)	News	[Real TV (R)	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence (R) (In Stereo)		Figure Skating World Pro Championship – Technical Program.		News			Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World's Wildest Police Videos		Greed: The Series (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (R) (In Stereo)		Figure Skating World Pro Championship – Technical Program.				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	Gallery						Auction Continues
WGGB	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Boy-World	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Hughleys	20/20	News		Nightline
WSBK		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Sheets (R)	Dilbert (R)	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Somewhere in Time" (1980, Fantasy) Christopher Reeve, Jane Seymour.							"Sixteen Candles" (1984) Molly Ringwald.
A&E		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Vengeance"		Biography: John W. Gacy		Investigative Reports (R)		Poirot "The Double Clue"		Law & Order "Trophy"
CNN	32	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Ghostbusters" (1984, Comedy) Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd.					Best of Saturday Night Live
DISC		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Kangaroos		On the Inside "Alcatraz" (R)		Newe		Discover Mag.	Storm Warning! "Spring" (R)	On the Inside "Alcatraz" (R)
ESPN		Sportscenter		NFL e Greenest Game				NFL Dream Season (R)		Tennis: Australian Open – Women's Final. (Live)			Sportscenter
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Cybill		Chicago Hope (In Stereo)		"The Man With Three Wives" (1993, Drama) Beau Bridges.				Once and Again	Mediation
MTV		MTV Jams "Super Bowl Edition"		News	Meking-Video	Chrivelne Aguilera: What e Girl Wants (R) (In Stereo)				Say What Krke	Making-Video	News (R)	Choose
NICK		All That	Celdog	Henry and June Jam (In Stereo)						Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies	Bev. Hillbillies
SCIFI		Sliders "Slide Like an Egyptian"		Brimstone "Poem" (In Stereo)		Ferocepe "Family Ties"		Sliders "Eye of the Storm"		Lexx: The Series "Lyekka"		Ferocepe "Family Ties" (R)
TLC	26	Home Again	Home Again	Mega Tech "Below New York"		Spying Game: Tools		Spying Game: Cloak & Dagger		Spying Game: To Catch a Spy		Spying Game: Tools
TNT		In the Heat of the Night		ER "Friendly Fire" (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: New York Knicks at Atlanta Hawks. (In Stereo Live)						Friday Night at the Super Bowl (Live)
USA		Baywatch "Coronado del Sou"		JAG "Rendezvous" (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger		"Road House" (1989, Drama) Patrick Swayze, Kelly Lynch. (In Stereo)					"American"
HBO		Real Sports (R)		Inside the NFL (In Stereo)								Comedy Hef	Dennis Miller
MAX		"Stella" (1990, Drama) Bette Midler. (In Stereo)		PG-13								Erotic
SHOW		(4:45) "All Bud"		"A Night at the Roxbury" (1998) Will Ferrell.								Red Shoe

Baldordash By Tim Dwyer

Nona By Anna Faktorovich



Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Garry Trudeau

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Garry Trudeau

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Garry Trudeau

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're in need of something that is rare but available. Pinpointing just where you can acquire it will be the hard part today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're growing tired of the same old complaints, and today you'll finally have the opportunity to do something definite about them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Focus on that which has been out of reach in recent days or weeks. If you broaden your overall view, you'll realize how near your goal really is.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have some bad news to deliver to someone close to you today, but you'll do it with a becoming grace. Things will improve!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find it difficult, if not impossible, to explain to others how to do a certain thing, so you may just have to do it yourself today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – It's important that you get up-to-date information to all those who need it as soon as possible today. Don't wait until you get the go ahead!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're in the mood to do something rash and impulsive today, but you must draw the line at anything threatening harm to anyone else.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It's up to you to determine today if things are being done up to par – at home and at the workplace. Your word is law, at this time!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be seeing things in a new way at this time. Before the day is out, you'll want to share your new perspective with those closest to you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Someone may come to you with "I told you so" on his or her lips, but the truth is that the final verdict is not in yet. You'll prevail yet!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A new interest is likely to grab you before the day is out, and you'll want to spend as much time as possible exploring this new opportunity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're going to have to make some sort of an apology before the day is out, and you'll want to weigh your words quite carefully.

Quote of the Day

"Things are getting worse, but I feel a lot better, and that's all that really matters to me."

–notorious chick band Counting Crows

"UMass Student Wins Major Prize!!"

You could see your name here, John Q. Student, as a winner of the Daily Collegian's Comics Page Sweepstakes.

You have been selected as a Finalist in our Sweepstakes. All you have to do is submit an original comic strip to the Collegian office to insure that you will be in the drawing for the winner. If you do, you could see the words a free copy of the UMass Daily Collegian.

You've WON

Offer void where prohibited by law. Residents of NH, VA, and ME excluded from contest. Employees of the UMass Daily Collegian and their families not eligible to win. Approximate cash value of prize: $ 0.00.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Breakfast

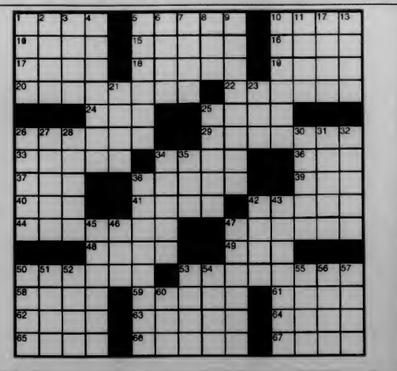
Cream of Wheat
Omelets
Eggo Waffle French Toast
Cheesy Hash Browns

Lunch

Soup du Jour
Charboiled Chicken Sandwich
Broccoli-Rice Casserole
Falafel Pokemon

Dinner

Soup du Jour
Beef Fajita
Baked Zitty
Tofu Fajita
Salad Bar



ACROSS
1 Burden
5 Vise
10 Scottish lake
14 Grate
15 Boring tool
16 Music halls
17 Lhasa —
18 Academy founder
19 — -edged; like some securities
20 Delphinium
22 Swoons
24 Primate
25 Foot part
26 Endorsed a check
29 Asks about
33 Acted like a wolf
34 Half-goat, half-man
36 Dock dweller
37 Winter ailment
38 Side dish
39 Psyche part
40 "Piggy," e.g.
41 Sword handle
42 Piano fixer
44 Swiss singer
47 Like parchment
48 Depend
49 Loop trains
50 Act like a guard
53 Ratatouille ingredient
58 Cambodia's place
59 Amphitheater
61 Ken of "thirty-something"
62 "At what time?"
63 Rustic home
64 Clock sound
65 Social misfit
66 Closes
67 Glimpses

DOWN
1 Spoken
2 California valley
3 Ex-superpower
4 Washington city
5 Set an upper limit on
6 Dilly
7 Seaweed product
8 Bumped into
9 Deep
10 More sluggish
11 Norse god
12 Gaul
13 Fedoras
21 Made haste
23 Pub brew
25 Crouch down
26 Big-hearted person
27 Ice hut
28 Pasted
30 Ms. Cara
31 Enthusiastic
32 Yarn
34 — godmother
35 "— hands on deck!"
38 Varnishes
42 Bath powder
43 Final outcomes
45 Gofer's job
46 Author Tolstoy
47 Praline ingredients
50 Chess piece
51 Former tennis great
52 Row
53 Hump-shouldered bovine
54 Platoon
55 Tennis pro Nastase
56 Good-natured
57 Calligraphy supplies
60 Cheerleader's cry

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Y	E	A	S	T		C	L	A	P		W	O	O	L
E	M	O	T	E		H	O	S	E		A	B	L	E
L	I	N	E	N		A	F	A	R		S	I	D	E
P	L	E	A	S	A	N	T		C	H	E	S	S
			M	E	L	T		S	N	I	T
S	T	R	E	S	S		M	O	J	O		N	I	T
T	O	U	R		O	L	I	O	S		B	O	N	Y
A	R	T			O	E	R		M	A	P
I	S	N	T		I	S	L	E	S		C	A	N	E
D	O	G	E	A	P	E	D		V	E	L	D	E	D
			M	E	S	S			M	A	I	S	E
L	A	D	L	E		M	A	N	D	A	R	I	N
O	B	O	E		J	O	E	Y		G	R	O	D	E
B	O	O	R		A	U	R	A		S	E	L	L	S
S	U	M	S		W	R	I	N		T	R	E	E	S

1-7-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

Night Editor: Adam Mortignetti
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor: Alan Bourque
Production Staff: Seth Koenig, Lisa Matosi

Minutewomen bulldoze over Temple in conference clash

Maroon and White defense reduces Lady Owls to rubble

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

There must have indeed been thieves in the Temple prior to last night's women's basketball war at the William D. Mullins Center. After all, it appears someone completely robbed the Lady Owls of their game.

The Massachusetts Minutewomen (9-10, 6-2 Atlantic 10) took advantage of a woeful showing by visiting Temple to pound the Lady Owls, 69-42, in A-10 conference action. UMass jumped out to a 22-8 lead over the game's first 14:30 and never looked back, as Temple (5-14, 0-8 A-10) could manage only 20 points from the field in the entire contest.

UMass	69
Temple	42

"Obviously, this was a victory that we really needed," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "Our focus was definitely defensively, making sure we did the things we needed to do, and I thought we did a solid job."

Neither team had much rhythm in the opening frame, as play on both ends of the court was marred by indecision and lack of execution. The nets hung lonely until the 18:19 mark, when UMass forward Caroline Nehls knocked down an eight-foot turnaround from the right baseline to open the scoring. Temple then took its only lead of the evening, on three straight free throws by center Lisa Iakubowicz.

The next six-plus minutes were all Maroon and White, as the home team hammered out a 16-0 run behind the red-hot shooting of its Kathy Coyner / Tonia Thomas guard tandem. The latter punctuated the run by picking Lady Owl Nicole Chaszar's pocket at midcourt, and streaking across the hardwood for an uncontested lay-up.

Temple's ineptitude on offense, particularly down low, had coach Kristen Foley calling repeated timeouts to reshuffle her plan of attack. The Lady Owls didn't get their first true paint points until the 4:01 mark of the first half, when forward Elizabeth Bartron banked home a short jumper to cut the Umass lead to 12 at 22-10. But a free throw by freshman sensation Jennifer Butler, and buckets from Coyner and forward Nekole Smith, staked the UMass lead back to 16 at the break, 27-11.

Not wanting any semblance of a second-half letdown, O'Brien switched up her defensive scheme in the second set and implored her squad to keep hustling. But after holding the Lady Owls to 2-of-21 shooting from the field in the first half, the Minutewomen showed a confidence defensively that reduced the details of their D to an afterthought.

"In the second half we changed up a little bit, and played some man-to-man," O'Brien said. "We did some good things, and we got beat on some things. It was a solid defensive effort; my only disappointment was too many fouls, and giving up too many free throw attempts."

As the second half got under way, it was clear that Foley's troops still couldn't muster an answer to the dominating paint play of the Maroon and White. Smith showed off some jaw-dropping skills at the 15:44 mark, taking a feed from Coyner and redirecting it, via a sweet left-handed touch pass, to the lurking Butler underneath. The freshman calmly canned the layup, leaving the Lady Owls shaking their heads in frustration.

Coyner then showed the Mullins faithful just how far she's come since ankle surgery, blowing past Temple's Stacey Smalls and faking a dish to Iaywana Bradley on the wing before again feeding Butler under the hoop for an easy deuce. Thomas followed up her backcourt mate's acrobatics with some firepower of her own, drilling a silky smooth trifecta from the left baseline to pad the UMass cushion to 49-26.

"With the job that Caroline, Jennifer and Nekole have done in the post, they're going to get all the attention," O'Brien said. "So the guards are going to have open shots. If they can just knock them down, they're going to stretch those people back out. That gives us a nice inside-outside game."

The Minutewomen went into cruise control over the game's final minutes, as freshman guard Kristen Cannon lived up to her name with five big points off the bench. The 69-42 final score left O'Brien's troops wearing victory grins, even as they gear up for Saturday's showdown with A-10 leading St. Joseph's.

"St. Joe's is different from any team that we've played," O'Brien said. "They really execute their offenses, and they have three kids that can really score. So we've got to be smart about who we're playing in particular situations, and we'll still have an advantage inside. Saturday will be a war."

This particular war is set to kick off at the Mullins Center at 2 p.m.

Kathy Coyner, above, has shown steady progress since her mid-December surgery. The junior floor general scored a team-high 13 points in last night's drubbing of visiting Temple.

Reluctant Coyner lets her guard down about bad ankle

Aaron Saykin

When UMass point guard Kathy Coyner drove to the basket for a fast-break lay-up last night, the almost always-dependable junior captain didn't have enough lift to make the freebie over Temple reserve guard Regan Apo.

Perhaps more compelling than her missed lay-up was the reason why she missed it. She's playing on a painful right ankle that she humbly refuses to admit is bothering her. As she sat in the pressroom of the Mullins Center after the game, she would not publicly reveal her level of discomfort.

"I don't notice it during the game. It's never a conscious thought," she said of her ankle to the media. Yet after the press conference, when the room full of reporters cleared, Coyner acknowledged that she was not playing at 100 percent.

"I do have some pain, but hopefully I won't notice it as much," she admitted.

A fierce competitor who will never complain, Coyner was in enough discomfort to opt for surgery in mid-December. Playing perhaps the best basketball of her three-year collegiate career, Coyner could no longer endure the pain that increased as it accompanied her for three years. She tolerated a bone-chip injury in her right ankle that would be intolerable for most any other basketball player. She was simply hoping that she could hold out until the team had a two-week break between games from December 14 to the 28.

"I was telling the trainer after practice that it hurts, and she'd tell me, just nine more days, just eight more days, seven more days," she said. "But then we beat Stanford, and I wondered if I really wanted to sit out for three weeks."

Eventually, Coyner came to the point when she could no longer take the pain, although she was playing extremely well for a UMass squad that depends on her calming influence. Her body just couldn't keep up with her desire to continue playing.

"It was a big decision to have surgery because I knew that I'd be out at least two weeks," Coyner said. "... Just that chance to someday play without the pain made me wonder what kind of player I could be. That's what really convinced me."

She admits that sitting and watching for the next three weeks was difficult. Not since her first game as a high school player had Coyner ever sat out. She had no idea what it would be like to be rusty. She just knew it might be a while before she could get back to the peek level of play that injury unfairly disrupted.

Struggle was inevitable.

Upon her return, her mobility was severely limited. The behind-the-back dribble that once highlighted her repertoire of moves disappeared. The quick-dribbling point guard became more of a stationary passer.

And so she struggled a bit.

"The first two weeks I played after surgery I was actually in more pain than I was before I had the surgery, and I wondered, did I make a mistake?" said Coyner, who feels that the pain only becomes a factor after the game, but not during it. "Right now, I'm at the level of pain I was at [the time] of my surgery. Hopefully it's going to get better."

After a month for recovery, Coyner finally seems to have her perimeter touch back – a facet of her versatile game which had been lacking until she buried three of five three-pointers in last night's win over the Owls. It couldn't have come at a better time for a team lacking an outside punch.

Coyner's game may have stumbled a bit, but she expected that and handled it quite well. Her surgery was just another smart decision by a truly courageous point guard.

Aaron Saykin is a Collegian columnist

UM women hope to swallow up competition in the Swamp

By James Piehl
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team will test their talent against a jungle of national ability this weekend. The Minutewomen are poised to take on the eighth ranked Penn State Lions & the 19th-ranked Florida Gators in Gainesville.

Coach Dave Kuzara

Mandy Mosby

UMass is coming off a tough loss to the University of New Hampshire on January 22 in Amherst. The 13th-ranked Wildcats narrowly slipped by UMass with a score of 192.925-191.950. This marks UM's first loss of the season leaving them with a 3-1 record.

Senior Mandy Mosby took the floor exercise with a career-high 9.950, as freshman Jen Gendron finished in second with 9.925. The highly touted freshman Katie Teft won both the uneven bars and the balance beam events with scores of 9.950 and 9.875, respectively. Teft also finished second on the vault, tying teammate Gendron.

With her strong performance for the week, Teft won UMass/WHMP Athlete-of-the-Week honors. Teft's uneven bar routine garnered a career-high 9.950, which ties the school's all-time mark in that category.

The Minutewomen will need strong executions from every squad member in order to oust their top ranked foes this weekend. During their journey to the sunshine, UM will be relying on three fresh frosh to pick up any slack for the team. If recent history is any kind of indication then UMass looks ready for the challenge, at least on paper. Gendron is ranked 69th nationally in the all-around while Donoghue comes in at 138th. Gendron is second nationally in the floor exercise behind teammate Mosby. The third frosh for UM is the well-rounded Teft.

However, it would be unfair to say the test lies solely in the performances of these young ladies. When facing any nationally ranked powerhouse, it's crucial for every lady to do her part. Minutewomen have to look to their veterans for the leadership necessary to overcome opposition of this stature.

UMass will need Mosby to continue her impressive ways and lead the squad with help from other senior squad member Rene Franklin. The junior heirs apparent to the leadership role on the gym team will have to show their prowess in order for UM to capture a victory from these titans. Junior Jobi Goldberg will need to make her presences felt with some strong routines while other junior Mary Moore must put her best performance forth if UMass hopes to tame the Lions and wrestle a win from the Gators.

In short, the team must function like a well-oiled machine in order to legitimize a claim to national fame. It is one thing to look good on paper, but if the Minutewomen can back it up this weekend with two impressive showings, then they shall receive the acclaim and kudos the richly deserve.

After a romp through the swamp, the Minutewomen head to Mountaineer country to take on West Virginia on February 5th.

Minutemen put damper on Duquesne house party, 84-75

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Once again, it was a case of early second half jitters for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, as it almost squandered a solid 44-35 halftime lead. This time, however, it was a happy ending behind tremendous offensive output and patience on the part of the Minutemen to clinch an 84-75 win over Duquesne last night at the Palumbo Center. The victory kept alive a 14 game winning streak over the Dukes that dates back to a 68-78 UMass loss in February of 1991.

The Minutemen improve to 10-8 and 4-2 in the Atlantic 10, remaining in second place in conference play behind Temple. After losing their second straight game following a 6-0 start at home, Duquesne drops to third place in the A-10 West behind Xavier and Virginia Tech with a record of 3-4 in the A-10 and 8-10 overall. The Minutemen will take on the Va. Tech Hokies tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m. in the Cassell Coliseum.

"It was a total team effort, we didn't lose our heads," said Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "We took our time and did the things we needed to do."

Unquestionably, the defense has kept UMass on track this season as the offense has sputtered with just three consistent scorers in Monty Mack, Shannon Crooks and Chris Kirkland. The Minutemen were clearly dominant in the paint with a 44 to 14 advantage. Center Kitwana Rhymer has come on strong as of late, compiling his third double-double of the year with 16 points and 14 rebounds. Seniors Mack and Kirkland poured in 21 and 22 points, respectively. Crooks, who has tallied double digits in the past 8 of 10 contests, dropped in 11 points. Senior co-captain Mike Babul played watchdog over sophomore standout Wayne Smith and contributed six points in the effort.

Behind 10 early points from Mack, UMass jumped out to an 18-8 lead just six minutes into the first half. Point guard Jonathan DePina, who is shooting 50-percent from behind the three-point arc, drilled a trey with 4:40 left to maintain the 10 point lead at 30-20. UMass ran the ball well in transition, converting for 11 fast break points in the first half.

"Kit made the big plays, the big rebounds and the big foul shots for us," said Flint. "He's been playing like that in the past three or four games."

The Dukes took advantage of a Minutemen lull early in the second half, connecting on eight of 10 field goals to stake a 55-51 lead with 12:40 left. Smith was difficult to contain as he squared up for 19 points, keeping his record of 42 straight games in double figures intact. Freshman outside sniper Kevin Forney hit a career-high 19 points, including two key field goals early in the second half to overtake the lead.

"We lost our mind for five minutes and I told the guys to take our time and do it on the defensive end," said Flint. "DePina came in and settled us down, he got us going again."

Not ready to succumb, UMass' Rhymer netted a pair of free throws and Crooks nailed a jumper to tie the knot at 55. Duquesne built up a five-point lead, but UMass rallied back and reclaimed the lead for good as Mack sank his second three in a row off a screen for a 63-62 lead with 8:37 to go.

From there, the Minutemen went on a 10-2 run in 2:01 minutes with a 5-for-5 display from the floor. Rhymer cinched the victory by making good on a two trips to the line and a layup in the last remaining minutes. Smith, who framed Babul for his fourth foul, missed both crucial shots from the line in the last 33 seconds after going a perfect 6-for-6 before the trip.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Chris Kirkland racked up 22 points as UMass edged Duquesne, 84-75, in conference action last night.

Rolling Minutemen visit reeling Hawks

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The 1999-2000 season has not been a kind one to the Massachusetts-Lowell hockey team up to this point. The River Hawks have posted only a 6-16-1 mark as they prepare to embark on the final third of their schedule. And to make matters worse, Lowell currently sits in last place in Hockey East with a 2-10-1 mark.

One of the teams that the River Hawks are looking up at is their counterparts from UMass-Amherst. The Minutemen have posted a 6-3-1 mark in their last 10 games and are looking to move higher up the ladder with a win over their in-state rivals this weekend. The two teams will meet on Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. at Tsongas Arena in Lowell.

"Obviously we keep saying that it's going to be a big game, but it seems that after each big game the next one seems even bigger," UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen said. "Right now we're competing with teams like UMass-Lowell and Merrimack [for a Hockey East playoff spot], but if we can do better and earn more points, then we can start looking at reaching teams like Boston College and Maine."

The Minutemen are coming off a 4-3 win over Providence College on Wednesday night at the William D. Mullins Center. UMass [10-12-2, 4-9-2 in Hockey East] swept the season series with PC thanks to the 1-goal win, and may be able to move in sole possession of sixth place with a victory over Lowell. The locals are currently tied with Merrimack for that spot, but whether or not it can be held individually by the Minutemen depends upon the result of the Warriors game with Northeastern tomorrow night.

Also at stake on Sunday is the lead for the Alumni Cup, given to the winner of the season series between the two UMass schools. UMass and Lowell played to a 2-2 tie back in November, so the winner of this game would have a leg up on claiming the trophy. The Cup currently resides in Lowell, the result of the River Hawks winning two of three games against the Minutemen last year.

"This is always one of the biggest games of the year because of the Alumni Cup," said UMass junior goaltender Markus Helanen, who has posted a 9-9-1 record this season for the Minutemen.

Junior alternate captain Jeff Turner and senior alternate captain Jeff Blanchard lead the Minutemen into

Turn to HOCKEY, page 8

Spring BREAK 2000 Out

Panama City Beach Florida

www.springbreakpanamacity.com

Take advantage of our nationally sponsored promotions and talent contests (Or just enjoy the view!)

Check out our killer website www.springbreakpanamacity.com for tips about planning your "Break-Out 2000" SpringBreak.

Bring home photos of people you can't remember!

Use the "special" SpringBreak calender as an excuse to hang this poster up in front of your girlfriend or boyfriend

JAN

						1
3	4	5	6	7	8
10	11	12	13	14	15
17	18	19	20	21	22
24	25	26	27	28	29
31

FEB

	1	2	3	4	5
	8	9	10	11	12
14	15	16	17	18	19
21	22	23	24	25	26
28	29

Check us out on the web, or just call 800-BEACH-1 or 800-553-1330

MARCH

		1	2	3	4
6	7	8	9	10	11
13	14	15	16	17	18
20	21	22	23	24	25
27	28	29	30	31

Where else but "The World's Most Beautiful Beaches!" do you expect to experience the world's largest super clubs !!!

APRIL

					1
3			6	7	8
10			13	14	15
			20	21	22
25	26	27	28

Holiday Inn SunSpree Resort 1-800-633-0266

Best Western Bayside Inn 1-888-460-9336

DAYS INN Beach 1-888-463-0534

Best Western DelCoronada 1-888-460-9336

RAMADA LIMITED 1-888-463-0534

CHATEAU MOTEL 1-800-874-8826

SANDPIPER BEACON BEACH RESORT 1-800-488-8828

The Boardwalk 1-800-224-GULF

www.springbreakpanamacity.com

SIZE does MATTER

Big Resort. Biggest Beach. Bigger Deal.

Only at the Boardwalk Beach Resort

Break Out! 2000 Party Package:

Gold Pass Club Card:

Free Cover Charge to Club LaVela

Closest hotel to The Super Clubs:

Host to:

Largest Private Beach in the area and so does PRICE $29*

The Boardwalk beach resort

1-800-224-GULF

springbreakin.com

Tower Motel

12001 Front Beach Road
Panama City Beach, FL 32407
Phone: (850) 235-0089 • FAX (850) 235-2025

Toll Free Reservations
1-800-446-8694

On-Line Reservations!

Centrally Located, Close to:

- Superclubs
- Attractions
- Dining
- Shopping

Chateau Motel

Book Direct Now! www.chateaumotel.com

Pool side contests all day

Star DJ's, Live Bands, Models, Contests, Concerts, Male & Female Revues, Etc...

Party With Thousands

Largest Nightclub in the USA

CLUB LA VELA

Ebro Racing since 1985

Ebro Theater

Ebro Lounge

Hwy 79 & 20

850-234-3943

Pineapple Beach Resorts

Pineapple Beach Resort

Pineapple Beach Villas (condos)

Pineapple Inn (Beach Hotel)

1-800-234-1188

19979 Front Beach Road • Panama City Beach, FL 32413

email: pr@pineapplebeachresort.com

Panama City Beach, Florida

Spring Break 2000

Best Western

RAMADA

DAYS INN

Best Western

Motel 29

Prices from $24.00 Per Person Quad Occupancy

Front Beach Resort

Mark II

Mark Restaurant. Amusements. All At One Resort

1-800-874-7101

Get Your "Spring Break" Beach Attitude at Aer99

Beachfront Motel

Panama City Beach, Florida

1-800-874-6651

www.pier99.com

Close to Major Clubs, Restaurant, Entertainment, Shopping and Nightlife. The Star

Reservations: 1-800-631-0266 or 850-234-7610

www.springbreakpanamacity.com

Sandpiper Beacon Beach Resort

The "Fun Place!"

- Free Lazy River Ride
- Mini Golf, Playground, and Video Arcade
- 2 Large Outdoor Swimming Pools
- Sailboat, Jet Ski & Parasail
- Huge Beachfront Hot Tub
- Restaurant
- World's Largest Keg Party

Reservations: 1-800-488-8828 www.sandpiperbeacon.com

1-800-PCBEACH CAN 1-800 553-1330

The Solution:

Spring BREAK 2000 OUT

Panama City Beach Florida

We Have 27 Miles Of Sugary White Beaches And Emerald Green Water So You Can Party Out. More Than 18,000 Rooms So You Can Chill Out. Award-Winning Restaurants So You Can Pig Out. Monster Super Clubs So You Can Blow Out. Live Entertainment And Concerts So You Can Rock Out. Nationally Sponsored Bikini Contests So You Can Your Spring Break Fantasies In A Warm And User Friendly Destination That Knows What Spring Break Is All About

www.springbreakpanamacity.com

PANAMA CITY BEACH

Convention & Visitors Bureau

17001 Panama City Beach Pky Panama City Beach, Fl 32413
1-800-PCBEACH (US) or 1-800-553-1330 (Canada)
www.springbreakpanamacity.com

The Problem: Your Classes Have You Stressed Out, Burnt Out, Studied Out, Screwed Out, Bored Out, Numbed Out, Fried Out, Wrecked Out, Stressed Out, Cracked Out...

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 4 Monday, January 31, 2000

Intercampus graduate school approved

By Melissa Hammel
Daily Collegian

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees approved the implementation of an Intercampus Graduate School in Marine Science and Technology (IGSNST) despite protests from members of the faculty senate on the Amherst campus.

The plan for the school, approved by the Committee on Academic Affairs and Student Affairs and Athletics, is a revised version of a proposal that was circulated to all University campuses last semester.

Originally the plan was rejected by both the faculty senates at the Amherst and Dartmouth campuses due to complaints about excessive cost and lack of adequate funding sources. It was revised in early January and will potentially be put into practice in the fall of 2001.

Under the new proposal, the trustee committee calls for a smaller startup budget, which was cut down from $700,000 to $260,000, and for funding for the first two years of the school to come solely from the President's Office. In addition, the proposal calls for a contribution of startup money from all of the campuses.

The revised plan asks that the President's Office provide $65,000 for the school over the first three years. By the third year, the drafters of the plan hope that administrative costs will be covered by a combination of research overhead and funding sources, such as endowments and gifts. The school should be self-supporting by 2003-2004 and will have a budget of roughly $540,000.

Finally, the new proposal also postponed plans to hire a Dean and an Associate Dean for the new school outside of the already existing faculty. The group has chosen representatives of the school from within the University system. The representatives will hold positions for the first three years.

Chosen for Dean of the new school is Professor Brian Rothschild, a director of the Center for Marine Science and Technology at UMass Dartmouth. Jack Archer, a professor of Environmental, Coastal, and Ocean Sciences at the UMass Boston campus, has been named Associate Dean.

Following the vote, President William M. Bulger praised the proposed school, saying it was yet another step in improving the university.

However, according to statements made by interim Faculty Senate Secretary Joseph Larkin previous to the Trustee vote, not everyone involved agrees with Bulger. Larkin said the proposal does not address issues of the academic credibility of the proposal.

He objected to the fact that quality control over admissions and degree programs for the school was in the hands of the Dean and the Associate Dean and not supervised by the faculty. He also raised concern about the issue of four campuses jointly awarding graduate degrees because that system detracts from the autonomy of the individual campuses.

Despite the protests made by the Amherst Faculty Senate against the proposal and their urgings to table the measure, the committee approved the plan without debate.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Feeding the horses

Two-year-old Harel Broderick and mother Kimberly got more than they bargained for yesterday at the Hadley Farm as this horse mistakes them for a carrot.

UMass student honored for unique deodorant design

By Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

Sometimes things are more complicated than necessary. Senior Mechanical Engineering major Nathaniel Mulcahy discovered this after he was honored for simplifying the design to the average deodorant container.

The idea started two years ago when Mulcahy dropped a deodorant on the floor. After noticing how many parts were used to compose the container, Mulcahy decided that it "looked way more complex than it had to be."

After an extensive period devoted to redesigning the container, Mulcahy came up with a model that reduced the object from 11 to four parts. He started by buying nearly 300 Speed Sticks which he gave to everyone he knew in order to determine what the "wear patterns" of the sticks were after they had actually been used. This experiment led to the conclusion that there are three primary categories of wear, depending on how it is applied. By utilizing this knowledge, he created a new, simpler design for the stick.

This design, called the Speedy Speed Stick, won Mulcahy the Old Guard Design National Competition, an award bestowed by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

This past November, Mulcahy traveled from Amherst to Nashville, Tennessee for the 1999 International Mechanical Engineering Congress and Exposition where he received the award.

"I was shocked to win," Mulchany said. "I was up against some amazing designs."

In addition to this most recent award, Mulcahy has never been what some would call a typical college student. "I started in engineering in '82 at UMass," he said, "I wasn't very disciplined, and I became an English major."

After receiving his degree, he taught elementary school for ten years in Michigan, New York, and Massachusetts.

Mulcahy's interest in science came through during his years as a teacher. He and his students worked on an entry for the Tour de Sol, the electric car race from New York to Washington, D.C. When he invited UMass Engineering Professor Russell to take a look at the project, Mulcahy received criticism that inspired him to go back to college.

"He said it was a 'piece of junk,'" Mulcahy said. This comment made by Russell spurred Mulcahy to return to UMass for a degree in engineering he said.

"I had the desire, just none of the training," Mulcahy said. "He's now my greatest mentor ever," said Mulcahy of Professor Russell.

Mulcahy's design will save deodorant companies approximately $148,000 a day. However, while making these changes, it was important to Mulcahy to make sure jobs were not lost.

He has also decided to turn over the rights to the Lemelson Foundation Design Center for Assistive Technology. The center pro-

Turn to DESIGN, page 2

Genetically modified food questionable

Consumers upset over lack of labeling information

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Imagine the possibility of eating a vegetable or fruit at a University of Massachusetts Dining Hall that has been genetically modified and not even knowing it.

By simply injecting a particular gene from other organisms into a crop, scientists can create vegetables or fruits that grow faster and are resistant to herbicides.

According to Federal Department of Agriculture (FDA) laws, a food manufacturing company is not obligated to inform consumers whether food has been genetically altered.

According to a Los Angeles Times article, in the United States about 50 percent of soybeans and cottons and 35 percent of corn are genetically engineered.

Director of Food Services Ken Toong said the produce used on campus comes from a company called Costa Produce. He said the food they buy is not genetically engineered.

According to Harry Wiley of Costa Produce, it is difficult to determine whether something was genetically modified, and he is more concerned about finding the best quality product.

"We dictate based on quality where we're going to purchase our product," Wiley said. "There's different hybrids that we're getting, but we're basically buying the standard crops that are out there. We don't try to go out and procure genetically altered products."

Costa Produce purchases their produce from a buying agent called Pro-Act, Wiley said. Pro-Act agent Dominic Carnazzo said there's no information available to consumers on how produce is grown. According to him, most people wouldn't know whether they were eating genetically modified products.

"I don't think there's enough information out there to describe how they [growers] do it [grow crops]," Carnazzo said. "For someone like you and I, you are going to want to know how it's grown and the information just isn't there for buying at any level."

UMass Biology Professor Elsbeth Walker said there are genetically modified food products on the market. According to her, biotechnology companies have been fighting against legislation to not have their products labeled as genetically modified. Consumers are demanding that such foods be clearly labeled so that buyers can decide for themselves.

The advantage of using genetic biotechnology is that growers can modify crops to confer resistance to herbicides and pests. Walker said this results in minimizing the amount of herbicide that has to be used in the environment and is thus environmentally effective.

"It minimizes the amount of herbicide that has to be spread on the crop," Walker said. "The weeds can be kept down quite efficiently because you can spray the crop [without harming it]."

Turn to INFORMATION, page 2

Student wins Coke contest

Vanessa Donnelly now has more furniture than she knows what to do with in her tiny Kennedy dorm room. It's a problem that most UMass students would like to be able to complain about, and one that the freshman history major did not know she had one week ago.

Last Wednesday, the Lowell native was waiting in line at the Hampshire Dining Commons with her roommate, Beth McDermott, when she decided to fill out a form for a contest sponsored by Coca-Cola. McDermott also attempted to fill out a form to "double their chances," but Donnelly told her that she didn't have to.

"She said 'maybe I should sign up' but I told her, just joking, 'no, don't worry because I'm going to win,'" Donnelly said. "But I was really just kidding."

Two days later, Donnelly was getting ready for class when the phone rang. The caller told her that she was the grand-prize winner of the Coca-Cola contest. Thinking it was just a friend pulling a prank on her, she initially blew off the idea. It was not a prank, however, as Donnelly soon realized that the caller was legitimate.

"I thought it was just one of my friends joking with me," said Donnelly. "I've never really won anything."

In the minute that it took her to fill out the form, Donnelly made it more than worth her while in dividends. Her prizes included a 19" screen TV, four inflatable Coca-Cola chairs, a Coca-Cola cooler filled with a case of bottled Coke, and a $25 dollar gift certificate to Domino's Pizza. Donnelly rushed between classes to have her picture taken with her loot before she lugged it back to her room.

Not that she's complaining, Donnelly had a pretty good idea about what she wanted to do with it: throw a Super Bowl party for her floor. After that, she will probably send home the TV and cooler, and divvy up the chairs among her friends. Her dorm room just isn't big enough for all of her winnings.

"The TV will go home and my dad will probably do something with it," said Donnelly. "I've promised, like, a hundred people a chair so I'll have to figure that out, but we're going to keep one in our room."

Two other Dining Commons ran contests in cooperation with Coca-Cola in an attempt to boost the image of on-campus dining.

Kathleen Ralls

Local businesses not concerned about new Wal-Mart

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

According to two locally owned businesses, Hastings Office Supplies and Hadley Garden Center, the new Wal-Mart that opened in Hadley last Wednesday poses no threat to their continued operation.

After Wal-Mart opened last week, it promised to deliver the lowest area prices and best in-store service. The national chain store offers an array of products, from lawn care supplies to clothing and stationary.

However, according to managers from both businesses, regardless of what Wal-Mart offers, it can't compete with the customer service and expertise of businesses that have been at the center of the community for so many years.

Both stores are only two of many local shops that offer the same kind of supplies and products as Wal-Mart. In interviews, the managers said that it is their feeling that Wal-Mart will pose more competition to businesses like K-Mart than their own.

Carolyn Broughton-Willett is the manager of Hastings Office Supplies in Amherst. She said the store has been providing the local community with the best office supplies and service since 1914. It is something they are proud of because so many people rely on them, she said.

"We're definitely a store that's an old-fashioned center of Amherst," Broughton-Willett said. "A lot of people from the community come in and rely on us for special services."

By bringing in a large chain corporation like Wal-Mart, the concern for any smaller business like Hastings is that it may mean having to compete with the prices and customer service. She said it isn't her concern that her business will be forced to compete with Wal-Mart, and she will continue as she always has in the past.

She stated, however, that it's obvious Wal-Mart is in the business to generate profit, and she said it would continue as long as people allow it in their community.

"It certainly doesn't do any good for a business community and small town to have this large chain business move in," Broughton-Willett said. "I think they're in the business to make a lot of money and I think they will do that wherever people allow them to move in."

In addition to offering the lowest prices, as stated in its logo, Wal-Mart is known for its contributions to charity. In a past Collegian article, Wal-Mart stated that it guarantees matching the amount of funds raised by organizations and charities through bake sales, raffles, and other fundraisers.

Broughton-Willett commented that Hastings donates funding to local charities and organizations as well. In fact, she said people come in almost every week to ask for donations for local high schools and libraries.

"We contribute to people when they come in and ask for prizes and gift certificates depending on what particular event it might be," Broughton-Willett said.

She continued to say the town benefits directly from this because the store's profits are being donated back into the local community to generate future revenue.

"If someone spends money at a local store in Amherst, then the money turns off in Amherst and generates more business," Broughton-Willett said. "If customers spend their money at a large corporate business, then they're not generating local profit in business."

Most local organizations and charities lose out as a result because with less profit in local business, there is less funding available for fundraising, Broughton-Willett said.

According to her, the solution is to continue offering the kinds of services that other businesses don't.

"We'll probably carry on as we always have," Broughton-Willet said. "We can't directly compete with an advertising budget as big as Wal-Mart has. We have to rely on the intelligence of our customers."

Other businesses such as the Hadley Garden Center feel the same way. Manager Dan Ziomek said Wal-Mart will exist and it's something they're not going to worry about.

"We're going to keep offering the same customer service and a wide variety of plants," Ziomek said. "You can't walk into a big store like Wal-Mart and have a knowledgeable person tell you where to find something."

He explained the reason for this is that Wal-Mart hires people on a walk-in basis, regardless of their knowledge in the area. He said in most cases the employees don't get the training they need.

"Anyone can walk in off the street and get a job at Wal-Mart regardless of the knowledge they might possess," Ziomek said.

According to him, Wal-Mart may have the cheaper prices, but his employees have the knowledge about plants that customers are looking for.

"For certain items, they're going to be cheaper than us and there's nothing we can do about that," Ziomek said. "Are they going to be able to tell you how to use fertilizers or when to use them or how much to use? I don't think so."

Fertilizers and chemicals are dangerous to the environment and he stated that it's important to know how much fertilizer should be used and when. Excess use of chemicals on plants can result in the harming of plants, animals, and the environment.

This knowledge and customer service is something that Wal-Mart could never compete with and that's what we pride ourselves on, according to Ziomek.

"We've had such a loyal customer base that they're going to keep coming back to us for the things we know how to do best," Ziomek said.

John Coull, executive director of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, said that Wal-Mart has joined the chamber, and donated $1,000 to the downtown Christmas tree lighting. He said he believes Wal-Mart's intent is not to run other local businesses out of town.

"I don't see Wal-Mart affecting downtown Amherst," Coull said. "I would rather see a lot more local businesses grow."

His reasoning, he said, is that Amherst's few clothing stores will not be greatly affected, the bookstores are always in demand within a college community, and Amherst is home to many downtown bars, something Wal-Mart would never offer.

"In times, it does affect people's habit of going out of town to buy their goods," Coull said. "But I think the big battle will be Wal-Mart versus K-Mart."

Coull said he realizes that there won't be any real Wal-Mart profit filtering into the Amherst community, but he said the composition of downtown businesses and chain businesses is a balancing act in an age of a new economy.

"I don't think it's clear what the composition of downtown businesses will be in the new economy, but it's equally unclear where the big box stores will be with the advance of e-commerce," Coull said. "Today, we look at Wal-Mart sniping at the heels of downtown businesses. A couple years from now it might be e-commerce sniping at the heels of Wal-Mart."

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 20	HIGH: 30 LOW: 5	HIGH: 30 LOW: 15

The Sound of Music

The Collegian's own Boo Downs tells us how music defines our lives. See what he says in the Ed/Op section on page 4.

Nothing to Behold

Today, we hit Guster's latest concert. Plus, check out both Ashley Judd and Ewan McGregor inside! Arts— we've got something for everyone.

Straight Mackin'

Monty Mack went ballistic on the Hokies on Saturday, torching the nets for 22 points in UMass' 49-41 victory over Virginia Tech.

Arts & Living 3
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

In the driver's seat

While owners Kimberly and Harel are off feeding the horses (see page 1), their dog waits patiently in the car.

■ design

continued from page 1

vides students with the opportunity to design, develop, and make available equipment for individuals with disabilities.

"They're taking engineering [and making] positive contributions to the world," Mulcahy said. "They're not interested in making money. They're just helping people out and we could use more of that."

Mulcahy, who hopes to attend Cornell for graduate school, plans to study artificial legs. His goal is to make a simpler and more affordable design. Insurance companies do not pay for legs until people stop growing, he said, which confines children to wheelchairs.

"If I'm successful, it means children get to walk."

■ information

continued from page 1

According to Walker, the first step in genetically engineering a crop is to identify the gene of interest. In the case of some crops, one company has engineered a type of rice with Vitamin A taken from the gene of daffodils, which could prove important in curing night blindness, according to the Times article.

Still, the process of finding a gene of interest is particularly difficult, according to Walker.

"It takes a great deal of time to figure out what trait you're interested in," Walker said. "It takes many years, maybe even a decade, to do traditional breeding."

The traditional breeding process she refers to is a technique in which wild genes are crossed continually with a product like corn until the particular gene of interest arises in the trait of corn.

"You have to continually cross things until you get rid of all the wild genes," Walker said. "There are more than 100,000 wild genes in a traditional plant, so by looking at what the plant looks like and if it is resistant to the virus, we will know if it has what we like."

Walker added that even though it's called selective breeding, it is far less selective than if you take one particular gene you want and place it inside the plant. Still, selective breeding has been going on for more than 1,000 years. She said as long as the process may be, it is up against less scrutiny than genetically inserting a gene into a plant.

"It's important when we first start doing something [like genetic modification, to decide] whether it's safe to be able to know what we're doing," Walker said. "I don't know whether the Dining Commons are receiving genetically altered food or not. The question is whether the consumer should be notified by law that the food they're eating is genetically altered."

There will be a Copy and Night Editor's meeting next Sunday at 2:00 pm.

Pollution on the rise

By Sonni Efron
Los Angeles Times

TOKYO – Two years after the Kyoto accord on global warming, most of the major industrial powers and developing countries are emitting more greenhouse gases than ever.

Still, U.S. and Japanese officials say there has been incremental progress on diplomatic and technological fronts toward convincing many countries that it is possible and essential to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 2010 to below levels a decade ago – the goal set in Kyoto.

Environmentalists remain skeptical about whether developing countries will make sacrifices for the environment while Americans, who generate a quarter of greenhouse gases – which contribute to global warming – refuse to slap tougher efficiency standards on their ever-larger sport-utility vehicles.

The United States should lead the way by slashing domestic emissions, but "there are still well-funded, powerful efforts to block any action," said Dan Becker, director of the global warming and energy program for the Sierra Club in Washington.

In Japan, however, carbon dioxide emissions dropped by 3.8 percent in 1998. Although about 60 percent of that is believed to be due to the country's economic slump, some was the result of efficiency improvements, according to Japan's Environment Agency.

Japan will keep its promise to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 6 percent below 1990 levels in ten years, said Hironori Hamanaka, director-general of the agency's global environment department. But it will meet that goal only if measures agreed to in Kyoto – including giving developed countries credit for emission improvements they make in developing countries – are implemented.

Meanwhile, Japan has made progress in negotiations with China, which remains staunchly opposed to setting targets for reducing its soaring emissions until it achieves a higher standard of living, Hamanaka said.

Japan is concerned not only about China's escalating production of greenhouse gases but also about its sulfur-laden emissions that increase damage here from acid rain. So Japan is seeking deals on joint public and private projects in China to improve energy efficiency, slash emissions and make sure new Japanese investment is "green."

Gov. tries to block Illinois executions

By William Claiborne
Washington Post

CHICAGO – Gov. George H. Ryan (R) has decided to effectively impose a moratorium on the death penalty in Illinois until an inquiry has been conducted into why more death row inmates have been exonerated than executed since capital punishment was reinstated in 1977.

A senior aide to the governor said Ryan will announce Monday that he plans to block executions by granting stays before any scheduled lethal injections are administered, a move that would keep condemned prisoners under the death sentence but would indefinitely postpone their execution.

"There are innumerable opportunities along the way for serious errors, and the governor wants to take a pause here," Ryan's press secretary, Dennis Culloton, said Sunday. "He wants to be absolutely sure the system is working and that only the clearly guilty are being executed."

Culloton said Ryan is convinced the death penalty system in Illinois is "fraught with errors" and "broken," and should be suspended until thoroughly investigated.

Since capital punishment was reinstated 23 years ago, 13 death row inmates have been cleared of murder charges, while 12 have been put to death. Some of the 13 inmates were taken off death row after DNA evidence exonerated them; the cases of others collapsed after new trials were ordered bby appellate courts

One inmate, Anthony Porter, spent 15 years on death row, and at one point came within two days of being executed, before student journalists at Northwestern University uncovered evidence that was used to prove his innocence. Porter was released from prison last year.

Ryan's decision would make Illinois the first of the 38 states with capital punishment to halt all executions while it reviews its death penalty procedures. The Nebraska legislature passed a moratorium on executions last year but it was vetoed by Gov. Mike Johanns (R).

Ryan did not declare a general moratorium, Culloton said, but will stay executions on a case-by-case basis.

He said that if Attorney General Jim Ryan (R) put forward a death warrant and scheduled an execution date, "the governor will just stay that indefinitely." Culloton said he believes the attorney general shares Ryan's doubts and might not schedule any more executions.

Culloton said the governor "still believes capital punishment is a proper societal response," but was deeply troubled by the number of condemned prisoners who have been exonerated in Illinois in recent years and by a recent series by the Chicago Tribune that examined nearly 300 death penalty cases since 1977.

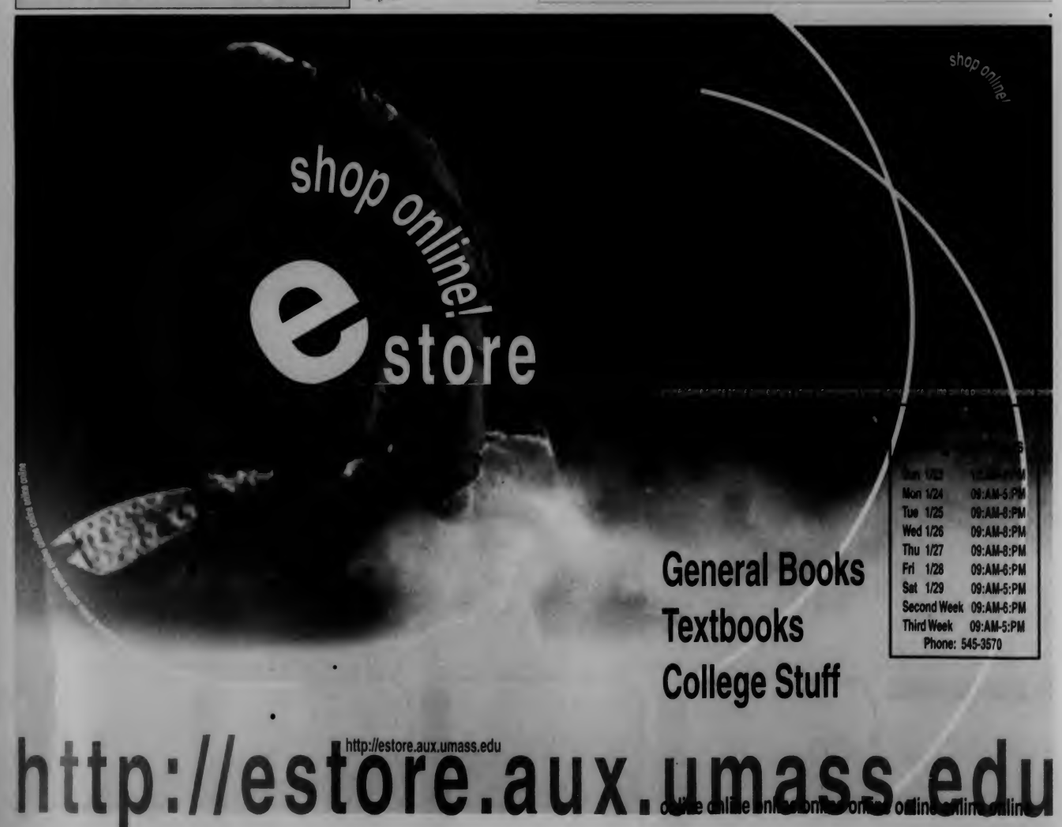
The newspaper reported 33 death row inmates had been represented at trial by attorneys who had been disbarred or suspended, and about half of the state's capital cases had been reversed for a new trial or sentencing hearing.

The Tribune reported that in 46 cases, prosecutors had used testimony from jailhouse informants, which is widely believed to be the least reliable evidence in criminal cases.

Last month, Cook County prosecutors dropped charges against a former Chicago police officer who had been sentenced to death largely on the testimony of a jailhouse informant. The former policeman faces kidnapping charges in Missouri in an unrelated case.

Last week a Chicago-Kent College Law School professor and his students filed a motion in state Supreme Court asserting they had uncovered evidence that a death row inmate was wrongfully convicted of a 1982 murder. The case relied on testimony by witnesses who now say Chicago police detectives coerced them into falsely identifying the suspect as the killer.

The commander of the detective squad was fired in 1993 for allegedly directing the torture of several suspects, who made confessions to murder charges that were proved to be false.



Culloton said Ryan will appoint a special commission to study the state's capital punishment system in general and specifically the 13 cases in which defendants were found to have been wrongly convicted of capital crimes.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Morning breaks

The sun rises over this pretty Sunday morning.

Beholder glimpses little success

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Eye of the Beholder
Directed by Stephan Elliott with Ewan McGregor, Ashley Judd
Playing at Showcase Cinemas

There are some movies that are just plain bad, the sort of movies you can tell never should have been made. Eye of the Beholder isn't one of those movies. It's a much more frustrating sort of bad movie, the kind where you can tell what the director was aiming for and what the actors were hoping to convey, yet none of their efforts were successful and the movie turns out as bad as if they hadn't tried at all. It's like a half-inflated helium balloon that just sort of scrapes along the dirt, never going anywhere.

Ewan McGregor plays a government investigator of some sort trailing a murderess named Joanna (Ashley Judd) across America. The specifics of the plot, including who exactly McGregor's character (who remains nameless) works for, remain blurry and unexplained, even by the movie's close. Joanna displays all sorts of psychological dementia and maladjustment, seducing and killing several men as she wanders her way across the country, forever tailed by the investigator.

It becomes clear that McGregor's character is becoming obsessed with the notion that he must protect Joanna from the cruel world that has forced her to live such a life. He adopts the role of guardian angel, spurred by the (get this) mental projection of his estranged daughter. Six years ago his wife left him and took their daughter with her, and ever since he's been plagued by the image of her, carrying on conversations with her as a means of defending himself against his own guilty conscience. She tells him that Joanna's "just a child," and that he has to protect her.

Superficially, this movie had potential notwithstanding the ridiculous and unnecessary ghost-daughter ginmick). The idea of an investigator sympathizing with and obsessing over the criminal he's trailing is a clever reversal of the kidnap victim's syndrome and could have fueled an interesting relationship between McGregor and Judd's characters.

Unfortunately, however, they don't actually interact until the very last scenes of the movie, leaving us to watch the investigator (and a name would have been nice) walk the line between cop and peeping Tom while Joanna leaves a messy trail of bodies, yet never manages to get herself arrested.

Joanna's history is briefly explored an hour or so into the movie, making her character slightly less shallow. It comes as too little, too late, however, and still doesn't do anything to improve the stagnating story. Eye of the Beholder has plot holes bigger than the Louisiana Purchase, not the least of which is the idea that a government agency would fund one of their agents as he trailed a criminal for years, never reporting any progress or coming close to making an arrest. The agency McGregor's character works for is thinly portrayed as a mysterious 007-style organization of hard-boiled agents and their witty liaisons back at the home office. (McGregor's is played terribly by K.D. Lang, a far cry from the charming Miss Moneypenny.) They correspond with video-phones and do other needlessly gadgety things.

I can't say that the ending was a disappointment, because the movie had managed to build absolutely no interest and momentum – I just wanted it to be over. Most frustrating of all, though, is that once the investigator and Joanna do start talking face to face, there's a glimmer of something worth seeing, a brief flash of genuine human interaction that, had it started an hour ago, would have made the movie much more bearable. As it is, Eye of the Beholder isn't worth your time. D-

COURTESY OF NEW LINE

Ewan McGregor stars as a government investigator in the well-intentioned but poorly executed Eye of the Beholder.

Spend next Friday watching Next Friday

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Next Friday
Directed by Steve Carr
with Ice Cube, Mike Epps, and Don "D.C." Curry Playing Showcase Cinemas

As swirls of marijuana smoke come together to form the opening credits while the relentless beat of Ice Cube's "You Can Do It" plays in the background, it becomes clear that Next Friday, the sequel to the fairly successful 1995 comedy Friday, is not going to stray far from the formula that made it a hit with audiences. Even after making his directorial debut with 1998's The Players Club, and co-starring in one of 1999's best films, Three Kings, Ice Cube, who shares writing credit with DJ Pooh, stays true to the unpretentious and carefree style that made the original Friday so enjoyable. As before, strong comedic performances from supporting cast members are the thread that holds the film together.

The plot, as expected, is entirely secondary, but provides ample ground for maximum bloopers. Cube's character Craig is moving in with his Uncle Leroy (Don Curry) and his cousin Day Day (Mike Epps) who have won the lottery and moved out of South Central into the suburbs. Meanwhile, Tommy "Tiny" Lister Jr.'s character Debo, whom Craig beat up at the end of the first film, has escaped from jail and is rampaging across town to seek revenge.

The revenge plot is laughless throughout, and its embarrassing conclusion comes much too late. The Latino gang that lives across the street from Craig's uncle also occupies too much of the short film's time with predictable pseudo-macho posturing and countless lines that are cringe-worthy in their lameness. The gang leader Jokey, played by Jacob Vargas, has almost enough energy to save his posse's weak material, almost being the key word.

The real laughs come from Uncle Leroy's house. Curry is cast in the much-dreaded role of easy-going pimp, and it's easy to see he relishes every moment of it onscreen, strolling through all of his scenes in bathrobes and leopard-spotted shirts. During the inevitable scene in which the sweet leaf is enjoyed, his reaction after the first hit is priceless. Leroy's sexually frustrated girlfriend of the moment also generates some big laughs, dropping

Turn to Friday page 6

Up-and-comers Guster rock the Palladium

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

In front of a sold-out crowd last Friday night, Boston's own Guster ripped into the Worcester Palladium. Between the people throwing ping-pong balls and the drummer who doesn't use drumsticks, this was most definitely not your average rock show.

However, with a mix of unconventional methods and folk music, Guster is quickly becoming the next big band that you need to know about.

The trio of Adam Gardner, Ryan Miller, and Brian "Thunderqod" Rosenworcel, are quite familiar to the New England music scene. Guster began its career in the city of Boston at Tufts University, and in a short amount of time earned quite a bit of successful recognition. In the past few months, Guster has been heavily promoting its new CD, Lost and Gone Forever, which, besides receiving critical acclaim, has become the best-selling album of the three under their belts. The first single off of Lost and Gone Forever was "Barrel of a Gun (4.3.2.1)," which, due to an enormous amount of air-play on rock stations all over the country, has proven to be a huge success for the band.

The show started with an excellent treat from the band. The Boston boys didn't waste any time pleasing the crowd, when the band opened with "Barrel of a Gun (4.3.2.1)." After the song was over, and the crowd was about as pumped up as Brian Cox with a hypodermic needle before a kiss game, Guster's lead singer, Ryan Miller, stood in front of the microphone and said, "For all of you who only came to hear the single, there it is. The exits are in the back."

After opening with "Barrel of a Gun," Guster set the standard that the rest of the show would be measured by. If in fact there were people in the Palladium who were there for the lol-

Turn to Guster page 6

Try
Your Campus Meal Plan
and we guarantee you'll eat with us again.

Give us your opinion and we'll give you 5 free meals on campus.

UMASS

Simply purchase a meal plan from Your Campus Meal Plan (Commuter or Economy) by February 5, use the meal plan and tell us what you think by February 21, 2000. We'll give you 5 free meals to be used at any retail food outlet on campus, including snack bars. Guaranteed! To find out more about Your Campus Meal Plan, please call the Meal Plan Office at 545-1362 or visit our website www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices.

Terms & Conditions: To qualify, you must purchase a Commuter or Economy meal plan by February 5, 2000. Feedback must be submitted no later than February 21, 2000 by completing a customer satisfaction questionnaire available at cashier stations and at the Meal Plan Office. Return the questionnaire to the Meal Plan Office in Franklin Dining Hall by mail or in person and the 5 free meals will be posted to Your Campus Meal Plan account within 72 hours. All meals must be used before May 19, 2000. Any unused meals will be void after May 19, 2000. Your Campus Meal Plan is only available to juniors (with 54 or more credits), seniors, grads and commuter students

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

To censor is to ignore

President Clinton, in his annual State of the Union address, called on the entertainment industry to give parents more information about the sexual and violent content of popular culture. He suggested that the movie, television, recording and video game industries develop a single cohesive content code for parents to consult.

As it has happened before, Clinton and the countless others who support such codes refuse to look at American society as a problem, and rather point their glaring stares towards movie theaters, music stores and the television in the living room and anywhere else that popular culture and media is readily available. Except for one.

In the on-going attempt to clean up the media, only one group has escaped any serious attention, and yet it is that group that has caused more damage to the American mentality than any other: news organizations. In fact, if any media needs to be scrutinized, it should be the six o'clock news, the morning paper and the talk radio shows.

Be it CNN, The New York Times, National Public Radio, WMUA, or The Daily Collegian, no organization does more to damage the American psyche than news organizations who simply do their jobs. By reporting about the violence of society, the danger of society and the brutality of society, it is news organizations, and not violent video games, harshly worded music, suspect television shows and sexual films, that destroy children's minds.

Where would children get the idea to shoot up schools? Is it from movies with shootings in them, or is it more likely that adults who shoot up their offices are, through the news organizations that report such attacks, giving children ideas?

Where did whomever committed the sexual assaults on campus get the idea to commit sexual assaults? Was it movies with sexual edges or was it from newspapers reporting on serial rapists around the nation?

But the news organizations can't be censored. Fortunately for such organizations, self-censorship, to a certain extent, is a virtual impossibility and federal censorship is an impossibility. School shootings get the top-headline, the first five minutes of the evening news, and the breaking announcements are read on the air – and sexual assaults are covered because the news is sensational. The fact of the matter is that the news is sensational, both hard to stomach and unbelievable at the same time.

Society is a dangerous place, a place where workers are shot by their coworkers, where high-school students are shot by their peers, and where, even on this campus, UMass students are sexually assaulted.

For President Clinton and other entertainment industry censorship supporters to maintain that, after initial censoring of radio, television, movies, music and video games for content in the past twenty years, there should now be a universal code for all media entertainment outlets is necessary is an intentional effort to ignore reality.

Censorship of song, film and television has, thus far, failed to prevent what some might describe as a downturn in society. Guns are readily available. Women are raped. People are murdered.

And meanwhile, politicians like President Clinton and others are busy putting forward an idea for increased definition of media. That those same politicians would support such a code is nothing more than their refusal to look at a society that teaches kids to be the exact thing that isn't supposed to be seen in movies, watched on television or played in video games.

Rather than focus attention towards the creation of a universal code for the entertainment industry, it is the The Daily Collegian's position that President Clinton and other supporters of such codes should spend more time focusing on society's ills and less time on what is watched, heard and seen for entertainment.

Boo's Symphony #9: Ode to Music

Remember the time you did anything significant? Do you remember last summer, and all the fun or not so fun things you did? Remember that time you spent with a significant other at a level of intimacy that cannot be put into words? Now, for all these events, is there a song that takes you immediately to that time? We, as members of the music culture, experience this phenomenon quite often.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

It's true. Our lives are condensed into stories, and memorable music spices up those stories. The philosopher Nietzsche recognized the importance of music in our lives. Taking a break from claiming that God is dead, and that humanity should be ruled by the ubermache (the over-man), Nietzsche mentioned, "Life without music would be a mistake." These words, uttered over a century ago, have never been closer to the truth in our culture. We are so inundated with music at every turn of our lives, it is quite easy to create a soundtrack of sorts to the story of our lives.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

Looking back at my twenty-odd years of my life, I can distinctively place a song to every major segment that reared its head. For example, I cannot hear Guns N' Roses without being taken back to my summers spent at Boy Scout camp. The relation between Guns N' Roses and Boy Scouts is irrelevant. My love of 80's hair music, especially Def Leppard, did not come around because I was a teenager listening to the radio. For crying out loud, I was only eight years old when Hysteria came out.

However, my older sister, a child of the 80's, listened to all hair music, and I, by association, picked up on it. Now when people make fun of me for buying Def Leppard's Euphoria, I can only defend my stadium rock heritage.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

Boo Downs

For every couple, there is a corresponding song(s) that the couple uses for self-identification. These songs, known as "Our songs", are music that we probably would have little reason to listen to outside the context of a relationship. The Aerosmith song, "Don't Want to Miss a Thing," was the "our song" between an ex-girlfriend and myself. I'd have little reason to listen to this song outside the fact that it managed to be "our song". When the relationship ended a year ago, the music still lived on inside my head. It brings back the memories we shared so I can tolerate and almost enjoy the song. Otherwise, I'd flinch whenever that song is played.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

If you are in an intimate situation, be careful what you are listening to, as that music could be burned into your head forever. I happened to live next door to a couple who would play Bryan Adams while having sex. Up to that time, I had little problem listening to some Bryan Adams music. After listening to their racket, I could not listen to Bryan Adams music without cringing. If you like a song, and a dramatic situation occurs, be aware that the circumstances may change, and that great song now reminds you of regretful situations.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

Seasons mark the flood of music that accompanies our lives. This flood comes regardless of whether or not you actually like the music you are listening to. For example, the Backstreet Boys brings me back to the summer of '99. I have little to no interest in listening to them, and make fun of my little sister for getting Millennium. But, they were playing all the time at my job, so I think of summer whenever they happen to be playing. Of the seasonal songs, summer songs are usually the strongest. However, seasons spent with a group or team stand out. While on the soccer team, we'd listen to psyche tapes before games. Given the fact that the music strangely would be Twisted Sister and other hair music escapes me, but it got the people excited. I've always wondered why our team lost most of our games.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

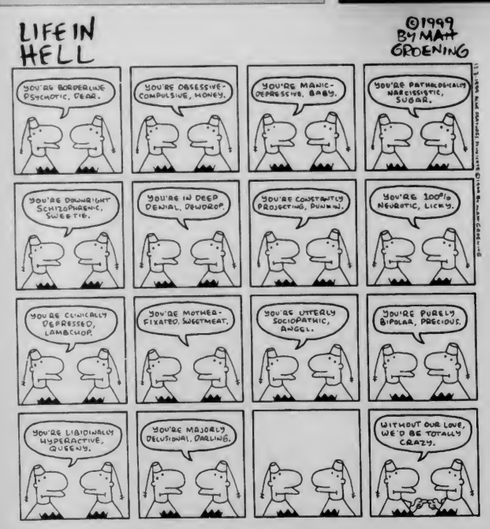
Not all music brings you to horrid moments. Music can also invoke strong feelings of nostalgia. A great weekend, a wonderful time, people long gone appear out of thin air with the appropriate music. I used to be in an a cappella group, and we used to sing everywhere, all the time. The "theme song" of our group was the King Singer's arrangement of a James Taylor piece, "That Lonesome Road".

It was the only song that was actively sung both on stage and off stage during the three years I was with the group. Now, almost four years later, I listen to a CD of King Singers music, and I'm brought back to a weekend up in New Hampshire, singing with friends on top of a mountain. Sounds dramatic, don't you think?

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

On a cynical note, my life's experiences are being augmented not by the experiences themselves, but by music created though a capitalistic system bent on me spending money to feel happy. Disclaimer: Communication students are doomed to be cynical about everything. Enough with the complaints. Musicians create music that is used as an expression of themselves and the world around them. While record companies neatly package these expressions, we can still relate to music itself. After all, Mozart himself was commissioned to write music for people. We never seem to be cynical about his contributions to music.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."



Now you hear it as it is, in all its harmony and sweet melodies. The next time you are hanging out with your friends, and Britney Spears comes on, be careful how well you listen. Otherwise, Britney Spears just might come back to haunt you as you are reminiscing this year of college.

REFRAIN: It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Our lives are movies, our music the soundtrack."

Boo Downs is a Collegian columnist.

www.DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gerlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Your Opinion

Campus safety update

Welcome back for Spring Semester '00! We hope you had an enjoyable and productive semester break.

The investigation of the three unresolved assaults continues. We have not yet received results from the State Crime Lab and with students gone for six weeks, the information coming to Public Safety has slowed dramatically. There have been no major breaks in the investigation, so we again urge anyone with any relevant information to contact Public Safety at 545-2121 or 577-TIPS (8477).

We all need to continue to be vigilant about our personal safety. Do not walk in unlit areas, carry your shriek alarms, travel with friends, know who you are letting into your residence hall or apartment building, and be aware of your surroundings.

Please test your shriek alarm. We have discovered that it is not sufficient to test the light only, because some batteries are strong enough to power the light but not to generate a loud noise. Battery replacements are available at your cluster office for residential students, at the Commuter Resources and Off-Campus Housing Office for commuting/graduate students, and at the Campus Center Store and Human Resources booth in Whitmore for employees.

Rape Aggression Defense: The University Police Department invites female students and staff to participate in a free self-defense workshop. The course requires a 14-hour commitment from participants, with classes to be held from 6-9:30 p.m. each of the four nights. Class locations will be provided at registration. Registration is first-come, first-served.

Session 1 will meet Monday, February 7; Wednesday, February 9; Monday, February 14; and Wednesday, February 16. Registration for this session will be held February 4 and 5 from 7:30-9 p.m. at the UMass Police Station in Dickinson Hall.

Session 2 will meet Monday, March 27; Wednesday, March 29; Monday, April 3; and Wednesday, April 5. Registration for this session will be held March 24 and 25 from 7:30-9 p.m. at the UMass Police Station in Dickinson Hall.

For more information concerning RAD, call 545-9593.

Campus Violence Prevention Initiative: Following up on the interest shown by those who attended Jackson Katz's presentation on men and violence, a new campus violence prevention initiative coordinated by Merle Ryan, Dean of Students Office, and Sut Jhally, Department of Communication, will be sponsoring training sessions on how men can prevent sexual violence. These sessions will be held at the end of February and the coordinators are currently identifying participants. For further information, call Dean Ryan at 545-2684 or Professor Jhally at 545-4609.

Parking Services Reminder: All vehicles with a valid UMass parking permit may park in any legal, non-reserved space starting at 4 p.m. on weekdays instead of at 5 p.m. This early hour will be in effect through February 2000. Legal non-reserved spaces do not include handicapped spaces, tow zones, etc. Also not included are the lots which require 24-hour permits. These are lots 21, 29, 47, 50, 54, 67, Orchard Hill purple lots, North Village Apartments, and Lincoln Apartments.

As a reminder, all lots and meters are available for open parking after 5 p.m. on weekdays and all through weekends and holidays.

Meters must be paid Monday through Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Library Shuttle: The library shuttle will operate from 5:15 p.m. to 12:15 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, and from 5:15 to 10:15 p.m. on Friday and Saturday. When we change to Daylight Savings Time, the shuttle service will begin at 7:15 p.m. each day.

Escort Service: The Escort Shuttle and walking escorts are available from 5 p.m. to 3 a.m., seven days a week.

Fire Safety: The recent, tragic fire at Seton Hall reminds us that fire safety is also important. While UMass is nationally recognized for its fire prevention programs, we must all participate to make these programs effective. It is important to adhere to residence hall policies, especially those on smoking and candles. In addition, never ignore a fire alarm no matter how inconvenient it seems or how many false alarms have preceded it.

Residence Hall Security: This semester we will again examine whether and how to undertake a pilot program to install video security cameras in the lobbies of the residence halls.

Let us work together to make this a safe and productive semester.

David K. Scott
Chancellor

Javier Cevallos
Vice Chancellor

Sorry week at the theater; Beholder hits number one

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

After a relatively uneventful holiday season, during which only Stuart Little and The Green Mile surpassed the $100 million mark, we return to the languishing box office months of January, February, and March.

The lack of big holiday moneymakers can be primarily attributed to the proliferation of so many movies. Crowd pleasers like Galaxy Quest and Toy Story 2 battled Oscar hopefuls, including The Talented Mr. Ripley, The Hurricane, Girl Interrupted, and End of the Affair, for screens and attention. The result is this week's pathetic group of top-ten films, which sees only Stuart Little retaining more than 3000 screens.

Newcomer Eye of the Beholder tumbled its way into first place this weekend, collecting a meager $6.2 million over the three-day period. Granted Super Bowl weekend is usually slow at the box office, but the $6.2 million weekend is the lowest intake for the top film in quite a while. Eye, which stars the pretty Ashley Judd and the pretties Ewan McGregor, opened on an unimpressive 1735 screens, translating to a poor $3573 per-screen average.

Reigning two-week champion, Next Friday, fell one spot to second place, taking in $6 million of weekend receipts. In its third week, the sequel to 1995's cult favorite, Friday, fell an impressive 25 percent from its previous weekend, as the film continues to show strong legs, especially among the teenage demographic.

The Hurricane, which has been receiving tremendous Oscar buzz lately (especially for Denzel Washington in the Best Actor category), continued its strong box office performance with a $5.9 million weekend. That's a meager 8 percent week-to-week drop and $31.2 million to date. As it stands now, this could be the only film able to capitalize on Oscar nominations like Shakespeare in Love did last year.

The two mouse films (also ironically the two $100 million grossers) claimed the next two spots. Kiddie fare Stuart Little continues to justify its $80 million price tag, as it brought its cumulative total to $125 million. The $4.8 million weekend was another 25 percent drop; here probably due to a lack of children's competition. And The Green Mile took fifth with $4 million. The surprisingly overlooked Oscar contender continues to please audiences, as this weekend marks its seventh straight in the top five.

Miramax's ill-fated teen romance flick, Down to You, tumbled four places to finish sixth. Its $4 million weekend gross marks a drastic 48 percent loss of business for Mr. Freddie Prinze, Jr. That's the biggest drop of any film returning to the top ten.

The rest of the weekend's top ten was filled out by familiar faces. The farce Galaxy Quest took in $3.5 million, (a 22 percent drop-off), which was good enough for seventh. The dream-like teaming of Winona Ryder and Angelina Jolie earned their heartfelt film, Girl Interrupted, eighth place. That's a 25 percent drop.

Matt Damon carried The Talented Mr. Ripley into its sixth weekend in the top ten. The 24-percent drop gave the Oscar contender $2.8 million for the most recent frame. Finally, perhaps propelled by its recent Golden Globe win, Toy Story 2 returned in the top ten. $2.4 million was good enough for tenth place and $234 million to date. That total is second only to The Lion King in terms of grosses for an animated film.

Outside the top ten, Fantasia 2000 made $1.5 million on only 54 IMAX screens! Little kids will be lining up for miles when this hits everywhere in May. Angela's Ashes gained only one more screen (611) this weekend, and lost a disappointing 44 percent of its business. No word on whether the movie based on Frank McCourt's novel will ever make it into more theaters.

Lastly, the small drop-offs (other than Down to You) and the dismal total for the top film ($6.2 million) point to a box office clamoring for new movies. This hunger will undoubtedly be satiated next weekend as Gun Shy and Scream 3 hit theaters. While Gun Shy, starring Sandra Bullock in (what else?) another romantic comedy, shows little promise, Scream 3 is poised to wreck the field with virtually no competition. Remember, the previous two films both grossed over $100 million total and the second installment is still the highest film ever to open in December with an astounding $33 million.

■ Friday

continued from page 3

some not-to-subtle hints to Craig about certain needs that aren't being met by his uncle. Mike Epps essentially occupies the friend slot that Chris Tucker left open, and wisely chooses not to try to replicate his showboating style of humor. He instead plays it cool, and still manages to steal some scenes, like a hilarious monologue while he changes clothes, and every encounter he has with his former girlfriend and her fearsome companion.

Craig's father, played again by John Witherspoon, is always hilarious, and has a fairly large role in the picture. He magically transforms bottom- barrel slapstick like falling into dog poop and really having to go to the bathroom into something much funnier with simply his facial expressions and personality. Ice Cube doesn't write many funny lines for himself, letting the others around him get all the laughs. As before though, he comes off as a likeable guy, enjoying the lunacy around him as much as the audience.

What I missed the most from the first Friday was the hilarious Bernie Mac, who doesn't make an appearance in the sequel, but that's just a minor personal complaint. Many people are content to dismiss this film, assuming that it's mindless garbage, but I find it hard to criticize a movie that is obviously lighthearted and doesn't take itself seriously at all. This isn't as funny as the original, be warned, but if you found Friday enjoyable, which many people did, there should be plenty here to make it worth your time. B

■ Guster

continued from page 3

purpose of hearing that one song, then Guster had a large amount of work cut out for them. The trio was certainly up for the challenge.

The next song that the band broke into was "Demons" from their second album, Goldfly. And just like the song that preceded it, everyone in the room seemed to know every single word.

The one goal, which seems to be the driving force behind every song that Guster plays, is their desire to have fun. After one song that the band played, Miller noticed a poster near the front of the crowd that said, "Thundergod for President!" He took the poster from the fan, and held it high, saying "I'd like to take this opportunity to officially announce the candidacy of Brian 'Thundergod' Rosenworcel for president." The crowd erupted in uproarious laughter and cheers.

Rosenworcel, who simply cannot be contained on percussion, has a unique way of playing drums, since he does not use drum sticks, but instead has a set that includes a lot of bongos, cymbals, and bass drums. It's clear to see how concentrated he is on his work during a show just by looking at his eyes. This type of concentration simply proves that he is deeply involved with everything that he does. However, he was not going to be left out of any of the fun. Before the show started, he asked the PA instructor to play the studio-recorded version of "The Great Escape" from Goldfly over the speakers, and the band was simply going to lip-sync through it. About a minute into the song, Rosenworcel stood up, with his arms flailing, and announced everyone to stop what they were doing because he had a confession to make. He told the crowd that not only was the band lip -synching through "The Great Escape," but they have been deceiving everyone their entire careers. Rosenworcel promised that the band would stop the lying. After everyone cheered and laughed again, the band played "The Great Escape" for real.

The day after the show, Rosenworcel wrote on his online diary of the band's tour that he was a bit upset with the Guster fans, because he figured that they'd know the difference between what was real, and what was not. He was disappointed because the fans did not seem to notice that they were not really playing for the first half of the song, and he thought that it would be something that would be immediately pin-pointed.

Other highlights of Guster's crazy antics included attempts at covering Bette Midler's "The Wind beneath My Wings" and the customary launching of ping-pong balls onto the stage, by the crowd, at the end of "Airport Song," which on the studio recording, ends with the sound of two people playing ping-pong.

The show was not without its faults. There were a few occasions beyond Guster's control where the microphones either went out or gave off enough feedback to make it difficult to even hear the band play.

Guster is proving to be one of the best bands that Boston has produced, and with three albums under their belts and a trip to Woodstock '99, they are quickly gaining the reputation they deserve. Of course, after any sold-out show, I begged the inevitable question of my friend Jay: whether the band is selling out or not.

We both decided that they aren't and the easiest way to prove it is the fact that the band opened with their biggest hit to prove to their fans that they were there for real, and were going to play to simply satisfy the fans. Oh yeah, and by the way, after "Barrel of a Gun (4,3,2,1)" was over, not one exit door was pushed open.

If you've stumbled upon that awful Ricky Martin reference on the right side of this page, we apologize again.

Arts and Livin' la vida loca!
We're genuinely sorry for that...

Teachers Alike
Join our instructional [illegible] Fighting provided, full [illegible] college recommended. 10-day (school year) contract. Salary range $10,500-$14,200
Send resume and letter to:
Dr. Elana Aitken
ALPs, Hampshire Educational Collaborative
97 Hawley St.
Northampton, MA
549-9288
AA/EOE/ADA

WHERE TO EAT BETWEEN COURSES
d'angelo sandwich shops
The Sandwich Specialists
48 North Pleasant Street • Amherst • 256-4131
Next time you get hungry in between classes, come to D'Angelo for delicious subs, salads, wraps and pokkets. For over 30 years people have come to D'Angelo to get the freshest, tastiest sandwiches and salads around because they know that we use only the finest quality ingredients and plenty of them. All served for a reasonable price and served quickly! That's why they call us The Sandwich Specialists!
OCMP • CARRY-OUT • DINE-IN
SAVE $1.50 on the purchase of one 12-inch sub or two small subs/pokkets
SAVE $5.00 [illegible]
SAVE $1.00 on the purchase of a medium sub
SUBS • POKKETS • WRAPS • SALADS

Earn your Master's degree in one year... and see the world!
Let La Salle University show you the way.
The Master's of Science in Global Management of Technology is your one-of-a-kind opportunity.
○ Live and study here and abroad
○ Intern at an international company
○ Earn your Master's degree in one year
Limited enrollment—don't delay!
Send for your FREE information packet now!
(888) LSU-7480
or e-mail gmt@lasalle.edu
La Salle University • 1900 West Olney Avenue • Box 826 • Philadelphia, PA 19141
www.lasalle.edu/gmt

The Boltwood Project
Your life will NEVER be the same!
YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS
Spring Semester 2000 Recruitment Nights
6 pm
• Jan. 31 (Mon), 163 Campus Center
• Feb. 1 (Tues), 163 Campus Center
• Feb. 2 (Wed), 163 Campus Center

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-4000
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
AMHERST'S BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES•
TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER•
CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-
COR ELIPTICALS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-2000

Men's Hoop tix available vs. Temple & Texas
10-2 Campus Center
9-5 Curry Hicks Cage

For Information On 2 or 3 Year Scholarships call The UMASS Army ROTC 545-2321
Sigma [fly] Alpha
Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

What if you had an event... and NO ONE showed?!
Attention RSOs!!!
My name is Julie-Ann Mina, the new Collegian Ad Rep for RSO groups. I hope everyone had a great break. Now that we are back in the swing of things, I just wanted to remind you the DAILY COLLEGIAN is a great way to get your RSO's name out to the [illegible] population.
Please feel free to call me at [illegible] with any questions or the Daily Collegian at 545-3500. Hope [illegible]
RSO

Met-Rx.....EAS.....ProLab...Twinlab...Muscletech...Solgar...Met-Rx...EAS
Get In Shape with...
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
Nutrition Supplement Discounter
Spring Break
• Largest selection of fat burners and sport supplements in Western, Mass.
• Huge selection of vitamins and herbs
• Register here to win a trip to the Bahamas!!
Coupons available online @ www.inshapeonline.com
81 University Dr. Amherst, MA (413) 549- 7434

Voter Education
To register to vote, you must be a U.S. citizen and 18 years old by the next election. You can also be registered to vote in one place at a time. If you [illegible] you must update your voting address on your voter registration form. Contact your [illegible] Clerk's office at [illegible]

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-4000
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
Presents
winter X Games 2 PROMOTION
February 3rd - 6th
Wings All You can Eat $5
Monday January 31st, 2000
7-10pm
Free Giveaways
Chance to Win a snowboard
MOUNT SNOW
VERMONT • USA

■ hockey

continued from page 10

tally a goal and the second in its last three games.

The Minutemen will next be in action Thursday night at 7:00 when look to avenge two heartbreaking defeats to the Boston University Terriers at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen dropped consecutive games to the Terriers earlier in the season when they very well could have left with both wins.

BU beat the Maroon and White 2-1 in a game that UMass had the lead for the entire game until a goal late in third period let the Terriers escape with the win. The next night the two teams went to overtime with the Terriers once again coming out on top by a score of 4-3. The Terriers moved into first place in HE on Saturday after beating New Hampshire 4-2.

The Terriers also took another point from the Wildcats on Friday night by tying 3-3.

■ Minutewomen

continued from page 10

to operate comfortably. UMass finished the game with a total of 19 turnovers to St. Joe's 12, and was forced to attempt 12 three-point shots in the second half, connecting on only three. Playing from a deficit late in the game, the Minutewomen had no choice but to foul the Hawks, who made 17 of 20 free throws in the second half.

"Once they get the lead, they're one of the best at milking the lead," O'Brien said of St. Joe's stingy style of play. "And they made their free throws down the stretch... you have to have complete discipline against them. They kind of took us out of our game."

Among the few bright notes for UMass were sophomore forward Nekole Smith and junior point guard Kathy Coyner. Smith led all Minutewomen scorers with 14 points on 6-12 shooting from the field, while Coyner chipped in with 12 points and five assists, although she connected on only two of eight three-point attempts. Freshmen center Jennifer Butler and sophomore forward Caroline Nehls battled strongly against the Hawks' talented frontcourt, combining for 14 rebounds but only six points.

As a team, UMass outrebounded St. Joe's 39-32, but O'Brien, reluctant to draw any positives from the loss, believes that her squad should do that against any team, regardless of the level of competition; however, she still expressed optimism about her team's Feb. 20th rematch with the Hawks as well as its chances of making a strong push toward first place in the A-10 East Division.

"We should be able to out-rebound just about anyone we play," she said. "We still play them again, and we'll keep on fighting until the last game. We still have a long way to go yet."

The Minutewomen will not play again until Sunday, when they travel to Temple to play a team they beat 69-42 last Thursday at the Mullins Center.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Minutewomen Kathy Coyner, Caroline Nehls and Jaywana Bradley were part of a fantastic effort that fell just short in Saturday's loss to visiting St. Joseph's.

■ SuperBowl

continued from page 10

zone to pad the Ram cushion back to a touchdown, 23-16. "Isaac's our go-to guy, and he made the big play for us," Warner said.

Titan quarterback Steve McNair showed great poise in driving his team down the field in the closing minutes, but his final pass of the evening just simply wasn't enough to upset the Rams. Despite his Super Bowl record 64 rushing yards from the quarterback slot, McNair and company were relegated to the status of second best.

"We did some things in the first half that messed us up," McNair said. "We moved the ball well in the second half, but somebody had to lose. We just came up short."

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons aat www.cantones.com

BASSES and TENORS! Thursday February 3 is your chance to audition for MASS APPEAL, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass. Email Erica TODAY at massappeal@mailcity.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000. Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

Need a credit? Enjoy small classes? Try a one-credit course at the Hillel House. JS 191L Woman in Judaism, JS 191M Theatre and the Holocaust, JS 191P Israeli Dancing, JS 191B Wrestling with the Book of Job, JS 191I Writes of Spirit: a journey to the self, JS 191O Exploring Jewish Identity, JS 192G Jewish Stories and Storytelling. Sign up today! Call 549-1710 for more information.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

1 Bedroom apartment for rent. Amherst Cemter location. $530/month. Available 2/1. 253-4463.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL!
IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Like to play? Need money? The Pelham afterschool program needs responsible and reliable assistants, who love kids. Tues and Thurs 3 to 5:30 pm. Contact Lennie Ware 253-5944 or leave message 253-3595.

Earn $530 weekly distributing phone cards. No experience necessary. full or part-time. Call 1-800-572-3361.

Camp Poyntelle seeks counselors for co-ed Northeast PA, overnight Jewish Federation camp: 3hrs fromNYC-General, Sports, Drama, H2O & Arts. 1-800-973-3866 summers@poyntelle.com or www.poyntelle.com

Work study or substitute teachers positions available. $7.00 per hour. Children 18 months to 5 years old. Experience with young children preferred. Call Ellen at 549-1167.

EMPLOYMENT

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania Camp. Trail's end camp-Baseball golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts(woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film) waterfront(waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous RY, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NEPA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Substitute Teachers elementary, secondary and RN substitutes needed. Send resume to: Superintendent's Office, Amherst public Schools, 170 Chesnut st, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Paraprofessionals Special education and regular education paras needed on elementary and secondary levels. Send resumes to: Superintendents Office, Amherst Regional Schools, 170 Chesnut St, Amherst, MA 01002. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups
Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work for an exciting College focused Internet company at your school! Looking for motivated individuals with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay and options! Contact info@uconnections.com.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Get Paid to Surf the web. its absolutely free. See for yourself. www.geocities.com/eureka/suite/1969

EMPLOYMENT

Undergraduate Bussiness Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills and General Bussiness Experience. 10-15 hours per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Bussiness, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2166.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! SS Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

Summer Internships/Jobs: meaningful, rewarding, unique! 4 GREAT Co-ed Children's Camps in NY, PA and ME are looking for fun-loving, children-focused staff. Swim, water-ski, boating, tennis, outdoor leaders, media, land-sports, creative and performing arts specialists, plus Cabin and Group leaders. ACA-accredited programs. Benefits: Salary, Room, Board, Travel and Laundry. Apply to all 4 via 1 form, at www.horizoncamps.com or call (800)344-5448 for info.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

Lockers for rent. Cheap! Come to Commuter services, 428 Student Union.

FOR SALE

2 snowboards 4 sale. Call for details. $100 or bo. each good condition. Jeremy 549-9629.

Computer desk for sale. 1yr old. Perfect condition. $150/neg. Call Mandi 256-4915.

FOR SALE

SNOWBOARD BOOTS FOR SALE! Women's BURTON Rulers. Excellent condition. $75 Caroline 397-0922.

Americard phone cards 3.9 cents per minute. Still the best for calls to family and friends at the University Store.

ROOM FOR RENT

Upstairs bedroom in Puffton. $333/month inc. Inc. heat and hot water. On bus route. Needed ASAP call (413) 348-3393.

1 bedroom in 2 Bedroom apartment. Looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker. 3/4 mile from campus. Effective Immediately! Call Alissa 253-4275.

ROOMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 or 2 people to sublet master bedroom in 3 bedroom. Mill Valley Apts. Call Maura 256-6777.

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? call birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

Cheap heating oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Coop. Come to commuter Services, 428 Student union or call 545-0865.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Aiwa Stereo System. 3cds very powerful. Originally $700 buy for $300 or B/O. Call 6-3489.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Competition-Series Equipment at sick prices that need to go FAST- Orion XTR-series separates, amplifier, sub, alpine deck, Boston acoustic pro-series separates; Denon receiver as well: call Will @ 665-0343.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

Early bird discount. Europe $288(r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes). CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009. www.airhitch.org

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Please place your ads here in The Collegian!

Call us NOW at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

NOTICES

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – Al-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

PLEASE! Send in your events to FYI...

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Join our team!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is always looking for writers who are willing to cover news stories.

If you are interested please contact Mary at 545-1762

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

HSCN Bulletin Board		Cartoon Network
CBS/3	Hartford	Comedy Central
CBS/4	Boston	CNN Headline News
ABC/5	Boston	CNN
PBS/57	Springfield	CNBC
HSCN	Movie Ch	ESPN
UPN/20	Hartford	ESPN 2
Weather Channel		Lifetime
NBC/30 New Britain		MTV
Fox/61	Hartford	Nickelodeon
PBS/24	Hartford	Showtime
WOCH & HSCN		The Movie Channel
International		TNT
UMass Academic TV		USA
WB/New Haven		Weather Channel
Sundance
The Learning Channel
UVC-TV19
ABC/40 Springfield

MONDAY EVENING C - Campus JANUARY 31, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Ppt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Antiques Roadshow ※		American Experience		P.O.V. (In Stereo) ※		Egg
WFSB	3	News ※	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Ladies Man ※	Raymond	Becker (R) ※	48 Hours "Murder for Hire?" ※		News ※	Late Show ※
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Ladies Man ※	Raymond	Becker (R) ※	48 Hours "Murder for Hire?" ※		News	Late Show ※
WCVB	5	News ※	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ※	※※ "Volcano" (1997, Adventure)		Tommy Lee Jones. (In Stereo) ※		Once and Again (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ※	Nanny ※	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ※		Brutally Norm, Zoe... ※		News ※		Friends ※	Nanny ※
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Freaks and Geeks "The Diary"		Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		Third Watch (R) (In Stereo) ※		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lans	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV ※	Moesha (R) ※	Parkers (R) ※	Grown Ups ※	Malcolm-Eddie	News		Real TV (R) ※	Cheyne-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ※	Ent. Tonight	Freaks and Geeks "The Diary"		Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		Third Watch (R) (In Stereo) ※		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ※	Frasier ※	Seinfeld ※	Friends ※	Ally McBeal "It's My Party" ※		Ally McBeal "Story of Love" ※		News		Friends ※	Frasier ※
WWLP	22	News ※	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Freaks and Geeks "The Diary"		Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		Third Watch (R) (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Ppt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Antiques Roadshow ※		American Experience		Death of a Nation: The Timor		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ※
WGGB	40	News ※	ABC News	Seinfeld ※	Frasier ※	※※ "Volcano" (1997, Adventure)		Tommy Lee Jones. (In Stereo) ※		Once and Again (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ※	Judge Judy ※	Seinfeld ※	Frasier ※	Moesha (R) ※	Parkers (R) ※	Grown Ups ※	Malcolm-Eddie	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Alth. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72		Roseanne ※	Roseanne ※	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Phoenix Suns at Orlando Magic. (Live)				Inside NBA		"National Lampoon-Weapon" ※
A&E	51	L.A. Law "The Grace of Wrath"		Law & Order "Homesick" ※		Biography: Nick Nolte		Investigative Reports ※		City Confidential "Wilmington"		Law & Order "Passion" ※
CNN	42	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour ※		Crossfire ※	World Today ※		Larry King Live ※		Newsstand ※		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	15	26	Saturday Night Live ※		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	※ "Armed and Dangerous" (1986, Comedy) John Candy.			Strangers	Upright	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	48		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Australia		On the Inside: Marine		Cosmetic Surgery: Perfection	Body Story: "Body Snatchers"		On the Inside: Marine
ESPN	31		Sportscenter ※		College Basketball: St. John's at Syracuse. (Live) ※				College Basketball: Texas at Oklahoma. (Live) ※			Sportscenter ※
LIFE	49		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Beyond Chance ※		※※ "What's Eating Gilbert Grape" (1993, Drama) Johnny Depp, Juliette Lewis.			Golden Girls
MTV	53		MTV Jams	Beat Suits	Celebrity	Making-Video	Say What Krke	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Road Rules	Making-Video	Undressed (R)	Loveline
NICK	55		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ※	Rugrats ※	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons ※	I Love Lucy	M.T. Moore
SCIFI	61		Sliders "Paradise Lost" (R) ※		Outer Limits (In Stereo) ※		Outer Limits "Rite of Passage"		Outer Limits "In Another Life"		Outer Limits (In Stereo) ※		Poltergeist: The Legacy ※
TLC	62	24	Home Again	Home Again	68 Hours (R)		Paramedics "Double Dose" (R)		Buffet Catchers (R)				Paramedics "Double Dose" (R)
TNT	63		In the Heat of the Night ※		ER "When the Bough Breaks" ※		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo Live) ※						※ "National Lampoon's Senior Trip" (1995, Comedy) Matt Frewer. ※
USA	59		Baywatch "Aftershock" ※		JAG "Ghost Ship" (In Stereo) ※		Walker, Texas Ranger ※		WWF Raw ※		WWF War Zone ※		Farm Club.com
HBO	65		(4:30)		※ "Sphere" (1998, Science Fiction) Dustin Hoffman. (In Stereo) 'PG-13' ※				Sopranos "Fodle... Oo" (R)		Children in Wer (In Stereo) ※
MAX	67				※※※ "Nobody's Fool" (1994, Drama) Paul Newman. 'R' ※		※※※ "The Distinguished Gentleman" (1992) Eddie Murphy. 'R' ※				※※ "Rainmaker III: Hell on Earth" (1992) 'NR' ※		Hot Line (R)
SHOW	69				Kings of the Ring: Legends of Heavyweight Boxing		※※※ "Rocky Marciano" (1999) Jon Favreau. 'R'		Marciano's		"Common Ground" (2000, Drama) Edward Asner.		Hoop Life (R)

Welcome to the World By Ryan O' Donnell

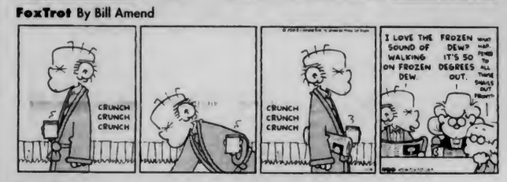
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Pixel and PC By T. Bui & G. Johnson

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Garry Trudeau



Pixel and PC By T. Bui & G. Johnson

Doonesbury Flashbacks By Garry Trudeau

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

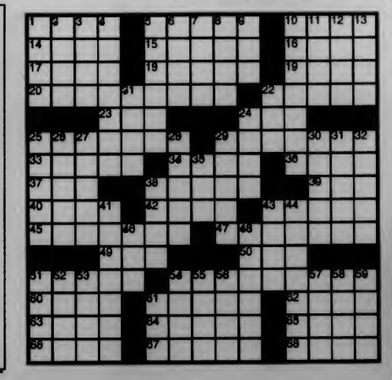
Pixel and PC By T. Bui & G. Johnson

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You must work hard to be sure that a business venture comes out in your favor. You don't want to find yourself wasting your money.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You have something very special to offer others today, but you don't want to appear overly generous. Share one thing at a time for now.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – The timely exchange of information is important to you today and to all those working with you. Don't sit on something others should know.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may find that a great many people are interested in taking part in something that began, for you, only as a pet project.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may begin the day with a stubborn concern over your health, but rest assured that what threatens you can pass quickly and painlessly.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Others are sure to be impressed by your ability to shift gears almost instantly and focus on many things at the same time.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may have a number of questions today regarding upcoming events. The answers you receive tell you much, and spawn more questions.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can bet that something that seemed difficult before can in fact work out very nicely for you in the end and with a minimum of fuss.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Time is of the essence today. Make sure that you've made definite plans, and that you keep improvisation to a minimum at this time.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may find it more difficult than usual today to cooperate with a coworker. Be sure you've made your expectations clear to everyone.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Others are sure to give you the support you require at this time, but it's likely to come to you in a form that is not at first recognizable.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll be thanked for doing something for another that came very naturally to you. Think of how much you'd accomplish if you worked even harder!

Quote of the Day

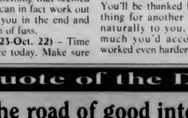
"The road of good intentions is paved with Hell."



–Spencer Ante

Read the Collegian at: www.dailycollegian.com

MONKEYBOX by PB&J



DOWN WITH IMMUNIZATION! POL POT WAS IMMUNIZED AND HE WAS A CANNIBAL! DO YOU WANT YOUR CHILDREN TO BE CANNIBALS?

ACROSS
1 Unhurried
5 Strategems
10 Border
14 Detective Wolfe
15 Saying
16 Letter or parcel
17 In charge of 18 Ravine
19 Prickly seeds
20 Money holders
22 Black
23 Actor Johnson
24 Type of crime or chest
25 Tapering monument
29 Set
33 Actress Streep
34 Scarce
36 Gymnast Korbut
37 Turkish title
38 Regions
39 Flower garland
40 Taskmite sound
42 Taverns
43 "— we a part"
45 Spring flower
47 Four score minus ten
49 Mose: info
50 Silage of a journey
51 Track
54 Argued in favor of 60 Excited
61 Boy Scout unit
62 Trout's home
63 More mature
64 Secret motive
65 Alimony receivers
66 Fish-eating eagle
67 Snooped
68 Computer storage

DOWN
1 Stuck-up person
2 Clothes Strauss
3 Pitcher Hershiser
4 Cosmopolitan
5 Farm vehicles
6 Goddess statue
7 Pie-crust ingredient
8 Breakfast order
9 Espy
10 Carbon government prohibition
11 Smear
12 Barrette user
13 Other
21 Food wrapping
22 — Antonio: Spurs
24 Troubles
25 Old cattle town
26 Get under way
27 Wipe out
28 Danish dollar
29 Salad green
30 Barkin of films
31 007, e.g.
32 Congregation
35 Columnist Landers
38 Metal for galvanizing
41 Deal in contraband
43 With, in Marseilles
44 Winged and clad
46 Ajar: to a poet
48 Wedded an entity
51 Bind
52 Composer Stravinsky
53 Midday
54 Cartoonist Peter
55 Many pets
56 Mouse cousin
57 Urban transport
58 — out: makes do

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1998 © United Feature Syndicate

I am sorry to say..... There is no menu today.

Night Editor	Vanessa Walker
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Jordyn Lamberg
Production Staff	Katie Rose, Seth Koenig

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Monday, January 31, 2000

Dyson one yard away; Rams the NFL Champs

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

With two high-octane offenses, capable of rolling up countless yards and bunches of points, it seemed as though Super Bowl XXXIV last night in Atlanta would come down to who could make the bigger play when it really counted.

But no one could have predicted that this year's NFL championship would come down to a single, lonely yard.

After a brutal first half in which the St. Louis Rams seemed to move the ball at will against the depleted Tennessee secondary, the Titans used an offensive awakening over the game's final two quarters to set up a dramatic last play, from the St. Louis 11 yard line with six seconds left, that could have forced the first overtime period in the history of the big game. But Tennessee's title hopes came up about as short as receiver Kevin Dyson, who was wrapped up a single yard shy of the endzone as time ran out on the Titans.

St. Louis Rams	23
Tenn. Titans	16

The Rams were left to revel in a 23-16 victory, and the franchise's first Super Bowl title.

"This is a dream come true," said Ram tailback Marshall Faulk. "I'm numb right now. This is what Super Bowls are made of."

The game was truly the story of two halves, as Tennessee's ineptitude on offense and miscues by the special teams units of both squads made for some highly forgettable football. The Rams ate up yardage with reckless abandon behind the arm of regular season MVP Kurt Warner, who used six different receivers to shred the Titan secondary, and drive his team repeatedly into the red zone.

But the St. Louis offense would then stray from its phenomenal regular season form, as the team could manage only three Jeff Wilkins field goals over the entire first half and went into the locker room at halftime with a 9-0 edge.

Warner and company finally got in sync in the third quarter, as the QB found streaking wide receiver Torry Holt for a 9-yard scoring strike at the 7:40 mark to cap an eight play, 68-yard drive.

But just as the Rams rediscovered their red zone prowess, their counterparts also got into high gear offensively. Titan coach Jeff Fisher, who had inexplicably kept the ball out of the hands of heralded young running back Eddie George for much of the first half, finally let the explosive back run wild on Tennessee's next possession. George capped a 12-play, 66-yard drive with a one yard touchdown plunge with 7:39 to play, pulling the Titans within 10. The Titans' opening drive of the fourth quarter was equally as impressive, as George finished off a 79-yard, 13-play sequence with a 2-yard scoring run.

A 43-yard field goal by Tennessee's Al Del Greco locked the game at 16-all, but the luck of the patchwork Titan secondary finally ran out on the ensuing Ram possession. Warner stepped up in the pocket and lofted a majestic 73-yard strike to Isaac Bruce, who cruised into the end-

Turn to SUPERBOWL, page 7

UMass outlasts Hokies, 49-41

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

It was a swell pair, a beautiful couple, a perfect match that the Massachusetts men's basketball team had in Blacksburg yesterday. On an afternoon in which it seemed neither team was willing to score, the Minutemen had just enough Monty Mack in the recipe to pull off a 49-41 victory over host Virginia Tech.

UMass shot its typical 40 percent from the field, which, even still, has kept the Minutemen (11-8 overall, 5-2 Atlantic 10) close in the past, but it was plenty enough at Cassell Coliseum.

The Hokies shot just 31 percent from the field, building themselves a 14-point deficit before the shots finally began to fall.

UMass	49
Va. Tech	41

At the 10:59 mark of the second half, UMass scored its 41st point, but things gradually got interesting as time ticked off the clock and the Minutemen continuing to come up empty. Little did head coach James "Bruiser" Flint know that that the next basket would become the game-winner, but with the game still in doubt, UMass went nearly 8 1/2 minutes with a bucket.

After sitting for 1:36 in the late going with four fouls, Shannon Crooks completed a 3-point play with the lead having dwindled to three at 41-38 and it proved to be the difference. Crooks had just seven on the night, but iced it for UMass, who has won five of its last six.

UMass is 3-0 away from home this season, including Thursday's 84-75 victory over Duquesne in Pittsburgh.

Mack scored 22 points to lead all scorers, 14 of which came after intermission. Unfortunately, it was virtually all the Minutemen would get in the scoring column: only six UMass players chalked up points, and only Mack found double figures. Outside of Mack, the Minutemen had just 12 field goals, including just one bucket from the bench, that coming from Winston Smith.

The Minutemen took a 39-25 lead with 12:34 left in the game, this after holding just a 4-point advantage through 20 minutes of play. UMass would see the Hokies (9-10 overall, 3-4 Atlantic 10) mount a late 12-2 comeback to close within five with just under three minutes remaining. However, their ability to score would once again come to a halt, as the Minutemen stopped the bleeding, continuing their reign on the road.

Once again, though, UMass did it with its defense, blanketing Virginia Tech on the perimeter, forcing the Hokies' backcourt triumvirate of Tony Dobbins, Brendan Dunlop and Brian Chase, VTech's second leading scorer, to just 15 points on 3 of 19 shooting.

Kitwana Rhymer followed up Thursday's 16-point, 14-rebound performance with six points and 15 rebounds while Mike Babul chipped in with six points and eight boards, five of which came on the offensive glass.

The Minutemen next take the floor tomorrow night at the Mullins Center when they take on the 24th-ranked Temple Owls. John Chaney and Co. are riding a five-game win streak and look to avenge last season's 57-49 ousting in Amherst in both teams' regular season finale.

Women's hoops rocked by St. Joe's Hawks

Versatile St. Joseph's center drops 17 on stunned UMass

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

For seven minutes, the Massachusetts women's basketball team lost track of St. Joseph's second-leading scorer Jana Lichnerova.

And, for at least a short while, the Minutewomen have lost their chance at first place in the Atlantic 10 East, after falling to the Hawks, 62-49, Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center. In what was a disheartening defeat, UMass (9-11, 6-3 A-10) slipped two full games behind St. Joe's (17-3, 8-1 A-10) in their division.

Although the Minutewomen held Lichnerova to only two points at halftime, the senior center exploded for 15 second-half points to finish with a game-high 17 for the Hawks. Lichnerova scored 14 points during a key, seven-minute stretch at the start of the second frame to help St. Joe's turn a one-point halftime deficit into an important conference victory.

St. Joe's	69
UMass	49

"We just said in the locker room [at the break] that we needed to come out aggressive and take more shots," said the 6-foot-4 Lichnerova, who then quickly connected on back-to-back three-pointers for the Hawks.

After what was a strong defensive opening period, UMass carried its fiery play into the next half, taking a five point lead, 28-23, with just over 16 minutes remaining. Then Lichnerova began to quickly score against a Minutewoman squad that did not seem prepared to handle the spurt.

"When Lichnerova hit her baskets, we didn't fight back," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "That's when you need to fight the hardest, and we didn't fight back today."

St. Joseph's coach Stephanie Gaitley offered a slightly different reason for her squad's second-half surge. The nine-year Hawks' coaching veteran simply felt that her team awakened after its timid first-half play.

"We were down five [points], but I felt much better because we were attacking," Gaitley said. "... There weren't any major adjustments. It wasn't a strategic thing. I just told them to relax."

Once St. Joseph's took the lead for good with 12:38 left in the contest, the Minutewomen fell victim to a number of quick shots and turnovers, allowing the Hawks, a team that seldom squanders the smallest of leads,

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 7

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

UMass forward Nekole Smith, right, had her hands full guarding St. Joseph's center Jana Lichnerova in Saturday's Atlantic 10 action at the Mullins Center.

St. Joseph's role reversal leaves Minutewomen reeling

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Those in attendance at Saturday's women's hoop showdown at the William D. Mullins Center had to feel like they'd bought a one-way ticket to Bizarro World.

A towering center drilling three-pointers from another zip code. A diminutive point guard skying for a team-high in rebounds. The leading scorer in the Atlantic 10 conference totaling almost as many turnovers (three) as points (four) in the first half.

And for Massachusetts fans, perhaps the most disconcerting sight: floor general Kathy Coyner, having fouled out, relegated to bench warmer as the seconds ticked away on a crushing 62-49 loss for the home team. The Minutewomen kept the contest close until the 13:14 mark of the second half, when a 10-point explosion by St. Joseph's center Jana Lichnerova broke the game open for the Hawks.

"We had things the way we wanted, until Lichnerova started getting hot," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "She got some open shots, and our post players weren't used to coming that far out. Instead of fighting back then, we kind of just said 'oh no'."

What else can you say when a 6-foot-4 monstrosity starts picking you apart from the outside? Despite the fact that hours of game film had tipped off O'Brien and company as to the devastating range of the imposing Slovakia native, it wasn't until Lichnerova connected on back-to-back trifectas, to stake her team to a 36-32 lead, that she began to draw any sort of true coverage beyond the paint.

"That was our game plan: to force their post players to become perimeter players," Hawk coach Stephanie Gaitley said. "We knew how strong UMass was inside."

Gaitley's game plan could not have been drawn up more perfectly, in regards to neutralizing the Maroon and White's weapons down low. UMass forward Caroline Nehls coughed up the ball three times amidst St. Joe's relentless defensive collapses, while freshman sensation Jennifer Butler could manage only a single bucket over the entire contest, after averaging just under 10 points per game coming in.

"It wasn't so much a case of them taking [Butler] out of the game, but us doing it ourselves," O'Brien said. "We needed to get her more touches."

But the only touches to be found in this melee belonged to the sizable sharpshooters in Crimson and Grey. Lichnerova and fellow international import Barbora Kuklova rebounded from a sub-par first half (both teams shot less than 30-percent from the field in the opening frame) to knock down monumental hoops during the Hawks' decisive second half run. And with the St. Joe's frontcourt bombing away from the outside, Hawk point guard Angela Zampella suddenly found herself in the unique position of board crasher; the senior from New Jersey ripped down seven caroms throughout the contest, nearly twice her average (3.8) coming in.

"We just focus on playing as a team," Lichnerova said. "It doesn't matter to us who gets the shots, and who gets the rebounds."

Up by a point at halftime, 18-17, O'Brien's troops had to feel pretty good about their first 20 minutes against the conference's top dogs. A-10 scoring leader Susan Moran had been held to two field goals, and the entire St. Joseph's team hadn't attempted a single free throw. But that all changed in the second half, when the Hawks proved just how versatile, and deadly, their players are.

"The second half was much more indicative of the type of team we have," Gaitley said. "We played like the hunters, and not the hunted."

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

R.J. Gates and the UMass hockey team dropped a tough 3-0 loss on Sunday to the River Hawks of Lowell.

Minuteman hockey falls in conference

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

A brick wall. That is what the Massachusetts hockey team looked like when they were shooting yesterday in a pivotal Hockey East matchup with in-state rival UMass-Lowell.

UMass-Lowell	3
UMass	0

Sophomore netminder Cam McCormick made 18 saves and the River Hawks posted their first home shutout, 3-0, since blanking New Hampshire by the same score on March 7, 1998. The loss drops the Minutemen [10-13-3, 4-10-2 HE] into seventh place in HE while the win moves Lowell [8-16-1, 4-10-1] past Providence College into eighth place in the league. The win was the third consecutive for the River Hawks.

After a scoreless first period Lowell came out firing, putting up what proved to be the game-winner. Just 40 seconds into the second, Tom Rouleau fired a wrist shot from directly in front of the net off a feed from freshman Mark Concannon, giving Lowell the 1-0 advantage.

The River Hawk defense would make that goal stand up by allowing just 18 shots to reach the cage in the victory. The 18 shots were a season low for the Minutemen, who have picked a bad time to stop scoring with a tough HE schedule remaining.

Lowell took a 2-0 lead just five seconds after UMass had killed off a powerplay when Concannon slipped a shot past Markus Helanen. The Minutemen had their best scoring chance late in the second period when Kevin Poulin had a clear breakaway, but McCormick turned the shot aside preserving the shutout.

Brad Rooney added another insurance goal at the 15:09 mark of the third period, giving Lowell the eventual 3-0 win.

The shutout marks the fourth time the Maroon and White failed to

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

AmericaOne Crew recupes from weekend of numerous disasters

By Angus Phillips
The Washington Post

AUCKLAND, New Zealand – They call this the "City of Sails," but if Paul Cayard doesn't quit destroying spinnakers, he may become the America's Cup skipper without any.

Cayard's AmericaOne crew got a day off Monday to recuperate from a disastrous weekend in which they severely damaged a $500,000 mast, injured a crewman, shredded two more neon green, $20,000 spinnakers and fell to 1-3 behind Prada in best-of-nine Cup challenger finals.

The cruelest cut came yesterday, when AmericaOne led Prada at every turning mark, then handed away the victory minutes from the finish when poorly executed crew work led to a controversial foul that cost the race.

The U.S. sailors went into a 24-hour Anniversary Day break, when Cup boats leave Hauraki Gulf to thousands of local sailors for an annual city celebration, with a bad taste lingering over the disputed foul and a big hurdle to overcome when racing resumes tomorrow.

AmericaOne must win four of five races to advance to the Cup match against Team New Zealand on Feb. 19. Prada needs just two more wins to nail down the spot.

It's hard enough to beat the smooth, well-trained Prada crew when all your gear holds together. Cayard can't seem to keep his gossamer spinnakers from exploding, which makes it tougher.

Yesterday, he overcame one seeming catastrophe when yet another spinnaker split on the second leg as AmericaOne fought off a hard charge by Prada.

The boats were side by side, AmericaOne slightly in the lead, when the balloon-like sail parted from control lines and flew out in front of the mast like a banner.

FEBRUARY
2000

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 11 Tuesday, February 1, 2000

Hiring freeze effects Student Affairs

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A temporary hiring freeze that is now taking place in the Student Affairs sector of the community is having a negative effect upon some areas of campus life.

The freeze, which went into effect on Jan. 1, is due to an inadequate budget for the University and insufficient funding from the State.

According to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos, Chancellor David K. Scott asked all Vice Chancellors at the University to look into cost issues for each of their areas of operation. Cevallos explained, that budget issues were currently being looked into due to the fact that the state did not give the University an adequate budget increase in accordance with the projected need for funds over a five-year period at the University. Each Vice Chancellor was asked to evaluate the financial situation in each of their sectors and make a potential one percent budget cut in each area. "I decided to put the hiring freeze in my unit so that I could look at the budget constraints that we have," Cevallos said.

The departmental freeze, which prevents new personnel from obtaining jobs on campus, is effecting the operations of programs such as the resource referral program operated out of the Everywoman's Center.

Due to the freeze, the Center will be forced to temporarily reduce its hours of service on weekdays due to a lack of adequate staff members. The center, which originally operated eight hours a day, will now be reducing their services to four hours a day. The Center will still be offering all of its current services to students which include a lending library of books relevant to the issues of women, self help directories, support group information, and a child care area. In addition, the 24-hour Rape Crisis Hotline will still be in operation.

The Everywoman's Center could not be reached for comment due to lack of available staff.

Cevallos explained that the freeze was in effect in order to better evaluate the financial needs of Student Affairs. According to him, the department plans upon, "looking at the entire operation thoroughly."~Right now we are trying to reallocate funds," Cevallos said.

During the freeze, Student Affairs plans upon carefully considering the needs of both the department and the students and in addition being very selective in the hiring of new personnel in the Student Affairs department.

According to Cevallos, Student Affairs also plans upon evaluating the budget for changes that will affect the long-term aspects of the department. He explained that the department was coming up with a new system of planning so that they could better evaluate the financial needs of the University as a whole over a five-year period.

Although the freeze has no definitive ending period, the Student Affairs department hopes to return to normal operations as soon as possible.

Frosty's back in town.

Earl W. Minster and Ray Ostendorff, Wood Technologies and Lumber Studies majors respectively, brought some snow to life yesterday in front of Herter

Delta Chi fraternity fails health inspection

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

For the second time in the last two weeks, the Delta Chi fraternity house has failed inspection following a review yesterday conducted by the Amherst Building Commission, Health Department, and Fire Department after the house was deemed unsafe.

According to the Amherst Building Commission, if the fraternity doesn't pass the next inspection in the next 30 days, they will be shut down permanently.

Assistant Fire Chief Michael Clogar said yesterday's thorough review of the building was prompted by a freeze-up which caused damage to the pipes in the building. Clogar said the normal inspection process indicated to the fraternity brothers the requirements they'd have to meet before they were allowed to re-occupy the building.

Amherst Building Commissioner William Start said he has visited the site at least half a dozen times over the past couple of weeks and absolutely nothing had been corrected.

"It was left in very poor condition over intercession and it's not sanitary at all," Start said. "It was quite filthy. I would not let my son or daughter live in there. It needs to be cleaned up."

Start said he's very upset because the fraternity brothers prompted the inspection yesterday and according to him the building was still in no condition to pass."We're very upset that we have to send personnel over there and the house isn't even ready," Start said. "We sent inspectors over there today and the house was supposed to be ready and it's not."

It has been a continuous problem, he said. The Pi Kappa Alpha house was shut down before the beginning of last semester and this is the second time in the last year that Delta Chi has had to be temporarily shut down.

According to Start, he has worked with the Building Commission for the last 28 years. When he started, there were 28 existing fraternities and sororities. To date, he said there are approximately 17 remaining.

"Every house that has been closed, for one reason or another, has been fraternities," Start said. "It appears to me that the sororities are much more organized than the fraternities."

He explained that some of the sororities have "house parents" or "house mothers" that oversee the day-to-day operations of the sorority. According to him, this is a feature that the fraternities are lacking.Having warned the fraternity brothers that the building is unsafe, Start said they are taking a chance if they fail to heed his advice. It is his focus to make sure the facility is in a safe, clean and sanitary condition, he said.

"There comes a point where you have to make a decision that

Turn to FRATERNITY, page 3

Tuition costs remain stable

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Correspondent

After four consecutive years of tuition decreases and freezes, the University of Massachusetts has announced it will not raise in-state costs for the upcoming fall semester. Tuition and fees for the 2000-2001 school year here on the Amherst campus will remain at $5,212 for in-state undergraduate students and $5,642 for in-state graduate students.

In the past, UMass was the second most expensive state university in the country. Since the 1995-1996 school year, the University has dropped the cost down 5.8 percent in an attempt to reverse the national trend of the rising prices for higher education. Students attending school next semester will be paying the same tuition as students who started in the 1992-1993 school year.

The Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses have a tuition average of $4,680. In comparison, University of Connecticut charges $5,398 for in-state undergraduates, University of New Hampshire charges $6,939, and the University of Vermont charges $8,044.

According to Robert Connolly, spokesman for President Bulger's office, the tuition freeze is possible because of new budget measures and large increases in private donations. He claims that these cuts should not affect any of the facilities, salaries or services at UMass.

Connolly said the money paid by students for tuition does not directly go to the University. It is instead given to the state, and the state then distributes it back as the budget allows. Tuition increases and decreases do not necessarily have a direct effect on the University's budget.

The 5.8 percent decrease, Connolly said, is sharply contrasted by the national average increase in tuition of four percent.

President Bulger said in a statement that the University wants to "buck the trend" of tuition increases that are so popular at other colleges and universities around the country. He wants UMass to provide "an educational experience of the highest quality for the lowest price." Bulger said "we live in an era where students and families fear that top-quality higher education is simply beyond their means." He continued to say he wants to make UMass a place where that will not be the case.

Previously, decreases or freezes of tuition have been accompanied by increases in other mandatory fees. This year all costs will remain the same, including mandatory health fee, service fee and curriculum fee.

However, the state is not providing sufficient funds for the schools 2001 budget. The state's allotted share of the UMass budget, although increased from last year, is still $10 million short of what was requested. Chancellor Scott has asked all department heads to prepare three separate budget plans for the next fiscal year. Cuts of one percent, two percent or three percent are planned for most departments including the College of Fine Arts and Humanities and the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

Joseph Larson, director of the Environmental Institute and secretary of the UMass Faculty Senate, said in a previous Collegian article, "The three percent cut will mean that people, faculty and staff, will have to be fired. The same is true with two percent in smaller departments."

The Board of Trustees will meet today at the Boston campus and give their final approval for this tuition freeze.

Cannabis Reform Coalition to host benefit performance to raise consciousness

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

BECKY REDDICK/ COLLEGIAN

The Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) is holding a benefit event in Northampton tonight for the Amherst Buyers' Club. The event entitled "Norman B Deviations from the Norm" is to be held at Fire and Water Cafe and broadcast live on WMUA radio at 7 p.m. tonight.

Besides raising funds, event coordinator Norman Bie hopes to raise consciousness on several marijuana related issues. In a statement, Bie said, "petitions to legalize marijuana both town-wide and statewide are now circulating." He continued, "Now is the time to register to vote. You can do so at this show or at the Town Hall."

The issue of de-prioritizing marijuana has been the central focus of the CRC for some time now and the vote is coming soon. "Amherst votes on the question in April and Massachusetts votes on the question in November." Bie said.

In preparation for the possible legalization of marijuana, residents have created The Amherst Buyers' Club to assure that the group would be operational as soon as the law was changed, rendering marijuana legal. It should be noted that the Buyers' Club is not currently in operation. Bie said this is due to the legal factors involved and an "allergy to being arrested."

Concerts such as this one are held the first Tuesday of every month, but this week's concert holds special importance to the group because of its proximity to the April vote.

"Anyone who wants to vote in April has to get registered real quick," Bie said, "If you miss this meeting, the next one will be too late for the election."

Tonight's meeting will feature a musical performance by Bie. He performs an act, which he describes as, "a musical comedy for human rights." Along with his performance there will be special surprise guests as well as speeches by several other activists including Terry Franklin.

Bie has been performing his act for approximately 12 years and along the way he has made ties with some high profile members of the activism community. "I have friends at High Times, Steve Hager, the editor is a good friend of mine, as well as the Cultivation Editor."

He first started his show in 1987 and has been performing it ever since. He spent several years working in the "Campus Action Network" and has performed his act in San Francisco and at the University of California - Berkley traveling the country crusading for the legalization of marijuana.

Studies show findings in AIDS related issues

By David Brown
Washington Post

SAN FRANCISCO – A low concentration of the AIDS virus in the bloodstream greatly decreases the chance that an infected man or woman will transmit the disease to a heterosexual partner, according to two studies from Africa presented at a scientific meeting here.

That observation raises the possibility that an imperfect AIDS vaccine may yet be useful in the region where 70 percent of the world's cases of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection occur. Specifically, it suggests that a vaccine that fails to block initial infection – but does manage to lower a person's "viral load" – may reduce that person's ability to pass the virus on to someone else.

Nearly 70 percent of the 34 million people with HIV live in sub-Saharan Africa, where heterosexual intercourse is the dominant mode of virus transmission. The two studies, presented at the Seventh Conference on Retroviruses and Opportunistic Infections, looked at the experience of African couples in which one person was infected with HIV and the other was not.

In a study from the rural Rakai district of Uganda, researchers followed 415 "HIV-discordant" couples for 30 months. In slightly more than half, the man was the partner infected. In 90 of the couples (about 22 percent), the uninfected partner ultimately acquired the infection. Male-to-female transmission was as likely as female-to-male.

The big determinant of transmission was viral load. People with more than 50,000 viruses per milliliter of blood had 10 times the chance of transmitting their infection as people with fewer than 3,500 viruses per milliliter. In the 50 couples in which one partner had a viral load less than 1,500, there were no transmissions at all.

A study in Lusaka, Zambia, produced nearly the same results. There, 109 individuals in 500 discordant couples became infected. The average viral load in the transmitting partner was 38,000. For every 10-fold increase in bloodstream virus concentration, the risk of transmission more than doubled. No one with less than 1,000 viruses per milliliter passed on the infection.

"Reduction of viral load by antiviral therapy or by therapeutic vaccines could reduce transmission," said Thomas C. Quinn of Johns Hopkins University, who helped conduct the Uganda study. He emphasized, however, that there's no direct evidence that a low viral load achieved by drug treatment behaves the same as a low viral load achieved "naturally" by native immune defenses.

Nevertheless, the findings injected some hope into the generally dispiriting field of HIV vaccine development.

No experimental vaccine to date has reliably blocked infection in large-scale studies of laboratory animals. Several, however, have sufficiently stimulated immunity that virus growth is dampened after infection takes hold. This is especially true in vaccines that stimulate the production of immune-system cells directed at HIV-infected cells, as opposed to vaccines that stimulate antibodies that attack free-floating virus.

Two such studies were described here. One used vaccinia virus (the microbe that for years was used as a vaccine against smallpox) into which genes of simian immunodeficiency virus (SIV), the monkey equivalent of HIV, had been spliced. The other used fragments of "naked" SIV DNA. In both cases, monkeys that were vaccinated and then injected with SIV became infected. However, their viral loads were lower than those in unvaccinated infected animals. In the case of the DNA vaccine, the viral load in some animals dropped into the undetectable range after an initial burst of growth.

These various lines of research are a reason to test HIV vaccines that, by conventional measures, might seem less than promising, said Gary Nabel, head of the Vaccine Research Center at the National Institutes of Health.

"If we're going to err at this point, we should err on the side of doing more clinical testing," he said. "We have indications that some vaccines can induce immune responses that we have reason to believe might be protective. But we have no way of knowing, except to test it."

Because laboratory studies haven't

Turn to STUDIES, page 3

Today HIGH: 34 LOW: 15
Wednesday HIGH: 30 LOW: 17
Thursday HIGH: 30 LOW: 12
SOURCE: CNN.COM

Here's What I Think — Chris Collins dishes out a heapin' helpin' of opinion concerning the future of UMass and the state due to imminent budget cuts. — VOICES PAGE 4

She Isn't That Great — Check out today's Arts section for a look at upcoming concert events and Bette Midler's latest flop of a movie. Arts: It's like a 90-yard fumble return. — ARTS PAGE 5

Big Man On Campus — Kitwana Rhymer and the Massachusetts men's basketball team will face A-10 rival Temple tonight at the Mullins Center. — SPORTS PAGE 10

Arts & Living 5
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 3
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

© 1999 VarsityBooks.com, Inc.

They decide what you read.

You decide what you pay.

What's on the syllabus is what you're going to be reading. What you're going to pay, however, can be up to you. That is, if you shop at VarsityBooks.com. At VarsityBooks.com you can save up to 40% on your textbooks, get them in one to three business days, and all of this from a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. So there you have it, you decide.

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS.

VarsityBooks.com

Police log

Accidents

Jan. 28

A minor two-vehicle accident was reported on Sunset Ave. No injuries were reported.

A hit-and-run accident was reported near the Van Meter dorm on Clark Hill Rd. Property damage was reported.

Jan. 29

A minoAr two-vehicle accident was reported on Commonwealth Ave. There were no injuries but property damage was reported.

A minor two-vehicle accident was reported on North Pleasant St. There were no injuries, but property damage was reported.

Arrests

Jan. 28

Daniel P. Morrissey, 19 of Springfield was arrested for an outstanding warrant.

Joseph M. Berg, 20 of Danvers was arrested for possession of a class D substance and for underage possession of alcohol.

Jan. 29

Todd Erich Dragon, 22 of South Boston, Kevin J. Conley, 18 of Dorchester Ma. and Roger E Abernathy, 24 of Brighton were arrested on Massachusetts Avenue at 12:35 a.m. Dragon was charged with receiving stolen property worth over $250, possession of a class D substance, miscellaneous motor vehicle violations and operating a vehicle without a license. Conley was charged with receiving stolen property worth over $250 and possession of a class D substance. Abernathy was charged with receiving stolen property worth over $250.

Jan. 30

Andrew L. Gleason, 18 of Northampton was arrested and charged with drunk driving, marked lanes violation, speeding and underage possession of alcohol.

Larceny

Jan. 28

A vehicle was reported stolen from Lot #49 near Baker Dorm on Chancellor drive

A cell phone was reported stolen from a room in Patterson Dorm.

Jan. 29

A license plate was reported missing from a car parked in Lot #49 near the Van Meter Dorm on Van Meter Rd.

Miscellaneous

Jan. 30

A large fight was reported in Lot #50. Suspects fled prior to the arrival of police officers.

A smoldering trash barrel was reported on the fourth floor of Gorman Dorm. It was removed from the premises and Emergency Health and Safety was dispatched.

■ studies

continued from page 1

revealed what immune system response is the optimal one, only field trials of "candidate" vaccines in places where HIV prevalence is high and many people are at risk will reveal whether imperfect ones have real utility.

"We don't want to tie ourselves to some laboratory tests whose significance is not known," said Nabel.

In other research, a scientist at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention gave further evidence that recent advances in the treatment of HIV infection may be lulling some people into thinking they can participate in unsafe activities with relative impunity.

In a seven-state survey of equal numbers of male homosexuals, intravenous drug users, and heterosexuals, 31 percent said they were "less concerned" now about becoming infected than they were in the past, and 17 percent said they were "less safe" in their habits.

The highest proportion of people expressing less worry was among drug users, especially African-American drug users. Among homosexual men, about 70 percent of those who said they were being less careful had participated in unprotected anal intercourse, compared with about 45 percent of those who said they weren't being any less careful than in the past.

■ fraternity

continued from page 1

the house cannot be brought into a clean and safe and sanitary condition and that warrants closing it down," Starr said. "We're willing to help, but we can't devote all our resources to a situation that's not coming across here." He said he doesn't want to see the building closed down, but according to him, the Commission has been involved with Delta Chi for the past six months and have been involved with it for too long.

UMass Acting Director for Greek Affairs Jon Kapell said he helps to advise the fraternities and sororities, but under no condition, is it his job to manage their property.

While he recognizes it has been a continuous problem, Kapell stated that he was not surprised by the recent happenings."Fraternities are not that different from regular student residences," Kapell said. "They undergo some wear and tear.

It is the intent of all parties, Kapell stated, for Delta Chi to reopen their house as soon as possible and to avoid all future problems.

Now C – here, young man.

Remember kiddies, you can rent such classics as "Romy and Michelle's High School Reunion" and others at your local C- Store for a paltry $3.00 per night. Enjoy!

War crime tribunals threatened in East Timor in wake of violence

By Keith B. Richburg
Washington Post

JAKARTA, Indonesia – A government commission charged yesterday that the Indonesian military and its militia surrogates carried out an orchestrated campaign of mass killing, torture, forced deportation, rape and sexual slavery in East Timor. It named six top generals – including Gen. Wiranto, the former army chief – for possible criminal prosecution.

The findings of the government commission of inquiry were more sweeping and harder-hitting than had been expected, coming on top of a recommendation from a U.N. inquiry that the United Nations set up a special tribunal to try those accused of atrocities in East Timor. They brought to a head a confrontation between Indonesia's new democratic government, which has made human rights and accountability a major priority, and the powerful military establishment, which has seen its traditional role undercut and its past abusive practices put under intense public scrutiny.

President Abdurrahman Wahid, who is in Davos, Switzerland, for the World Economic Forum, said after the findings were made known that he will fire Wiranto from the cabinet. "I will ask him, to use a polite word, ask him to resign," Wahid told a television interviewer. Wiranto stepped aside as armed forces commander in October, after the violence against East Timorese that broke out last September over their decision to secede from Indonesia. But he still wields considerable influence in the military as cabinet coordinating minister for political affairs and security. The East Timorese resistance leader and Nobel laureate, Jose Ramos-Horta, said in Singapore that Wiranto should be tried and not just removed from the cabinet. "In this day and age, you cannot kill hundreds of people, destroy a whole country, and then just get fired," he said.

The commission also said the military actively tried to cover up evidence of its "crimes against humanity," including moving victims' bodies to remote locations.

"The mass killings claimed the lives mostly of civilians," said the commission chairman, Albert Hasibuan. "They were conducted in a systematic and cruel way. Many were committed in churches and police headquarters."

Australian-led peacekeeping troops in East Timor have unearthed hundreds of bodies in scattered grave sites, many in the East Timorese exclave of Oe-Cussi near the Indonesian border. Villagers have said bodies were moved there before foreign troops arrived, but yesterday's report provided the first confirmation of an effort to conceal the extent of the killings.

The commission forwarded the names of 33 people, including Wiranto, who it said should be investigated for prosecution, to Attorney General Marzuki Darusman, who promised to begin his own probe. Among those named are Maj. Gen. Adam Damiri, the regional commander in charge of East Timor in the months leading up to the Aug. 30 U.N.-backed independence referendum; Zacky Anwar Makarim, the army intelligence chief in East Timor, and Tono Suratman and Noer Muis, the two commanders based in Dili, the East Timorese capital.

Also named were the commanders of various militia groups, including Joao Tavares, who called himself the commander in chief of all the militias, and the flamboyant Eurico Guterres, head of the feared Aitarak, or "Thorn," militia, who in the days before the referendum vowed to turn Dili into a "sea of fire" if voters supported independence.

The bloodbath unleashed in East Timor sparked international outrage and turned Indonesia into something of a pariah state, criticized by friends and slapped with economic sanctions. Hundreds of thousands were forcibly deported to Indonesian-controlled western Timor, homes and buildings in Dili were looted and set ablaze, and the few foreigners left in the capital huddled inside the U.N. compound, along with frightened Timorese, with little food or water.

The violence continued until then-President B.J. Habibie bowed to international pressure and allowed in foreign troops to restore order. At the time, Wiranto conceded some Indonesian army troops from two indigenous East Timorese battalions were involved in the violence. But he repeatedly insisted the outbreak was spontaneous, that there was no evidence of widespread killings and that he was trying his best to bring the situation under control.

Key members of the Security Council said they would give Indonesia some breathing space to pursue its own war crimes investigation. But if the Indonesians falter, diplomats warned, calls for an international court will increase.

U – too, little lady.

Jodi Bauer, a Senior Apparel Marketing major, takes Fernando Rodriguez's photo in the U-Card office in Franklin Dining Commons yesterday.

The Boltwood Project

Your life will NEVER be the same!

YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS

Spring Semester 2000 Recruitment Nights

6 pm

- Jan. 31 (Mon), 163 Campus Center
- Feb. 1 (Tues), 163 Campus Center
- Feb. 2 (Wed), 163 Campus Center

PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

The Area's Most Complete Club 256-6446

All new Full Cybex Free Weights

90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9• 2 Miles East of town Center

JOIN NOW FOR OUR 15 WEEK WINTER SPECIAL ($169) AND GET A FREE HFC T-SHIRT

WE ACCEPT MasterCard VISA

CARDIO

Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00

www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE

BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES

$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS

KEISER•NAUTILUS•CYBEX STAIRMASTERS•LIFECYCLES• TREADMILLS•LIFEROWER• CARDIO KICKBOXING• PRE-COR ELIPTICALS

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

The flying flag

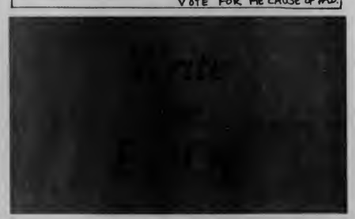
Red, white, and blue: Valor, purity, and justice.

Red, white, and blue are the colors of the American flag and valor, purity, and justice are the ideals that those colors represent. Those colors are also on the Confederate flag, and perhaps those ideals are part of the symbolism of Confederate flag as well. Though the flags have the same colors in common, the similarities end there.

Flying both flags in the same state presents a conflict. While the American flag is associated with freedom throughout the world, the Confederate flag symbolizes slavery to many people. Because of this, members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) have boycotted travel and tourism to the state until the flag is lowered.

However, state legislators in South Carolina claim that the Confederate flag deserves to fly over their statehouse because it represents South Carolina's heritage and the sacrifices made during the Civil War. While South Carolina has a right to honor their past, the state's intransigence on this issue does a disservice to the state of black/white race relations in the United States. Furthermore, South Carolina claims that the flag flies over the statehouse because it is a symbol of pride and the state's heritage, but the flag has not flown there since the days of the Confederacy. The flag was raised in 1962 as a gesture of defiance towards civil-rights legislation. For this reason, the claim that the flag flies because of pride in the state's heritage loses some merit.

Although the issue has been simmering on the backburners of South Carolina politics for several years, the issue has intensified in recent months. The NAACP tourism boycott of the state began Jan. 1 and has impacted the state financially; because of this there have several marches in recent weeks. On two different days in January, 6000 people marched in support of the flag and 44,000 people marched because they wanted it taken down.



But are there really more people who want the flag lowered than want to keep it aloft? According to polls conducted recently in the state, the answer is yes. A poll conducted by the Mason-Dixon Polling and Research Company in Washington found that 52 percent of registered voters in South Carolina wanted the flag taken down.

With majority support in the state, it is surprising that some presidential candidates have not commented on the issue. Presidential hopeful George W. Bush has claimed that the issue is a local matter and has not commented on whether he opposes or favors taking the flag down. This can only be a matter of cowardice on his part because other candidates such as Bill Bradley and Al Gore have joined President Bill Clinton in denouncing the practice of flying the Confederate flag.

The impact of this issue is of national significance, even though the decision to lower the flag is ultimately up to the state legislators in South Carolina. Silence on Bush's part shows the nation the state of race relations in the United States today, and shows Americans that some of the people who want to lead the country are not prepared to take a stand on some of the tricky issues of the day. After all, it is the future of government leadership in this country that is partly responsible for the condition of race relations today – at worst there is violence and brutality and at best people live side by side without understanding each other at all.

While lawmakers in South Carolina may have their own reasons for keeping the flag aloft, a man who hopes to lead a nation where some people see a proud Confederate past and others see blood and chains, cannot afford to be silent on such issues. A man who would lead a country must see the bigger picture.

And if valor and justice are two things that South Carolina values, leaders in the state should consider lowering the flag. While the Confederate flag represents heritage to some, it does not represent a past that everyone wants to remember. Because of this, moving the flag elsewhere in the statehouse may be a step in the right direction in terms of changing some of the attitudes that still mar relationships in our society. While the past is inescapable and has shaped the way that this country is today, if the nation is to move forward, it is best not to champion our divided past by flying its symbol over a statehouse.

Where has all the funding gone?

Okay, it may not be great journalism, but I'm starting this column with a quote from our fun-loving governor Mr. Argeo Paul Cellucci, who just gave his Budget Recommendation to our House of Representatives: "A growing economy needs a steady stream of skilled workers to fill the new jobs that will be created in all industry sectors."

Chris Collins

But wait Chris, my readers protest, doesn't that sound kinda odd given that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts – under Cellucci's fine leadership – has denied the amount of our full budget request here at the University?

Why yes, this statement does seem to be rhetoric that is backed up by a surprising lack of action behind it. That's not to say that the Governor isn't doing sometimes to help education. However, little of his administration's aid to education has come at the University level.

Instead, he is supporting teacher testing initiatives, funding low-income grade schools, and examining high school students with the MCAS. Now, I really don't have a problem with any of these problems (with the possible exceptions of the MCAS), but I don't see how not funding public higher education in this state would create "a steady stream of skilled workers." This is especially true considering that the degree that you and I are working towards as undergraduates is slowly becoming looked upon as a high school diploma in most industries that don't involve packing groceries or wrapping hamburgers.

I'm not saying that all the University's money should come from the state (and it doesn't – a great deal comes from federal research grants and contributions from a wide variety of benefactors including private industry and alumni), but this is the University of Massachusetts and Massachusetts has to take the responsibility to ensure that we receive the funding that we need: which is not what the Commonwealth would be doing if it follows its plan to give the University $10 million less from the government than we need.

Of course, the politicians have the perfect out: they did increase our funding this year. In fact, they gave us $8.9 million. This may seem like a lot, but a huge chunk of it (over 60 percent) cannot be used in the way that the missing $10 million would be. Plus, let's be honest, the University needs as much money as possible. Consider recent decisions such as the change over to personal phones and the privatization of the Textbook Annex, both of which were made because the University needs the money. If the Cellucci administration truly felt education was important, UMass would not have to come blind and lame to the state house begging for funding.

What I don't understand about this decision is, if Cellucci feels that we need to ensure that as a state we have skilled workers, why isn't he giving us more money than we are asking for? I mean, frankly, most of those people who attend UMass are residents of the state and most of them will end up living and working here, so why give us a budget increase that will not cover the expenses of the University?

Pull quote: "I don't see how not funding public higher education in this state would create 'a steady stream of skilled workers.'"

Does Cellucci feel that as a school we are not using the money we have wisely? Does the Administration realize that departments such as philosophy do most of their work on the Web not because they have modernized, but because they don't have the money to buy enough paper to allow for handouts to be made? Does the Cellucci Administration know that their allocation for the University means that "skilled workers," who are currently training those people who are necessary for continuing the states' economic success, will be fired because of a missing $10 million not provided by a state that is and has been willing to spend billions of dollars on a certain transportation project that is years behind schedule.

Mr. Cellucci was elected to be an administrator for our state. His job, then, is to pay attention to the recommendations of those who are experts in their fields, and make decisions based upon the best information provide by said experts. Now, I'm assuming here, but frankly, I doubt any independent education expert would consider causing a 5 percent reduction in the budgets of all the departments in the University as a decision that is healthy for the school. I'm also assuming that Argeo is not an expert on how much it costs to actually run an UMass. Or more accurately, I doubt Argeo is an expert on how much it costs to run UMass so that people are actually in an environment that will allow them to grow and learn, so that they can fulfill his desire for "skilled workers" for the state of Massachusetts in the future.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

Murder by numbers

As we stand now, having passed over the threshold of a new millennium, I feel the need to break down that momentous occasion according to the math. Through simple observations, I will provide you with a sign of the times in which you live.

Now, I know what you're all saying. "Seth," you say, "I've read so much absolute crap about the millennium that I'm just not interested in your take on the situation. I mean, come on, already!"

"Well," I reply astutely. "Deal with it."

40,000,000 – Number of dollars spent by Virginia Slims on a recent advertising campaign that encourages women to "Find Your Voice" by sucking down the exhaust from the extreme-ly healthy cigarettes.

Ironically, it is well documented that one's voice is exactly what people lose when enjoying a hearty diet of tobacco products. By "Finding Your Voice," Virginia Slims perhaps intends for you to locate your electro-larynx before holding it to your throat to speak.

In related news, the tobacco industry has gone back to the Supreme Court. This time, our buddies at Lung Cancer, Inc. are claiming that the Food and Drug Administration should not regulate its products because, get this, the products are too deadly.

You read that right.

10,000 – The estimated total of new cases of laryngeal cancer last year, attributed to over 4,000 deaths. Philip Morris, Virginia Slims' parent company, has acknowledged the overwhelming scientific evidence that smoking causes lung cancer and heart disease, among other fun medical problems that turn peoples' insides black. It is information along those lines that the tobacco industry is using to rationalize being outside the jurisdiction of the FDA.

I'm sorry, but I just don't see it.

Similarly, the government has decided to encourage the slitting of wrists because, for lack of a better reason, it kills people. Let's move on.

9,753 – Times my friend, Boo (yes, that's his name), had to go to the Whitmore Administration Building to check to see if he had a place to live on campus before they finally stuck him in Sylvan near the beginning of last semester.

8,942 – Desks within Whitmore that poor Boo had to visit before getting any sort of useful information on the subject.

8,937 – Desks within Whitmore that poor Boo had to visit in order to simply borrow a pen with which to fill out his official Housing Request Form.

5,000 – The increase in the number of registered Democrats since 1990, compared to the 12,000-person jump that the Republicans saw in that same time span. The totals have now hit 197,816 and 265,679 respectively, meaning that the worst-case scenario is true: people are getting more interested in politics.

Independents? They have grown by 62,000 to a victorious mark of 274,927, suggesting that I will, in fact, win the presidency if I run for the position.

4,986 – Number of people around the globe that Texas Republican and presidential hopeful George W. X. Y. Z. Bush would view as unfamiliar foreign leaders, such as Angus King, the governor of Maine. His complex foreign policy plan will include the United States building giant neon signs over strange lands that say informative things like "This is Canada" so that Mr. Bush doesn't get confused.

4,375 – Times Bush has said nothing about his cocaine usage, comforting 12,000 fence-riders enough so that they would wander over to the Republican party, confident that their candidate for president is at least not using heroin.

3,919 – The total passing yards that UMass quarterback Todd Bankhead recorded in his first season at the helm of the Minuteman football team, easily moving him to the top of the list for single-season yardage outputs by a field general. During the year in question (1998) the Maroon and White brought home the National Championship, making them very different than the Eagles of Georgia Southern University that year, whose fans proudly displayed classy signs that said things like, "If I went to UMass, I'd kill myself" during GSU's match up with Massachusetts this season in the second round of the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs. Unfortunately, the suicidal Eagle fans didn't follow through.

2,000 – Years since Jesus H. Christ was born. Still very religious, Americans remember this great man's accomplishments not only by basing their whole concept of time on him, but also by yelling his name whenever they stub their toe or burn their hand on a hot stove.

Coincidentally, it is also the year that Collegian co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Alexis Pushkar and I plan to take the White House (I hope you've been reading these columns!.

1,979 – Years after Jesus that I was born.

99 – Bottles of beer on the wall. However, new highly-scientific studies claim that if you do, in fact, take one down and pass it around, you will very likely contract a deadly bacterial infection that somebody in the room picked up from an earlier escapade while drinking. These highly scientific studies also theorize that this person, male or female, also slept with your significant other while getting sloshed last week. The important findings suggest that you pay closer attention to the people you're socializing with.

82 – The number that appeared on my football jersey when I took the field for Lisbon High School, playing the positions of wide receiver, quarterback, defensive tackle, linebacker, cornerback, safety and, my personal favorite, defensive end – all at different times, of course. Averaging my four years of high school together, I weighed 133.75 pounds, including a scale-tipping 155 as a senior.

1 – Number of lines left in this column.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Seth Koenig

If not now, when?

As students returned to campus last week, information spread that once again, budget cuts are coming. This year, despite a budget allocated an increase of one percent, all departments will have to cut their budgets by one percent, and create budgets with 2-3 percent cuts for planning purposes. One percent cuts do not sound like much. However, in the many budgets on campus that are quite large, one percent can mean the difference between offering a broad choice of classes, or hiring a new professor.

Laura Siciliano

According to a statement released by Chancellor Scott, the $219 million dollar budget allocation given to the University by the state includes an increase of $8 million. However, Scott says that the increase is $10 million less than was requested. Therefore, the budget cuts are necessary to compensate for the smaller budget. In the economy that we are fortunate to have at this time, the very idea of budget cuts is an atrocity that this University should be ashamed to have connected with its name.

We are living in an age where we are part of one of the best economies in memory. The federal government now has a balanced budget and is dramatically reducing the deficit. State governments across the United States are facing the wonder of budget surpluses. Yet, somehow, someway, our university does not have enough money to run itself adequately? Of the $8.9 million budget increase, $6.6 million is designated for salary increases (with some allocation toward financial aid and scholarships). Salary increases seem to be very important to the University of Massachusetts. After all, last fall, President Bulger and several members of his staff received large salary increases, and I agree that it is important for employees to be adequately compensated for their work at a competitive rate. However, when are the students going to receive increases? When are we going to see benefits for what we pay?

We do attend a public university, which obviously does not come with all of the amenities of a rinzy, private college. For the $10,000 that we pay annually to attend UMass, we should be seeing our money work for us. When budget increases mean pay raises for employees, and departmental budget cuts decrease choices and services for students, we as students are not getting our money's worth.

Already this semester, I have heard stories of people struggling to find 12 credits worth of classes, because every class they try to attend is overenrolled. Legends are being made of classes with 2 openings and 70 students trying to fill them. There are not enough dorm rooms on campus, and all last semester, people were living in lounges. Yet, UMass has no plans to create more housing. In Orchard Hill, the Commonwealth College is discussing taking away lounge space in Field in order to create another classroom; something that may benefit some students, but once again, takes away some services and benefits for students.

There are many ways in which students pay more than they should for services at UMass. At many universities, students receive free memberships to state of the art workout facilities but at UMass, the gyms are small rooms with poor hours, forcing students to pay to join a Body Shop or work out off campus. The University claims it is losing money running our stores, so it is turning its businesses over to privatization – a decision that once again may cause price increases. In Southwest, students now have to bring their own phones, which is another unexpected expense that students have faced this year. All around campus, students are receiving fewer benefits than students at other campuses around the nation. In the end, that is not only going to hurt the students at UMass now, but the University itself will be hurt as its reputation is tarnished.

President Bulger's office is located in Boston, allegedly to unite the University system and be closer to the state government and budget offices. If President Bulger is going to be so far away from what is happening at the University's flagship campus, the least he can do is work harder to increase funding so that students see some benefits. In addition, Chancellor Scott needs to work more to manage money better, so that any budget increase benefits students and does not result in budget cuts. After all, in the end, without the students, none of these people would have a job. We are the heart, soul, and reason for this University and it is high time that we are treated as such.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Icanic Gorlowsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Sticker Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager

Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Metschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Reith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Fine arts events arriving at UMass: A fascinating assortment of concerts

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Spring semester is opening with a wealth of high art deserving both your attention and participation around the five college community. The first full week of classes is already welcoming a variety of classical and contemporary culture. Starting tonight at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall the Avanti Quintet will perform a new piece, "Five Fantasies on Primary Colors," by local composer and UMass Professor Frederick Tillis.

The five moments venture through a world of styles from the drones of India and the polyphonic rhythms of Africa to the folk songs of Japan and South America. The following evening at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium UMass welcomes renowned jazz violinist Regina Carter and her Quintet. Carter has been named tops in the violin category in Down Beat magazines 46th Annual Critics Poll and will bring an integration of jazz, funk, African, Brazilian and soul music to her performance here.

The weekend in music is not without another distinct element of sound as the 15th Annual Honor Band Concert takes place in the Concert Hall on Saturday, Feb. 5 at 7 p.m. The Band consists of students from all over New England recommended by their music teachers for outstanding ability and individual contributions. Their talents are fused in two ensembles, the Symphonic Band and the Wind Ensemble.

For one of those definitive "you'll only try this in college" experiences check out the Beijing Opera Theatre Company, visiting the Concert Hall Thursday Feb. 3 at 7:30 p.m. The Company celebrates styles established over 400 years ago in the Kunju Chinese Theatre as well as selections from the more contemporary Peking Opera. In their consistent pursuit to redefine our concept of performing arts, the New World Theatre will present their first production of the semester at Mt. Holyoke's Rooke Theatre Feb. 3-5 at 8 p.m. The production entitled "Clothes" is a theatre/dance adaption of a story by American Indian writer Chitra Divakaruni entitled "Arranged Marriage." The piece highlights elements of poetry, classical Indian dance and music.

This week is an extremely busy one for galleries on campus. The Hampden Gallery will open with "Extreme Nature" by Vermont-based sculptor Daniel Ladd. The exhibit runs through the end of the month with an opening reception held on Feb. 1 from 4-6 p.m. Extreme Nature lends aesthetic ideals to organic forms and results in some interesting stuff made out of gourds. Also premiering at UMass on the first is "Evidence of Feminism: Exhibit A" at the Wheeler Gallery. This collection is a series of three group exhibitions, featuring eighteen area artists, raising questions rather than preaching dogma. The opening reception is scheduled for Feb. 5 from 2-5 p.m. in the gallery with an additional talk with the artists scheduled for Feb. 8 from 5-7 p.m. in the gallery.

All galleries on campus are free and open to the public seven days a week and all performances are under $7 for students. Tickets and additional information is always available at the UAC by calling 545-2511. To submit activities and events for this column email us at: lineartsweek@hotmail.com.

Isn't She Great a dismal, unfunny flop

By Wes Wrightson
Collegian Correspondent

Isn't She Great
Directed by Andrew Bergman with Bette Midler and Nathan Lane
Playing at Showcase Cinemas

Isn't She Great is a film marred by bad script writing, sloppy dialogue, and even worse plot narration. Bette Midler stars as Jacqueline Susann, the author who wrote the 1960's novel Valley of the Dolls, in her meteoric rise to stardom through the publication of this novel. The film plays itself more like a mind-the-scene's VH1 special than a poignant story of a trouble woman's life.

With an all-star cast of Midler, Nathan Lane, John Cleese, and David Hyde Pierce (Frasier), one would expect Isn't She Great to be the laugh-riot of the new decade well at least 1 did. What we, as the audience, get is a dramatization of the life of a lacquline Susann and her grass-roots campaign to make her snuitty debut novel Valley of the Dolls into the legendary 1960's best seller that we know it as today. The pain of knowing that this film was intended to be funny from the outset, or at least that's what I thought going into the theater, was intensified, as I sat watching the character of Susann die slowly during the course of the film.

Screenwriter Paul Rudnick who brought us such light-hearted fare as In and Out seems to go in the opposite direction here. His screenplay plays like the worst HBO cable biography that you have ever seen. It tries way too hard to be funny (which it never really is), and then it stops the comedy to tackle more severe subjects like Susann's breast cancer, and her autistic son. The mixture of extreme drama and the type of comedic act would have worked if another director had been brought aboard, and another screenwriter had done a better job than Rudnick did.

Andrew Bergman (Striptease) is the director in question and he makes Isn't She Great a GREAT mess of embarrassingly boisterous performances. There is also zero support from the pros behind the camera. Such huge talents as the Divine Ms. M and Nathan Lane are wasted here with the dry script and mundane direction.

The audience never knows what

COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES
Nathan Lane brings his zany antics back to the silver screen.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES
John Cleese in Isn't She Great year the story starts, and we only know what year the story ends by the date on Susann's tombstone. This movie seems to be the work of a committee. Subplots fall away like dust in the wind, never to be seen again, and a natural cinematic rhythm is never present. The film means to celebrate Jacqueline Susann, but it is such a patchwork of a film that it seems like more of a slap in her face. This movie would have made a great farce and at some points it seems headed in that direction. It has all the acting talent, but the talent goes unused. This is a biopic that no one really asked for, and ultimately it was horribly fashioned altogether. D

Women still minority in film

By Sharon Waxman
Washington Post

PARK CITY, Utah – Sundance Film Festival took every opportunity to tout the presence of 29 films here by women – roughly twice last year's count – among the festival's 113 features.

About one-quarter of the films are by women? And that's a major step up?

"It's the last great disparity in Hollywood," agreed Jodie Foster when asked about this at a screening of "Joe Gould," which she produced. "There aren't good reasons for it, really, except that producers tend to be men, and when they're about to entrust $5 million or whatever to someone, they like to pick people that look like them. It makes them feel safer."

Foster called it a problem of "race psychology" that also afflicts minority directors. "It's hard to get a small movie off the ground. We bang our heads against the wall every day. It's hard, and it's harder for women and harder for blacks and Latinos."

Most of the women directors here were in their forties, a reflection, they said, of the time it took to break into the game.

"Film is a boy's club. Indie film is a boy's club," said writer-director Mary Harron, who came to the festival with the much-anticipated "American Psycho." Her film is an '80s-era tale of depravity featuring a Wall Street banker who by night is a serial killer. Christian Bale ("Velvet Goldmine") stars. The movie seems likely to touch off its own controversy, with its scenes of dead women on meat hooks and a naked Bale chasing a victim down the hall with a chain saw.

"I didn't think I could be a director," Harron said. "I thought it was too technical. But then I found out when you make movies you don't need to know any of that; you just need to know what you want." She says her film is a "satire" and makes men look idiotic with their shallow pomposity. And chain saws.

Lisa Krueger, 39, who was here with the Miramax film "Committed," her second effort after "Manny and Lo," was similarly slow to trust her own abilities. "Sometimes I think if I were a guy I would've had a little more of that hubris that it takes to be very young and grab a camera and make a film," she said. "Because filmmaking involves getting so many people to trust you and to dedicate their effort and time and artistry – it's a lot to ask. It always seemed presumptuous to direct a movie.

"But guys, in a great way, are allowed to be presumptuous, to beat their chests and say, 'I'm a boy wonder.' Now you have young women of 22 saying, 'I'm a girl wonder.'"

"Committed," her romantic comedy, stars Heather Graham as a young wife who refuses to let her husband (Luke Wilson) of two years abandon her and go on a search for The Truth in the Southwest. Instead she follows him and decides to wait until he's ready to come back.

For Krueger, the story was about the break-up of her own marriage and the absence of moral guidelines in a divorce-ridden society. "It's about the feelings I went through when I split up: How can I reconcile that I made this lifelong vow to that person? I was plagued by the idea, 'Did I give up too early? Or did I give up too late?'" she said. "You know, people can barely keep a commitment to keep a gig a week from now. Everything is possible, nothing is sacred; I think that's the modern American condition. What you discover is that you might want rules to exist."

By the way, Krueger remarried three months ago. The movie will be out at the end of April.

Want to write for arts?
There will be a meeting today at 7:30 at the Collegian office, 113 Campus Center basement for anyone interested in writing for arts. Returning writers should attend as well. If you haven't written for the Collegian before, please bring a writing sample. See you here!

Bravo takes an edgy approach to specials

By Harry Berkowitz
Newsday

A designer of "humane" slaughterhouses. A journalist who hitchhikes cross country. A pink Winnebago touring the Bible Belt, loaded with gay partiers.

It's hardly the kind of fare that the urbane, well-heeled viewers of Bravo expect from an arts and film network known for ballet, opera and foreign movies such as Mexico's hit "Like Water for Chocolate."

But as the audience for cable TV expands and as the arena of cable channels trying to attract those viewers grows more crowded, networks have had to develop and adjust strategies.

In Bravo's case, the strategy in recent years has been to add edgy content – such as the lifestyles of porn stars, televangelists and UFO chasers chronicled in "Louis Theroux's Weird Weekends" – and to increase its number of commercials. In the past year, Bravo has seen its ratings rise, its overall audience increase and its revenues soar.

But such success comes at a price: Two years ago, Bravo ranked No. 1 in median household income of prime-time viewers, topping $58,000, ahead of even financial network CNBC in that key measure of how attractive a network's audience might be to advertisers, according to New York-based Mediamark Research Inc. Since then, Bravo has dropped a few notches, slipping below $54,000 and losing ground to cable networks ranging from Home & Garden TV to ESPN2 to CNN.

Executives at the upscale-but-decade-old Bravo, which is based in Bethpage, N.Y., and is controlled by Cablevision Systems Corp., say they are not worried and that the income shift reflects the tricks balancing act that cable networks face nowadays. While some broadcast and cable networks manage to build both big and clearly defined audiences, others shift too fast and blur their identities. "That danger is always there," said Bravo general manager Ed Carroll, adding that the network still attracts one of the most sophisticated audiences of any network, especially one featuring entertainment rather than sports or news. The question is: How can we expand our niche to serve the broadest cross-section of viewers but still be true to the niche? That's the programming challenge we come back to every day."

The challenge is facing many networks, ranging from Fox, which started out focusing on very young viewers but stumbled when it tried to broaden its base too much, to Court TV, which has gained in ratings by adding returns of series such as "Homicide: Life on the Street" to its docket of courtroom trials. And A&E has moved away from its arts and entertainment niche as its "Biography" series has become a hit. Carroll, who also oversees the Independent Film Channel, has been one of the chief architects of Bravo's strategy in the past few years and has helped push the network's programming in the direction of more unconventional, edgy fare.

To further that effort, last month Josh Sapan, president of Bravo parent firm Rainbow Media, announced an alliance with Salon.com, under which the arts and politics focused Internet magazine will create a half-hour TV program for Bravo this year featuring some of its reporters and columnists.

Bravo's efforts have helped draw a younger audience to some shows, which can mean somewhat less affluent but still sophisticated viewers.

But edgy comes at a price.

Many advertisers avoid "The Awful Truth," the in-your-face series hosted by Michael Moore of "Roger and Me" fame, though the show has attracted Volkswagen, Subaru and film studios such as Universal and Miramax since it debuted last year.

"We believe that if you stand up for editorial integrity, you may tick off an advertiser in the short run, but they'll be back or other advertisers will take their place," Carroll said.

In choosing new series, Bravo executives said, the network tries to keep its eye on finding unique perspectives on contemporary culture and on the creative process.

"The cable television landscape is littered with any number of networks that have tried to translate the arts to television, either by shots of paintings that last three minutes long or theatrical performances that are filmed as though you are sitting in the audience," said Kathleen Dore, producer of Bravo Networks On Location, Bravo's 10-hour-a-week arts programming block. "It's attractive because it's one of the least cluttered networks," said Dore. Andrew Donchin, director of national broadcast at Cantor Fitzgerald in Manhattan, which buys TV time for advertisers including Pfizer and Midas.

With its new ad policy, Bravo began running more promotional spots for its shows and authorized cable system operators to sell another two minutes of local advertisements each hour, which helped persuade more of those operators to carry Bravo. It also launched a $10 million ad campaign to promote its series.

In the past two years, the number of cable subscribers who receive Bravo has jumped to 42 million, an increase of 12 million. Carroll expects to add another 3 million to 5 million subscribers this year and again next year, which would bring the overall number to a level where more national advertisers tend to pay attention.

After a rocky year in 1998, Bravo's average prime-time ratings – which reflect the portion of its cable subscribers who watch the network – rose 45 percent last year, reaching 0.32 in the fourth quarter. Sass said the network needs to hit 0.50.

For the first nine months of 1999, overall revenue at Bravo rose 55 percent to $54.7 million, and operating cash flow soared 142 percent to $17.3 million, according to Cablevision.

COURTESY PIERRE VINET
More fun than a barrel of sea urchins.
Matthew Perry and Bruce Willis star in The Whole Nine Yards, coming soon to a theatre near you. You probably won't want to see it, but it will be coming.

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in

AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Excellent Salary & Benefit Package After Graduation
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From
- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!

FRESHMAN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@aca.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE R.O.T.C.

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE • JOIN US!

Jordan returns to the NBA as GM All-Star game returns after hiatus

For all those who have been undeniably captivated by Super Bowl XXXIV and the wonder of Kurt Warner for the last seven days, here's a simple look back at the past week's news and results in what has been known to be dubbed
"The NBA"

Michael Jordan is back in basketball. The only way you wouldn't have known that is if you have been sleeping for two weeks. As head of basketball operations for the Washington Wizards, Jordan decided to make his first major move while attending the Super Bowl in Atlanta. Gar Heard was fired as coach Saturday night, after the Wizards' 103-98 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers. The Wizards are 14-30 and remain in the basement of the Atlantic Division.

Former Raptors coach Darrell Walker was reunited with Jordan yesterday when he was officially named head coach of the struggling Wizards. Walker and Jordan were teammates on the Chicago Bulls during the second half of the 1992-93 season and have remained close friends. The rumor now floats around that both are extremely excited to have each other as permanent golfing partners.

It's kind of ironic if you think about it. Jordan can hit a game-winning shot to take an NBA Championship but he couldn't go face to face with coach Heard to tell him that he no longer had a job. He left general manager Wes Unseld to do the "big nasty" because he was too busy living in luxury in Atlanta (probably golfing) on Super Bowl weekend. There is no question that Jordan will never lace up his Nikes again. He's having too much fun playing with his shoe company, and well, with the Wizards whenever he gets the chance.

Do you remember Dennis Rodman? Well, he's back. The Worm is thinking about joining the Dallas Mavericks, but he said he wouldn't make up his mind until after the Super Bowl. Rodman told Mavericks owner Mark Cuban on Tuesday that he's interested insigning on for the rest of the season, but his calendar is booked through the weekend. He previously said he wanted to delay a decision until after the Super Bowl and the Pro Bowl. If you can count then you have just realized that with Rodman's antics, that makes two former Bulls who would rather watch professional football than deal with the stuff the NBA has to offer.

So now you're probably wondering what actually happened in those awesome regular season games. The most interesting game of last week came on Sunday in a match up between Western rivals Houston and Los Angeles. The Lakers brought their NBA-best 34-10 record to Houston on the heels of an up-and-down week and hoped to get back on the right track. Houston guard Cuttino Mobley hit a timely 3-pointer with 19 seconds left, and Kelvin Cato sparked a late fourth-quarter rampage that included a Shaquille O'Neal swat as the Houston Rockets beat the Lakers 89-85. Shaq tossed in a game-high 27 points and grabbed 19 rebounds while losing the duel with Cato in the closing minutes. "That was an embarrassing performance by our basketball team," Lakers coach Phil Jackson gasped to the Associated Press. "I was surprised that we didn't perform better than that on national TV. I was very disappointed... As bad as we played, even if we would have won, it would have been embarrassing." Steve Francis led the Rockets with 17 points.

Eric Soderstrom
GM

On a side note, the Houston Rockets will retire Clyde Drexler's number 22 uniform on Feb. 3. Drexler was elected All-Star 11 times and was placed on the NBA's 50 all-time great players' list. He captured the 1995 NBA Championship as part of the Rockets and won an Olympic gold medal with the Dream Team in 1992.

Veteran guard Derek Harper announced his retirement from the NBA as a player yesterday. He will take on the job as vice president of business relations for the Dallas Mavericks. Harper played the bulk of his professional career in Dallas and has not stepped onto the court at all this season after being traded from the Lakers to the Detroit Pistons early in September.

Here's how the rest of the week in the NBA played out:

It took two overtimes for the Utah Jazz to declare Western supremacy on Monday evening as they defeated the Los Angeles Lakers, 105-101, in Salt Lake City. Karl Malone and John Stockton combined for 49 points in Utah's third straight win.

Gary Payton was ejected late in the first quarter of Seattle's 112-106 loss to the New York Knicks. Allan Houston dropped 27 in the win while Latrell Sprewell choked the nets for 24 of his own. Shammond Williams took advantage of Payton's early Monday exit with a career-high 22 points.

Yoshon Lenard scored 21 points and Alonzo Mourning added 20 to lead the Miami Heat to an elementary 113-89 win over the Boston Celtics on Tuesday night. Antoine Walker led the Celtics with 28 points. Boston played without forward Paul Pierce who was nursing a left hamstring pull. Boston slid to their third consecutive loss on Wednesday as they bowed down to the Orlando Magic 111-89. Tariq Abdul-Wahad scored a team-high 19 points in the victory.

The featured game on Thursday evening found Kevin Garnett and Tim Duncan in a showdown being compared to that of Russell and Chamberlain. Garnett scored a game-high 26 points while Duncan laughed last as he netted 20 in San Antonio's 92-80 easy victory over the Minnesota Timberwolves.

The Portland Trailblazers continued in their dismantling of NBA powerhouses on Thursday evening as they defeated Utah 85-75 at the Rose Garden. Jermaine O'Neal scored 14 points and Damon Stoudamire added 13 points and seven assists to lead the Portland Trail Blazers. The victory was the Blazers fourth in a row and their eighth win in the last 10 games.

The Green Machine finally produced a victory Friday night as they snapped a three-game losing streak with a 91-88 victory over the visiting Phoenix Suns. Paul Pierce had 31 points while Walker added 24 points for the struggling Celtics.

The Minnesota Timberwolves won for the sixth time in seven days as they sent the Utah Jazz packing, 96-94, on Saturday. Garnett scored 29 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in the win. The only breakthrough of light for the Jazz came in the physical form of a Mailman as Malone became just the third player in NBA history to reach 30,000 points.

The 2000 NBA All Star Starters were announced last week with Toronto Raptors' Vince Carter claiming the title of leading vote getter. Joining Carter in the starting lineup in the East will be Detroit's Grant Hill, Philadelphia's Allen Iverson, Charlotte's Eddie Jones and Mourning. The Lakers' Shaquille O'Neal will be joined in the Western Conference's starting lineup by Garnett, Duncan, Phoenix's Jason Kidd and Shaq's partner in crime, teammate Kobe Bryant.

As Commissioner David Stern told the media weeks ago, the Slam Dunk contest is back, and ready to make a lasting impression. The Raptors' Carter and Tracy McGrady lead a field of six high flying ridiculous leapers back into All-Star Weekend after a two-year break. Larry Hughes, Jerry Stackhouse, Antawn Jamison and Francis will join Carter and McGrady. Set your VCRs for this one.

Utah Jazz guard Jeff Hornacek will have to defend his title from a field of eight Wild West Sharpshooters in order to become the fourth two-time winner of the AT&T Long Distance Shootout. All-Star Saturday night is, by far, the highlight of every NBA All-Star weekend. This year, however, expect the actual game to unleash more excitement than it has in the past. With the extreme influx of young talent such as Carter and Bryant, it is inevitable that a "Globetrotter" like session will be performed.

Look for Toni Kukoc, Ike Austin, Hughes, and Glen Rice to be wearing different uniforms in the near future.

If you're a die-hard NBA fan then you'll definitely be excited to hear that the United States will form another Dream Team for this summer's Olympics. They will play China in their opening game of the Olympic tournament. This year's team of dreams will include Tim Duncan, Kevin Garnett and Grant Hill.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

ABC gets thumbs up for SB coverage

By Leonard Shapiro
The Washington Post

ATLANTA – Whooo boy, were we ever ready for some football.

ABC Sports certainly was, right from Al Michaels' opening – "the meek finally inherited the earth" that said it all about the compelling up-from-nowhere matchup between the St. Louis Rams and Tennessee Titans today in Super Bowl XXXIV.

Boomer Esiason reported early that offensive coordinator Mike Martz was planning to "empty the entire playbook" and that's exactly what the Rams were doing on their first drive of the day. They got a key first down from a little-used fullback and moved into position for a field goal attempt that went awry with a Redskins-like blunder.

Esiason also said the Titans were planning to blitz frequently, and that's precisely what occurred on the play preceding that aborted kick when Blaine Bishop came up from his safety position to force a hurried Kurt Warner throw that landed incomplete in the end zone.

The good news for ABC, and what Michaels said before the kickoff would be "our worst nightmare, a 24-0 game early in the second quarter," never materialized. Instead, the network had the great fortune to have a relatively close contest entering the second half, always a good sign for better ratings in prime time.

Michaels, as usual, was superb in his play-by-play. How many announcers do you know who would say "(Marshall) Faulk, running with alacrity"? Talking about Warner, Michaels said, "if his story gets to a studio, it would be rejected as being too schmaltzy. It's too good for the movies; it's better in real life."

Esiason also was on his game. On a long Faulk gain with a screen pass, he pointed out that young free safety Anthony Dorsett was probably responsible for the blown coverage. He said a quick count by Warner prevented Dorsett, playing in place of injured Marcus Robertson, from getting defensive signals to his teammates in time.

ABC's 32 cameras offered gorgeous views of plays from all angles, though the constant panning to players' wives, brothers, moms, 14th cousins and yes, Georgia Frontiere pacing the sideline, got very old very quickly.

We certainly could have done without Lesley Visser's sappy interview with Brenda Warner between plays in the second quarter. Visser tried to recover with a John Elway interview until he used it as a free play to promote his new Internet venture. Hey, at $2.2 million for a 30-second spot, why not?

Earlier in the day, Chris Berman mercifully seemed a tad more subdued than usual on ABC's fast-moving, sometimes quirky, occasionally annoying and mostly entertaining pregame show. He's been fighting a cold, fever and flu-like symptoms all week and could barely talk on Tuesday, perhaps one reason for him keeping the decibel level down, the better to preserve himself for the four-hour marathon.

But without question, the pre-game star had to be 49ers quarterback Steve Young, a natural in the host's chair. Clearly, all those concussions have done nothing to diminish Young's ability to recall so many marvelous anecdotes from his playing days with a smooth delivery far more typical of a 20-year veteran than a rookie broadcaster.

During a segment on Saturday's Hall of Fame selections, Young recalled new inductee Ronnie Lott going into a small rage at halftime. "Lott says, 'If we don't win, don't bother coming back into the locker room,' " Young said. "I'm thinking, 'How am I going to get my car keys?' "

Speaking of Young, the show included an informative and rather chilling piece on concussions, including former Giants' linebacker Harry Carson saying, "I chose broadcasting as a career, and I still have problems with memory." But Young insisted in a brief exchange with Berman that "if you rest, and let it heal, you can play again."

Berman asked him if he thought he could return to play again next year, and Young, perhaps wishfully, insisted, "I'll be cleared to play." Better he should retire and head straight for the studio, where he's going to be a star. A very big star.

■ UVM

continued from page 10

When Hershey can come back and contribute on parallel bars, rings and pommel horse and the rest of the team gets more on track with their routines, there's no telling how far the Minutemen can go. But with the NCAA's elimination of the East and West Regional Qualifiers this year, UMass has its best chance ever to make it to NCAA Nationals. With this incentive, individual scores will surely begin to rise and team scores will become more reflective of the EAC Championship team of last year.

Collegian Sports

Comin' at ya with a full head of steam!

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Nathan Sell and the Massachusetts hockey team will take on Hockey East leader Boston University Friday night at the Mullins Center.

Teacher's Aides

Join our instructional [illegible] alternative schools (primary, middle and [illegible] small groups (2-3) of students in a [illegible] training provided, full [illegible] college recommended.

[illegible] $14.00

Send resume and letter to:
Dr. Elana Aitken
c/o ALPs, Hampshire Educational Collaborative
97 Hawley St.
Northampton, MA
549-5288

AA/EOE/ADA

Collegian Classifieds
we might just teach you a thing or two

STRENGTH • FITNESS • CONDITION
CARDIO PLUS
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 253-9000
Thurs. @ 5:00
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Met-Rx....EAS....ProLab...Twinlab....Muscletech...Solgar...Met-Rx.. EAS
Get In Shape with...
IN SHAPE NUTRITION
Nutrition Supplement Discounter
Spring Break
- Largest selection of fat burners and sport supplements in Western, Mass.
- Huge selection of vitamins and herbs
- Register here to win a trip to the Bahamas!!

Coupons available online @ www.inshapeonline.com
65 University Dr. Amherst, MA (413) 549-7434

Making a difference has always been a matter of applying yourself. Here's where to apply.

PEACE CORPS

5-College Area Peace Corps Week:
February 7 - 11
Contact the 5-College Area Office
(413) 545-2105 www.peacecorps.gov

WIRELESS Hook-Ups
- Motorola Pagers: As low as $99 for pager and one year of service
- Largest selection of prepaid phonecards as low as 1¢ min
Great international rates as well.
We take phone orders
- 100% digital cellphones (PCS) starting at $49
Prepay option available
Free weekend offer with contract
All phones have voicemail, caller ID, call waiting, call forwarding, and phone back.
33 N. Pleasant St. Carriage Shops
Amherst, Ma 01002 • (413) 549-4914

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons aat www.cantones.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000. Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

1 Bedroom apartment for rent. Amherst Cemter location. $530/month. Available 2/1. 253-4463.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL!
IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous RY, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

EMPLOYMENT

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp-Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

Two paid internships available. Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots activism and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a spring internship position (with stipend) for you. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Like to play? Need money? The Pelham afterschool program needs responsible and reliable assistants, who love kids. Tues and Thurs 3 to 5:30 pm. Contact Lennie Ware 253-5944 or leave message 253-3595.

Earn $530 weekly distributing phone cards. No experience necessary. full or part-time. Call 1-800-572-3361.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups
Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work for an exciting College focused Internet company at your school! Looking for motivated individuals with strong leadership, entrepeneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay and options! Contact info@uconnections.com.

Work study or substitute teachers positions available. $7.00 per hour. Children 18 months to 5 years old. Experience with young children preferred. Call Ellen at 549-1167.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Undergraduate Bussiness Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills and General Bussiness Experience. 10-15 hours per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Bussiness, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2166.

Summer Internships/Jobs: meaningful, rewarding, unique! 4 GREAT Co-ed Children's Camps in NY, PA and ME are looking for fun-loving, children-focused staff. Swim, water-ski, boating, tennis, outdoor leaders, media, land-sports, creative and performing arts specialists, plus Cabin and Group leaders. ACA-accredited programs. Benefits: Salary, Room, Board, Travel and Laundry. Apply to all 4 via 1 form, at www.horizon-camps.com or call (800)544-5448 for info.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

2 snowboards 4 sale. Call for details. $100 or bo. each good condition. Jeremy 549-9629.

Computer desk for sale. 1yr old. Perfect condition. $150/neg. Call Mandi 256-4915.

SNOWBOARD BOOTS FOR SALE! Women's BURTON Rulers. Excellent condition. $75 Caroline 397-0922.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bedroom house 10 minutes from Amherst center. Available NOW. $300/month. 256-2384.

Upstairs bedroom in Puffton. $333?month inc. Inc. heat and hot water. On bus route. Needed ASAP call (413) 348-3393.

1 bedroom in 2 Bedroom apartment. Looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker. 3/4 mile from campus. Effective Immediately!Call Alissa 253-4275.

ROOMATE WANTED

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

ROOMATE WANTED

1 bedroom available in Na

Looking for 1 or 2 people to sublet master bedroom in 3 bedroom. Mill Valley Apts. Call Maura 256-6777.

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? call birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Aiwa Stereo System. 3cds very powerful. Originally $700 buy for $300 or B/O. Call 6-3489.

Competition-Series Equipment at sick prices that need to go FAST- Orion XTR-series separates, amplifier, sub, alpine deck, Boston acoustic pro-series separates; Denon receiver as well: call Will @ 665-0343.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Five College Community Calendar

NOTICES

Community — All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help — From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Support — A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support — ALANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Not enough people attending your events?
Community know
Your event could fill this space.

Join our team!
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is always looking for writers who are willing to cover news stories.
If you are interested please contact Mary at 545-1762

HSCN 4 Housing Services Cable Network

3	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Guest to Guest
4	CBS/3	Hartford	23	NBC/22 Springfield
5	CBS/4	Boston	43	CNN Headline News
6	ABC/5	Boston	44	CNN
7	PBS/57	Springfield	45	CNN Fn
8	HSCN	Movie Ch.	46	CNN SI
9	UPN/20	Hartford	47	TBS
10	Weather Channel		48	BET
11	NBC/30 New Britain		49	College TV Network
12	Fox/61	Hartford	50	Univision
14	PBS/24	Hartford	51	Comedy Central
15	WCCH & HSCN		52	Cartoon Network
16	Interactions		53	TV Land
17	Univision Puritanical TV		54	C-Span
18	WB/Fox/ Nohen		55	E!/TV (Tentative)
19	Sundance		56	Bloomberg Financial Network
20	The Learning Channel		57	History Channel
22	UHF-35/57		58	HSCN Programming
24	ABC/FW Springfield

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 1, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomaloo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Secrets of Lost Empires ℠		Nova "The Diamond Deception"		Frontline (R) (In Stereo) ℠		National Desk (In Stereo) ℠
WFSB	3	News ℠	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Cabin Pressure" ℠		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ℠		Judging Amy (R) (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Cabin Pressure" ℠		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ℠		Judging Amy (R) (In Stereo) ℠		News	Late Show ℠
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	2000 Vote: N.H. Primary		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		2000 Vote: N.H. Primary		NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) ℠		News	Nightline ℠
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ℠	Nanny ℠	Buffy the Vampire Slayer ℠		Angel "The Bachelor Party" ℠		News ℠		Friends ℠	Nanny ℠
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Just Shoot Me (3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Veronica's Cl.	Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Real TV ℠		I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Sheats ℠	Dilbert ℠	News	Real TV (R) ℠	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ℠	Ent. Tonight	Just Shoot Me (3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Veronica's Cl.	Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ℠	Fraser ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Friends ℠	70s Show	70s Show	Party of Five (In Stereo) ℠		News		Friends ℠	Fraser ℠
WWLP	22	News ℠	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Just Shoot Me (3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Veronica's Cl.	Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Secrets of Lost Empires ℠		Nova "The Diamond Deception"		Frontline (R) (In Stereo) ℠		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ℠
WGGB	29	News ℠	ABC News	Seinfeld ℠	Fraser ℠	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) ℠		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ℠	Judge Judy ℠	NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Ottawa Senators. (Live)						Star Trek: Voyager "Vis-a-vis"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne ℠	Roseanne ℠	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "Groundhog Day" (1993, Comedy) Bill Murray, Andie MacDowell.					★★★½ "Back to the Future" (1985, Fantasy)
AAE	61	L.A. Law		Law & Order "Forgiveness" ℠		Biography: Farrah Fawcett		Investigative Reports (R) ℠		Love Chronicles (R) ℠		Law & Order "Past Imperfect"
CNN	42	21	(5:00) Inside Politics ℠		Election Returns			Election Returns		Larry King Live ℠		Election Returns	Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	63	170	Saturday Night Live ℠		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money		★★ "The Money Pit" (1986, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Shelley Long.				Premium Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	62		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Wild Heart			Skyscrapers: Going Up (R)		New Detectives (R)		FBI Files "Family Secrets"	Skyscrapers: Going Up (R)
ESPN	40		Sportscenter ℠		College Basketball: Michigan State at Michigan. (Live)			College Basketball: Tennessee at Kentucky. (Live)					Sportscenter ℠
LIFE	67		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait			Chicago Hope (In Stereo) ℠		★★ "Stir" (1993, Drama) Jennie Garth, Ted Wass.			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	69		MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Celebrity	Making-Video		Say What Kha TRL Wanna		TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Tom Green (R) Tom Green (R)	Undressed (R)	Loveline
NICK	43		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ℠	Rugrats ℠		Thornberrys	Skeeter	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family Jeffersons ℠	I Love Lucy	M.T. Moore
SCIFI	65		Sliders (In Stereo) ℠		Xena: Warrior Princess ℠			Xena: Warrior Princess ℠		Xena: Warrior Princess ℠		Xena: Warrior Princess ℠	Poltergeist: The Legacy ℠
TLC	73	28	Home Again	Homa Again	48 Hours "Hoping for a Miracle			Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Life and Limb		Spinal Impact	Trauma: Life in the ER (R)
TNT	53		In the Heat of the Night ℠		ER "Good Touch, Bad Touch"			NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live) ℠				Ilnaid NBA	Vanishing Son (In Stereo) ℠
USA	59		Baywatch (In Stereo) ℠		JAG (In Stereo) ℠			Walker, Texas Ranger ℠		"Cabin by the Lake" (2000, Suspense) Judd Nelson. ℠			"Cabin by the Lake" (2000) ℠
HBO	50		(5:15) "Space Truckers" (1997)		★★ "Last Action Hero" (1993) Arnold Schwarzenegger. PG-13 ℠			Beach: First		★½ "Simply Irresistible" (1999, Romance) PG-13		Sopranos "Toodle...Oo" (R) ℠
MAX	60		(5:00)		★★ "Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult" (1994)			★★ "Slam" (1998, Drama) Saul Williams. (In Stereo) ℠				★★½ "Beverly Hills Cop III" (1994) Eddie Murphy.		(Blink)"
SHOW	70		(5:15) "Pre-way y Ady"		★★★ "Matilda" (1996, Fantasy) Mara Wilson. "PG" (Movie News			★★ "What Dreams May Come" (1998) Robin Williams. PG-13 ℠				★★ "I Went Down" (1997) "R" ℠

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Grad Wars By Jim Rowell

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Drabble By

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

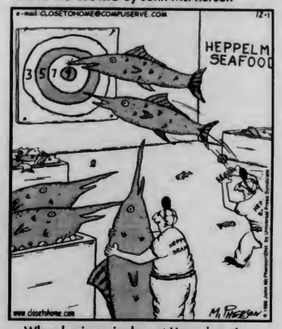
Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Grad Wars By Jim Rowell

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeaui

Horoscopes



AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You must spend some time today formulating a response to a recent "inquisition." It's important that you avoid anything that smells of self-doubt. Like Tommy Lee's new found hatred of Methods of Mayhem and his resurrected love with Pamela Anderson.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can involve others in a game that is usually quite private, but you must expect it to take on increased significance and last much longer, too! Than that can of Aqua Net that you don't know what to do with anymore.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Beware of secrets from the past that threaten to catch up with you. You can do much to prevent any harm from coming to you today or tomorrow. Admit it, you liked Winger.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Family members may actually create something of a disruption before the day is out, but you can get things back in order with grace and patience. Just tell them, "We're not gonna take it."
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Put things simply, clearly, and briefly today and most people will understand what you're getting at. Don't let resistant people bother you too much. You made the right decision, spending your last dollar to buy Warrant 'Cherry Pie.'
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Some fun and games are in order today. You don't want to expend all your energy, however, because you'll need some tonight, when things really heat up! "Every Rose Has Its Thorn" is a great love song.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What you want and what is available to you are very different. You'll have to make a choice: maintain the status quo, or risk it all when you listen to White Lion in your Econ. 104 class.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Put things in order as early as you can today, and then you'll be free to do things in a more creative fashion as the day progresses. Like putting on a ton of make-up and screaming out the window of JA "Come on feel the noise, girls rock the boys."
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be in for something of a surprise today, thanks to a loved one who has had something up his or her sleeve for quite some time. What was up their sleeve will make you go 'Round and Round.'
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can expect to enjoy some relief today, thanks to a recent discovery, which has allowed you to put certain worries and concerns behind you because girls just wanna have fun.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Take things one at a time today and you'll be able to keep your head above water. Don't be tempted to over-extend yourself at any time; case in point, River Phoenix.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll be starting a project that seems familiar to you, but which is made up of a few new and different components. Do a little research before you hang yourself out to dry like L.A. Guns did.

Quote of the Day

"I look outside, the sky is gray, and the clouds are filled with rain; it makes me jealous how it opens up; I'm stuck inside again"

–"Lockjaw" The Rugburns

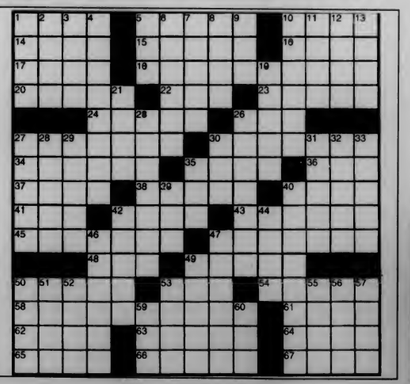
Close to Home By John McPherson

When business is slow at Heppelman's Seafood Company.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

SORRY NO DC MENU TODAY



ACROSS
1 Mind
5 Dangerous snake
10 Eat greedily
14 Jai —
15 Perfect
16 Operatic song
17 Whirl
18 Rush-hour problem
20 Crush
22 Stroke
23 Feed the fire
24 Experiments
26 Hwy
27 Window-washers'
28 Hwy problems
30 Shabbier
34 Gauguin setting
35 Obtains
36 Fiesta shout
37 Atop
38 Certain military rulers
40 Graceful swimmer
41 Halfway
42 Ballet costume
43 Nantucket, e.g
45 Take for granted
47 Lets loose
48 Climber's peak
49 Church areas
50 Pesky ones
53 Invite
54 In the lead
58 Familiar (with)
61 Tennis pro Nastase
62 China/Russia divider
63 Scornful expression
64 Pharaoh's river
65 Bridge
66 Shrew
67 Breathe laboriously

DOWN
1 Tabbies
2 Grad
3 — avis
4 Physicist Albert
5 Playing marble
6 Takes as one's own
7 Distributes
8 Piece of insulation
9 The whole enchilada
10 Wished for
11 Popular cookie
12 Eat an ice-cream cone
13 Not genuine
19 Senator Kefauver
21 Warmth
25 Aspen feature
26 Holds on to
27 Campaign for
28 Hoglike animal
29 — Island
30 Collector's goal
31 Hawkeye
32 Spiral-horned antelope
33 Tears apart
35 Widebeast
39 Colorado Indian
40 Hockey infraction
42 Oil-industry city
44 Mets' stadium
46 Planet
47 Maintenance
49 Autumn flower
50 Meadow sounds
51 Can. law grp.
52 Greenish-blue
53 Visitor to Siam
55 Director Kazan
56 Feels ill
57 Profiteered
59 Suffix meaning "sort of"
60 Like the Mojave

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	L	O	W	M	I	L	E	S	E	D	G	E
H	E	R	O	A	D	A	M	A	I	N
O	V	E	R	C	O	A	T	B	U	A	S
B	I	L	L	F	O	L	D	S	A	B	L	E
			D	O	N		W	A	R
O	B	E	L	I	S	K		C	O	N	C	E	A	L
M	E	R	Y	L		R	A	R	E		O	L	G	A
A	G	A		P	O	N	E	S		L	E	I
H	I	S	S		I	N	N	S		A	R	E	N	T
A	N	E	M	O	N	E		S	E	V	E	N	T	Y
			U	P	O	N			E	G	O
T	I	N	G	E		A	D	V	O	C	A	T	E	D
A	C	O	G		T	R	O	O	P		L	A	K	E
P	O	O	L		A	N	G	L	E		E	X	E	S
	E	R	N	E		N	O	S	E	D		D	I	S	K

1-11-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

Night Editor: Ken McDonald
Photo Technician: Becky Reddick
Copy Editor: Melissa Hamm
Production Staff: Lisa Metcalf, Lovee Garg, Melanie Thomas

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Page 10 | The Massachusetts Daily Collegian | Tuesday, February 1, 2000

No. 20 Owls to bring rivalry back to MC

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

This just might be the game it was looking for.

When the Massachusetts men's basketball team hosts No. 20 Temple tonight at 9:30 p.m. at the Williams D. Mullins Center, the 41st meeting of the two Atlantic 10 East foes will mark the renewal of a great rivalry.

It will also be the first time a perennially strong opponent will travel to Amherst since Villanova on Dec. 6.

The Owls hold the high hand in the series with a 26-14 lead despite the Minutemen snapping a 3-0 Temple roll last year with a 37-49 win in the regular season finale.

With a win, UMass (11-8) would take a step closer to the A-10 East lead, which Temple (14-4) has a stronghold on with a 7-2 in conference record. The Minutemen are tied for second with St. Bonaventure at 5-2.

"This is probably the biggest rivalry in the league without question," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "UMass, Temple, this is Rivalry Week on ESPN and we're on it so that just goes to show you what this rivalry is all about.

"Everybody gets up for the game, they get up, we get up... we've been the better teams in the league in the past few years," Flint continued. "When everybody talks about the A-10, they talk about UMass and Temple."

The two squads are at a deadlock tie in Amherst with 10 wins apiece. Temple captured the first 21 meetings between the two teams before UMass rebounded to take 14 of the next 19 match ups.

Besides the rivalry, what makes this game a clash of streaks, strides, and pride?

UMass is riding a three-game winning streak with victories over Rhode Island, Duquesne and Virginia Tech while averaging 74 points to its opponents' 55. The Owls have secured five-straight victories and eight of their last nine with the return of senior guard Juan "Pepe" Sanchez.

"They're coming off a five-game winning streak so they're playing well," said Flint. "We just have to stay the course, cut down on the turnovers, rebound, and play defense like we've been playing."

The Owls are fairly balanced in the offensive department as junior Mark Karcher leads the Owls in scoring with 15.8 ppg and five rebounds per game. Senior Quincy Wadley is second with 11.5 ppg and Lynn Greer comes off the bench with 13.2 ppg.

Temple plays a trapping defensive zone that can fool perimeter shooters into thinking that time is out of essence. The Minutemen will have familiarity on their side. Last season, Mack responded with 18 points and the UMass defense matched up to shut down the Owls offensively, as they converted just two of their attempts from the floor in the second half.

Senior co-captain Chris Kirkland will need to step up and play more aggressive on the offensive end to compensate should the Minutemen guards fall into trouble.

"One of the advantages I think we have is that we have four ball-handlers out there at times and you can spread the zone out there a little bit," said Flint. "We find that if we shoot a ton of threes than we get beat by 30, I think that other teams are starting to figure that out."

The rivalry has spawned beyond notorieties of just within the conference, sometimes making it the biggest billing on many of the players' schedules.

"It's going to be nothing but exciting, Temple coming into our home," said A-10 Player of the Week Monty Mack. "I think it means a lot because it is a rivalry and it's been going on for so long."

"It's the type of game you have to look forward to," Mack continued.

Mack could become the first Minuteman to average better than 20 points per game since Marcus Camby did during the 1995-1996 season with 20.5 per contest. The senior is second in the league in scoring with 19.6, a good distance behind George Washington's Siv'aliani Brown, who averages 24.7 ppg. The sharpshooter has led UMass in scoring in the past 11 of 12 games, reaching 20 points in eight of them. In the 81 games Mack has played at UMass, he has reached double digits 72 times, or 88 percent.

"He's getting better because he's a little more patient on offense, he hasn't been forcing his shots," said Flint.

Guard Shannon Crooks and center Kitwana Rhymer have been a major part of turnaround since January 6 when the Minutemen were 6-7 after falling to the Bonnies, 70-60.

"I don't know if we would be playing for first place in the league without him (Rhymer)," said Flint. "Shannon's really gotten better in the past couple of weeks."

"We've had more success than others in the league (against the zone)," Flint said. "But everybody knows each others' tendencies. I don't think anything really surprises you, it's about which team is the best that night."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kitwana Rhymer looks to dominate the middle as rival Temple soars into the Mullins Center for a game that will determine first place in the A-10 east.

Women's gym finishes third in Fla.

By Seth Szilagyi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics traveled to Gainesville, Fl. this past weekend for the Fifth Annual Subway Challenge. However, the Minutewomen's effort was "sub"-par and they were looking for a "way" out, as Penn State placed first and Florida took second, leaving UM in third.

Penn St. narrowly defeated the hosting Gators, 194.925 to 194.050, leaving the Minutewomen looking for answers with a score of 188.750. Massachusetts finished third in every event, coming the closest to second in the balance beam.

Gator senior Chrissy Van Fleet took home her second consecutive all-around title, putting up a season-high 39.375. Penn State's Gemma Cuff and Katie Rowland came in second and third with 39.30 and 39.275, respectively. Van Fleet also won the uneven bars, her first of the season, claiming another season-high of 9.95. Florida's Teal Chiabotti took the balance beam crown with her season-high of 9.80. Hilary Thompson won the floor title with a career-high of 9.95. Penn State's Rowland was the difference in Florida sweeping the individual titles, as she claimed the vault title, posting 9.85.

"This team knows they are good on the floor," UF Head Coach Judi Markell said in a press release on their website. "The sad thing is we are that good on balance beam also, but we aren't showing it right now. We can't have those breaks and beat teams in the nation. We are not consistent on bars and beam and that has got to be fixed."

Although it didn't show on the scoreboard, the Minutewomen still had a solid performance. Freshman standout Katie Teft scored a career-high 9.650 on the vault to rank sixth in the event, while placing second on the uneven bars with a 9.900. Another freshman phenom, Jen Gendron took sixth in the all-around event with a 37.300. Senior Mandy Mosby rounded out the UMass placement taking third on the balance beam with a 9.775 and eighth on the floor exercise with a 9.850.

Teft has been making her presence felt over the first few meets. She was named UMass/WHMP Athlete-of-the-Week last week and took Atlantic 10 Rookie-of-the-Week ending Jan. 30. The honor marks the first for the frosh and she currently holds the best record in the conference on the bars with a 9.950 versus then No. 8 New Hampshire.

With the losses, the Minutewomen fall to 3-3 on the season. The young squad will look to regroup from the loss and prepare for the Mountaineers of West Virginia, as they travel down to Morgantown on Feb. 5 at 8 p.m.

UMass' places first in NH Morency leads team to win

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

Is this guy Superman or what?

Over the past few weeks, Vic Morency, senior standout thrower for the Massachusetts men's indoor track team, has performed with mind-boggling brilliance. Shattering records has become the norm for Morency as he carves his niche in the UMass history books.

This weekend, Morency took another step towards solidifying his contribution to Massachusetts track lore. At Durham, N.H. on Saturday, the throwing maestro led his team to a first place finish in the annual tri-meet versus New Hampshire and Holy Cross. The Minutemen chalked up 86 points to finish 11 points ahead of the Wildcats and a healthy margin in front of the third place Crusaders.

For the third time this season, Morency exceeded his career-best in shot put, this time with a toss of 53'5". This feat propelled the senior to second place in the all-time UMass record book in shot put. Morency also finished a respectable third in the weight throw with a toss of 55'2".

Coach Ken O'Brien emphasized Morency's importance to the team. "The weight throw is the first event at most meets, so it's good to have a lead-off batter setting the stage for a good performance," he remarked. "This is just a consistent string of performances from Vic which the team has come to depend upon."

Despite his growing list of accolades, Morency did not usurp the entire spotlight at the "Border War," as the annual meet is often dubbed. Freshman Stefan Russ also excelled, notching victories in the 55-meter dash (6.64) and the high jump (6'7"). The newcomer's performance earned him Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors for the second consecutive week.

Meanwhile, a handful of injuries thrust several back-up players onto center stage. O'Brien was proud of the squad's response to the added pressure. "In getting the team regrouped for the final push of the season, we sat out several people so we wouldn't continue [injury] aggravations," he explained. "We had several people respond well to the fact that they were put in the position of having to score more points than normal."

One notable victory was junior Dave Grecco's first place finish in the long jump for his first collegiate win. Grecco was filling in for suphomore Alex Maravel-Piccolo (shin splints). Also notching his first college victory was freshman Mike Howell, who clinched the 400-meter with a time of 51.2. O'Brien beamed about Howell's accomplishment, remarking, "With [junior] Marc Sylvander sitting on the sidelines [with an abdominal strain], Mike was pressed into service and responded with an outstanding performance."

With the Minutemen leading New Hampshire by a mere four points heading into the final stretch of the meet, performances from the relay teams helped clinch the win. In the 4 x 400, senior Kevin Kacamburas, Howell, sophomore Mike Harris, and junior Hugh Reid posted a pivotal win. Meanwhile, the 4 x 800 quartet of senior Matt Ely, sophomores Sal Nastasi and Brian Conin, and freshman Bill Sheridan solidified the Maroon and White's lead and ensured a first place finish. New Hampshire finished second, trailing UMass by 11 points.

O'Brien is pleased with the win, especially considering the intensity of the rivalry between Massachusetts and New Hampshire. "Everyone chipped in with some great performances," he said. "It represents a good win in a lot of ways."

UM sweeps UVM, MIT

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

With Jeff LaVallee out of the all-around and I.J. Hershey injured on the sidelines, the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team still managed to pummel the University of Vermont and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Saturday.

The Minutemen walked away victoriously with a score of 218.80, a quantum leap ahead of UVM's 175.85 and M.I.T.'s 168.90. But the win is not what they needed; what they needed was a high away score. UMass walks all over the Catamounts and Engineers every season, so the competition was more of a mental one. The Minutemen had hoped to hit their routines and break the 220 mark, which unfortunately didn't happen.

Having to sit out this meet due to a fractured knee, junior co-captain Hershey cheered loudly for his team hoping for some big scores. But in the end, Hershey had little to say about the tri-meet. "I think individually we had some bright spots, but our consistency needs a little work," Hershey said. "But we're right where we need to be in the season. We'll have a good meet against Michigan and again at ECACs."

Although this wasn't exactly a stellar meet for the Minutemen, there were, like always, some great individual performances. And it was of no surprise to anyone to see senior Jeff LaVallee go five for five, taking home a handful of first-place finishes. The Olympic hopeful muscled his way to two season-highs of 9.80 on the still rings and parallel bars. And LaVallee also brought home the gold on the horizontal bar and floor with marks of 9.60, and on the pommel horse with a 9.75.

Junior Bryan McNulty took second on the floor exercise with a 9.45 and Junior Eric Bacon took the bronze on the event with a 9.10. Over on the pommel horse, freshman Justin Hammar finished second (9.15) while junior Andy Leis took the second place on the parallel bars (9.45). And junior Clayton Kent snagged second on vault (9.35), just trailing freshman Brett Nelligan who won the event with a career high of 9.40.

"I felt good to do well because some of the guys were injured and we needed a decent score," Nelligan said. "It was great to be able to stand one up for the team."

So this meet wasn't a very high scoring event, it's still early in the season and M.I.T.'s gym is not exactly what the Minutemen are used to. But this weekend in Boyden Gymnasium, the Minutemen will take on Southern Connecticut: another easily conquerable foe. This could give UMass the opportunity to bring in a high home score, which is just what they need to have a shot at NCAA Nationals this year.

"I think we're in good shape right now to make it to nationals," Nelligan said. "We need one more good home score and a good away score."

UMass' all-time high score is a 228.10, which the Maroon and White set just two seasons ago. The inexperienced freshmen on that record-breaking team are now veteran juniors that have the talent to carry this team up to and even beyond that great score.

Turn to UVM, page 7

Minutewomen plunge as Scarlet Knights win in rout

By Matt Cracker
Collegian Staff

There was no bed of roses in the Garden state for the University of Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team this past Saturday as they attempted to tip toe through the tulips to victory against Rutgers University, yet despite their efforts could not harvest a win against the Scarlet Knights.

Although giving a strong performance, the Minutewomen were not able to topple Rutgers as they fell 173-120. The loss was the fourth of the season for UMass and dropped their record to 4-4 overall.

"We swam well against a worth opponent" said head women's swimming and diving coach Bob Newcomb when asked about Saturday's loss to Rutgers.

Among the days top finishers for the Maroon and White were senior Elizabeth Risotto who came out on top in two events on Saturday. Risotto took the 200-yard backstroke with a time of with a time of 2:07.67 and barely inched out fellow UMass teammate sophomore Becky Hunnewell in the 100-yard backstroke with a time 1:00.14.

Hunnewell completed the event with a time of 1:00.66 and has only recently returned to the chlorinated waters of swimming competition since suffering a shoulder injury.

Yet, Risotto and Hunnewell were not the only Minutewomen the Scarlet Knights could not hold at bay as sophomore Anne Dettloff and Andrea Spencer both picked up victories in their respective races. Dettloff hit the wall ahead of the competition in the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 5:11.02 and Spencer owned the 200 I.M., finishing in 2:10.69 and captured third in the 50-yard free open.

Other members of the wet Maroon and White who performed well in the unfriendly waters on Saturday were Lia Lansky and Andrea Kazanjian. Both Lansky and Kazanjian earned second place honors as Lansky finished the 200-yard fly open in 2:09.33 and Kazanjian cruised in at 59.74 in the 100-yard fly open.

Still more of the days highlights came from junior Sarah Newell who earned a second place finish in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:27.09.

Above the pool, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team went two, three, four in the one meter diving event. Freshman Kate Allery took second with junior Robin Velona behind her and Kalyn Knopf following her.

However, the Minutewomen will now prepare to go one, two, three in their final home meet of the year next weekend against Fordham University. It will be a combination of parent's weekend/senior day and will begin at 12:00 p.m.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Anne Detloff and the Massachusetts women's swimming team were sank by Rutgers this past weekend.

Rutgers escapes with win over UMass

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

All the guts and glory in the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team's tank was exhausted Saturday in Piscataway, NJ against Rutgers. Even still, a season-best effort could not add to the win column, as the Scarlet Knights squeaked out of the pool with a 150-135 victory.

Stellar performances came from the youngest of collegiate careers, as freshman Tommy Keane took home first place in the 500 freestyle, coming in in 4:42.16, good for the top spot on the top times list. This comes after the Melrose native reeled in a first place finish in last week's 5-point loss to Maryland-Baltimore County. Despite swimming the 500 free only twice before, fellow newcomer Anthony Biachini joined him on the podium, hauling in a second place finish with a time of 4:46.58.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Tommy Keane

The Minutemen (6-4 overall) got strong performances from juniors Billy Brown and Mike Sabina, who finished one-two in both the 100 and 200 yard breaststrokes, Brown taking home the crown with times of 59.07 and 2:07.61, respectively. It was a sequel to Brown's sweep of the breaststroke against the Terriers last week.

Chris Arsenault swam a 51.07 in the 100 butterfly while Justin Houck took home the gold in the 1000 freestyle, going the distance in 9:49.41. Houck's performance comes two weeks after the freshman earned Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors in UMass' first place finish in the Rhode Island Invitational.

The boys hit the water for the final time at home this season when they take on the Fordham Rams this Saturday at 12 p.m. Not only is the meet Parents' Weekend at Rogers Pool, but it also marks the grand finale for five seniors. The 2000 graduating class includes Billy Getty, Bryan Grimes, Ed Hefferon, Henry Turner and Wes Wrightson.

The Minutemen have never lost to FU in four clashes, dating back to 1993-96 season.

UMass has disappointing showing

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

On a cold winter's weekend the Massachusetts women's tennis team traveled to Ithaca, NY for the Cornell Winter Invitational. They must have left their heat in Amherst as they returned home after having a disappointing showing in their first tournament since Nov. 6.

Of the women that competed UMass only had one singles player, freshman Katie Stammen, advance to second round action as she won a grueling match over Columbia University's Andrea Sanders in Flight B competition. The Maroon and White also saw the duo of senior Ola Gerasimova and Annie Hamilton reach the second round of play after defeating Cornell's Ngozi Amobi and Nicole Chiu in Flight A doubles action.

Both Stammen and the tandem of Gerasimova and Hamilton failed to win their divisions. Stammen had her hopes of victory thwarted when she fell victim to the No. 3 seed Judy Wang 6-1, 6-1 in the second round of action.

Gerasimova and Hamilton fared better than their teammate advancing to semi-final competition when the beat the No. 2 seeded pair of Laura McCracken and Kyli LaSalle of Seton Hall University.

UMass' No.1 doubles team ran into a buzzsaw in the semi-final round when they faced Penn State's Martina Kopacova and Rebecca Ho. The Nittany Lion duo defeated the best that the Minutewomen had to offer handily brought down Gerasimova and Hamilton 8-2.

Stammen also was defeated in a Flight B consolation match by Columbia's Shelly Mittal in straight sets.

UMass will next be in action when they open their spring dual match schedule when they take on Yale Feb. 11 in New Haven, CT.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Ola Gerasimova

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's Largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 6 | Wednesday, February 2, 2000

Sweeping victory for McCain; Gore on top

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

Arizona Sen. John McCain, a Republican, and Vice-President Al Gore both took home victories in the New Hampshire's presidential primaries yesterday. McCain, who earlier in the day made a joking reference to a "landslide," was the beneficiary of just that.

McCain scored a sweeping victory over Texas Gov. George W. Bush winning over 60 percent of the Independent vote to Bush's 18 percent. Bush actually carried the Republican vote with 42 percent to McCain's 36 percent, but it was the Independent voters that pushed McCain over the top. Supporters of McCain listed his moral values, tax plan, and social security plan as reasons for backing his campaign.

"Tonight we have proved the George Bush is not invincible," McCain said.

The Arizona Senator was criticized early on for skipping the Iowa Caucuses and spending all of his time campaigning in New Hampshire.

Bush's campaign communications director, Karen Hughes described the loss as, "a bump in a long road and just that" and went on to thank the citizens of New Hampshire on behalf of Bush. From looking at exit poll numbers, the loss appears to be mainly a byproduct of the huge Independent voter turn out coupled with the voters' lack of confidence in Bush's knowledge in world affairs.

Gore's victory was not as strong as political pundits had predicted it would be and showcased Gore's weakness among Democratic voters. The race was even too close to call until approximately 8 p.m. when Gore pulled slightly ahead. The downside for Gore was his poor showing with the Independent voters. By carrying a smaller portion of Independents than he speculated Gore has a tough road ahead.

Recently criticism in the media of both candidates has arisen because of their increasing use of biting personal attacks against one another. Of Democratic voters interviewed yesterday they said they were standing behind Gore because of a desire to see the economy continue on its current growth.

Bradley, on the other hand, had been leading in the polls, but after recent heart problems, he had fallen behind Gore by as many as 11 points as of Sunday night. Bradley had a strong showing yesterday with Independents.

Anita Dunn, Bradley's campaign press coordinator said, "We dug ourselves a pretty big hole in Iowa."

Bradley's showing in N.H. gives his organization a much needed morale boost according to members of his campaign. "Al Gore has run a strong race...but we are stronger and better prepared." Bradley said during his concession speech.

Analysts said that Bradley's strength was due to his "toughening up" in recent days by attacking Gore strongly on the issues of abortion and campaign finance reform.

Voters that were interviewed leaving the polling station in Hinsdale, N.H. early yesterday heavily favored McCain and Gore based on education and the economy, especially of women polled.

When asked what the most pressing issue of the election was one women, who was with her child responded, "The whole overall picture, I don't like what Bill Clinton has done with the Whitehouse so I am voting for John McCain."

The Arizona senator was the story of the night after his sizeable victory over Bush. When it came time for him to make his speech Bush conceded defeat but said, "Senator McCain has spent more time in this state than any other candidate."

McCain made light of the amount of time spent in New Hampshire by saying, "I would like to welcome everyone to the 115th town meeting in New Hampshire" and then he continued by saying, "I think we finally have a poll without a margin of error!"

Of the other Candidates, Steve Forbes had the largest vote tally with roughly 14 percent as of press time, Alan Keyes had seven percent and Gary Bauer had one percent.

Forbes has come under fire lately from other candidates because of his decision to be the first to run negative advertising. Keyes, who last

Turn to VICTORY, page 2

TERESA CANNO-RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

The path of good intentions
UMass students walk to classes yesterday

UM helps X-Games

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

For the past six months, a group of Sport Management students have been working behind the scenes of ESPN's Winter X Games. This weekend, all their work and studying will pay off when more than 200 international athletes will be competing in five winter sports at Vermont's Mount Snow.

The X-Games, hosted by ESPN, feature world-class competition in snow events including skiing, skiboarding, snowboarding, snowmobilecross, and snow mountain biking, or snowbikercross. Between ESPN, ESPN2 and ABC, there will be over 103 hours of programming being broadcast nationally and internationally to over 150 million households. Coverage will also be available on the Internet at [illegible] and [illegible].com.

These extreme winter sporting events will be taking place only 45 minutes from Amherst in Mt. Snow, Vt., which is an American Skiing Company resort. Hundreds of spectators are expected to travel to the resort from all over New England thanks to the phenomenal promotional help of the students in the University of Massachusetts Sport Management dept.

Last summer, a Mt. Snow official, who is also a UMass alumni, approached Sport Management Professor Mark McDonald about a partnership between the department and the mountain. An honors class was then established consisting of 15 students, each handpicked from the department by the professor, who have been working closely with both Mt. Snow and ESPN to run the behind the scenes production of the event.

Students in the six-credit course have had the unique opportunity to use their knowledge of the college market to expand awareness of the event and generate increased attendance. The students are gaining priceless on-the-job experience, as well as applying their sport management skills to effectively utilize the budget allocated to them by Mt. Snow, Lorenzo Sciarrino, a member of the program said.

The students, calling themselves EXALT Marketing Associates, started their training last semester when they spent time in the classroom learning budgeting and production, along with meeting with ESPN and Mt. Snow officials two to three times a month in Vermont.

The company's goal was to promote the event and drum up volun-

Turn to X-GAMES, page 2

Notes against UM policy

professors add copywrite on syllabi

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Students in some classes this semester have seen something a little bit extra included with their lecture notes and their syllabi: a copywrite statement.

Professors at the University of Massachusetts have begun issuing statements against the unauthorized reproduction of notes in some classes. The copywrite, an idea suggested by the Massachusetts Society of Professors, may be added to the bottom of the class syllabus in order to prevent duplication of the class material.

A problem with lecture notes was brought to light early last semester when roughly eight professors discovered that their individual class notes were being posted on the web for students to access.

These faculty members found that students attending their classes were paid by Internet companies to take notes, and that the companies were then posting the information on their web sites for free. The professors were not aware that their classes were being watched by note taking services and objected to the situation.

Many professors found this to be a problem due to the fact that the notes were both questionable in their accuracy and it is also against University policy to reproduce notes for distribution and sale.

This is unlike an organization, MadDasher, on the UMass campus, which offers students the opportunity to buy class notes from its service. In this case, the professors, although not directly involved in how the notes are written are made aware that such a service is taking place.

A statement issued by the Massachusetts Society of Professors, explained that the copywrite was legally binding and would hold up in a court of law. The group explained that the material was legally available for copywrite privileges because many of the materials for each course were created by the class instructors and that because of this these materials belonged to the instructors alone.

In addition, the group explained that because of this any student that was found distributing materials that were currently copywrited without the implicit consent of the instructor of the course were in direct violation of University policies.

UMass is not the first school to make the attempt to copywrite its materials in order to prevent them from being duplicated by outside sources.

According to the Chronicle of Higher Education, the University of Florida also made similar attempts to copywrite its

Turn to NOTES page 3

Center benefit tonight

By Holly Gion
Collegian Correspondent

A benefit is being held tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton to aide the Everywoman's Center's Counselor Advocate Program. The benefit is a gift to the Everywoman's Center from one of their former counselors in the Counselor Advocate Program.

According to Sage Freechild, the director of the Counselor Advocate Program, organizing a fund-raiser takes a lot of time and energy, and Sloan Johnson, a former advocate counselor, took on the bulk of the work for this particular benefit.

Johnson enlisted the support of the Valley Advocate to sponsor the evening as well as seeking raffle prizes from local businesses, coordinating entertainment, and arranging dinner and drinks.

"I was an advocate counselor for a number of years until I moved. After hearing everything that happened on the campus last semester, I thought it would be a great cause to continue to help," she said.

The Everywoman's Center's Counselor Advocate Program offers a 24-hour crisis hotline, counseling for trauma and abuse victims, crisis intervention, and counselor training programs. The program deals with sex and all issues of violence against women.

Johnson said she feels that the Counselor Advocate Program "is a wonderful resource in the community and has helped many people through crisis over the last 28 years." She went on to say that it is important to continue to support this vital program. "In light of events of late, both on the UMass campus and right in downtown Northampton."

All profits from the benefit will go directly to the Counselor Advocate Program according to Sage Freechild. Freechild also expressed her appreciation to Johnson for her dedication to the program. She said, "Even though Sloan is no longer a counselor she is still committed to doing work for the Everywoman's Center to provide needed services to women in the community."

The benefit starts tonight at 5:30 p.m with dinner and drinks, followed by a show at 7 p.m. Entertainment will be provided by Sue Burkhardt's band Superkart and musician Amy Fairchild. Performances by the Aloha Steamrain and the Bindlestiff Family Circus variety show are also on tap. John Allen is the MC for the evening's show. In addition to dinner, drinks, and entertainment, a raffle will be held. Prizes range from video tapes, gift certificates to local businesses, and items from the Valley Advocate will all be given away at the show.

Tickets are available at the Northampton Box Office, 150 Main Street, for $10.

Admission controversial

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The issue of the number of minority students enrolled at the University of Massachusetts still remains surrounded by controversy and debate despite new admissions standards on campus.

The issue of the number of minorities on campus has been addressed on several levels since the reduction of affirmative action policies in admissions standards.

Debates regarding the necessity for affirmative action practices have raged all over campus since last February when administrators decided to discontinue the use of race related admissions criteria.

According to UMass officials the decision to end the custom on campus was mostly due to the legal issues of the practice.

In part this is due to the fact that the legal system struck down a rash of affirmative action policies all over the country, including a federal court decision that took place in 1998 that ended racial quotas at Boston Latin High School.

The announcement infuriated some students on campus that felt the elimination of affirmative action would not only deplete the number of racial minorities on campus but also the number of students that were from low-income backgrounds.

In protest of the new policy, during the 1998-99 school year students within the University system formed protests and staged rallies throughout the year, one of which was held in Boston and was aimed at UMass President William Bulger.

Reactions to the policy continued into the 1999-00 school year with such events as the National Association of Colored People figure Julian Bond's lecture on the necessity of affirmative action on college campuses, a affirmative action teach-in aimed at the students, and a number of group talk and video sessions regarding the

Turn to MINORITIES, page 2

TERESA CANNO-RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

A view from Herter
UMass student mill around Haigis Mall, waiting for classes or busses.

SGA to start session

By Jessica Silver
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association (SGA) will hold its first meeting of the spring 2000 semester tonight in the basement of the Campus Center.

Last semester, the SGA ended with a motion that stated a vote of no confidence for Jo-Ann Vanin, Associate Vice Chancellor and Dean of students for her inability to act in a supportive manner concerning the series of assaults on women during the fall 1999 semester.

According to President Jeff Howe, the SGA feels that not enough was done to assure safety and awareness on campus. He also said the SGA plans to follow up on this issue in the upcoming semester.

Another main project completed during last semester included the successful establishment of a Registered Student Organization (RSO) Resource Center. The new Resource Center is located in the Student Union across from the Cape Cod room. Some of the services provided include RSO mailboxes, peer and staff advising, RSO contact information and computer and Internet access.

Additional free services provided by the RSO Resource Center are: a governing board, a RSO Resource center manger, a computer technician, lounge and work space for RSOs, longer hours of operation, a calendar of RSO events, and Programming Board office space.

The SGA has plans for this semester that include right to privacy issues. The Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution pertains to search and seizure issues. Howe feels that in some of the cases concerning students within dorms, those rights have been violated. SGA representatives have already begun talking with UMass Police Chief John Luippold. In addition, they have compiled a list of students who have complained about violations of their privacy. When the Senate completes its research, it plans to bring the information to the appropriate authorities.

Howe said he hopes the end result will be that the

Turn to SGA, page 2

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 20 LOW: 0	HIGH: 30 LOW: 10	HIGH: 32 LOW: 15

SOURCE: ONEIN.COM

A Dire Day for Mankind
Check out what the Managing Editor has to say about professional athletes inside this issue.
PAGE 4

Super Bowl Scream
Check out our take on Christopher Reeve's unexpected Super Sunday appearance as well as all the other Super Bowl commercials in today's Arts.
PAGE 7

Pepe genes
Temple point guard Juan "Pepe" Sanchez was born to play basketball... but could his Owls beat UMass last night? See Page 12 for full coverage.
PAGE 12

Arts & Living 7
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Crash leaves little hope for survivors

By Eric Malnic, Louis Sahagun and Tracy Wilson
Los Angeles Times

PORT HUENEME, Calif. – The pilots of Alaska Airlines Flight 261 struggled with mechanical problems for at least six minutes as they descended over the Pacific Ocean, finally breaking radio contact and plunging into the waters off the Ventura County coast, a federal safety investigator said yesterday.

Although the cause of the crash will not be officially determined for months, sources close to the investigation said they were focusing on the likelihood that a control system used to stabilize the plane's attitude failed, sending it out of control.

Several pilots saw the doomed plane in its final minutes, and investigators are hoping to learn more about the crash by talking to them, said John Hammerschmidt of the National Transportation Safety Board, who is overseeing the investigation.

Flight 261, en route from Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, to San Francisco and Seattle with 88 people aboard, crashed Monday afternoon after the pilots reported difficulties and asked for permission to land at Los Angeles International Airport. The plane, a twin-engine MD-83 built by McDonnell Douglas, crashed about 40 miles north of the airport.

As the investigation into the crash was launched Tuesday and search and rescue operations continued, families and friends of the flight's passengers and crew began arriving in the Los Angeles area. Alaska Airlines booked blocks of rooms at several hotels to accommodate them. The airline also released the passenger manifest.

A flotilla of Coast Guard and Navy ships, joined by aircraft and private fishing vessels, searched for survivors without success, finding only gruesome debris. The bodies of an infant, a man and two women were taken to the Ventura County coroner's office, but they were not immediately identified.

Searchers also detected a pinging sound that could be coming from the flight data recorder, the cockpit recorder or both.

"We have a position located," Coast Guard Vice Adm. Tom Collins said. "This is obviously a prime lead."

It hadn't been determined when Navy divers would try to retrieve the flight records, which investigators hope will help tell the story of the crash.

As the sun rose yesterday, at least 30 vessels were at sea in the vicinity of the crash site, a 3-mile by 5-mile stretch of ocean near Anacapa Island. These included a 378-foot U.S. Coast Guard cutter and an even larger Navy warship with a helipad. They swept the ocean for chunks of wreckage and tried to maintain the increasingly unlikely hope of finding survivors. At least a dozen more vessels joined in later, trolling past chunks of yellow

Turn to CRASH, page 3

■ SGA

continued from page 1

UMass authority will respect the Fourth Amendment right's of the student body.

"One of the main issues on tonight's agenda involves improving dining services. The motion suggests, "methods of improving food quality and selection service and anything else necessary to make dining experiences of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst community."

Kenneth K Toong, Food Service Board Plan Administrator, said he is open to the motion. Specifically, Toong supports the part of the motion that enables the SGA to serve as a liaison between the student body and the University Dining Services."

"I feel that this motion will really give a chance for the students to give organized feedback on how we can improve the dining hall," Toong said. He also said he feels that this motion will provide a forum for the dining hall to explain why some requests are unable to be met due to the need to keep prices low. Toong said, "We are changing as rapidly as possible. I think that the committee will help us to help students."

Senator Jeff Bazydlo, the co-writer of the motion, said he believed the motion was one that would help students as well.

"I believe that this motion will start to improve dinning services. I believe the SGA's job is to help students anyway possible. As elected officials, that is our job," said Bazydlo.

■ victory

continued from page 1

made headlines by jumping into a mosh pit, has not made the kind of impact that he hoped to make and will most likely drop out of the race along with Bauer according to analysts.

Political pundits said that Bush will need a very strong showing at the South Carolina primary in order to make up for all the ground he lost in New Hampshire. They also predict that McCain will be under far more scrutiny now that he has won in New Hampshire.

Republican candidates now focus their sights on South Carolina where the next Republican Primary is to be held. Karen Huges of the Bush campaign said confidently, "South Carolina is Bush country."

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

■ minorities

continued from page 1

issue.

Chancellor David K. Scott originally expressed concern about the elimination of race based affirmative action policies and warned that the end of affirmative action could mean a potentially drop in minority enrollment. Scott predicted that the enrollment drop could range from as high as 19 percent to the lower end of the spectrum with 13 percent.

In actuality according to a representative for the University, the final figure for 1999 for the drop in minority numbers was at 16.8 percent.

In order to prevent the number of minority students on campus from plummeting further during the next set of admissions to the campus Scott appointed a task force on admissions and charged them with the duty of looking into the policies currently held by UMass admissions. He also asked them to make recommendations on how minority enrollment could be maintained without using affirmative action in the school admissions policy.

Some recommendations from the task force, one of which included suggestions for less emphasis on SAT scores, were taken into consideration and included in the new admissions procedure. The new admissions process for the upcoming fall includes in its assessments the factors of race and low-income issues, which the administration hopes will alleviate some of the race related enrollment problems on campus.

■ X-Games

continued from page 1

teers to work at the games. EXALT is divided into five internal departments including Internet marketing, grassroots marketing, media relations, public relations and communications. The class was assigned marketing responsibilities to 65 colleges, all within a four hour radius of the mountain.

In its attempt to promote the games, EXALT contacted numerous high schools and colleges and set up tables in their lunchrooms and student unions. They have also run a series of bar promotions in places such as University of Connecticut, Boston University and University of New Hampshire, giving away snowboards, lift tickets and apparel.

On campus, EXALT recruited students from the Sport Management and other departments to help in operations during the weekend. These students will be volunteering their time to assist the athletes and the production for ESPN and the mountain. They also plastered posters in the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center, put ads up on PVTA busses, and had plugs on WMUA.

"UMass has one of the premiere sport management programs in the country, and we're lucky to be working with the best and brightest in the department," Jason Naurnoff, the Winter X-Games Marketing and Communications Coordinator said. "We feel that taking an active role in the marketing of the Games will be a valuable learning experience for them, and will provide us with the man and brain power to make this event happen. It works out great for everyone."

This is the first year that the X-Games have been held on the East Coast. With the help of the UMass Sport Management department, and the students of UMass, the games are expected to run smoothly and be extremely popular, perhaps convincing ESPN to continue to use New England as a site for future games.

TERESA CARINO RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

A star in the making

An unknown Starbucks employee pours a hot cup of coffee.

New Training Rule Sets Military 'Don't Ask' Policy

By Paul Richter
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – The Pentagon moved yesterday to strengthen its controversial homosexual conduct policy with a new training program that calls for troops to receive instruction repeatedly and uniformly across the services.

Six months after the beating death of an alleged gay soldier thrust the subject again into the national spotlight, defense officials issued rules that call for briefings on the "don't ask, don't tell" policy as soon as troops enter boot camp and later in refresher courses.

Other personnel, including military lawyers and commanders, will receive additional instruction, the Pentagon said.

Military officials have developed a patchwork of programs since the "don't ask" policy was adopted six years ago.

Yet many troops have said that they receive little or no instruction on the policy and that it gets far less attention than, for example, guidance on such issues as equal opportunity, treatment of women and safety. Gay advocates have argued that this lack of understanding has led to mistreatment and harassment of homosexual service members.

The military's "don't ask" policy says that homosexuals may serve in the military, provided they do not say that they are homosexual and commit no homosexual acts. It says that the military will not investigate homosexuals without good reason and bars harassment.

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen, in a statement, said that the new rules "make it very clear ... there is no room for harassment or threats in the military."

What has changed, said Kenneth H. Bacon, chief Pentagon spokesman, is not the policy but "the emphasis that's being given to the policy. ... This is a priority of all the services."

Fizzus Tastus Smilus

{ inviting to the touchus }

Experience refreshing Coca-Cola® classic in an ice-cold glass bottle at The University Store, University C-Stores and Newman Center. Offer ends February 12, 2000.

Coca-Cola. enjoy

© 2000 The Coca-Cola Company. "Coca-Cola" and the Contour Bottle design are registered trademarks of The Coca-Cola Company.

Seale and Luciano to trade views

As the first event for Black History month, a dialogue between Bobby Seale and Felipe Luciano will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The event is a collaboration among the Black Student Union, the Black Mass Communications Project and Boricuos Unidos.

Seale was the co-founder of the Black Panther organization, a group that was at its peak in the late 1960's. The organization was based in Oakland, California. Today, he continues his efforts as a community organizer and spends time completing programs such as the one being held tonight at the University of Massachusetts.

Luciano who will engage in a discussion with Seale was the founder and chairman of the Young Lords Party, a militant Puerto Rican civil rights group in New York City. Among one of his marked achievements, Luciano was the first Puerto Rican news anchor on a network broadcast to President of Luciano Productions, Inc.

Members of the Black Student Union said they are excited about the event and encourage all to attend. Nikan Hodjat, activities coordinator for the Black Student Union said, "Our objective is to show the campus what measures have been taken and to allow the community to learn what these men have done."

The event, he continued was "targeted at the whole campus" and as an organization this event was just one of many that it wishes to have for the campus community in an effort to "move the country forward in a positive direction."

Hodjat said one of the unique and hopefully an added draw to the event is that the night will not only consist of speeches. Both Seale and Luciano will engage in conversation with each other and the audience. The organization said by setting the night up in such a way, it gives students the opportunity to partake in further dialogue on aspects of the men's lives that they have a particular interest in.

- Mary Grein

TERESA CARINO RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

Nuts

A UMass squirrel continued its search for food yesterday, despite cold conditions.

■ crash

continued from page 2

plastic, cracked food trays, shoes, seat cushions and occasional pieces of human flesh.

Coast Guard cutters sliced through the water, trailed by smaller vessels whose crew members scanned the white water churned up by the bigger boats. Helicopters hovered just above the ocean surface, whipping up the water for the same purpose.

The initial focus of the investigation appeared to be on what is known as the horizontal stabilizer and the possibility of runaway stabilizer trim. Airline officials said Monday night that the pilots had radioed to say they were having trouble with the stabilizer, which is the wing-like part of an airplane's tail that acts as a leveling device and keeps the plane's nose pointing straight ahead. The trim is used to adjust the pitch of the stabilizer.

According to government records, the FAA has twice ordered "Airworthiness Directives" requiring inspection and repairs of the horizontal stabilizer trim system on DC-9/MD-80 aircraft models during the past four years.

There was no way from publicly available FAA records to determine if the Alaska Airlines plane had complied with either directive. It was possible, however, to find a variety of horizontal-stabilizer problems reported on various models of the DC-9/MD-80 family of aircraft, although none for the plane that crashed.

In fact, Alaska Airlines has never had an incident or accident involving a problem with the horizontal stabilizer trim system on any of its aircraft, according to a review of FAA reports of all incidents and accidents the airline has submitted since 1987.

A rough scenario of the flight's final minutes emerged yesterday from NTSB official Hammerschmidt's recounting of ground-to-air communications between the doomed plane and the tower at Los Angeles International Airport.

The plane's last routine transmission came at 3:55 p.m. PST, when air traffic controllers cleared Flight 261 to maintain an altitude of 31,000 feet and proceed along the Pacific coast from the Los Angeles area to San Francisco.

At 4:10 p.m., the flight crew "advised that they were having control difficulties and had to send it through (to) 26,000 feet," Hammerschmidt said. A few seconds later, the pilot reported he was at 25,700 feet and "there was some discussion about their ability to control the aircraft," Hammerschmidt said.

At 4:11 p.m., air traffic control asked the condition of the flight. The pilot responded that "they were kind of stabilized, and they were going to do some trouble-shooting," the NTSB official continued.

ATTENTION NIGHT GRAPHICS!!!!!!

THERE WILL BE A MANDATORY MEETING ON TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8 AT 8 p.m. EVERYONE MUST ATTEND!!!!!!!!!!!!

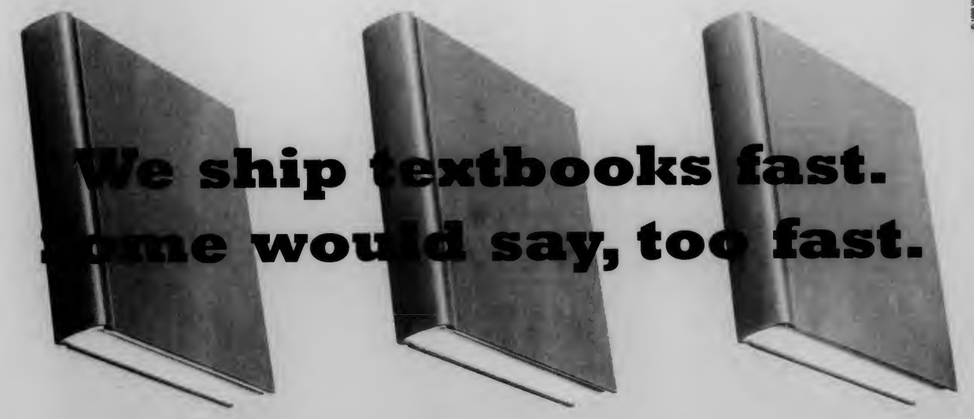
■ notes

continued from page 1

materials in 1995, but found that their copywrite proved not to be legally binding in a court of law. When the case was taken to court the jury found that material distributed during lectures was simply a collection of ideas and did not legally belong to anyone.

Professors at the University that wished to copywrite their notes for classes were advised to place a copywrite symbol on the paper along with their name and the year on all materials so that students would be aware of the situation.

www.dailycollegian.com



cover your butt.
better yet, help cover your
[tuition].

College can mean maneuvering through a lot of different obstacles, but tuition payments shouldn't be one of them. In Army ROTC, you'll have a shot at a scholarship worth thousands. And make friends you can count on. Talk to an Army ROTC advisor today. We've got you covered.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
To Start Your Adventure Call The UMass ARMY ROTC Dept 545-2321

We ship textbooks fast.
Some would say, too fast.

We know you wanted a little more time to socialize before you hit the books, but at VarsityBooks.com we're so darn fast you'll have your textbooks in one to three business days. But at least we're saving you up to 40% and offering you a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. Look at it this way, you've got at least one free night ahead of you. So what are you waiting for? It certainly isn't us.

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS. VarsityBooks.com

© 1999 VarsityBooks.com INC

Editorial/Opinion

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Wednesday, February 2, 2000

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

No appeal

Earlier this week, Atlanta Braves relief pitcher John Rocker was suspended until May 1 by Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig after Rocker was quoted in Sports Illustrated saying very disparaging remarks towards different minority groups.

In the SI interview, Rocker claimed that he would not want to play for a baseball team in New York because he would not want to sit "next to some queer with AIDS" on a subway, and because he is "not a big fan of foreigners," also asking "How the hell did they get into this country?" The reliever went on to refer to a black teammate as a "fat monkey."

The suspension restricts Rocker from reporting to Spring Training on Feb. 17 with his fellow Braves pitchers, but allows him to play in the minor leagues during the first month of the season. Selig's penalty also includes a $20,000 fine and sensitivity training for the remarks, which, as the commissioner said, "offended practically every element of society."

According to ESPN, the punishment is the longest suspension not related to drugs since Texas Ranger Lenny Randle punched his manager, Frank Lucchesi, in March of 1977. Randle was kept out of play for 30 days.

MLB's player's association plans to appeal the ruling, claiming that it is unjustly harsh for what Rocker did. Gene Orza, an official with the union told ESPN that "it is literally unprecedented to impose a penalty on a player for pure speech, offensive though the speech may be."

Rocker, going against the better wishes of Braves President Stanley H. Kasten, has come out in favor of an appeal, claiming that his "misguided speech" was "unaccompanied by any conduct on" his part, adding that he has "previously apologized for" his "unfortunate remarks..."

According to the pitcher, the comments that he was quoted as saying were intended to retaliate for the treatment he received while pitching in New York, as he was spit on and pelted with batteries.

The Collegian believes that Rocker and the player's association should not appeal the ruling by Selig. While the punishment is admittedly harsh, a month in which Rocker is not pitching in the major leagues is a small price to pay for saving the face of the sport in the nation.

Precedents aside, credibility is as much a currency in America as the dollar bill, and without any, a proud sport that has captivated this country for generations will be crippled for an indefinite amount of time.

Also, while the punishment is unparalleled, so were the remarks that spurned it. At no point in memory has there been a single player that has offended such a large diversity of people so brutally and so quickly. And as Rocker is being hit with a fairly large suspension, it seems tiny in comparison to the expulsion that was tossed around by public officials earlier on in the situation.

Peter Gammons, a noted baseball expert who is currently employed by ESPN, believes that if the union in fact decides to appeal, they will win because the ruling was, in essence, a public relations statement. Gammons claimed that "he's opened a tremendous and very complicated can of worms" in that "now every time someone overhears a player making some comment... out of uniform and away from the game" that player might be suspended.

The Collegian believes that the punishment should not be appealed, and hopes that major league baseball players aren't making racist comments anywhere, on or off the field. If they are, the problem is much greater than a month away from the game can rectify.

Super Sunday Schedule

As your obvious choice for Collegian columnist of the new millenium, I sat and struggled with what exactly the topic of my first column of the year 2000 should touch upon. I know that you're all used to laughing, crying, and all the women on campus repeatedly asking themselves, "Why can't I find a man as sensitive as Dana?" when they're reading my column. So clearly, I felt that there was no room for mediocrity here.

However, I have only been back in Amherst for a week, and needless to say, I'm not necessarily back in the swing of things. My days thus far have been filled with reading syllabi (or is it syllabuses?), drinking beer, having an all-around great time catching up with friends at the Textbook Annex, and swearing at that automated Add/Drop chick. I hate her passionately. Knowing how thousands throughout campus base their week around reading my column, I knew that I had to deliver...and deliver big. As I stare blankly at my computer screen on this early Sunday afternoon, my hair standing straight up from my completely satisfying three-hour sleep, I know that I have to give you all your "Dana fix" for the week, but that I also have to work around the game.

Dana Oppedisano

There is less than six hours until kickoff to Super Bowl XXXIV. Now, I know that if you want to read about sports then you can just flip to the back page, but then I got to thinking. It's not completely about sports, so girls, please, continue. As the majority of students around this campus are anywhere in their late teens to early 20s, how many great Super Bowls have we had the opportunity to watch (and I mean actually remember?)

Die-hard New England fans will all remember our attempt to "Bury the Bears," back in '86, which of course culminated in them completely handing us our asses to the tune of 46-10. We all felt better about our chances for the Pats back in '97 against Green Bay...the key word there being "felt." Squeeze the Cheese? More like squeeze your box of Kleenex, 35-21 Pack. Everyone felt great for John Elway when he beat the Packers in '98 to finally win his first title (in what was actually a good game), but did anyone care about him last year? Retire already to do some beer commercials like everyone else.

Ok, sure, maybe you can throw in a couple of good games here and there over the past 20 years (Giants-Bills, 20-19 in XXV. Boy, that kicker had a long and successful career after that one), but for everyone you can think of, I can simply ask: "Hey, how 'bout them Buffalo Bills???"

The point is that no matter how bad the game itself actually is, the Super Bowl as a whole, remains an event, a cultural phenomenon if you will. Right now, people throughout the world are rushing the supermarkets to buy chips and dips, and those out there who are of legal age are getting ready to hit the bars and their big-screen paradise for this year's contest.

Being under 21 and of course not knowing anything about the consumption of alcoholic beverages, I will probably gather with my friends around a bowl of fruit punch or a couple cases of ice cold Pepsi for the night. By the way, Tina Turner is still alive? She's doing tonight's pre-game show, the only definite time I know I can get up to go to the bathroom. That, of course, is making the assumption that the Rams and Titans will keep us entertained with the tiny detail of the actual football portion of the game.

Anyway, I got the idea that I would write this first half of my column before the Super Bowl, and the second half afterwards. That, of course, will give me the opportunity to make my witty comments about the game, the commercials, and Tina. By the way, I'm on the bandwagon with everyone else, Go Rams!!!

Post Super Bowl, 10:42 p.m. – Well, if it wasn't for talking and acting animals, let's just say that I don't think I could have ever made it through that first half. Now don't get me wrong, I love the field goal and its many variations as much as the next guy (the "good," the "no good," the botched, the blocked, the kicker spontaneously combusting), but come on, can we please get a touchdown? Tennessee Titans' kicker Al Del Greco said after the game, "the hold was there, everything was right. I turned my head at the last second and I caught sight of my old Army drill sergeant in the first row, the guy who used to absolutely terrorize me. By the time I realized that it was only Kurt Warner's wife, the kick was already five yards wide." Kurt Warner, man, for a guy who had such a dream season, he still has to wake up with that.

My vote for best commercial has to go to the Budweiser spot where the acting dog uses his most emotional moment to cry on camera. That moment being the one where he did a nosedive into the side of a van while chasing down the Bud truck. Honorable mention goes to the E*Trade ad with the two geeks and the monkey dancing with the words flashing, "We just wasted two million dollars. What are you doing with your money?" I drew tears on that one, and I also drew tears during Tina's pre-game lip sync. I know she's getting old, but come on, Christina Aguilera would never compromise her creativity by lip syncing.

The halftime show? I know I'm not the only one who thinks this millenium stuff is getting old, but as long as we get hip, Grammy award nominated artists like Phil Collins and Enrique Iglesias, we can pull it off! Roommate Rafael's comment on that huge, mystical figure standing on the 50-yard line with outstretched arms: "Hey man, is that Jesus?"

Like I need to write this down, but the second half saved the football game. The comeback, the emotion, the image of Titans wide receiver Kevin Dyson stretching for the goal line on the final play, John Elway plugging his new website. It was enough to make up for the two and a half hour wait for Wings, an order I should have placed this afternoon right after I finished the first part of this column. Honestly, we may have all witnessed one of the greatest Super Bowls of all time tonight. My pick, the Rams, pulled it out, although for the majority of the second half I was rooting for Tennessee just so the game could get interesting.

Now, I know that if you're not a sports fan or if you just didn't catch the Super Bowl then I lost you a long time ago. Maybe you're saying to yourself, "What the hell is this Ed/Op punk doing? You don't write about sports. Just stick to your feelings on privatization and the school's new admission policy." Well, unless you're one of those who starts reading at the bottom, then I've held you this long, and that's just fine with me. On that note, with less than a year until Super Bowl XXXV, I have plenty of time to get ready for the Patriots return to greatness, and I'm also ordering my food now. I figure that way it will get here by halftime, 2001.

Dana Oppedisano is a UMass student.

Who's next?

Isn't America great?

Did you know that in New Hampshire, if you donate $1,000 to the state legislature, you too could run for president? That's right. So, scratch up that change from between the cushions, turn in all those beer cans because you too could be changing your address to 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. by next January.

Ken McDonald

Taking full advantage of this unique opportunity, there are several people that are considering dipping their hat, and their checkbooks, into the political arena, hoping to strike gold in the land where the Man In the Mountain watches over everyone.

Here is a list of brave souls that are making New Hampshire a little richer, if not wiser:

John Rocker – After Major League Commissioner Bud Selig gave the Braves open-mouth-insert-entire-leg closer an extended vacation, Rocker decides to cash in on his new found popularity. New Hampshire, placing second to his home state of Jaw-ja (Georgia) in percent of popularion that can whittle, seems like a welcoming place for this loose-lipped hurler. Hey, if Pat Buchanan can still garner votes here, then John Rocker stands a fighting chance.

Ricky Martin – With his population waning, this star that only last summer was the President of the United States seeks to regain his glory in a blaze of sequins and leather. His platform will involve giving the same speech, over and over and over again on radio stations twelf the one radio station in N.H.) for three months straight without ever saying anything new. He later withdraws from the election when he realizes that 12-year-old girls cannot vote.

Enrique Iglesias – Upset that Ricky stole his Cup of Life theme song, this Latin pseudo-star erupts onto the political scene with a ferocious attitude, a kick-ass accent and no intelligence to speak of. His campaign focuses on how famous his dad was and how he doesn't use drugs.

George W. Bush – See above.

Gandhi – Upset at being snubbed in Time's Person of the Millennium balloting, this world-renowned advocate of peace and peaceful protest makes a return visit to his second home. He makes compassion and understanding the focuses of his agenda. After an initial poll showing a lack of support, Gandhi begins a series of rallies in which he sits outside of each polling place until each registered voter withers and changes their vote.

Bill Bradley – Yeah, OK. Next.

Bill Clinton – After being second on the political rung in the Clinton household for too long, "Wild Bill" ditches Hillary and branches out on his own. Taking the higher moral ground, he preaches family values, a return to our human spirituality and honesty within our hearts. In a bold and shocking move, he nominates Christina Aguilera, Britney Spears and Mandy Moore as running mates. After realizing that he is not eligible to run for office, he withdraws his nomination and forms a new friendship with Ricky Martin. Curiously enough, their new party is called, "The youth movement."

Seth Koenig/Alexis Pushkar – Riding the fame that comes with being a Collegian columnist, the Koenig/Pushkar train rolls into the Granite State with a full head of steam. With witty jibes and a wealth of savvy intellect, these two take a lead in a straw poll conducted at the University of New Hampshire. Taken on a Friday night, this poll shows the power of their campaign manager, Anheuser Busch.

Ken McDonald/Brett Mauser – From this moment on, I declare my candidacy for the office of President. With New Hampshire native Brett Mauser as a running mate, our neighbors to the north are sure to be nothing more than a stepping-stone towards greater things. We have no platform to stand on as of yet, but then again, what politicians ever do? We have a party, several actually, it is here that we will gain most of our voter support. To the critics that say that Brett can't run because he was born in Canada, I say this: Is there really any difference between Canada and the U.S.? Answer: No. Therefore, he is eligible, case closed.

I would like to wish Seth Koenig and Alexis Pushkar, whom I consider to be the only other candidates in this election, much luck. And when elected, Brett and I will find them some cushy job in D.C. where they won't have anything to do but play Checkers on Yahoo and fire people.

Ken McDonald is a Collegian columnist.

Athletes need to examine Foley's love of the sport

Last night, right before I sat down to write this, I saw a woman draw a heart in the snow outside of the Campus Center. It was a nice image, and I figured she must have been drawing with her finger out there because she really cared about something. She must have really loved it.

Sam Wilkinson

In that vein, Mick Foley is going to retire soon. He will voluntarily leave a profession that he has given his heart and damn near his life too. He started young, giving his heart and soul in unglamorous places, doing what it is that he does best. When doing what wasn't pretty, Mick Foley perfected what it is that he does into more than a job, but rather what could almost be described as an art.

He is known to fellow professionals as a risk taker, a trend-setter and a revolutionary. He is known to fellow professionals as a man who loves what he does.

When he retires, everyone but those of us that remember watching him and idolizing him will probably forget his influence. We will remember his good and his bad, but we'll remember the high points as being much higher than the low. We'll remember him taking the sickest bump we've ever seen, but best of all, we'll remember Foley holding a championship belt, and we'll remember because Foley did it all, risking his health and well being, because he loved what he was doing.

Mick Foley, or Mankind when he wore the mask, Dude Love when he wore the tie-dye or Cactus Jack when he carried a bat wrapped in barb-wired, Foley represents everything that is good with sports. As a professional wrestler, Foley is a solid human, a consummate performer who always gave his everything to his fans, individuals that cared about him and were rewarded in turn.

It's unfortunate that he'll be remembered as a negative influence on kids, a scar on sport and an embarrassment to those "real" competitors simply because he professionally wrestled, but at least Foley gave his all. Despite the disrespect he is shown for the work he does, Foley gave everything he has to the fans. At least, even though he participated in what more would call a show than a sport, he never got lost in all of it.

Why more "athletes" can't be like Foley, I'll never know. Why athletes are showing up in court with burglary charges attached to their name, I'll never know. Why athletes are showing up in court with murder charges attached to their names, I'll never know.

For what kind of person is the love of fans, millions of dollars and the chance to participate in a loved sport not enough? What kind of person needs to commit burglaries, rapes, assaults, and even murder when everything else appears to be going so well?

The list is too long.

Ray Lewis: double murder.

Ray Carruth: murder.

Kevin Stevens: arrested with a prostitute and crack cocaine.

And there are more: Cecil Collins (burglary), Steve Muhammad (spousal abuse) and Leonard Little (drunk-driving incident that left one woman dead).

These people had it all: money, a great job, adulation, and yet they were perfectly willing to throw all of that away. They were perfectly willing to disrespect fans that paid good money to support teams, fans who paid good money to pay for jerseys, fans who paid good money to support teams.

At this point, fans expect temper tantrums from athletes.

At this point, fans consider such behavior to be acceptable.

Fans don't blink when athletes are found carrying marijuana or coaches try to board airplanes carrying handguns. It's as if they neither think nor care about the people that make what they do a reality; sports are nothing without fans to support them. But instead, athletes are spiraling into the depths, committing burglaries and murders, tarnishing the love of fans and the trust that fans have for sport.

When fans watch Mick Foley, they are watching a man loving what he is doing every night. He will retire soon because the beating that he takes night in and night out is unbelievable, regardless of professional wrestling's more scripted aspect. Fans respect that, knowing that they will always get Foley's all when he is in the ring.

But fans of professional sports are being flipped the finger by the likes of Carruth and Lewis, Collins and Muhammad, and any of the others that have told the public through their actions that what they have (god-given talent, millions of dollars and thousands of fans) isn't enough for them. Rather than thanking their lucky stars that they have made it where they have, and rather than living up to a certain standard that their position does, or at least should, demand, they instead act as if they want more. They say that they want and expect more, and then they act like it, doing as they please, behaving as they do.

If only athletes like Ray Lewis and Ray Carruth understood their position like Foley understands his. When Mick Foley retires, sports loses an ambassador, a performer whose kind is being fast forgotten in professional sports, a man who gives it his all, every day, because he understands that what he has is something special, and that the fans that follow him, love him.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor

Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulsen Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in

AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Excellent Salary & Benefit Package After Graduation
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From

- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!

FRESHMAN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@acad.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE R.O.T.C

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE • JOIN US!

thepavement.com
jobs apartments cars hit the world running

Among the usual bevy of Super Bowl ads featuring upcoming films were submarine thriller U-571 (left), and Ripley Scott's Gladiator.

Turvy proves a worthwhile effort

By David Victor
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Ah, Gilbert and Sullivan. Those names go together like peanut butter and jelly, Rocky and Bullwinkle, or Starsky and Hutch. The pair's comedic musical theater has delighted audiences since the late 1800's. Writer/director Mike Leigh brings us into the world of William Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan in his film Topsy-Turvy. The problem is, he takes us in a little too deep. What promises to be a sort of Shakespeare in Love for the Victorian era gets bogged down in a tedium of unnecessary details and length, spoiling an otherwise amusing and insightful film.

We all know how it went – Gilbert wrote the lyrics and Sullivan scored them to music. Their collaboration resulted in many memorable works, including The Gondoliers and The Pirates of Penzance. The film opens when Gilbert (played marvelously by Jim Broadbent) and Sullivan (Allen Corduner) are debuting their latest, "Princess Aida." The mediocre success of the play underscores the lagging inspiration in their relationship; the plots are starting to repeat, as are Sullivan's accompaniments.

After Sullivan takes a sabbatical for his health, he decides to go on with his own work, a grand opera he's never had the opportunity to work on. Gilbert, without his steadfast partner, goes into a creative funk. Only after attending a traveling exhibition about the then-still-foreign Japan is Gilbert inspired, which convinces Sullivan to rejoin him as they produce one of their finest works, The Mikado.

The characters that fill the backstages and parlors of Topsy-Turvy are quite varied and engaging – even the least of them has something funny or poignant to say. Standout performances are given by Martin Savage, as the morphine-addicted comic George Grossmith; Lesley Manville, as Gilbert's sadly neglected wife and Timothy Spall as the porcine stage diva Richard Temple. Being able to see into all these people's lives is usually worth the time taken, but some characterization could have been removed to reduce the film's 160 minute running time.

Speaking of running time, Topsy-Turvy offers perhaps a little too much stage production. Gilbert and Sullivan fans will be in heaven to see portions of Princess Ida, The Sorceror and The Mikado played by professional actors on elaborate sets. However, for the average movie-goer (i.e. yours truly), they would have been better shortened, as they draw from the behind-the-scenes motif the rest of the film is centered on.

The film is excellently written, capturing the essence of late-19th Century London. The dialogue is overflowing with dry British witticisms – it almost seems too stifled and gentlemanly to be natural. Nevertheless, their banter is very entertaining and injects life and levity into all the characters.

There are some touching scenes, especially those centering around Gilbert's father and wife. However, don't expect to cry a river or roll in the aisles, as the stifled manner of the British characters keeps the emotional level of the film on an even keel.

Leigh set out to create an accurate portrayal of Gilbert and Sullivan's place and time, and he succeeds admirably. The settings are exquisitely furnished and the dress is more than proper for the era. Even modern conveniences like the telephone and the fountain pen, brand new to the characters of Topsy-Turvy, aid in creating the perfect ambience and setting for the film.

Overall, Topsy-Turvy is an excellent period piece that captures the essence of its time and subject. Sometimes the film seems to lack focus, trying to show everything at once. The stifled emotional content also fails in creating any real high drama – the film beginning and ending in the middle of Gilbert and Sullivan's career leaves many issues unresolved.

Eleanor David and Allan Corduner star in the Gilbert Sullivan piece Topsy Turvy.

Dot coms dominate Super Bowl bonanza

Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Correspondent

Without a doubt this Super Bowl was a memorable one. Not only because it was the best gridiron battle in recent years. Nor was it because the Titans came within one yard of tying the game after being down by sixteen, as they were going into the Disney sponsored half-time show. This was also the year for advertisements a plenty, catering especially to those companies that serve all of the web-heads. Over a half a dozen ecommerce ads ran during the Super Bowl with the average thirty-second spot being priced at about $2.2 million. All and all when the final figures come in, it will have raised over $130 million dollars for ABC and its parent company, Walt Disney. At such a price tag, businesses hope to create visually captivating and usually, very humorous adds to the game. Despite the occasional Beach Boy, "Who Wants to be a Millionaire," and Budweiser commercials, this Super bowl belonged to the .com ads.

The first commercial after the kick-off was E*Trade Known for their infamous "Stewart" ads – a punked-out Gen-X'er giving online stock buying tips to conservative businessmen – E*Trade was almost expected to be in Sunday's ad blitz. The thirty-second spot began with a chimp and two old men singing "La Cocha Rucha." This continued for a good twenty seconds, and just when everyone was saying "What the hell is this?" the following words appeared, "We just wasted two million dollars. How do you want to invest your money?" What a great idea. Take a simple and idiotic image and then call yourselves morons for doing it. E*Trade not only was able to come up with a humorous idea, but now people are sure to remember the name of the company that sunk two million dollars on a dancing primate.

Pets.com, in my opinion, has some of the best ads around. Their brilliance is in their simplicity. It's a sock puppet made up to look like a dog. It's not a high-tech muppet or animated character. It's a white sock with two glued-on eyes and a painted tongue. I mean, you even see the guy's arm and wristwatch. Which goes to show that it's not that technically advanced or very special, but it's what they do with the sock puppet, getting people to remember the name "pets.com. You see the dog has a little microphone and he goes around doing interviews with people and pets alike asking them to use pets.com to pamper their pets. Previous commercials have focused and now sing along with truckers and rag-pulls with puppies at Christmas time.

The Super Bowl spot had the little dog singing a big musical number with kaleidoscope effects and the message that pet-owners should stay at home with their animal of choice to go along with the slogan, "Pets don't drive." I enjoyed it but it wasn't that great...specifically because it was too complex. When you have a sock puppet putting on a big musical number, it may be funny but it also looks like the company is spending money just to spend money. Pets.com should stick to its roots...that being interviewing turtles and singing with truckers.

Mountain Dew took the classic Bohemian Rhapsody song and had Gen-X'ers crooning that, and about the third bowl belonged to the .com ads.

The parody was right on the money, taking the part of the song which was made famous by Wayne' World and filling in the operatic lyrics with praise and desire for the Pepsi product.

Budweiser also came up with some good spots. Since giving up the Bud frogs and the infamous and boring "Bud Bowl" campaign, Bud "The King of Beers" has lately come up with animal concentrated advertisements. Before, they had horses kicking a field goal, and the plots against the notorious ferret by the two iguanas. This year they had a dog recalling his saddest memory, which turns out to be him chasing after a Bud truck. As he jumps over a shrub to pursue his dreams of cold beverages, the frog hits a parked truck. It's hard to explain and definitely one you had to see.

Other commercials included a power to women website called oxygen .com. Another upstart web company told the story of rugged cat herders in the west bringing in a herd. Also, BMW debuted its new SUV model, which promises to have yuppies ready to empty their pockets in an attempt to look like suburban commandos. Also for the first

Turn to SUPERBOWL page 9

DailyCollegian.com

Taipei & Tokyo
Chinese and Japanese
OPEN 7 DAYS
1st Move Street
Northampton MA
(413) 582 1888
Sushi Bar • Luncheon Specials
Dine In or Take Out
• Gift Certificates
ADVOCATE BEST OF THE VALLEY 1997 1998 1999

Collegian. ARTS How we do!!!

We're a textbook example of why the Internet is so handy.
We realize we don't have to waste your time explaining the virtues of the Internet. Let's just say that at VarsityBooks.com we've made the most of it. Not only can you save up to 40% on your textbooks, but you'll also receive them in just one to three business days. All on a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. What more do you need to know?
SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS.
Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.
VarsityBooks.com

World Championship Wrestling
TICKETS ON SALE NOW LIVE AT
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
WEDNESDAY FEB. 2 • 7PM
TO CHARGE CALL 413-733-2500 OR
FOR MORE INFO CALL 413-545-0505
Tickets available at Mullins Center Box Office, M-F 9am-5pm, Sat 10am-5pm & All ticketmaster Locations.
www.ticketmaster.com
www.mullinscenter.umass.edu

COURTESY BEIJING THEATRE

Princess and King

The Beijing Kunju Opera Theatre hits the FAC Concert Hall this Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Scary Soundtrack

Musical death mars disc

SCREAM 3: The Album
Soundtrack
Wind-Up Records

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Do I like scary movies? Definitely, but I don't like scary soundtracks and Scream 3: The Album is pretty scary in just how poor a compilation it manages to be. The record company and executive producers Creed can't be held fully responsible however, since they assembled a mostly impressive lineup of new metal contenders, who should be more than willing to make a name for themselves with strong showings. Instead, what we receive is, with few exceptions, unimpressive non-album and album tracks that adds up to a release that can't hold a candle to recent metal soundtracks like Strangeland or even the less impressive, End of Days offering. So instead of complaining about the lackluster quality of many of the songs, I chose (in the spirit of Scream) to liken some of these tracks to famous horror movie deaths. I found that some comparisons just came naturally. For instance:

The repeated stabbing for Creed's "What If" and "Is this the end"

The repeated stabbing is a horror film staple, and a grizzly death that makes you cringe in wondering how horrible it would actually feel. Listening to these two Creed songs also conjures up that image, namely as in how much you would prefer that particular death, then having to listen to Creed's overblown, preening, anti-rock for a second longer. And "What If" is one of the better Creed songs in my opinion. The fade to black screen for Incubus' "Crowded Elevator" and Static-X's "So Real"

The screen fading to black right before a death scene is the pinnacle of disappointment for the horror fan. I didn't pay money to use my imagination; I can do that for free! Both Static-X and Incubus are terrific bands, and I was excited to hear these unreleased songs. Unfortunately, both are a let down with "Crowded Elevator" sounding like a Make Yourself throwaway and "So Real" not capturing any of the energy that have made Static-X a popular act as of late.

Decapitation for Sevendust's "Fall" and Staind's "Crawl"

The decapitation is a device often used in horror movies to eliminate zombies, to kill them once and for all, and to prevent any further damage they may cause to innocent victims. That formula can also be applied to the current status of both Sevendust and Staind. Sevendust at once seemed so promising with their first release, but their follow-up was a big disappointment, and this track is in the same vein. I'm a fan of this band so I sincerely hope it's just a string of bad luck and that they will come back with their former force in their subsequent releases. Staind's Dysfunction is still a below average album despite all of its exposure. "Mudshovel" is probably the best song and has now been beaten squarely into the ground by too much airplay. "Crawl" is in the same drawing, boring style of the first single, "Let Go," and calls to attention the fact that this band could really use some new and interesting material.

Death by chainsaw for Dope, Full Devil Jacket, and Finger Eleven

The chainsaw death was popularized by the classic horror film The Texas Chainsaw Massacre, but has

Turn to SOUNDTRACK page 9

TEXTBOOKS ONLINE. SAVE UP TO 40%.
FREE SHIPPING!*
FOR $10 OFF ENTER CODE #650169 AT PURCHASE CHECKOUT

bigwords.com™

* Free shipping for a limited time on orders over $35.
 $10 offer expires February 15, 2000.
© 2000 BIGWORDS, inc.

Planning to Study Abroad?
Syracuse has your ticket!
ENGLAND * ITALY
HONGKONG * SPAIN
ZIMBABWE * FRANCE
SYRACUSE STUDY ABROAD
119 Euclid Ave/Box D Syracuse, NY 13244
800 235 3472 suabroad@syr.edu
http://sumweb.syr.edu/dipa

WIRELESS Hook-Ups
•Motorola Pagers:
As low as $99 for pager and one year of service
•Largest selection of prepaid phonecards as low as 1¢ min
Great international rates as well.
We take phone orders
•100% digital cellphones (PCS)
starting at $49
Prepay option available
Free weekend offer with contract
All phones have voicemail, caller ID, call waiting, call forwarding, and phone back.
233 No. Pleasant St. Carriage Shops
Amherst, Ma 01002 • (413) 549-4914

The Boltwood Project
Your life will NEVER be the same!
YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS
Spring Semester 2000 Recruitment Nights
6 pm
• Jan. 31 (Mon), 163 Campus Center
• Feb. 1 (Tues), 163 Campus Center
• Feb. 2 (Wed), 163 Campus Center

COURTESY DIMENSION

Scream 3, set to hit theaters Friday, gets off to a poor start with its off-kilter soundtrack.

■ superbowl

continued from page 7

time in Superbowl history. Walt Disney put in an ad to attract people back to the family oriented fun-park. No, I'm not talking about the halftime show, during which Christina Aguilleria and Toni Braxton lip-synched poorly, as a full orchestra also pretended to play, while the "spirits of the earth" pranced about the stage. Before the game, there was a thirty-second spot with Mickey jumping from one superstar to another while they spoke of praise for the mouse.

The most stunning and probably controversial commercial is a spot that takes in the future. According to the narrator, AIDS and cancer is now curable and finally a cure for sever spinal cord trauma has been found. And as the narrator says this, Christopher Reeve of the Superman films, who fell off a horse five years ago and broke his back leaving him a quadriplegic, arises and walks to the stage. Unfortunately, he cannot walk, but this commercial creates the illusion that it is possible. In a Monday interview with Diane Sawyer, Reeve says, "It (walking) can happen." The reason this spot is so controversial is that the commercial is advertising an investment company. Reeve says that it's OK to make money but people should also "leave a mark." "If you don't dream it won't happen," says Reeve.

Most years it has been the game competing with the commercials while this year, in contrast, there was no need for it. The winner, in my opinion, was the Internet company who created the herd of cats; the idea was good because everyone remembered what it was about. Next time, however, they have to focus on the name of the company itself so people will remember what follows the www on their computer screen. The other winner was, of course, E*Trade's dancing monkey, because nothing beats a chimp and two old men sitting in front of a trailer singing "La Cucha Rocha."

UMASS
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST
University Health Services Amherst, MA 01003
577-5000

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

An open letter to the UMass Student Community from the Director of the UHS Eye Care Services Spring 2000.

My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and the New England College of Optometry in 1975. I am very proud of the University Health Service Eye Care Program and the high quality of eye care delivered to more than 80,000 individuals over the last 25 years.

I have been on the teaching faculty of the New England College of Optometry and co-authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. In addition, I am credentialed in diagnostic and therapeutic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry.

Eye care services include:
- Routine eye examinations
- A new onsite eye glass service
- Emergency eye care
- Full service contact lens care
- Co-management of laser refractive surgery

Our staff takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Services over the years has been consistently excellent.

"I invite you to use the eye services at UHS."

uhs EYE CARE SERVICES
Convenient Hours & Campus Location
Call 577-5244

■ soundtrack

continued from page 8

since then has become so overused that by now it's pretty backneyed. Ripping off the sound of Ministry and Korn is a similarly dried-up well that is still being pined by the likes of these bands. When Coal Chamber's song on the soundtrack, a band formerly known as the worst Korn clone, is better than your band's, it's time to hang it up.

Meat Hook for System of a Down's "Spiders" and Fuel's "Sunburn"

The meat hook was the only original and interesting part of the otherwise dismal I Know What You Did Last Summer. Likewise, these two songs are actually well crafted and enjoyable among the sea of crap on this album.

One final note: this CD is edited. Slipknot, a band far too good to be on this soundtrack, contributes "Wait and Bleed," though this version has been tuned down and is not the version you will hear on the album or on most radio stations. In addition, swears are deleted in Godsmack's "Timebomb" and Ear2000's "Click Click." These omissions are not noted, therefore I bring them to your attention. This soundtrack had promise, but along the way went horribly off track. D

Temple 75, UMass 48

at Mullins Center (Amherst, Mass.)

	MIN	FG	FT	REB	A	F	PTS
TEMPLE (15-4)				O-D-T
Mark Karcher	28	7-12	0-1	1-5-6	2	4	17
Lamont Barnes	28	4-6	1-2	0-4-4	0	3	9
Kevin Lyde	23	5-11	0-1	3-4-8	1	2	10
Pepe Sanchez	36	1-4	0-0	1-5-6	7	0	3
Quincy Wadley	31	3-8	1-2	2-2-4	1	3	8
Greg Jefferson	1	1-1	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	2
Lynn Greer	18	2-5	1-3	0-1-1	2	3	5
Keaton Sanders	27	2-7	4-6	0-4-4	0	2	9
Alex Weeby	10	0-5	0-0	1-1-2	0	0	0
Momadou C. Barry	3	0-0	2-2	1-1-2	0	0	2
TEAM				1-1-2
TOTALS	200	29-60	9-16	20-33-40	14	17	75

FG%: 483. FT%: 571. 3-point goals: 3-19 (Karcher 2-5, Sanchez 1-2, Wadley 0-5, Greer 1-5, Sanders 0-1, Weeby 2-2). Blocked shots: 7 (Barnes, Sanders). Turnovers: 9 (Karcher 4, Greer 3, Wadley). Steals: 5 (Karcher, Barnes, Sanchez, Wadley, Sanders). Technical fouls: none.

	MIN	FG	FT	REB	A	F	PTS
UMASS (11-8)				O-D-T
Chris Kirkland	22	3-10	2-2	0-2-2	5	1	8
Mike Babul	24	0-1	0-0	1-3-4	1	1	0
Ricardo Rhymer	26	3-5	4-5	1-1-2	3	3	10
Monty Mack	40	5-12	0-0	1-3-4	1	2	14
Shannon Crooks	38	4-12	0-0	1-2-3	3	4	12
Anthony Gates	5	0-1	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Jonathan DePina	14	0-1	2-2	0-1-1	2	3	2
Ronell Stoddard	2	0-0	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Winston Smith	4	0-1	0-0	0-0-0	0	1	0
Micah Strand	10	3-4	0-0	0-3-3	1	2	9
TEAM				1-1-2
TOTALS	200	18-47	8-13	4-16-20	16	19	48

FG%: 383. FT%: 615. 3-point goals: 4-15 (Mack 4-11, Kirkland 0-2, Babul 0-1, Crooks 0-4). Blocked shots: 1 (Kirkland). Turnovers: 8 (Mack 3, Kirkland 2, Crooks 2, Babul, DePina). Steals: 3 (Kirkland, Babul, DePina). Technical fouls: none.

Attendance: 6,048

SCORE BY PERIODS	1st	2nd	TOTAL
Temple	34	41	75
Massachusetts	21	27	48

■ NHL

continued from page 12

other words, his message to coach Pat Burns: work with what you've got. Speaking of the Bruins, not that anybody could have questioned team captain Ray Bourque's character before, but after taking a puck to the mouth and losing two teeth, Bourque was back on the ice the next day for practice. And if it weren't for the trainers, he would have been back on the ice in the next period! That's courage considering the 39-year-old Bourque is playing on a team that is going nowhere and struggling to even do that.

On the financial front, props to the Canadian government for cutting financial aid to the Canadian NHL teams. I'd much rather spend tax money on health care than professional sports. The NHL and its players need to get their priorities straight and fix their own problems and lower player salaries. Overspending for players in any sport is the fault of the owners and not the people who pay to watch the games. And while they're at it, throw in a conduct clause. If you're going to be getting that much money for playing a game, the least you can do is behave appropriately... Congrats to UMass-Lowell alumni Scott Fankbouser, who managed to work his way onto the Atlanta Thrashers. Just another example of U-make it happen.

Alex Wood is a Collegian columnist.

■ NFL

continued from page 12

Elway's dream season.

Denver took a 17-7 lead behind a Jason Elam 51-yard field goal, but the Pack bounced back with a 40-yard pass from Favre to Mark Chmura. Ryan Longwell tied it with a field goal in the third but Denver responded with a pair of Davis one-yard plunges.

If that isn't enough drama, let's go to the intangibles.

Well, the setting was Ray's house and I was in good shape, despite being confined to the floor. I was the only Broncos fan, well, Broncos fan for that night, at least, in the place and people were getting rowdy because pain was on the line, in the form of a 2-liter Coke bottle filled with Busch Light, America's finest beverage. One of my roomies' was forced to finish it without it leaving his lip. Not pretty.

I chewed a piece of Nicorette for 15 minutes with hopes of earning a sweet two bucks for going the distance. They didn't think a non-smoker could do it, but I went the distance and used my winnings on two packages of Ho-Hos and a Mountain Dew on the way home.

Still not enough? The debut of the Doritos chick. And yes, that's plenty for this kid.

Forget persuasion, I've made up my mind.

Brett Mutner is a Collegian columnist.

■ swarming

continued from page 12

iffy pickup under the basket when Crooks missed a dish from Mack, but it wasn't enough. A seven-and-a-half minute drought is tough to rebound from. The tricky web zone defense did not allow the Minutemen to settle down, nor was their transition game able to jettison without any tangible offense.

The Owls, on the other hand, were led by the deft shooting touch of Karcher, who went 7-for-12 from the floor for 17 points. Center Kevin Lyde and guard Alex Weeby, who came off the bench, netted 10 points apiece in the winning effort.

"They shot the ball very well; we know they don't always shoot like that," said Flint. "Karcher came off with some big shots to start the game... when they shot the ball like that, they're tough to beat."

At times it seemed as though the Minutemen knew they were outmatched last night, when Lamont Barnes dunked all by himself and the Minutemen couldn't hold onto a rebound. Yet down 32 points with just two minutes left, UMass produced six points, proving that the will was still there.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

In one of the brighter moments, Shannon Crooks took it in safely for a layup during the Minutemen's loss to A-10 East leader, Temple.

Can you talk the tech?

At RCN, we've become a telecommunications powerhouse through the exceptional customer service we provide. And there's no end in sight to our growth. In fact, we're opening a new 24 hour state-of-the-art call center in Springfield, MA and are currently seeking additional agents to provide superior technical support to our Internet subscribers.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT AGENTS ALL SHIFTS
Using your highly polished customer service and problem solving skills, you will work via the telephone to interpret, understand and resolve customer issues. Your background must include a technical knowledge of PC and Mac configurations to the Internet a working knowledge of DOS, Windows 3.1, Windows 95/98 and Mac Operating Systems as well as a demonstrated familiarity with Internet software. Previous support experience is a plus.

These exciting positions offer a competitive pay rate, excellent benefits paid training and growth opportunities all in a business casual environment. Please forward your resume to: Human Resources, JavaNet, 1 Federal St. Springfield, MA 01105. Fax (413) 846-1505. E-mail: dpunch@javanet.com. EOE

RCN The love wave of communications
www.rcn.com

Making a difference has always been a matter of applying yourself. Here's where to apply.

PEACE CORPS

5-College Area Peace Corps Week:
February 7 - 11
Contact the 5-College Area Office
(413) 545-2105 www.peacecorps.gov

UMASS
Student Speaker
Undergraduate Commencement

Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker.

Who is Eligible? A Graduating Amherst campus senior (Class of 2000)

Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interest to graduating seniors as well as to parents and other guests. It should address your impressions and experience(s), both academic and extra-curricular.

Format: Submit approximately three word-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to five minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.

Selection Process: A non-voting staff person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. Three to five individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.

Deadline: Wednesday, February 9, 2000, 4:30pm.

Submit Proposals To: Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Miller Lite Bottles $2.25
Michelob + Michelob Light Draft $1.75
Rum + Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House, Hip-hop, and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY-SAB Productions DJ's Fooz, Cromo, and Uncel
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons sat www.cantones.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000. Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

1 Bedroom apartment for rent. Amherst Center location. $530/month Available 2/1. 253-4463.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous customer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

EMPLOYMENT

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Two paid internships available. Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots activism and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a spring internship position (with stipend) for you. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Like to play? Need money? The Pelham after-school program needs responsible and reliable assistants, who love kids. Tues and Thurs 3 to 5:30 pm. Contact Lennie Ware 253-5944 or leave message 253-3595.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $530 weakly distributing phone cards. No experience necessary. full or part-time. Call 1-800-572-3361.

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous RY, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Work for an exciting College focused Internet company at your school! Looking for motivated individuals with strong leadership, entrepeneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay and options! Contact info@uconnections.com.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Work study or substitute teachers positions available. $7.00 per hour. Children 18 months to 5 years old. Experience with young children preferred. Call Ellen at 549-1167.

Undergraduate Bussiness Consultent Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills and General Bussiness Experience. 10-15 hours per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Bussiness, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2166.

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Internships/Jobs: meaningful, rewarding, unique! 4 GREAT Co-ed Children's Camps in NY, PA and ME are looking for fun-loving, children-focused staff. Swim, water-ski, boating, tennis, outdoor leaders, media, land-sports, creative and performing arts specialists, plus Cabin and Group leaders. ACA-accredited programs. Benefits: Salary, Room, Board, Travel and Laundry. Apply to all 4 via 1 form, at www.horizoncamps.com or call (800)544-5448 for info.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

2 snowboards 4 sale. Call for details. $100 or bo. each good condition. Jeremy 549-9629.

Computer desk for sale. 1yr old. Perfect condition. $150/neg. Call Mandi 256-4915.

SNOWBOARD BOOTS FOR SALE! Women's BURTON Rulers. Excellent condition. $75 Caroline 397-0922.

INSTRUCTION

University Bertending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

MISCELLANEOUS

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bedroom house 10 minutes from Amherst center. Available NOW. $300/month. 256-2384.

Upstairs bedroom in Puffton. $333?month inc. Inc. heat and hot water. On bus route. Needed ASAP call (413) 348-3393.

1 bedroom in 2 Bedroom apartment. Looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker. 3/4 mile from campus. Effective Immediately! Call Alissa 253-4275.

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 bedroom available in Na

Looking for 1 or 2 people to sublet master bedroom in 3 bedroom. Mill Valley Apts. Call Maura 256-6777.

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? call birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Aiwa Starao System. 3cds very powerful. Originally $700 buy for $300 or B/O. Call 6-3489.

Compatition-Series Equipment at sick prices that need to go FAST- Orion XTR-series separates, amplifier, sub, alpine deck, Boston acoustic pro-series separates; Denon receiver as well; call Will @ 665-0343.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jomeica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS ON SPRING BREAK!
CANCUN JAMAICA NASSAU
PRICE IS LOWER!
32 YEARS IN THE BIZ
Call us at 1-800-293-1443 now
STUDENTCITY.com

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Place your ads in The Collegian today!

Call us here at 545-3500!!

Don't forget Valentine's Day is coming soon!

Five College Community Calendar

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at both 2 and 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable will perform an improvisational comedy show at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. Anyone is welcome.

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at both 2 and 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15 – April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m., student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-student aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Your FYI could be here!! Call today!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 2, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Sidney Poitier-Light		Cultura Shock: "Hollywood Censored/The Devil's Music" ⧖				Impressionism
WFSB 3	3	News ⧖	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	City of Angels (In Stereo) ⧖		"In the Name of the People" (2000, Drama) Scott Bakula. ⧖				News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	City of Angels (In Stereo) ⧖		"In the Name of the People" (2000, Drama) Scott Bakula. ⧖				News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WCVB 5	5	News ⧖	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⧖	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (R) ⧖	Drew Carey ⧖	Spin City ⧖	Searching-Promised Land		News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WLVI 56		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ⧖		Roswell "The Convention" ⧖		News ⧖		Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		West Wing "Five Votes Down"		Law & Order "Merger" (R) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Reel TV ⧖		7 Days "Fresh Wizard" (R) ⧖		Star Trek: Voyager "Memorial"		News	Reel TV (R) ⧖	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ⧖	Ent. Tonight	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		West Wing "Five Votes Down"		Law & Order "Merger" (R) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTIC 8	11	Simpsons ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Friends ⧖	On Thin Ice: Dark Side		Get Real "Tough Love" ⧖		News		Friends ⧖	Frasier ⧖
WWLP 9	22	News ⧖	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		West Wing "Five Votes Down"		Law & Order "Merger" (R) ⧖		News ⧖	Tonight Show
WGBY 57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Sidney Poitier-Light		Cultura Shock: "Hollywood Censored/The Devil's Music" ⧖				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⧖
WGGB 40	28	News ⧖	ABC News	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (R) ⧖	Drew Carey ⧖	Spin City ⧖	Searching-Promised Land		News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WSBK 38		Judge Judy ⧖	Judge Judy ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	7 Days "Fresh Wizard" (R) ⧖		Star Trek: Voyager "Memorial"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS 72		Roseanne ⧖	Roseanne ⧖	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder		WCW Thunder		Ripley's Believe It or Not! (R)
A&E 45		L.A. Law "Cry Vey, Wilderness!"		Law & Order ⧖		Biography: The Osmonds		Investigative Reports (R) ⧖		American Justice ⧖		Law & Order "Indifference" ⧖
CNN 29	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour ⧖		Crossfire ⧖	World Today ⧖		Larry King Live ⧖		Newsstand ⧖		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM 53	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Sean's Money	★★ "Fear, Wor" (1985, Comedy)		Michael J. Fox, James Hampton.		South Park ⧖	Man Show ⧖	Daily Show
DISC 42		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery (R)		On the Inside: Rock and Roll		Behind Enemy Lines		Vietnam POWs – Stories		On the Inside: Rock and Roll
ESPN 43		Sportscenter ⧖		Women's College Basketball:		Tennessee at Connecticut. (Live)		College Basketball: Connecticut at Villanova. (Live)				Sportscenter ⧖
LIFE 44		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope "White Trash" ⧖		★★★★ "Terms of Endearment" (1983, Drama) Shirley MacLaine, Debra Winger.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV 51		MTV Jams	Best Suite	Celebrity	Music Videos	Say What Kike	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		True Life	True Life	Undressed (R)	Lovelina
NICK 52		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ⧖	Rugrats ⧖	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons ⧖	I Love Lucy	M.T. Moore
SCIFI 59		Sliders (In Stereo) ⧖		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Poltergeist: The Legacy ⧖
TLC 54	28	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Perfect Specimen"		Extreme Machines (R)		Collapse: Extreme Force		Collapse: Failure by Design		Extreme Machines (R)
TNT 55		In the Heat of the Night ⧖		ER "Ground Zero" (In Stereo) ⧖		Figure Skating: U.S. Open. ⧖				★½ "Hello Again" (1987, Fantasy) Shelley Long.
USA 60		Baywatch (In Stereo) ⧖		JAG (In Stereo) ⧖		Walker, Texas Ranger ⧖		★★½ "Indecent Proposal" (1993, Drama) Robert Redford. (In Stereo) ⧖				Texas Ranger
HBO 46		[5:00] "Digging to China" (1998)		★★ "Jack Frost" (1998) Michael Keaton. PG ⧖		Hanging Up		Sopranos "Boodle...Do" (R) ⧖		Da "God's Chillin" (In Stereo) ⧖		★★★ "Thick as Thieves" (1999)
MAX 48		★★ "The Adventures of Ford Fairlane" (1990) Andrew Dice Clay.				★★½ "Cocktail" (1988, Drama) Tom Cruise. ⧖		★★½ "Undercurrent" (1998, Action) Lorenzo Lamas. (In Stereo) ⧖				Hot Line
SHOW 50		★★★ "The Climb" (1997, Drama) John Hurt. (In Stereo) PG-13 ⧖				★★★ "Scream 2" (1997, Horror) David Arquette. (In Stereo) R ⧖		"Journey: The Ascension" (1997) Richard Grieco.				Beggars

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	81	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	82	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	83	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	84	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	85	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	86	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	87	TBS
9	Weather Channel	88	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	89	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	90	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	91	Comedy Central
13	WOCH & HSCN	92	Cartoon Network
14	International	93	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	94	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	95	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	96	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	97	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	98	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Over the Hedge

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Over the Hedge

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may want to keep someone else at bay today, but the fact is that you will need this person to become involved if you want real success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – This is a good day to put aside petty jealousies. Consider others in a manner that allows them to be seen in the best possible light.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll want to move ahead of the pack and take care of the preliminaries today. Don't make the mistake of thinking things will be worked out for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You can expect to make some minor adjustments today to something that you thought was already completed. Remember: it's the process that counts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Others aren't likely to give you the credit you deserve today, but neither should you insist on it! You know what you've done, so be satisfied and enjoy yourself today!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may have to race through certain things today in order to get to those activities that you're most anticipating. You can have some fun after dark.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone from your past may be trying to tell you "what's what" today, but you're not about to be swayed from what you know is right and true.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Don't let others trick you into thinking that something is true when it is a transparent falsehood. You're not that gullible, are you?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can benefit greatly today from just the right amount of beginner's luck. Later, the experience you're garnering will pay off.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) – Some administrative headaches are unavoidable. You'll want to tend to paperwork as soon as possible. Don't wait till you're swamped!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Even though you feel you're running behind, you can still enjoy yourself completely as you work to catch up at your own pace.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're trying to give others a "shared experience" today, but some people may be resistant. Focus on those who are more receptive.

Quote of the Day

"Outside of the killings, Washington has one of the lowest crime rates in the country"

–Mayor Marion Barry, Washinton, D.C.

Monkey Box By PB&J

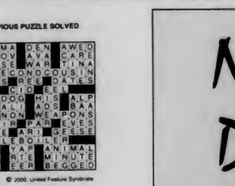
MY DAD JUST GOT SOME.

Over the Hedge

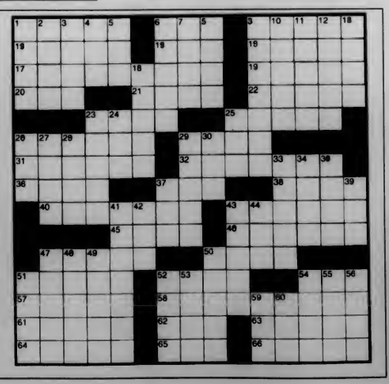
Robotman By Jim Meddick

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Dilbert By Scott Adams



ACROSS
1 "Pal Joey" author
6 Facial feature
9 Capital of Ecuador
14 Reef material
15 Yale grad
16 Beneath
17 Cooking devices
19 Tarawa, e.g.
20 It's above
21 Blinds
22 Ridiculous
23 Occupied
25 Bobby Fischer's game
26 Leave
29 North Carolina county
31 Bordeaux wine
32 Swirled pattern
36 Trick
37 Greek letter
38 Teheran's locale
40 Cocktail for 51 Across
43 "Gulliver's Travels" e.g.
45 Thoroughfare
46 Schedule
47 Place of safety
50 General Bradley
51 — Bond, 007
52 Curly hairdo
54 Acquire
57 Space shuttle's path
58 Type of sale
61 Be in a bee
62 Earl Grey, e.g.
63 Signal
64 Affirmed, e.g.
65 Melancholy
66 Fact or figure

DOWN
1 Publisher Adolph
2 Tackle-box item
3 Bohemian
4 Queen Latifah's music
5 Everyone
6 Pier
7 Sheltered, nautically
8 Straw unit
9 Puts down
10 Free
11 Goddesses' statues
12 Informs
13 Paris airport
18 Valuable item
23 More desolate
24 All-purpose vehicle
25 O'Hare's pl.
26 TV add-on 27 Gried
28 Pedro's house
29 Plant louse
30 — Paulo
33 Metric measure
34 Emerald Isle
35 Length of cloth
37 Genetic material
39 Teachers' org.
41 Bridge support
42 It's charged
43 Margaret Mead's workplace
44 — Khan
47 A Marx brother
48 Forest resin
49 Obscures
50 Mountain nymph
51 Tease
52 Presends
53 Kind of collar
54 Tiny insect
55 Neutral color
56 Swarm (with)
59 Country addr.
60 Pie mode connection

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-2-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

NO DC MENU TODAY

Call 545-2626 for menu

Collegian Staff

Night Editor: Kathleen Reilly
Photo Technician: Teresa Canino-Rivera
Copy Editor: Mary Grein
Production Supervisor: Jaylyn Lombard
Production Staff: Roberto Delgado, Janine Tangney

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Wednesday February 2, 2000

Brenda Warner's outfit funnier than some commercials

I don't know. I guess it just didn't do it for me.

The Super Bowl is about the experience, everything from the accessibility of the chip 'n' dip to whose leg is rubbing up against yours on the couch. While the game is obviously the focal point, too many details come with the feel of the game.

The Rams, the Titans, final play.

Brett Mauser on the NFL

sure, sounds like a perfect scenario for two teams playing out of their galaxies for a solid four months and for a season that refused to follow suit.

But no, it's not enough.

Maybe my viewing atmosphere was well below par, having been surrounded by those more interested in what beer they were consuming than what records Kurt Warner was shattering. Perhaps it was the sour taste in my mouth, thinking that maybe, just maybe, Brad Johnson should be taking the snaps for ms Redskins in the Georgia Dome.

Heck, the commercials were a disappointment for Super Bowl standards and we all know that has got to fit in to the equation somewhere. The much-awaited "whassssup" Budweiser commercial was dissatisfying and this Internet stuff is getting out of hand, fellas. Who's heard of these companies anyway? I give credit to the cat herders and Mountain Dew thugs, but everything else we could have done without.

I'm feeling better about my fashion know-how these days, thanks to Atlanta's finest. Heck, look at me, it's apparent I can dress myself after all. What was Lesley Visser wearing? Sorry, I haven't a clue. Brenda Warner? Oh my Lord. I was sick of seeing them by the time the thing started anyway. But hey, we saw more of them than we did of Marshall Faulk, who decided the game of his life was the ideal time to fold.

While the dancers behind Tina Turner could have their way with this kid, did ABC think they were fooling us with her lip-synching? She performed valiantly, but c'mon now.

So they're immediately behind the 8-ball without considering the most important hour.

Heck of a game and a heck of a champion. St. Louis earned every bit of it, going from taking a no-name quarterback to the house. When Rodney Harrison took out Trent Green in the Rams' third pre-season game – this after Green went 28 of 32 passes through two games and change – they very easily could have lied down right there. But let's hook them up with some recognition.

Tennessee lateraled its way to a win against Buffalo before dissembling Jacksonville after falling behind at half-time. Everybody who could care less about football rooted for the 7-point 'dogs and the Titans nearly came through.

You could feel it start slipping away when Tennessee's safety tandem was wiped completely off the slate, first Marcus Robertson thanks to a broken ankle against the Jaguars a week earlier, and finally Blaine Bishop, who recently learned that leading with your head is harmful for your health, a tactic he's used throughout his seven-year career.

Without Yancey Thigpen, it seemed like a wasted effort altogether for the AFC's team of destiny. But those Titans, they proved me wrong. I didn't give them a thought when the Rams squeaked out of the NFC Championship. Indeed, it was a snore of a first half, the Rams taking a 9-0 lead into the locker rooms, but the two squads more than made up for it in the end. Mike Jones pulling down Kevin Dyson at the one-yard-line with a textbook tackle.

Even still, it just wasn't. Those whispering about Sunday's showdown being the best Bowl ever aren't pulling me in.

Greatest finish? Absolutely. Greatest game? I'm sorry, I need to be convinced.

My vote?

Frankly, I'd take John Elway's climb to the top two years back. Not only had he lost three times before, but the Broncos, 12-point underdogs, became the first AFC team to win since the 1983 Raiders in Tampa in a 38-9 destruction of the Redskins in Super Bowl XVIII. Not only that, but they joined the '80 Raiders as the only Wild Card teams to go the distance. Tennessee nearly became the third.

Nobody gave the Hornies a chance after Green Bay ripped through the Niners at the 'Stick a week before, 23-10. Elway would prove his mettle a year later, but this time around, he relied on Terrell Davis, who rumbled for 157 yards and three scores to all but put the ring on Elway's finger. However, it took a Brett Favre incompletion at the Denver 20 with 28 seconds remaining to write the storybook ending to

Turn to NFL, page 9

Owls put "s" in "hoot" in 27-point thrashing

Temple turns lights off from perimeter, cleans glass in victory

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Temple head coach John Chaney's a legend. He's been the mother at the Owls' nest for 18 seasons and his name is synonymous with arguably the toughest and most frustrating defensive scheme in all of basketball – the matchup zone.

How to beat it? Shoot the three, and rebound your misses.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team did neither as the 20th-ranked Owls whisked through the Mullins Center last night and came out unblemished in a 75-48 destruction of the Minutemen.

The 27-point decision was the worst UMass (11-9 overall, 5-3 Atlantic 10) loss in front of its home crowd since Feb. 18th, 1986, when the Minutemen fell to St. Joseph's, 84-50. All this comes after a 39-point trouncing of Rhode Island in Amherst.

Temple	75
UMass	48

Eight thousand and change showed up at the Mullins Center while it was apparent that the Minutemen did not, as the game came down to hustle and missed shots. Temple (15-4 overall, 8-1 Atlantic 10) dominated both sides of the glass, out-rebounding the Minutemen 46-20 all told, and 20-4 on the offensive boards. The Owls outscored UMass 15-0 in the second-chance points column. There were no ties, no lead changes, and the Minutemen never led in the 40-minute duration.

"When they shoot the ball like that and they rebound like that, they're very tough to beat," head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "It came down to loose balls and loose rebounds. It was just a tough game and they played well."

The Owls defensive front immediately blanketed Monty Mack, who averaged 22.5 points in two games last season against Temple. This time, his shot simply wouldn't fall against the stifling Temple defense, scoring just three points in the first half as the Owls built a double-digit lead. The senior sharpshooter missed seven of 11 3-point attempts on the evening, notching a quiet 14 points in a losing cause. Kitwana Rhymer was the only other Minuteman in double figures, tallying 10 in 26 minutes of play.

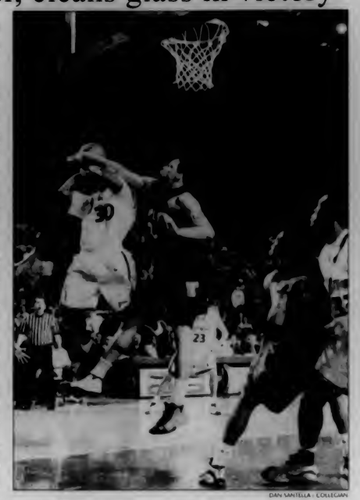
Rhymer, however, got into foul trouble early in the first half, picking up No. 2 at the 11:36 mark. His lack of presence in the paint was evident as Temple went to work on the glass, building its lead to 13 before the curtain closed on the first half.

"They were certainly overmatched with Kevin [Lyde] giving us a great effort around the basket (10 points, 8 rebounds)," Chaney said. "It's not easy with the big kids that we have on the boards playing the defense that we play."

UMass would get no closer. Rhymer revisited the floor, pairing with freshman Micah Brand in hoping to cure UMass' rebounding blues. However, the same story would be written, as the Minutemen were unable to get the ball rolling early in the second half. Meanwhile, Temple sprinted out of the locker rooms with an 11-1 run, building its advantage to an almost insurmountable 23 points at 45-22 with 15:35 left to play. The Minutemen had gone cold while Temple had just begun to hit its stride, outscoring the Maroon and White 20-3 going back to the 7:37 mark of the first half.

"You know that once you start getting down against them, sometimes it's tough just because of the way they play," Flint said. "When you're not rebounding the ball and you keep giving them second chances, those things happen."

Mark Karcher led all scorers with 17 points, knocking down 3 of 5 from behind the arc. Karcher registered 21 in Temple's win at the Apollo last season but was held to 10 at the Mullins Center as the Minutemen avenged their earlier defeat.



Alex Wesby's 3-pointer with 2:26 remaining gave the Owls their biggest lead, knocking down a bomb from the left wing to give Temple a 71-39 lead on the Minutemen. Wesby hit for 10 in just eight minutes of play.

Temple took a 34-21 advantage into intermission with Lamont Barnes scoring five of his nine points on an 11-2 Owl run to close the half. Temple did its damage from the perimeter, drilling 4 of 7 from deep waters.

Many believed the game would stay near the 50s, like UMass' 49-41 defensive showcase against Virginia Tech on Saturday. Instead, Temple shot the best it had all season, shooting 46 percent from the field, while holding the Minutemen to 38 percent shooting.

The Minutemen welcome the Texas Longhorns to the Mullins Center for a matinee non-conference game. The 13th-ranked 'Horns (13-6 overall) are coming off an 83-59 loss against Oklahoma in Norman.

"I told my guys that we've been playing too good and we've been working too hard and that this is a tough set-back," Flint said. "We just got to get ready for Texas on Saturday."

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Guard Shannon Crooks gets blocked by Temple's Kevin Lyde during last night's chief Atlantic 10 rivalry match up between UMass and the Owls.

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Calmly watching from his perch, Temple coach John Chaney kept an eye out on his team as it soundly defeated the Minutemen, 75-48 last night.

UM outplayed by swarming Owls

There is no question about it: the No. 20 Temple men's basketball team is hitting its peak. With the return of Juan "Pepe" Sanchez and the smooth catch-and-shoot mechanics of junior Mark Karcher, it's a tough team to squash.

For the Massachusetts basketball team, it was a difficult task to take on, as was illustrated last night at the William D. Mullins Center where the Minutemen fell, 75-48, in front of the biggest home crowd (8,048) of the season thus far.

The fans, led by the newly found support of the student body, had left as the minutes dwindled down to seconds in the latter half. Never establishing a lead, the Minutemen fought for their pride, fought for their fans, and, at times, fought for their coach. And, as always, they fought for their season. More than anything, the rivalry between these two teams brings out the best, but can leave the worst taste in the mouths of the team that comes up short.

UMass struggled mightily on offense all night, shooting just 38 percent from the floor despite the five starters logging an amazing 80 percent of the time on the court. Leading scorer Monty Mack, who was second in the league averaging 19.8 points per game prior to last night, tallied just three of his 14 points in the first half. The senior not only provides an offensive spark and cat-like quickness on defense, he often balances the confidence level of his team.

"We missed a couple of easy shots early and we got a little tentative against the zone. Instead of attacking it, we sort of just passed it around the perimeter," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint.

Defensively, the Minutemen were outmatched in size and in luck, as Temple converted for 15 second chance points to UMass' zero. Balls popping out of hands and sliding off fingertips of Minutemen happened all too often last night. In comparison, the home team raked in 20 boards to the Owls' total of 48, and just four to their 20 on the offensive side.

"We couldn't get a rebound, they had more offensive rebounds than we have rebounds period," said Flint. "To be honest with you, that's what it came down to... they made us pay for every offensive rebound."

With Mack out of sync, it was left up to Chris Kirkland, Kitwana Rhymer and Shannon Crooks, who combined for 26 points, eight points shy of their normal of just passed it around the perimeter, collaborative total. Freshman Micah said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. Brand came off the bench to add six points on four attempts, including a

Turn to SWARMING, page 9

UM student Avery to compete in X-games

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Although this year's X-Games may take place in Vermont, the snow should be stained maroon. After all, it's dominated by the University of Massachusetts.

Along with the students of the UMass Sports Management Department behind the scenes, the X-Games will also have a Minuteman in front of the camera. UMass student Ken Avery will be facing off against such World Cup stars as Shawn Palmer and Steve Peat in the Snow Mountain Biking or Snowbikercross event.

"I feel a lot of pressure, but when I'm in the starting gate, I'm just going to try and clear my head and say to myself, I'm equal to these people, I'm here for a reason and I can do this," Avery said.

"I've been nervous since I found out."

It was early last month while doing an internship for Iron Horse Bicycle Company that the UMass cycling team member and Communications major got a call from ESPN, informing him that he was invited to participate in the Snowbikercross event in the Games.

Avery gained attention last semester along with the other members of the cycling team as he lead the downhill mountain bikers to second place in the conference in downhill and dual slalom biking events. He also races professionally all summer for Team Iron Horse. He is now trying to raise his riding to an even higher level, competing in the apex of professional biking.

He will be the only college student in the race.

"I'm representing collegiate cycling. Being the only college student there, a lot of people will be rooting for the underdog, which I definitely am. I'm small peanuts compared to these people," Avery said. "This is my time to prove that I'm anything, but at the same time, it's hard proving ground."

Ken Avery

This will be Avery's first snow race at Mount Snow since he competed there in 1995. This Snowbikercross is quite different than normal mountain biking, or snow biking. The race is a cross between downhill mountain biking and boardercross. It consists of a short, steep course littered with doubles jumps and big-bermed curves with six riders racing at a time. Also, this race is sure to be action-packed, as the course is shorter, made for television, and has huge jumps for high-risk competition.

"I think it says something that someone who competes in collegiate cycling can compete in something like this," Avery said. "I'm doing it for my friends at UMass. I am very excited."

Avery, along with personal assistant and fellow member of the UMass downhill team, Marty Walsh, will be in Vermont to train starting tomorrow. The first round qualifiers take place on Friday.

Brathwaite snubbed from All-Stars; two teeth on Bourque's X-Mass list

Alex Wood on the NHL

The National Hockey League's finest will take to the ice this weekend as Toronto hosts the 50th NHL All-Star game. But only deserving star will not be taking part in the All-Star festivities. The Calgary Flames' Fred Brathwaite with his 16-11-3 record and 2.25 GAA was snubbed by the All-Star selection committee, who decided on the New Jersey Devils' Martin Brodeur and the New York Rangers' Mike Richter to back up the Toronto Maple Leafs' Curtis Joseph. While Brodeur is worthy with his league-leading 29 wins, Richter is not-so-deserving with his 15-16-7 record and 2.57 GAA – solid numbers, but not on par with Brathwaite's.

The problem: each team must have one representative in the All-Star game. Calgary is already sending defenseman Phil Housley and winger Valeri Bure. The underachieving Rangers don't have a true all-star among them, the best of the lot being Richter. But a simple solution could have sent the more deserving Brathwaite to his first NHL All-Star game. If the committee had selected ex-Bruin Tim Taylor, arguably the best free agent pick-up of the season, for the Rangers, then there would be an open slot in the crease for Brathwaite. On top of the fact, sending Taylor would have sent a nice message to NHL players, that under appreciated, hard-working checkers are important, especially so, in today's NHL game.

How about the acquisition by the Philadelphia Flyers of Keith Primeau in a trade that sent Rod Brind'amour to the Carolina Hurricanes? This is a great trade for both teams, as Carolina now has three strong center men in Brind'amour, Ron Francis and Jeff O'Neill. While the Flyers now sport two centers who measure in at 6-foot-5 with Primeau and Eric Lindros, no other team in the league can match up with that. Primeau and Lindros can both score and hit, two ingredients needed for a Stanley Cup run, and Carolina has added some scoring and grit that should help them make some noise in the post season...

The Philly-Carolina trade nixed a possible three-way trade that would have had the Phoenix Coyotes shipping Keith Tkachuk to the Rangers. The Flyers jumped into the fray at the last second to swipe Primeau and throw off the negotiations between New York, Phoenix, and Carolina. But now the Coyotes are in the awkward position of having tried to pawn off their team captain and still expect him to play with all the heart and determination that he has devoted to the team in the past. And with the Rangers in the hunt for a playoff spot, look for Tkachuk to land on Broadway in some other deal shortly after the All-Star break.

Two of last season's power-house teams have been bitten by the injury bug, several times over. The defending Stanley Cup Champion Dallas Stars and the upstart Boston Bruins have been having a hard time fielding anything that even resembles the look like last year's successful teams. As of January 22nd, the Stars had lost a staggering 206 man-games to injury. Injuries to key players, Mike Modano, Joe Nieuwendyk, Derian Hatcher, Jamie Langenbrunner, Richard Matvichuk, Jere Lehtinen, Darryl Sydor, Shawn Chambers and Grant Marshall, coupled with the losses of free agents, Pat Verbeek, Craig Ludwig and Dave Reid, Dallas is seeing just how hard it is to defend a title. In an effort to plug the voids in the line-up, the Stars signed Kirk Muller, who has rejuvenated his career in the Lone-Star state. But even having Muller in his heyday won't help the Stars repeat if they can't stay healthy long enough to secure a playoff spot.

And speaking of playoff spots, the Bruins are in danger of not even having one. Injuries to Sergei Samsonov, Jason Allison, Dave Andreychuk, Ray Bourque and Andre Savage, just to name a few, have made just finding warm bodies to put on the ice a priority over talent. Allison is gone for the season, needing wrist surgery, and the only way he'll see any ice time again this season is if the Bruins can make the postseason without him. Add in the free agent losses of Taylor and Dimitri Khristich and the late signing of Byron Dafoe, along with overall lethargic play, and you have this season's struggling Bruins. The Boston bench is in need of some serious depth, but owner Jeremy Jacobs came to the defense of GM Harry Sinden and Assistant GM Mike O'Connell last week, blaming the coaching rather than the personnel. In

Turn to NHL, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 3 — Thursday, February 3, 2000

Activists' pasts give students lesson for future

BY MATT FOSTER/COLLEGIAN

Black Panter Party Co-Founder Bobby Seale powerfully addresses UMass students.

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Auditorium was filled last night, as the founders of two of America's most recognized activist groups converged for a discussion on racial revolution in America.

Bobby Seale, a founding member of the Black Panthers, and Felipe Luciano, the co-founder of the Young Lords, a Puerto Rican civil rights group, spoke to a packed ballroom on their pasts as activists and what students in this decade can do to bring about change in their communities. The audience was able to participate by asking both speakers questions regarding their lives.

Seale and Luciano stressed the importance of self-empowerment and the use of students' resources to force change in society. They told students to carefully regard written laws when partaking in revolutionary events such as rallies.

The moderator of the discussion was UMass professor Lisa Robinson of the Women's Studies Department. She began the discussion, entitled "Panther and Lord: Two Soldiers Igniting Black History," by asking each speaker to elaborate on his history with his respective group.

Bobby Seale began by describing the beginnings of the Black Panthers, which were started in October 1966 by Hughie Newton and Seale, an Engineering student at the time. Seale was influenced early on by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Malcolm X, and who he stated as being his largest influence, Nelson Mandela. Seale said the Black Panthers attempted to "capture the imagination of the people" and win some local level political seats to get African Americans into the government.

The Black Panther party did not begin to really grow until after King's death. According to Seale, in the year that followed, the Black Panthers acquired a total of 5,000 members spread through 45 chapters nationwide. The group was interested in giving "all the power to all the people," Seale said. He went on to say, "We were intellectuals, but we weren't. We meant this sh*t."

Luciano formed the Young Lords after meeting Seale in 1967. Luciano gave credit for the Young Lords' formation to the Black Panthers: "without the Black Panthers there probably would've been no Young Lords," he said. Originally a Chicago gang, the Young Lords were transformed into a civil rights group that consisted of gang members, drug addicts, college students and working class people.

Luciano spent two years in prison after being convicted of murder. It was in prison that the former gang member turned his life around to pursue the civil rights movement. In prison, Luciano said, he learned compassion. "Compassion in revolution is absolutely crucial," he said.

The Black Student Union, the Black Mass Communication Project and Boricos Unidos sponsored the event, the first for Black History month. Other events include "All That Jazz," a discussion on Black history in music, and a Black history film series.

Felipe Luciano, former chairman of the Young Lords, urges students to understand their history

Poly Sci professors eye election

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

After years of devoting their energies to the study of politics, the time has come for another presidential campaign in which several Political Science professors at University of Massachusetts-Amherst are closely watching. Yesterday, they spoke of their surprise of the results of the New Hampshire primary Tuesday.

Jerome Mileur, the Department Chair of the Political Science department said he was surprised at John McCain's landslide victory. When asked why McCain was able to win in such fashion, Mileur said, "McCain is running a well designed campaign" and added that "George W. Bush needs to convince people of who he is, right now he seems to be a hollow candidate."

Jeffrey Sedgwick, also a Political Science faculty member said, "McCain finds support in areas where Bush is weak, in foreign policy for example." Also, he said he believes that people are voting for McCain because he seems to be an authentic candidate and not as he put it a, "slick politician."

Both men agree that McCain still has a very uphill fight in the rest of the campaign. One reason for this is Bush's huge amount of campaign money. "Money let's you compete everywhere, without being there," Mileur said. Sedgwick expects increased media scrutiny and he said he thinks this could have an adverse effect on McCain.

"He may have to be more cautious, which would be a shame, he shoots from the hip sometimes and people admire that," Sedgwick said.

According to Sedgwick, "Bush needs to become more aggressive and knowledgeable and campaign harder." Sedgwick went on to say that Bush already has a slight head-start on McCain in South Carolina because he has the support of the state Republican conglomerate which poses a problem for McCain.

As for Al Gore, Mileur was surprised at the effect he believes Bill Clinton had on his finish. "There was a striking Clinton effect, people shied away from Gore if they didn't like Clinton. The people that supported Clinton voted with Gore almost 2 to 1, people against Clinton voted three to two with Bradley.

"Gore took New Hampshire for granted," Sedgwick said. "Gore has the organizational advantage, and Bradley still has an uphill fight."

When speaking on Bill Bradley Mileur said he was on the right track campaign wise and had a strong showing in New Hampshire. "It is good to see that he has challenged Gore to individual debates," said Mileur.

"Bradley has to be elated," Sedgwick said. He said he believes that Bradley's showing was because, "he is popular with independents and he out spent Gore by about a third in New Hampshire."

The Republican candidates are currently narrowing their aim to South Carolina, while the Democrats' next primary isn't until March 7.

"New York and California are the biggest primaries for the Democrats," Mileur said. While Sedgwick said he believes that Bradley needs to place a lot of his focus on the New York primary to keep his campaign heading in the right direction.

Bush and McCain are expected to begin campaigning heavily in South Carolina this week.

SGA kicks off its spring agenda

By Jessica Silver
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association (SGA) held its first meeting of the spring 2000 semester last night. One of the main motions on the agenda involved the SGA's concern for improving the food quality in the dining halls.

After debate on the issue, the motion to form a committee to work as a liaison with the dining hall services in hopes of improvement passed last night. Senator Jeff Bazydlo and Senator Jim Ettinghan brought the motion to the SGA. The intention of the motion is to work with the student body to gather input on what is offered by the dining services.

Ettinghan said last night, "improvements are already being made such as the grab and go lunch along with the Your Campus Meal Plan meal plan is now being accepted in more campus stores. I think that this committee will really help."

On the same issue, earlier in the night, President Jeff Howe announced that he would be forming an executive committee along with the senator committee to address dining hall issues. The committee would be made up of Howe's staff and Student Trustee Seth Avakian, who together would work as a liaison between the students and the administration.

Howe said he felt that the forming of another committee was necessary, but other senators disagreed. Most of the resistance came from Senator Mark Boniface who felt that two committees were unnecessary. Boniface said in his debate against the forming of a senate committee. "Although Jeff thinks that there is enough work I don't. I don't think that the two committees are necessary."

ROBERTO D'ELICARLO/COLLEGIAN

Chris Tarnstrom, Sylvan Senator at large

Other issues addressed at the SGA meeting included information about tuition and fees. It was stated by Avakian that there would be no increase in tuition or fees for in-state students; although for out-of-state students there will be a $100 increase. Avakian said, "We have backed the national tread."

The University plans on cutting back one to three percent in all areas. Avakian said he feels that these cut backs are troubling due to the fact that the state is in good financial times. In a statement written by Avakian, "...the university should not have to struggle." Avakian's main concerns involving the cut backs are what they will due to the student services, which he feels are already struggling.

Also discussed was the ATM request in the Southwest living area. Many in the SGA said last night that they felt the ATM would never be approved. Avakian insured everyone that Howe and himself are doing their best to have the ATM installed. Avakian said, "People tell us it's impossible. I'm certainly not making any promises, but it was a campaign issue, and I intend to work as hard as I can to see it through."

As an update from last semester, Avakian discussed the Parental Notification Policy that the broad of Trustees passed. Avakian assured the SGA that it was "not as bad as it sounds." Avakian said he felt the policy will only result in one to two notifications per semester, due to a SGA policy that was drafted by the Student Affairs Judicial Issues Committee. The notifications will only be sent in the most serious situations, Avakian said.

Volunteer Fair takes center stage

UMass student Amanda Rich-Shea inquires about the Decisions/Thresholds Program.

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The seventh annual University of Massachusetts Volunteer Fair took place yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center Auditorium as approximately 45 non-profit organizations were on-hand to recruit students for volunteer and internship opportunities.

The event, sponsored by the UMass Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College, sponsors the annual fair during the beginning of each semester.

Community Service Coordinator Malesh Thorpe said the fair allows students to find out ways to get involved with their community.

"It's an opportunity for students to meet with the representatives from multiple organizations at one time and to discuss the best placement options where they can put their talents and interests to work," Thorpe said.

According to Thorpe, she is pleased by the reactions of students and their interest in wanting to get involved. In addition, faculty members are integrating service-learning work in their classes. Thorpe said this has been helpful in encouraging students to attend the fair. She said it's her hope that students will take advantage of the 80 service learning courses that are being offered this academic year.

One of the non-profit organizations attending the fair included the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (MSPCC). Volunteer Director Pam Meadows said the organization's mission is to work with parents to prevent child abuse.

"Our main mission is to keep children safe and families healthy," Meadows said. "We will go into their home with a home visitor to work on specific issues that are specific to that family."

She stated that this is part of the Goodstart Prevention Program. A therapist will work with the children or adults to attempt to prevent future incidents from occurring.

"Anyone is entitled to a screening by an early intervention program to make sure their child doesn't have a developmental delay or at risk of one, and if they are, to offer services."

Turn to FAIR, page 3

Alum Jackson to deliver lectures

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Author and journalist Sandra Jackson Opoku returns to her alma mater this week to give a series of lectures to students in honor of Black History Month.

An alumnus of the University of Massachusetts from the years of 1974-1976, Jackson is an Eleanor Bateman Alumni scholar and resident. She is at the University through the alumni program that "brings back distinguished alumni to interact with students."

She explained in an interview that the her personal interaction with students is important due to the fact that the University had a significant impact upon her first novel, The River Where Blood is Born.

According to Jackson, the novel is, "a multi-generational family epic that chronicles the journeys of African Americans over two centuries, three continents, and multiple realms."

"UMass was very influential in the development of my first novel because it was when I was a student here that I got exposure to African American literature," she said.

She went on to say that her semester abroad at the University of Legos in Africa as an exchange student allowed her the opportunity to discover and explore Africa. "It was while I was in Africa as an exchange student that I had the initial incarnation of The River Where Blood is Born."

In addition to being a fiction writer, Jackson is also a journalist and part-time professor at Columbia College in Chicago, Illinois.

Currently, she is teaching and working on her second novel entitled Tales of Hot Johnny.

While on campus, Jackson will be speaking to three classes: Race and Slavery in American Culture, Press and the Third World, and Covering the Race. In addition, she will be giving a lecture entitled "River waters, Africa's daughters" at 4 p.m. in Memorial Hall that will cover both the issues that affect African Americans and will also discuss Jackson's novel.

Directly following her lecture, she will be presented with the Eleanor Bateman award from Chancellor David K. Scott. She will then sign copies of her novel.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 30 LOW: 12	HIGH: 28 LOW: 12	HIGH: 35 LOW: 14

A Few More Projects — Katharine Ralls plans to do a few more things in this area before she graduates. — PAGE 4

Show me the... — This week's Arts cover takes a look at the explosion of primetime quiz shows. Also, we run down recent releases, as Trax returns. — PAGE 7

An Unstoppable Force — UMass forward Nekole Smith has all the moves to reach the upper echelon of college hoops. And she's only a sophomore! Read about her in today's sports. — PAGE 16

Arts & Living 6
Comics 15
Crossword 15
Editorial 4
News 3
Sports 16

ON THE INTERNET

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's largest college daily

Volume CVJ Issue 7 Thursday, February 3, 2000

Activists' pasts give students lesson for future

ROBERTO DELGADO/COLLEGIAN

Black Panter Party Co-Founder Bobby Seale powerfully addresses UMass students.

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Auditorium was filled last night, as the founders of two of America's most recognized activist groups converged for a discussion on racial revolution in America.

Bobby Seale, a founding member of the Black Panthers, and Felipe Luciano, the co-founder of the Young Lords, a Puerto Rican civil rights group, spoke to a packed ballroom on their pasts as activists and what students in this decade can do to bring about change in their communities. The audience was able to participate by asking both speakers questions regarding their lives.

Seale and Luciano stressed the importance of self-empowerment and the use of students' resources to force change in society. They told students to carefully regard written laws when partaking in revolutionary events such as rallies.

The moderator of the discussion was UMass professor Lisa Robinson of the Women's Studies Department. She began the discussion, entitled "Panther and Lord: Two Soldiers Igniting Black History," by asking each speaker to elaborate on his history with his respective group.

Bobby Seale began by describing the beginnings of the Black Panthers, which were started in October 1966 by Hughie Newton and Seale, an Engineering student at the time. Seale was influenced early on by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Malcolm X, and who he stated as being his largest influence, Nelson Mandela. Seale said the Black Panthers attempted to "capture the imagination of the people" and win some local level political seats to get African Americans into the government.

The Black Panther party did not begin to really grow until after King's death. According to Seale, in the year that followed, the Black Panthers acquired a total of 5,000 members spread through 45 chapters nationwide. The group was interested in giving "all the power to all the people," Seale said. He went on to say, "We were intellectuals, but we weren't. We meant this sh*t."

Luciano formed the Young Lords after meeting Seale in 1967. Luciano gave credit for the Young Lords' formation to the Black Panthers: "without the Black Panthers, there probably would've been no Young Lords," he said. Originally a Chicago gang, the Young Lords were transformed into a civil rights group that consisted of gang members, drug addicts, college students and working class people.

Luciano spent two years in prison after being convicted of murder. It was in prison that the former gang member turned his life around to pursue the civil rights movement. In prison, Luciano said, he learned compassion. "Compassion in revolution is absolutely crucial," he said.

The Black Student Union, the Black Mass Communications Project and Boricuas Unidos sponsored the event, the first for Black History month. Other events include "All That Jazz," a discussion on Black history in music, and a Black history film series.

Felipe Luciano, former chairman of the Young Lords, urges students to understand their history.

Poly Sci professors eye election

By Brian Lohnes
Collegain Staff

After years of devoting their energies to the study of politics, the time has come for another presidential campaign in which several Political Science professors at University of Massachusetts-Amherst are closely watching. Yesterday, they spoke of their surprise of the results of the New Hampshire primary Tuesday.

Jerome Mileur, the Department Chair of the Political Science department said he was surprised at John McCain's landslide victory. When asked why McCain was able to win in such fashion, Mileur said, "McCain is running a well designed campaign" and added that "George W. Bush needs to convince people of who he is, right now he seems to be a hollow candidate."

Jeffrey Sedgwick, also a Political Science faculty member said, "McCain finds support in areas where Bush is weak, in foreign policy for example." Also, he said he believes that people are voting for McCain because he seems to be an authentic candidate and not as he put it a, "slick politician."

Both men agree that McCain still has a very uphill fight in the rest of the campaign. One reason for this is Bush's huge amount of campaign money. "Money let's you compete everywhere, without being there," Mileur said. Sedgwick expects increased media scrutiny and he said he thinks this could have an adverse effect on McCain.

"He may have to be more cautious, which would be a shame, he shoots from the hip sometimes and people admire that," Sedgwick said.

According to Sedgwick, "Bush needs to become more aggressive and knowledgeable and campaign harder." Sedgwick went on to say that Bush already has a slight head-start on McCain in South Carolina because he has the support of the state Republican conglomerate which poses a problem for McCain.

As for Al Gore, Mileur was surprised at the effect he believes Bill Clinton had on his finish. "There was a striking Clinton effect, people shied away from Gore if they didn't like Clinton. The people that supported Clinton voted with Gore almost 2 to 1, people against Clinton voted three to two with Bradley.

"Gore took New Hampshire for granted," Sedgwick said. "Gore has the organizational advantage, and Bradley still has an uphill fight."

When speaking on Bill Bradley Mileur said he was on the right track campaign wise and had a strong showing in New Hampshire. "It is good to see that he has challenged Gore to individual debates," said Mileur.

"Bradley has to be elated," Sedgwick said. He said he believes that Bradley's showing was because, "he is popular with independents and he out spent Gore by about a third in New Hampshire."

The Republican candidates are currently narrowing their aim to South Carolina, while the Democrats' next primary isn't until March 7.

"New York and California are the biggest primaries for the Democrats," Mileur said. While Sedgwick said he believes that Bradley needs to place a lot of his focus on the New York primary to keep his campaign heading in the right direction.

Bush and McCain are expected to begin campaigning heavily in South Carolina this week.

SGA kicks off its spring agenda

By Jessica Silver
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association (SGA) held its first meeting of the spring 2000 semester last night. One of the main motions on the agenda involved the SGA's concern for improving the food quality in the dining halls.

After debate on the issue, the motion to form a committee to work as a liaison with the dining hall services in hopes of improvement passed last night. Senator Jeff Bazydlo and Senator Jim Eltringham brought the motion to the SGA. The intention of the motion is to work with the student body to gather input on what is offered by the dining services.

Eltringham said last night, "improvements are already being made such as the grab and go lunch along with the Your Campus Meal Plan meal plan is now being accepted in more campus stores. I think that this committee will really help."

On the same issue, earlier in the night, President Jeff Howe announced that he would be forming an executive committee along with the senator committee to address dining hall issues. The committee would be made up of Howe's staff and Student Trustee Seth Avakian, who together would work as a liaison between the students and the administration.

Howe said he felt that the forming of another committee was necessary, but other senators disagreed. Most of the resistance came from Senator Mark Boniface who felt that two committees were unnecessary. Boniface said in his debate against the forming of a senate committee. "Although Jeff thinks that there is enough work I don't. I don't think that the two committees are necessary."

ROBERTO DELGADO/COLLEGIAN

Chris Tarnstrom,
Sylvan Senator at large

Other issues addressed at the SGA meeting included information about tuition and fees. It was stated by Avakian that there would be no increase in tuition or fees for in-state students; although for out-of-state students there will be a $100 increase. Avakian said, "We have bucked the national tread."

The University plans on cutting back one to three percent in all areas. Avakian said he feels that these cut backs are troubling due to the fact that the state is in good financial times. In a statement written by Avakian, "...the university should not have to struggle." Avakian's main concerns involving the cut backs are what they will due to the student services, which he feels are already struggling.

Also discussed was the ATM request in the Southwest living area. Many in the SGA said last night that they felt the ATM would never be approved. Avakian insured everyone that Howe and himself are doing their best to have the ATM installed. Avakian said, "People tell us it's impossible. I'm certainly not making any promises, but it was a campaign issue, and I intend to work as hard as I can to see it through."

As an update from last semester, Avakian discussed the Parental Notification Policy that the broad of Trustees passed. Avakian assured the SGA that it was "not as bad as it sounds." Avakian said he felt the policy will only result in one to two notifications per semester, due to a SGA policy that was drafted by the Student Affairs Judicial Issues Committee. The notifications will only be sent in the most serious situations, Avakian said.

Volunteer Fair takes center stage

UMass student Amanda Rich-Shea inquires about the Decisions Thresholds Program.

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The seventh annual University of Massachusetts Volunteer Fair took place yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center Auditorium as approximately 45 non-profit organizations were on-hand to recruit students for volunteer and internship opportunities.

The event, sponsored by the UMass Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College, sponsors the annual fair during the beginning of each semester.

Community Service Coordinator Malcah Thorpe said the fair allows students to find out ways to get involved with their community.

"It's an opportunity for students to meet with the representatives from multiple organizations at one time and to discuss the best placement options where they can put their talents and interests to work," Thorpe said.

According to Thorpe, she is pleased by the reactions of students and their interest in wanting to get involved. In addition, faculty members are integrating service-learning work in their classes. Thorpe said this has been helpful in encouraging students to attend the fair. She said it's her hope that students will take advantage of the 80 service learning courses that are being offered this academic year.

One of the non-profit organizations attending the fair included the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (MSPCC). Volunteer Director Pam Meadows said the organization's mission is to work with parents to prevent child abuse.

"Our main mission is to keep children safe and families healthy," Meadows said. "We will go into their home with a home visitor to work on specific issues that are specific to that family."

She stated that this is part of the Goodstart Prevention Program. A therapist will work with the children or adults to attempt to prevent future incidents from occurring.

"Anyone is entitled to a screening by an early intervention program to make sure their child doesn't have a developmental delay or at risk of one, and if they are, to offer services."

Turn to FAIR, page 3

Alum Jackson to deliver lectures

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Author and journalist Sandra Jackson-Opoku returns to her alma mater this week to give a series of lectures to students in honor of Black History Month.

An alumnus of the University of Massachusetts from the years of 1974-1976, Jackson is an Eleanor Bateman Alumni scholar and resident. She is at the University through the alumni program that "brings back distinguished alumni to interact with students."

She explained in an interview that the her personal interaction with students is important due to the fact that the University had a significant impact upon her first novel, The River Where Blood is Born.

According to Jackson, the novel is, "a multi-generational family epic that chronicles the journeys of African Americans over two centuries, three continents, and multiple realms."

"UMass was very influential in the development of my first novel because it was when I was a student here that I got exposure to African American literature," she said.

She went on to say that her semester abroad at the University of Legos in Africa as an exchange student allowed her the opportunity to discover and explore Africa. "It was while I was in Africa as an exchange student that I had the initial incarnation of The River Where Blood is Born."

In addition to being a fiction writer, Jackson is also a journalist and part-time professor at Columbia College in Chicago, Illinois.

Currently, she is teaching and working on her second novel entitled Tales of Hot Johnny.

While on campus, Jackson will be speaking to three classes: Race and Slavery in American Culture, Press and the Third World, and Covering the Race. In addition, she will be giving a lecture entitled "River waters, Africa's daughters" at 4 p.m. in Memorial Hall that will cover both the issues that effect African Americans and will also discuss Jackson's novel.

Directly following her lecture, she will be presented with the Eleanor Bateman award from Chancellor David K Scott. She will then sign copies of her novel.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 30 LOW: 12	HIGH: 28 LOW: 12	HIGH: 35 LOW: 14

SOURCE: CNN.COM

A Few More Projects

Katharine Ralls plans to do a few more things in this area before she graduates.

PAGE 4

Show me the...

This week's Arts cover takes a look at the explosion of primetime quiz shows. Also, we run down recent releases, as Trax returns.

PAGE 7

An Unstoppable Force

UMass forward Nekole Smith has all the moves to reach the upper echelon of college hoops. And she's only a sophomorel Read about her in today's sports.

PAGE 16

Arts & Living 6
Comics 15
Crossword 15
Editorial 4
News 3
Sports 16

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

WIN A PIZZA PARTY

FOR YOUR RESIDENCE HALL:

INTER-HALL RECYCLING CONTEST

RUNS FEBRUARY 1st – APRIL 27th

PRIZES IN EACH RESIDENCE AREA FOR:

*BEST RECYCLING RATE *MOST IMPROVED

FOR CONTEST DETAILS – ASK YOUR RA/RD

TAKE A MINUTE —- MAN!

JOIN THE RECYCLE 2000 CAMPAIGN

YES
Glass bottles/jars
Metal cans/foil
Plastic bottles/jars/tubs
Milk/juice cartons

x NO
Plastic bags/packaging
Styrofoam of any type
Aerosols/chemicals
Ceramic dishes/pottery

YES
Newspaper
Paperboard
Copy/notebook paper
Books/magazines
Junk mail
Cardboard boxes

x NO
Tissue paper/towels
Pizza boxes
Beer/soda cartons
Foil/wax box liners

Questions? Call the Office of Waste Management at 5-9615,
Or, visit our webpage at www.umass.edu/recycle

"Remember….we do not inherit the earth from our parents, we borrow it from our children." Chief Seattle

Still don't know why you should recycle?
Check this out!

By recycling all the paper, bottles and cans now discarded by students in residence halls every semester,we can:

Save almost 6,000 trees (paper).
Prevent more than 20,000 lbs. of air pollution (paper).
Conserve over 1.4 million gallons of oil (paper).
Reduce water use by over 2.4 million gallons (paper).
Save enough energy to run 2,000 lightbulbs for over 3 months (glass bottles).
Reduce mining wastes by over 110 tons (steel cans).
Save nearly 28 tons of bauxite ore (aluminum).
Save enough electricity to run 10,000 TV's for 139 hours (aluminum).

■ fair

continued from page 1

Meadows said.

Volunteer Peter Galante of the Northampton Vt. Medical Center said he coordinates with medical centers to have students assist the nursing staff with patients. He said it provides students interested in the medical, hospital and psychiatric fields an opportunity to work with patients in a health care setting.

"We've had a huge success with the students," Galante said. "They're getting many benefits that are helping them in their potential career."

Marge Barnett, Recruitment Coordinator of Big Brothers/Big Sisters agreed with Galante and added that it is a great time for students to volunteer as mentors for children in helping to make a difference in the community.

"We have access to hundreds of young people that we wouldn't be able to reach any other way," Barnett said. "There are a lot of people that come because they have some commitment to being involved in the community."

Other volunteer groups attending the fair included MassPIRG, the Everywomen's Center and the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts.

Putin and Albright tackle key issues

By Sharon LaFraniere
The Washington Post

MOSCOW – Acting President Vladimir Putin on Wednesday rebuffed U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright's request that Russia back off its war against separatist Chechnya, but he supported economic reforms in Russia and did not rule out the possibility of agreeing to allow the United States to build a missile defense system.

It was Putin's first meeting with a high-ranking U.S. official since he took over as acting president a month ago. Albright, who discussed arms control, economic issues and Chechnya with him for nearly three hours, described him as a well-informed "problem solver" who tossed aside his cue cards and seemed to favor practical solutions. "I was impressed with a kind of can-do approach," she told reporters afterward.

In particular, Albright was encouraged by Putin's willingness to explore the possibility of amending the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty to permit the United States to build a missile defense system, which Washington says it needs to protect against so-called rogue nations, according to a senior State Department official who attended the Krenlin meeting. "He didn't say no. He left doors open," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Putin also won points in vowing to pursue pro-market reforms in Russia, including collecting more taxes and instituting a rule of law that will protect investors and businesses from the now-pervasive corruption. "He really said the right things," the State Department official said.

On Chechnya, however, Moscow and Washington continued to differ. As he has during the five-month-long conflict, Putin refused to entertain the notion of negotiating with the rebels, who in the last two days have begun departing from the capital of Grozny, apparently leaving it open to Russian conquest. Some military analysts say Putin now has an excellent chance to declare victory and negotiate with the rebel leaders, and avoid a protracted battle in Chechnya's mountainous south.

But Albright, who criticized Russia on Tuesday for inflicting "misery" on Chechen civilians, said Putin showed no indication that he is ready to talk. "To them, what they are doing in Chechnya is essential for the future of Russia," she said. "I don't think we are any closer to a political solution."

In a separate briefing, Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov told reporters that Russia is willing to look for a political settlement to the Chechen war, and does not favor any major changes in the ABM treaty. He did not say whether a U.S. missile defense system would constitute a major change, but he has previously opposed the system on the ground that it would undermine the treaty.

Putin, whose opening remarks to Albright were broadcast on the evening news here, said Russia and the United States had survived "some difficult and complicated moments" in the past two years, but that Russia still sees Washington as "our main partner in a whole number of directions."

Ivanov also told reporters that Russia does not want "any cooling down" or setbacks in its relationship with the United States.

Circles
Sophomore English major Kate Stephens takes an early morning break to enjoy the unique reading lighting in Totman.

Brown U. blocks access to Napster from network

By Juan Nunez
Brown Daily Herald (Brown U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I. – Brown University's Computing & Information Services (CIS) blocked access to the Napster.com Web site last week, due to concerns over its server's consumption of bandwidth through the Brown network.

Napster is a software product that allows users to find MP3s by directing them to the MP3 files on computers that have already downloaded the program. Thus the program effectively makes every user's computer a server for others to access.

Director of Network Technology George Loftus said CIS first became aware of a bandwidth problem in mid-November but discerned it in the Keeney network exclusively.

The problem was first attributed to Napster early last week, after Loftus noticed irregular patterns in the graphs that monitor network traffic.

"There was an abnormal amount of outbound information," he said. "Normally, more information should've been inbound than outbound, but both currents were similarly busy.

"We were receiving complaints from workers and researchers on campus that their server was too slow," Loftus said. "They couldn't get their jobs done."

The CIS filter on Napster.com prevents users on the Brown network from accessing the site. CIS has been criticized by some students for not warning them of the imminent shut-down.

"It's kind of annoying because most universities would've had the decency to e-mail," said David Shallowitz '03. "I'm not outraged and it's not a huge deal, but common courtesy dictates."

"I wanted to give people some warning, but it wasn't my decision," Loftus said. "We normally would've warned [them] if it had been an academic application, but there was no legitimate reason for [Napster's] existence."

Though Loftus could not provide precise figures, he said that Napster was

Turn to NAPSTER page 5

Correction:
The feature photo on page 2 of yesterday's Collegian incorrectly identified its subject as a Starbucks employee. That individual is actually employed by the University. We at the Collegian regret the error.

China Protests approval of Taiwan-U.S. military bill

By Frank Langfitt
The Baltimore Sun

BEIJING – The Chinese government summoned U.S. Ambassador Joseph Prueher Wednesday afternoon to denounce House of Representatives' passage of a bill on Tuesday that would increase Taiwan-U.S. military ties – even though the Clinton administration has already said it will veto the bill.

The bill, approved 341-70, would permit direct communication between the two militaries and create more opportunities for Taiwanese officers to study at U.S. military schools.

China, which views Taiwan as a rebel province, sees the bill as an attempt to meddle in its domestic politics and undermine America's long-standing recognition that Taiwan is a part of China.

The measure "seriously infringed upon China's sovereignty and grossly interfered in China's internal affairs," Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi told Prueher, according to a statement posted on the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' web page.

"Should this bill be passed and become law, it will ... further aggravate the tension across the Taiwan Strait, undermine peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region and seriously impair and disrupt China-U.S. relations."

With less than two months to go before Taiwan's presidential elections, the relationship between China and its island neighbor remains strained. Last summer, Taiwanese President Lee Teng-hui announced that the two Chinas should negotiate their differences as equals on a "state-to-state" basis. Angry at what it saw as a drift toward a formal declaration of independence, Beijing once again threatened to attack Taiwan.

The "Taiwan Question" stretches back to 1949 when Nationalist troops fled to the island at the end of the Chinese Civil War. Up until recently, Taiwan had agreed to the fiction that there was only one China to keep the peace.

Lee's statement last July scrapped that notion, but the mainland has so far refrained from military action. Many analysts think Beijing is waiting for Lee's retirement and hoping that his successor will be more to its liking.

Taiwan is the most sensitive issue between China and the United States and one of the biggest potential flash points for conflict in Asia. Nearly four years ago, China conducted missile tests just off Taiwan's shores as people there prepared for their first direct presidential election. In response, the United States sent two carrier groups to the area, a force actually commanded by Prueher who was an admiral at the time.

Everybody Scores!

REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!

GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.

YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!

PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

$score BIG $score OFTEN Sweepstakes

UpCLOSE travel well SPEND LESS BLOCKBUSTER CALGON SESSIONS SKECHERS OldGlory.com TripHub.com UNIVERSAL UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION

mybytes.com™

No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States. (except Florida) 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 02/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/31/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "BBSO Rules" Common Plaza, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER™ name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc. Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. (Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER™ store locations.)

© 2000 Youthstream

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Thursday, February 3, 2000

Our Opinion

Blood Sport

Agression. The sport of football is characterized by its fast-paced explosion of violence. Hit the man. Sack the quarterback. Throw him to the ground. Listen to the sound of man smashing man.

For some players this mentality cannot simply be left on the field. It is this attitude towards life that makes football players mutli-millionaires; American society rewards football players for their fury and aggression. Society teaches young people this at an early age. The National Football League itself glorifies the violence of its sport by its catch phrase "Feel the Power".

Three people have felt the power this year in a very real way. Five and a half hours after the NFL celebrated the pinnacle of its 1999 season, Super Bowl XXXIV, two men were stabbed to death outside an upscale nightclub seven miles from the event. Two days later, Ray Lewis, an outstanding linebacker on the Baltimore Ravens was charged with their murder.

Lewis is a football standout. This year he led the league in tackles and was on his way to his third straight Pro Bowl. In college he was named an All-American. The flip side to this coin is that he is a violent man with an explosive temper and no self-control. In December he was accused of punching a woman in a Baltimore bar. His coaches saw this lack of self-control first hand and attempted to counsel him. They did not succeed.

These recent stabbings by an athlete, however, are not isolated incidents. On January 4th another Pro football player, Rae Carruth, was indicted for first-degree murder when he murdered the mother of his unborn child in a drive-by shooting earlier this year. Prosecutors are currently seeking the death penalty against Carruth who hid from police after the incident.

These two events are a wake-up call. Carruth and Lewis are not just bad apples in the past four years over 90 NFL players have been arrested. Our society is grooming violent killers and glorifying athletes. If you can shoot a basketball or tackle a running back then you are placed on a pedestal. The shortcomings in your personal life are conveniently overlooked until it is too late. Once athletes are in this position, then there is the mentality that they are untouchable. A prime example of this is professional basketball player Bobby Phills. Phils raced his expensive car at excessive speeds to his own death. Fortunately, no one else was killed by his stupidity.

This mentality of invincibility must change. It is unacceptable for anyone, regardless of profession, to kill another human being. It is unacceptable for any man to physically attack a woman. No tolerance should be shown to people incapable of following these precepts.

The NFL has gone to great lengths to glorify the violent nature of professional football. In addition to the "feel the power" slogan, it runs ads showing brutal tackles. In return it has seen ratings, revenues, popularity and profits skyrocket. However, the NFL has done little to address the negative impact that this policy has on society. By creating a game that takes ferocity and aggression to excel in, the NFL has also created an incentive for players to be ferocious. Leaving this lifestyle on the field has proven to be too difficult for some players. Lewis and Carruth lacked the self-control to follow society's rules.

Violent athletes must be disciplined. Mistakes should not be swept under the rug. When athletes demonstrate the inability to stay within the boundaries of proper behavior, then they should not be allowed to continue playing sports. The safety of society should not be sacrificed for the profitability of sports and the league should ensure that they are creating incentives for exceptional athletes, not killers, to excel.

I'm just makin' the right moves

I don't think I'm quite ready for classes yet. Yeah, I know that the semester has already started, but I'm just not in the "study mode" right now. The problem is, I think I had way too much fun over intersession and now I'm having trouble snapping out of "fun mode."

Boy, was my break fun. Well, not entirely – I did have to work. But this time I wasn't the waiter that I normally am on my school vacations. Nope, this time I made tons of cash... stripping!

No more bringing hot tea to 87-year-old women for a 10-cent tip and having fingers snapped at me – those days are over! This winter, I got some cojlons and decided to take it all off! Having trouble believing I was a stripper? Whatever. What. I'm not buff enough? I'm not tan enough? I'm not suave enough? Hey, the hundreds of women that shoved fifty-dollar bills down my skivvies didn't seem to mind at all ("Beefcake... Beefcake!"). Of course that's only because I have a 12-inch penis and the ladies were informed of this before every show. That made them forget about the somewhat pale skin, the less-than-toned body and my "white boy" moonwalk on the stage.

OK, OK, so I was just kidding about the 12-inch thing. Oh, alright, I was just kidding about the stripping thing, too. Damn it! A guy can hope, can't he? The truth of the matter is that I was a waiter once again this break. And yes, I had to wait on beehive heads who just can't have their coffee hot enough or their service fast enough. Yeah, I had to grin and bear it each day. I went into work, tending to my youthfully challenged customers' every demand. Then I would eagerly anticipate the spare change I would get for a tip and listen for the lovely things my customers would say as they left the restaurant.

"Hey, June, that guy was a real loser, wasn't he?"

"That's right, Fran. What a schmuck. We had that guy running around like a maniac and we only gave him 75 cents for his troubles. Ha! Ha! Ha! ("wheezing cough") Ha! Ha!"

And then boom! They slip on a patch of ice as they walk out of the restaurant. Their feet fly straight over their heads and they are down for the count. Who's laughing now, grandma? Talk about poetic justice...

Gary Mendese

Anyway, I told you that I had a fun break and all I've been doing is complaining about my work (By the way, I would never laugh at my customers if they fell on the ice; but I might push them into a snow pile). So back to my fun vacation...

Although I wasn't a stripper (which is nauseating to even think of), I did do something that took a lot of confidence on my part: I approached two beautiful women. Sound silly? Hey, I still eat Fruity Pebbles, ask to go potty and tuck a napkin into my shirt before every meal, so it was a big deal for me. So here's what happened...

There I was, right in the center of my hometown: the rocking Peabody, MA. I was standing in front of Walgreen's when I saw her. She was gorgeous (Cue: "Let's Get it On"). I was sick and tired of not having any confidence with women, I was going to approach her. But what would I say? "Hey, Gary, just be yourself," I thought. "Better yet... fuhgedabowdit! You've got your cool leather jacket now, so she'll be all over you. In fact, she's waiting for you to come over and talk to her."

And that's exactly what I did. I wasn't going to be a chump anymore. "Damn it," I said to myself. "Move your big feet and go over there." And there I went. I walked ever-so-smoothly over to her, pretending not to notice her too much, and when I reached her, our eyes met and she gave me a smile. Then, the words just seemed to flow from my lips...

"Have you seen my baseball?"

And then there came the pain. Obviously not being familiar with "There's Something About Mary", she kneed me in the crotch! What did I say? What did I do? Whatever, man... her loss.

So I failed with my Rico Suave moves on that woman. That wasn't going to stop me. So the next week I went to a dance club and this is where the real fun happened. Once again I saw a beautiful woman and since I only needed a hernia operation after my last attempt, I figured I'd go for it one more time. Only this time it was easier: everyone was dancing and eating Roofies (and everyone knows that takes the edge off.)

So I went ahead with no hesitation. This time I was going to mesmerize her with my dance moves. Oh, yeah... I went out there on the floor and started shoppin' with her. And she didn't even resist. In fact, I think she actually enjoyed it. But I wasn't satisfied yet. I wanted to really win her over so I decided to push the envelope.

I backed up a little bit and started doing the Robot. I was doing it so well in fact, that everyone moved away from me, clearly giving me more room to tear up the floor. People kept yelling, "Go, white boy! Go, white boy!" and that really got me going. I wanted to show that girl that I could please a crowd, so I started busting out the Roger Rabbit. That got the crowd howling for me. As a finishing touch, I decided to do a backspin. I knocked some lady over while doing it, but she was OK. I on the other hand, ripped my shirt. And you'll never guess what happened next.

The beautiful woman I originally danced with saw my ripped clothing and started chanting, "Take it off! Take it off!" So I did. Who am I to ruin a good thing? I took off the shirt and wailed my belt over my head (Some feeble people passed out at this point. I guess they couldn't take it.). And to finish my show I took off my pants, exposing my Scooby Doo Underoos. And boy did people dig the Underoos. Everyone was hollering and cheering for me to take those off too, but I have some pride, you know.

Then suddenly the lights came on, letting us all know that the night was over. Everyone left the building still recovering from my magnificent performance, and I decided to wait behind for the woman I saw at the start of the night. But she never showed. She left with everyone else... with my clothes. I had to go home in the freezing cold in my undies... talk about shrinkage.

So now you see why I'm not ready for the school year yet. My vacation was so fun and entertaining that I have no desire to do any schoolwork. But wait! I can enjoy myself up here like I did back home. I can do it all again... at Klub Kai!

Gary Mendese is a Collegian columnist.

Let us know how we're doing! Send in a letter to the editor!

About pound cake

In life there are very few things that make the vast majority of people happy. Our country and world are so diverse that finding something nearly everyone enjoys is next to impossible. When I really thought about it the only things I could think of that made everyone happy were love, flip flops dessert, free liquor, sunshine and The Real World Hawaii (Gosh Darn, Tek is the man.). I decided that in order to write an informative column about these implements of universal happiness I would go to their sources and find out a little more about them.

Sunshine comes directly from the sun so not much research was needed there. Free liquor comes from one of three things. The first is you are a hot girl and guys think that the best way into your pants is free liquor. The next is that you have generous people around you who have enough money to give out liquor. The third way to get free liquor is by stealing it. Up to this point, my research had taken about three minutes and I only had thirteen lines for my column. This is when I decided to research the world of desserts. Hopefully you passed sixth grade spelling and you know that I am talking about the sweet treats that are preceded by dinner and not the hot sandy wastelands such as the Sahara.

I wanted to know what made the dessert industry tick. I had no idea where this investigation would lead me. I decided to start my investigation with one of the classics of the dessert industry, something that had been around for a while, food that had satisfied citizens' sugary cravings for generations. I chose the classic dessert of pound cake.

I ventured off to the World Pound Cake Headquarters located in Tarmaston, Georgia. I called ahead so they were expecting me. When I got there I was shocked as to what I found surrounding the headquarters. There was an eighteen-foot high barbed wire fence, the main entrance were guards armed with assault rifles. Inside the compound there were towers with snipers on top of them. It looked more like a maximum-security prison than a pound cake factory.

Once I introduced myself to the checkpoint guard he searched me to make sure I wasn't wired and then brought me to the 88th floor. Here I waited for the leaders of the pound cake coalition to explain everything about their industry and their product. The door opened and three gigantic men dressed in army fatigues entered the room. The one in front proceeded to take something from his pocket and smack me in the face with it. A few minutes later when I regained consciousness the men were standing above me laughing at my misfortune. The one who hit me said, "See, boy, that's what pound cake is for; poundin'. It ain't for eatin' with strawberries and cream like so many of you pansy, sweet toothed, lollipop lickin', kitty pettin', holiday celebratin' wastes of space think. You see, boy, we here at the pound cake headquarters of the world have an agenda and a message to get out about our product. With your help and our new 'in your face ad campaign' we plan to let the entire world know that pound cake ain't no nice dessert like that candy ass angel food cake."

The man saying all of this to me was the leader of The Pound Cake Coalition for a More Violent Reputation. His name was Hans Manshvitz. The first thing he conveyed to me was that pound cake was not originally a dessert. It was actually used as an explosive in WWI. The reason it was called pound cake was because exactly one pound of it could obliterate a 50,000 square foot area. The reason they had to stop using it was because a lot of the soldiers found out how good it tasted. When nobody was looking they would nibble at the explosives. Then foolishly they would smoke a cigarette and explode all over the place. The main problem was that they would explode all over their platoon members. In doing this, the red would ruin everyone's camouflage, thereby making them more susceptible to enemy fire.

Manshvitz wants people who eat pound cake to be tough and to know the history of the dessert. It is no longer made with the alloy that makes it explosive so if you are a smoker, don't worry. The way they are going to let everyone know the truth of their product is through a grassroots "in your face ad campaign". The Pound Cake Coalition for a More Violent Reputation is going to send its members throughout the world ready to beat the hell out of everyone with their trusty batches of pound cake. If you want to join them you must be prepared to beat even the Teebeest of old ladies with your pound cake. If you don't want to join them, then you best be ready to spend a lot of time in the hospital recovering from all of your pound cake wounds.

I fear that this country may become one that is ruled by maniacs wielding pound cake. There is no way I can think to stop them. They are irrational maniacs who will not take no for an answer. Hans Manshvitz and his army forced me to write this column as part of their evil propaganda. Hostess was even forced into a multibillion-dollar merger that will produce the most powerful dessert conglomerate ever. Now not only do they have a vast army, but they have the funding of Hostess, which is arguably the most powerful dessert company ever.

All I can say is that you can't resist these people. This huge company is going to rule our world we are all going to become pound cake bruised lemmings. At least we'll be alive though. For more information go to: http://Pound Cake Violence/Hostess.com.

Dan Viens is a Collegian columnist.

These are the things I need to do

It was one of those moments that a sober thinking could bring me a month of such things. It began when the three of us, Deb, Allison and I, were driving on Rt. 2 on our way to orientation just days after our high school graduation in June of 1996. Little did I know important how the words spoken on that afternoon would mean to me three and a half years later.

As it turns out for the three of us, we will not be spending any additional time beyond four years in Amherst. Our undergraduate degrees will officially be mailed sometime after our May 21, 2000 graduation from here. I'd like to think, well done.

Clearly I've started to become a little sentimental about my dwindling days here at UMass. Trying to recall the long days of orientation does not come as easy as I would like, but I do think I enjoyed the car ride up the best. I'll never have another 50-minute class or endure a gigantic lecture. I forget about the days when Antonio's was in Southwest and a trip into town was an event. That's OK, the newness was bound to evaporate eventually.

On that fateful orientation ride up listening to REM's "It's the end of the world as we know it," we drummed up all the silly fascinations we had about college girls. Who would be our first boyfriends? Where would our off-campus apartments be? Passing through town, we spotted the bars that we would eventually frequent at a time when the Bahama Beach Club Thursday Foam Night was the closest thing we had come to nightlife.

Of course, I think we have done well for ourselves. We have Antonio's down pat and one end of the Bike Trail engraved in our memories, even if we had to hold hands at times to pull one another along while blading.

Kathleen Ralls

Deb and I have pared down to our bathing suits and tasted the waters and mysterious undercurrents of Puffer's Pond. Maybe a couple times to many after some local kids told us that everybody pees in it and they usually have to close it in the summer. Thankfully, we have put that past us.

I've completed that stupid labyrinth by that terrible cinder "track" encircling the football stadium, and finally attended a couple of games inside. Beyond eating at Antonio's (and their spicy chicken and/or blue cheese... you choose), there are Judie's popovers (which I have made meals out of), and Bueno. I finally took a movie in at Northampton's Academy of Music in December.

Yet, there are still plenty of goals, aside from academic and social, we must reach before we graduate. There are the little places and idioms you hear about and sum them up as plans for some other day. Those days are becoming more evident in each passing month.

The first one is to visit the Emily Dickinson House on Main St. I don't know what I'm waiting for since I have to pass it traveling to and from home. In fact, I don't quite know what to expect, but I'm sure it will suffice my bottomless "Great writers of Amherst" hunger.

And those beautiful buildings on the Amherst College campus, you know, the yellow ones? I spent a brief segment of one night in the round and the hill but I would like to see the insides of that Bassett Planetarium just to see if the sign is legit. I guess it's equivalent to taking advantage of an opportunity to see the insides of that beautiful house on your street.

Backtracking to food again, I have to get to Veracruzana just once. I think I can walk there from my house in about a minute and a half. Frankly, there's really no excuse.

Sylvan. The living area yet undiscovered as far as I'm concerned. The hill never looked appealing, nor did I have any friends who lived there. Now I have less of a reason to go than ever, but I will at some point for the sake of a New Year's resolution of completing goals.

There are certain scenes while on campus that are truly unexpected. One is of people hanging outside of Bartlett, puffing on cigarettes before and after class. Another is of the darkness of a Thompson lecture hall or the view of Garber Field coming out of the tunnel in Southwest. We've all complained about how this campus could use a makeover, but there are still certain frames we'd all like to keep forever. The two I must want are of the towers at night from the big field by the Mullins Center, and a faraway visual of the entire campus, also at night.

Some of my male friends were apparently talking about our upcoming departure from the Pioneer Valley. One of their suggestions needs to be said for good measure. What is it? You guess it, a trip to Anthony's. If it's fine food in a predominantly male-friendly atmosphere they're looking for, that's fine with me.

Silly as it may sound, Deb and I have a one last little bet going concerning the Five Colleges. Though I never participated in the program, we both want to get t-shirts from all of them. Deb is ahead by a three to two margin with a secret Smith addition, but I think I might be able to pull away in end.

While I wish I had the original list to go by, I think the others will agree that this will suffice. I hope you make a point to do the same.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Mentschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alumed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

C'MON!!

why don't you write for ed-op?

Structural changes

Mike Margaroli, sophomore SOM major, takes cover from the oppressive wind chill.

Expert gives opinion on Microsoft

By James V. Grimaldi
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – A Harvard law professor whose role in the Microsoft antitrust trial has been opposed by the software behemoth took the company's side Tuesday on one of its pivotal legal defenses. But it was the only piece of good news for Microsoft in a document that otherwise blasted the company's arguments.

In a friend-of-the-court brief requested by U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, Lawrence Lessig said that under a broad reading of an earlier appellate court ruling Microsoft did not violate federal antitrust laws when it bundled its Internet browser and its Windows operating system.

But then Lessig went to great lengths in his 45-page brief to discredit that very appellate ruling and he urged Jackson to set it aside when he issues his final decision in the case.

Lessig forcefully sided with the U.S. Justice Department and 19 states, which contend that the bundling of the two products broke federal antitrust law because it was part of a scheme to sabotage competitors. Lessig suggested the appeals court was "improperly reaching [for] issues that were not before the court and adopting a controversial interpretation of federal law that was not even briefed by the parties."

Jackson already has issued factual findings, arguing that Microsoft maintains a monopoly that has harmed consumers, stifled innovation and stymied competition. He has not yet ruled on whether the company broke antitrust law.

Settlement talks between the two sides are underway in Chicago as the parties also proceed with the court case.

The friend-of-the-court, or "amicus," brief was one of three filed Tuesday and four filed this week in preparation for the Feb. 22 final arguments on the question of whether Microsoft broke the law. In addition to Lessig, three more amicus briefs were filed on behalf of Microsoft, the Justice Department and the 19 states.

The legal arguments are more than academic. They presage an important legal debate over "technological tying" that many scholars believe is headed for the U.S. Court of Appeals and the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Court of Appeals ruling in June 1998 said the inclusion of an Internet browser in the Windows operating system was legal because there were plausible benefits to the consumer from putting the two products together. In a ruling early in the case, Jackson said he would apply the tenets of the appellate ruling.

But Tuesday, the importance of that earlier appellate ruling became a matter of heated debate. Microsoft, in a separate filing, soundly disagreed with the government, and accused it of ignoring the precedent. The company suggested it would be reckless for the judge to follow the thinking of the government lawyers.

The government lawyers, Microsoft argued, "urge this court to throw caution to the wind and hold that Windows 98 constitutes a per se unlawful tying arrangement. If this court were to do so, it would be the first court in the history of American law to sustain a technological tying claim."

Mark Murray, spokesman for Microsoft, criticized Lessig for rejecting the appellate ruling: "An appeals court ruling is not an option."

But the Justice Department praised Lessig's brief.

"We're pleased that Professor Lessig agrees with the (antitrust) division that the Court of Appeals consent decree decision should not be construed as setting forth the standard to be applied under Section 1 of the Sherman Act," said Gina Talamona, a justice spokeswoman. "We're confident that we have established under any fair reading of the law that Microsoft engaged in illegal tying in violation of the Sherman Act."

French unhappy with shortened workweek

By Charles Trueheart and Anne Swardson
The Washington Post

PARIS – After more than two years of debate and proposals, France shrank its official workweek to 35 hours this week – and discovered that nobody likes it.

A proposed law lowering allowable work hours from 39 to 35 hours helped to propel the Socialist Party and its allies to power in 1997. The plan was supposed to create a million jobs and make a dent in France's chronic double-digit unemployment rate.

But Prime Minister Lionel Iospin, ostensibly a socialist but keenly attuned to the requirements of today's capitalism, turned the reduction of the workweek into something else. His proposals required employers to negotiate the new workweek with employees in ways that ended up benefiting companies more than their workers.

Weekly hours could be annualized over a year, for instance, so that companies could schedule people to work longer in times of higher demand.

The result has been widespread dissatisfaction from workers who liked the old ways. In the case of transit workers, for instance, the new agreement allows for shifts as long as 14 hours. Employees at the Stade de France, Paris's big sports stadium, recently were told they would receive no raises for three years because of the cost of implementing their 35-hour workweek.

This week – the law went into effect Tuesday for employers of more than 20 people – was kicked off with a series of strikes around France that were among the broadest to hit the country in several years.

■ napster

continued from page 3

taking up half of Brown's bandwidth, as much as all its other applications combined.

"Keeping Napster would've resulted in us having to buy more bandwidth sooner," he said. "We would have had to buy about five more megabits. At $1,200 a megabit per month, that would have resulted in $6,000 a month and $72,000 a year. And that's a fairly conservative estimate."

Though minor security concerns about Napster existed, they did not factor into the University's decision to close off access to the program.

"We weren't looking that far ahead," Loftus said. "It was basically a bandwidth problem."

Security problems handled by CIS in the past include what Loftus called "denial of service attacks," which occur when a computer is bombarded with unnecessary files in order to slow it down, with the only purpose of preventing someone from using their service.

In a statement issued last week, CIS admonished students against finding or using work-arounds to their filters in order to access Napster. Doing so, the statement says, is in violation of Brown's computing policy and may result in disciplinary action and the loss of networking privileges.

Liz Brook, Napster's vice president for marketing said in a phone interview that the company is aware of the problem.

"We know the problem it over bandwidth," she said. "We've talked to many universities, and all have said that Napster is interfering with the educational use of the network. We understand they only have so much bandwidth allocated."

Due to the current controversy surrounding the legality of MP3s, possession of MP3 files – should they ever be declared illegal – could leave students in violation of Brown's policy.

February '00

ARTS ONCAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Wednesday, February 2
MUSIC: Regina Carter, jazz violinist and her quintet. 8pm in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511

Thursday, February 3
MUSIC: Shanghai Kunju Opera Theatre Performance by Lifeng's multi-celebrated opera troupe. 8pm in Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-2511

VIDEO: Faces Weekly Video Series 12p.m. at Student Union Gallery. 545-2792 Every Thursday

Friday, February 4
CULTURAL NIGHT: Tet-Vietnamese New Year's Celebration. 6 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. 545-3600

MUSIC: Almost Speechless & Mighty Purple Poetry slam/open reader. 8p.m. in Newman. 545-3520

XTHEATER: "The Birth Order Project" By Cindy Lehigh. Theater 3. $ 545-3520

Saturday, February 5
THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable in Improvisational Theater. 8p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 163, 165, and 917. $ 545-3520

Tuesday, February 8
eMUSIC: Opus One Sting Ensemble Charles Neider, director. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511

XLECTURE: Gallery talk in conjunction with exhibition "Reflections of Feminism." Limited. A.R. Gallery in Herter. 545-3670

Wednesday, February 9
XLECTURE: Scott Prior, painter. 7:30p.m. in University Gallery. 545-3670

Thursday, February 10
MUSIC: ALL THAT JAZZ mixed dance poetry, and food. 7p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-2429

Friday, February 11
MUSIC: Traveling Matt 7p.m. in the Skyhouse Campus Center. $ 545-3216

Saturday, February 12
MUSIC: The Sheila Divine. Mary's First 7p.m. in the Skyhouse Campus Center. $ 545-3216

Monday, February 14
THEATER: The Vagina Monologues Educational, theatrical presentation. 4:30 and 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium. 545-3600

Tuesday, February 15
eMUSIC: Faculty Recital John Manning, tuba; Nikki Stout, piano. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2227

Wednesday, February 16
eMUSIC: Drummers of West Africa 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. $ 545-2511

Thursday, February 17
eMUSIC: Graduate Jazz Composers Concert Jazz Collective ensemble with names program. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511

THEATER/LECTURE: GLBT Lunch Lecture Series: Civil Sex: Investigating the Whole Person Speaker: Brian Freeman, playwright, director and performance artist. 12:30p.m. in Campus Center 803. $ 545-6814

THEATER: Civil Sex examination of the challenges faced by black gay Americans during the past 50 years. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511 through 2/18

Tuesday, February 22
eMUSIC: Faculty Recital Jon Gallagher, tenor; Laurie Rhodes, piano. Dorothy Ehrlich, reader. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2227

LECTURE: Filmmaker Kevin Smith, writer of films "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy." $ 545-0046

Thursday, February 24
CAFE/MUSIC: Black History Month Cafe with singer/songwriter Angie Head. 10p.m. in Campus Center Auditorium. Free. 545-6814

eX MUSIC: 2000 Magic Triangle Jazz Series: Hasidic New Wave Featuring Frank London, trumpet; Greg Wall, saxophones; David Fiuczynski, guitar; Fima Ephron, bass; Aaron Alexander, drums. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511

eTHEATER: "The Bacchae of Euripides: A Communion Rite" adapted by Wole Soyinka. 8p.m. in the Rand Theater. Through 2/27. $ 545-3401

XFILM: "But Then She's Betty Carter" 7p.m. in Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-0670

Friday, February 25
MUSIC: Percy Hill & Rane 7p.m. in the Skyhouse Campus Center. $ 545-3216

Saturday, February 26
CULTURAL NIGHT: Dominican Independence Night. 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-3600

Sunday, February 27
eMUSIC: Breezy Music Wind Ensemble and Symphonic Band. Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr., director. Works by Robert Grainger, Hindemith and Piston. 3p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2227

Tuesday, February 29
eTHEATER: Salzburg Marionette Theater. 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. 545-2511

2/00

UMass Arts Council, 101 Hasbrouck Lab, 545-0202

Exhibits

XAUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
151 New Africa House. 545-5177
M-W-F 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Redemption Songs
Feb. 8-Mar. 8
Reception: Feb. 8, 5-7p.m

XHAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area. 545-0680
M-TH 12-6, SU 2-5 pm
Extreme Nature
by Daniel Ladd
Feb. 28

XHERTER ART GALLERY
128A Herter Hall. 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm, SA-SU 1-4 pm
Peter Hujar Photographs
Through Feb. 14
2nd Generation: "Honeymoon." and "Providence"
By Danica Phelps
Through Feb. 14

XSTUDENT UNION VISUAL & PERFORMING ART SPACE
Student Union Ballroom. 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm SA-SU 1-4 pm
A Photo Journalist Looks at Tibet
Through Feb. 11
Midway Show
Works by graduate students
Feb. 14-Mar. 3

XUNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center. 545-3670
TU-F 11-4:30 pm SA-SU 2-5 pm
Light on the Familiar: Paintings by Scott Prior
Through Mar. 17
Different Strokes: Selections from the Permanent Collection
Through Mar. 17

XWHEELER GALLERY
Central Residential Area. 545-0680
M-TH 1-6 pm, SU 2-5 pm
Evidence of Feminism: Exhibit A by Harriet Diamond, Linda Batchelar, Elizabeth Solley Caine, Rachel Folsom, Mira Cantor, Lydia Nettler
Feb. 1-25
Reception: Feb. 5, 2-5p.m.

Free College Students. Unlimited discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events.

Sponsored in part by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

Graduating this Spring?
Here's something to think about!
Occupational Therapy.

Graduate School Programs

- BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION (MBA)
- CHEMISTRY
- COMPUTER SCIENCE & INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
- EDUCATION
- HEALTH SYSTEMS MANAGEMENT
- NURSING (MSN)
- OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY (MSOT)
- PHYSICAL THERAPY (MSPT)
- RELIGIOUS STUDIES

Occupational Therapy is the hottest, fastest growing field in healthcare. And Sacred Heart University has Connecticut's only entry level Master of Science Degree Program in Occupational Therapy.

All you need is your baccalaureate degree in a field other than Occupational Therapy to qualify. Here are some good reasons to consider this program:

- Our curriculum is unique and problem-based; we designed it to deliver maximum "real world" Occupational Therapy experience.
- The director of our program is a nationally recognized Occupational Therapy expert.
- According to the American Occupational Therapy Association (AOTA), a Masters in Occupational Therapy will soon be a minimal requirement for all OT education programs.

GET ALL THE DETAILS AT A SPECIAL INFORMATION SESSION

On Wednesday, February 9, from 6:00 pm to 7:30 pm. in the Boardroom of the William H. Pitt Center at our main campus, 5151 Park Avenue, Fairfield, Connecticut, off Merritt Parkway at exit 47.

For information call (203) 365-7619

SACRED HEART UNIVERSITY
5151 Park Avenue, Fairfield, CT 06432-1000 • Website: www.sacredheart.edu • E-mail: gradstudies@sacredheart.edu

Fox to axe Party of Five and unnamed Simpsons' character to die

Tube Notes with Ryan Benharris

Another top-notch series that once ruled the small screen was given the final bullet this week. Representatives from FOX announced that "Party of Five," a one time Golden Globe award winner for Best Television Series (Drama) will be taken off the air at the end of the season. The series has had a relatively short run, compared to other drama series like "Beverly Hills 90210" (which will also be canceled at the end of the year) or even the recently canceled "Melrose Place." It seems as though "Party of Five" is the last series in FOX's desire to bring the twenty-something drama trend to a new level. Although the network did produce hits such as "90210" and "Melrose Place," FOX also took its share of hits as well. "Significant Others," and "The Heights" were only two of their many failed attempts at continuing the hype that surrounded the genre.

However, "Party of Five" seemed to turn into something different. It was certainly something that extended beyond the twenty-something drama series and touched people of all ages. A few years ago, when Charlie (Matthew Fox) was diagnosed with Hodgkin's disease, the show's ratings were through the roof. It seemed as though every single age group was hooked on the hypnotic effect that "Party of Five" created. Every Thursday morning, after a new episode, I remember going to my 9:30 a.m. class and hearing people talk about how awesome the previous night's episode was. This season, however, FOX decided to move the series to Tuesday nights, after it had spent the past four years on Wednesdays. Due to the move in time slots, a lack of advertising, and the fact that FOX was banking on the wretched Jennifer Love Hewitt spin-off, "Time of Your Life," to be the next "Party of Five," it seems like viewers have completely forgotten that "Party of Five" exists. Because of this, "Party of Five" has had its worst ratings ever.

Earning its worst ratings ever is particularly significant to "Party of Five," more than it would be to any other show. During the first season of "Party of Five," the ratings were so terrible, that FOX actually announced that it was canceling the show at the end of a seven-week pilot run. However, when the series surprisingly was nominated for the Golden Globe award, FOX executives changed their mind. Then, when the biggest surprise in the history of the FOX network came, and "Party of Five" won the Golden Globe, ratings were no longer a problem, and the birth of the Salinger family's reign on television drama had begun.

What's next in store for the people of "Party of Five" is uncertain. The only thing that we do know is that it will not be difficult for any of the cast members to say good-bye. Neve Campbell has been expressing her desire to end the series for quite some time, and when it was announced that the series had been canceled, she publicly announced her relief. I'm sure that it won't be difficult for any of the members of "Party of Five" to get jobs, because four out of the five family members have already had major roles in motion pictures. The only exception is Jacob Smith, who plays Owen Salinger, who is much too young to have starred in anything yet. The supporting cast, which was highlighted by Jennifer Love Hewitt before she left, also has a promising career in films. Although, let's hope that there are no more spin-offs. "Party of Five" will certainly be missed, and the rest of the season will be an interesting I'm sure. I highly recommend catching as much of the last few weeks as you can, Tuesday nights at 9:00 p.m.

Well, from the exit of "Party of Five," to the entrance of FOX's expansion in the future, come the tentative new plans for David E. Kelly. TV Guide is reporting that Kelly has an idea in the works for a series entitled "The Faculty," in which Kelly would be taking an attempt to rip off "Dawson's Creek," and go back to high school in New England. There's no word on what Kelly's exact plans are, but we can only hope that they include Katie Holmes, and not Calista Flockhart!

Finally, I've saved the best story for last. About one month ago, I heard the shocking news about "The Simpsons." No, they're not canceling the series, which is otherwise known as "my reason for living," but they're doing something quite drastic. During the February sweeps period, which begins on February 6th, one character on "The Simpsons" is going to be killed off. The news came, not only as a surprise to "Simpson" fans (which is practically everyone that I've ever met), but also as the beginning of mass curiosity, that will surely end with everyone talking about it. In the past few weeks, not only have about one hundred people come up to me and said, "hey TV guy, I bet I know something that you don't know," (by the way, none of them were even close, because I knew the news about two weeks before the first person brought it up), but they also felt the need to tell me which character they though was going to get the boot. So I figured that I'd repeat to you what were some of the most popular opinions of the public.

It seems that when death comes rolling around, old is in. The most common, and apparently obvious choice, is either Mr. Burns, or Grampa Simpson. However, it seems to me like these two are way to central characters to be killed off.

Other wacky things that I've heard, involve Chief Wiggum being killed a bullet in the line of duty, and Bart killing Sideshow Bob.

So, what's my opinion on the whole thing? I'm kind of upset at the whole ordeal. The fact is that they really don't need to kill anyone off on "The Simpsons" to get ratings, because t ratings are high enough. I le absolutely every character on th show, and one less would simply b bad thing. The most logical idea tha could think of, was an official dea for Phil Hartman's characters Tr McClure and Lionel Hutz. This wou make the most sense. However, wh ever they choose to do, I will b watching with the rest of the world.

Once heralded, "Party of Five" and the Salinger family has been cancele by Fox

RISE

TEXTBOOKS ONLINE. SAVE UP TO 40%.
FREE SHIPPING!*
FOR $10 OFF ENTER CODE #650913 AT PURCHASE CHECKOUT

bigwords.com

* Free shipping for a limited time on orders over $35.
 $10 offer expires February 15, 2000.

© 2000 BIGWORDS, Inc.

5-College Area Peace Corps Week:
February 7 - 11
Contact the 5-College Area Office
(413) 545-2105 www.peacecorps.gov

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES

The Sound and Soul of Senegal

THE DRUMMERS OF WEST AFRICA

One of the world's most renowned percussion orchestras in the world, this is the group from which Kodo takes its inspiration. Led by the living legend Doudou N'Diaye Rose, this 35-member ensemble from Dakar, Senegal, delivers a pulsating, unforgettable experience.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 7:30 PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by The River 95.3

Puppet Masters

Salzburg Marionette Theatre presents
The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni

$5 $9

Enchanting, magical, masterful Mozart as you've never seen it before! The Salzburg Marionettes are among the oldest and most famous puppet troupes in the world with skill and artistry that sets standards and charms audiences of all ages.
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, THE MAGIC FLUTE, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Join us for a Talkback with the artists after this performance.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, DON GIOVANNI, 7:30PM, BOWKER
Sponsored by Florence Savings Bank and WRNX 100.9 FM

I'll Take Manasse

Jon Manasse, clarinet, and the Manhattan String Quartet

Jon Manasse's brilliant tone and expression is matched note for note by the Manhattan String Quartet's flawless musicality. Join them for Brahms's Quintet in B Minor and Mozart's Quintet in A Major.
FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 8:00PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM
Thomas F. Parker Young Artist Community Residency. Sponsored by WGBY-TV 57

Run Away to the Circus

Oops! The Big Apple Circus

It's no accident—when classical theater runs headlong into an uproarious circus the result is one of the most hilarious, magical, exciting nights you'll spend at the Fine Arts Center. The Big Apple's famous clowns, acrobats, unicyclists, aerialists, and the smartest birds on record are just part of the fun. Bring the whole family!
TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7 & 8, 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by Fleet Bank, WRNX 100.9 FM, and FamilyFun Magazine

We bring the arts home
PLEASE NOTE NEW TIME: WEEKNIGHT PERFORMANCES BEGIN AT 7:30PM.
www.umass.edu/fac/spotlight
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS for tickets

FIVE CONCERT SERIES TICKETS ONLY

The Fine Arts Center
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Quiz Show Mania

Baby I got your money...

You know that jerk [illegible]s, "Hot enough for you?" [illegible] it's [illegible] Well that moron has found [illegible]thing [illegible]

One morning during [illegible] was sitting at the Subaru dealership, waiting [illegible] to tell me that there was nothing wrong with [illegible] and there was something wrong with me, and [illegible]orld famous, "Regis and Kathy Lee" was on [illegible]sion. I don't think I'd watched it in a long time, but I wasn't about to change the channel, because the three old women sitting next to me kept laughing at everything Regis and Joyce (Regis' wife was filling in for Kathy Lee) had to say. They were also making remarks about how they'd love to get a piece of the Philbin booty. The Philbin's began to tell as story that made me smile. Regis said that he and his wife were driving on the highway the previous Saturday, and his car broke [illegible]. Regis began to explain that he had about as much knowledge of what to do with a broken car as Michael Jackson has with a naked woman. So he called AAA. While standing next to his broken down car, some woman drove up to him yelling "Regis, Regis- is that you?" Reluctantly, Regis said yes, but he had no idea who the woman was and was more concerned about when his car was going to be fixed. The woman says, "what's wrong with your car?" Which Regis replied to "I don't know." What the woman responded to that with was the most ignorant and rude phrase ever, while at the same time defining popular culture for the beginning of the year 2000, and you know exactly what she said. Everyone say it with me. "Is that your final answer?" Regis' new life long goal is to hunt her down for sport.

Ryan Benharris

Well, if you're a person that is [illegible]ortunate lack of hearing "Is that your final answer?" then you must have been living under a rock for the past ten tunes as rock of the quiz show craze that has taken the nation by storm. Before going into depth, I'll break down the entire list of the shows that on the air, and what network broadcasts them.

The most popular game show is "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" which is hosted by Regis Philbin on ABC. Next is "Greed" on FOX, hosted by Chuck Woolery. NBC has "21" with Maury Povich" and CBS has "Winning Lines" with Dick Clark.

So the first question on everyone's mind is, not "Is that your final answer?" Is, why are the quiz shows so popular? Well, I have a couple of possibilities for an answer to that question.

Firstly, if you've turned network television on recently, you'll realize that it's pure unadulterated drep. Much like the NBA after Michael Jordan left, network television is searching deeply for something to replace the fact that super ratings stealers of the

Turn to MILLION page 10

Americans out to break the bank

Adam Martignetti

Thanks to the success of ABC's hit ratings-grabber, "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?," the quiz show has finally returned to primetime television. The last TV game-show era, [illegible] and drama being the other two) is marked by [illegible] spread [illegible] finds the infa[illegible] game show scandals of the late 1950s, when NBC's Garrick-sponsored "Twenty One" and "The $64,000 Question" ruled the airwaves.

After "Millionaire" dominated the November sweeps, giving ABC its first sweeps win in over ten years, [illegible] sprung up faster than you can ask, "Is that your final answer?"

First was first on the scene with "Greed," which upped the prize money to $2 million. Then came CBS' half hour "Winning Lines" and [illegible] left to play catch-up. NBC decided to bring back "Twenty One." Thereby, every major network had a quiz show in its prime time schedule, all of them trying to capitalize on ABC's success with "Millionaire."

It's easy to see why quiz shows are captivating a nation's interest now, much as they did almost forty years ago. In the few moments of indecision, when the contestant [illegible] right answer and the [illegible] [illegible] woman, and then back again, there's perhaps more drama and tension than any hospital soap, or lawyer show could ever provide. The audience realizes that this is a real person under real pressure and they can identify with that. In a manner of speaking, quiz shows embody the American dream. By using nothing more than their intelligence, and maybe a few lifelines, ordinary people become millionaires over night. It is Horatio Alger packed into one hour and hosted by Regis Philbin, Dick Clark, Maury Povich, or Chuck Woolery.

The quiz show is also TV's most interactive format, allowing the audience to play along with the contestants. With these newer formats, and dumbed down questions, this principles holds even truer. The audience sits back confounded when a contestant does not know that Little Jack Horner pulled a plum out of his pie or that two members of

Turn to BANK page 8

Trax serves up BSB rip-offs, Aparo Pop, Overtones, and a side of Bacon Brothers

FIRST LOVE
First Love
JWP USA

This CD came to me in a clear jewel case with no backing or booklet, just the disc. And who is staring at me from the front of the CD? Yes, its First Love, just one of the many Backstreet Boys clone bands. Except this new offering managed to make it to the Collegian to be scrutinized by yours truly, one who listens to Iron Maiden on a regular basis and has more than a casual interest in the new Dio release. But I vowed to give it a try since I believed maybe, if this CD were played at the exact same time someone was playing their UFO and Mandy Moore CDs, the gates to Hell would finally open. Unfortunately they didn't, but I was left with First Love anyway, and there is only one thing to say: hell yes.

By hell yes I mean hell yes. I mean these guys aren't your average BSB rip-off, they are the genuine articles. These guys don't wear ridiculous clothes and contain members who have goatees and ponytails for the sake of a trend; these guys live the boy band lifestyle. As DMX once said, "you think this is a game?" Oh no, First Love doesn't think it's a game. They have a trio of consecutive songs entitled "Freaky," "Perfect Boyfriend," and "Yippiee Yi Yo" to let you know that they mean business. Do they write their own songs? I'm not sure, but if lines like "Girl be my lover/let me discover/your nasty limits" aren't from the heart, I don't know what are. After the heart-wrenching honesty of the final song "Smile," the listener knows this have been on a musical tour de force. Watch out music lovers, because First Love is here to stay. A+ Grade for people with no sense of humor. F (Michael Delano)

SARAH CRACKNELL
Lipslide
Instinct Records

As if the world wasn't already suffering at the hands of too many lifeless pop acts, Sarah Cracknell, the lead singer for British pop outfit Saint Etienne, decided to record a solo album. The results could easily pass for a collection of Spice Girls outtakes (not a compliment).

The only single from the album, "Ammoree," climbed to number 39 on the British charts, apparently on the strength of its bland, uninspired synthesizers and its cliched "new woman" lyrical thread. The synthesizers take a break on track three, "Ready or Not," which makes use of a pleasant piano/orchestra arrangement; it doesn't take long for the song to stagnate, however, and its four and a half minute running time feels like three minutes too many. Other songs on the album approach being listenable, such as "Coastal Town," a peppy, if entirely typical, dance number, and Sarah's vocal talent saves most of the album from being downright unbearable. If it's bubbly pop you're looking for, however, your money would be much better spent elsewhere. C-
(David Troupes)

THE BACON BROTHERS
Getting There
Helena Music Company

Thank god someone gave Kevin Bacon a music contract! I think it was the scene in Wild Things when he stepped out of the shower, penis flapping around an all, that I stopped and thought to myself "this man must be a musical genius!"

Getting There is the second release for Kevin Bacon and his brother Michael (whose name should be. The Other Bacon). The first release was entitled Forosoco, and was described as "an enticing mix of folk, rock, soul and country." If you put aside the hilarious fact that it's Kevin Bacon and his brother attempting to make an album, you come to the realization that it's not that terrible. Getting There isn't something that I'd run out to the store and buy, but it's something that deserves a chance. It's not the same as when Jennifer Love Hewitt (who incidentally was a co-star with Neve Campbell on "Party of Five", who was in Wild Things with Kevin Bacon!), or Shaquille O' Neal (who was in Blue Chips with Nick Nolte, who was in 48 Hours with Eddie Murphy, who was in Bowfinger with Steve Martin, who was in Planes, Trains and Automobiles with Kevin Bacon! You can't beat me at that game) decide that they absolutely need to start singing. This is actually well thought out music, that is mostly written by the Bacon Brothers. Just to add to the ridiculousness of Kevin Bacon making music, you can look at the titles of the songs on the CD, that are highlighted by "Arm Wrestling with Women," "Strung Out," and "Chop Wood." However, if you like folk, country, stuff, then Getting There may be for you. It's not for me though. D
(Ryan Benharris)

ANGIE APARO
"Spaceship"
Arista Records

I've always been a fan of the well-crafted pop song, those songs that are mind-numbingly catchy and completely permeate popular culture for a week or so, and then (hopefully) fly away into the great garbage bin of pop songs in the sky. Lou Bega's "Mambo #5" and Christina Aguilera's "Genie in a Bottle" are two recent examples of pop hits that illustrate the art of a good pop song: tunes that are so masterfully put together that you're not embarrassed to let your mind take a rest for three minutes. And the inevitable trash (BSB, Britney) is almost always balanced out by inexplicably enjoyable music like Eiffel 65's "Blue (Da Ba Dee), which is the flavor of the week as I write this. Soon, I predict, we'll be able to add a new song to the list: Angie Aparo's "Spaceship."

If you're like me, after hearing it once you'll be hooked. It's hard to describe, but it just has that memorable quality. A strong bass line and sparse drumming create an effect of distortion on Aparo's voice during the verses, which lead to a terrific chorus sung at a much higher level. The lyrics are very silly, almost "Blue"-like in their boggling simplicity. "There was a big parade/Everybody got laid/And they burned all the books and the Chevrolets" should give you some idea of what to expect. But when Aparo announces at the end of the song that it's "just a song to pay the rent," it is hard not to love it. This song certainly deserves heavy radio play, and it may be getting it for all I know (I don't listen much at school). But if it's not, I recommend requesting it, and keep an eye out for Aparo's full-length album, The American, which is being released in early March. Good stuff. A-
(Michael Delano)

FRANKIE MACHINE
One
Mammoth Records

Heavy guitars, a punk-influenced pop mentality, a pounding rhythm section, and a severe shortage of originality characterize L.A. rockers Frankie Machine. Their debut album explodes with musical and vocal energy, but someone should tell them that the role of the Foo Fighters has already been filled by the Foo Fighters. Comparisons can also be drawn to punk rock acts such as Green Day and the Offspring, but Frankie Machine lacks the inane, slacker charm of those bands. The songs overflow with attempts at hooks and catchy melodies, but so much of their material sounds like the recycled castoffs of other bands that have come and gone. If you're a fan of gritty punk/pop that won't make you think too much, One might be worth a listen. Most of us, however, will manage fine without it. C+
(David Troupes)

WBCN: NAKED 2000
Wicked Disc
WBCN

It seems like you can't be a genuine radio station anymore, unless you release an album that you've created yourself. The most recent addition to the radio CDs at the music store, is WBCN: Naked 2000 (A Collection of Live and Unreleased Tracks). Filled with live performances from some of the biggest artists of the past few years, WBCN does a very good job at putting together a mix of different sounds with something for everyone.

Many of the performances come from local venues, and some were recorded at national events. Some of the highlights of the album, are Everlast's "What It's Like" from the Worcester Palladium, "What's My Age Again" by Blink 182, that was recorded at the WBCN River Rave, and an absolutely awesome version of "Body Rock" by one of the most talented artists on the planet, Moby. Other featured artists are 311, Kid Rock, and Lenny Kravitz. Korn and many more. Although many of these songs are severely overplayed on the radio, and even the thought of hearing them again can be a turn off, most of them are quite good. The biggest relief on the CD, is the fact that everything is uncensored. This past summer, WAAF released Bootleg: Live on Air, with a slightly better selection than the WBCN disc, but half of the songs were

Turn to TRAX, page 9

TRAX ON / TRAX OFF

■ bank

continued from page 7

N'Sync appeared on "The Mickey Mouse Club," and they are awed when another easily names Richard Nixon as the president who appeared on "Laugh- In" more than once.

In this spirit of interaction, I have decided to brake down the quiz shows into categories, and remember all questions are multiple choice.

Easiest show to get On: "Greed." First, there is a five out of six shot once you're on stage. Second, the "closest to the mark" method seems extraordinarily easy, especially considering the intelligence level of the show's contestants (likely Fox viewers).

Hardest show to get On: "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire." You have to be fast and deadly accurate. Even then, somebody else could beat you. The only redeeming value is you get an entire show's length to compete.

Dumbest way to get on: "Twenty One." The audience votes? On what basis, nobody knows. Lame.

Most money available to win: 2 million dollars on "Greed," though nobody has made it beyond the $500,000 level to date.

Most money won: one million dollars on "Millionaire," which has happened twice.

Best set design: CBS' "Winning Lines." There's no dumb music and that tower of people is irresistible, especially for Dick "$25,000 Pyramid" Clark.

Best host: Regis Philbman. Love him or not, Regis is the engine, which makes "Millionaire" run smoothly. The slightly impish host knows when to let his contestants talk out the answers, when to offer solace, and when to eat up one of those valuable "lifelines."

Worst host: Maury Povich. Whoever considered putting Maury on primetime TV has already lost their job. Trust me. It's bad when the host is unsure of how the show is supposed to work; it's worse when they squander any drama that an already poor show can muster. Hint Maury: saying "Another 7 point question." gives away the supposedly unknown scores.

Best "second chance": "Millionaire's" Phone a friend. It's hard to believe that these segments are not pre-taped, but it did lead to one of the most memorable moments in recent TV history: "Dad, I'm about to win a million dollars."

Worst "second chance": "Twenty One's" Bring a friend out. This was a complete corruption of the original, a complete rip-off of "Millionaire," and just plain dumb.

Best gimmick: "Winning Lines." The ability for the audience to win at home is absolutely ingenious and hooked me immediately. The first two times I watched, I missed it by only one number.

Worst gimmick: "Twenty One." After two rounds, a contestant can choose to end the game. The drama is supposed to arise because neither knows the other's score. However, when you realize that you've got 19 points already, there's not much to debate.

Easiest questions: "Winning Lines." You know all the answers are numbers, most of them resulting from ridiculously simplistic arithmetic in the first round. If it's possible, the second round is easier, as the numbers become limited to a set of seven.

Hardest questions: "Greed." The questions become extremely difficult after the $200,000 level, especially since two or more wrong answers are available. The ordeal becomes trickier if the team captain is lousy.

Easiest to win the big one: "Millionaire." It's happened twice more on this show than any of the others. The three lifelines are usually quite helpful and sometimes the questions ease, even as the stakes rise. Although it's quite easy to win a single game of "Twenty One," to get to the million plateau is unlikely.

Hardest to win the big one: "Greed." As said above, no team has ever gone beyond $500,000. I don't think anyone will ever play for $2 million, let alone win it. A strong second to "Winning Lines." After two incredibly easy rounds, the last requires memorizing 50 numbers and answers, then calling out both the number and the answer. If you've ever watched, you know just how frustrating this can be.

Arts Loves You

University Liquors
6 University Drive
Accross the street from Rafter's
549-5758
Open 9AM-11PM Mon-Sat

Bud & Bud Light 30 Packs $16.99 (12 Superbowl Commercials, 1 had to work!)

Sam Adam's & Pete's Micros 6 Packs $5.99

Jack Daniels 750ml $16.99

Heineken & Amstel 12 Packs $10.99

Rolling Rock 12 Packs $7.89
Jack Daniels Coolers 4 Packs $3.99
Admit it, you want some.
Danzante Pinot Grigio 750ml $7.99
Beringers White Zinfandel 750ml $5.99

Coming Soon: www.universityliquors.com

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.
For information on 2 or 3 year scholarships, call The UMASS Army ROTC 545-2321

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take

Welcome Back Students!

Interested in a Co-op or Internship for the Summer?

Come to a Welcome Session! There's one Every Day!

Mondays		Wednesdays
1:30 - 2:30 p.m.	305 Holdsworth	3 - 4 p.m.	327 ELAB
2 - 3 p.m.	107 SOM Building
3 -4 p.m.	103 South College	Thursdays
		3 - 4 p.m.	103 South College
Tuesdays
3 -4 p.m.	TBA	Fridays
4 - 5 p.m.	106 SOM Building	1:30 - 2:30 p.m.	114 Stockbridge

the
Co-op and Summer Job Fair is coming soon!

Thursday February 17th
10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
in the Campus Center Auditorium

Check out these HOT opportunities!

General Electric: Summer co-op, seeking ACCT, ECON, FIN and MGMT majors
EMC2: Summer and 6 month co-op, seeking EE, COMP and CSE majors
Volpe National Transportation Center: Summer and 6 month co-op, seeking CE, COMP, CSE and MECH majors
Reebok: 6 month co-op, seeking COMM majors
Boston Globe: Summer and 6 month co-op, seeking BUS, COMM, JOUR and ENG majors
US Fish and Wildlife Service: Summer co-op, seeking BIOL, ENBIO, ENV SCI, NRST and WILD majors
JC Penney: Summer co-op, seeking APPL, MGMT and MKTG majors

Contact the Field Experience Coordinator in YOUR college!

College of Food and Natural Resources
110A Stockbridge Hall
577-0421

Colleges of Education, Nursing and Public Health
416 Arnold House
577-0427

College of Engineering
126A Marston Hall
577-0419

College of Arts and Humanities
264 Bartlett Hall
545-6266

Isenberge School of Management
208C SOM Building
577-0418

College of Social and Behavioral Sciences
102A South College
545-6267

College of Natural Sciences and Math
122 Mather Building
577-0428

Campus Career Network
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in

AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Excellent Salary & Benefit Package After Graduation
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From

- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!
FRESHMAN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@acad.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE R.O.T.C.

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE •
JOIN US!

■ trax

(continued from page 7

edited. I'm sorry, but if I pay $18.00 for a CD, I don't expect to be told that I'm not allowed to hear Monster Magnet say the dreaded "f-word." The WBCN disc is at least worth a listen, especially if you're a fan of the radio station. B-
-Ryan Buharriss

RUSTIC OVERTONES
Volume Up
Arista Records

Maine's Rustic Overtones have built a strong fan base through its extensive touring schedule (sometimes numbering into 200 dates a year), and its three previous full-length releases as well as one EP entitled My Dirt. Their sound can be likened to that of a jam band, but the music contains so many elements and instruments that one could easily claim the band transcends categorization. Organs, saxophones, and trombones all work their way into the music, in addition to the guitars, drum and bass. They recently released the promo-only EP Volume Up, which is unavailable for sale but I have managed to get my grubby paws on it, much to the chagrin of Rustic Overtones fans everywhere. The disc contains six tracks, featuring three full songs, a short instrumental, and two songs presented as demos.

The proceedings kick off with "Gas On Skin," an enjoyable opener with a catchy, dominant bass line that provides the backbone for the track. The song also provides a good introduction to the thrusty, distinctive vocals of Dave Gutter. "Smoke" marks a little change of pace in that it contains DJ scratches and samples from Beatmasters Hex. His work contributes greatly to the track though, combined with the distorted vocals and overall heavy qualities of the song that proves the title is quite descriptive of the sound. "Beekeeper" is a short instrumental that segues into "Man Without A Mouth," which is easily the highlight of the disc. Everything comes together on this song; outstanding vocals, an almost techno-like looping sound in the background, which is complimented perfectly by the drums and horns, and background vocals provided by David Bowie. The song culminates with an intense ending that has Gutter screaming in a style reminiscent of Steven Tyler. The two demos, "Heavy Set" and "No More Noyes," both show great promise; the first having a laid-back reggae sound and feel to it, and the second a slow closer that leaves you wanting more. An exciting EP, and one that makes you want to see these songs performed live, which fans will be able to when the Overtones come to Massachusetts next month for a few dates. A-
(Michael Delano)

JUCIFER
Calling All Cars on the Vegas Strip
Capricorn Records

Jucifer, a two person act hailing from Athens, Georgia, is comprised of singer/guitarist G. Amber Valentine and drummer G. Edgar Livengood, and their album, Calling All Cars on the Vegas Strip, is a disorganized stew of Veruca Salt-esque grrrl rock and amateurish production values. Most songs on the album are overlong treks through messy guitars and thin, mousy vocals. Every now and then Valentine will let loose a primal scream guaranteed to shatter wine glasses and send you reaching for the "skip disc" button, but most of the time she's content to sound like every other female vocalist in indie-rock land. The drums are intrusively loud and cymbal-happy. A few tracks, such as "Nickel to Roll," include Portished-style turntable work and some attempt at lead guitar work, but those efforts fail to gel into anything resembling a worthwhile song. Listening to this record is a chore I wouldn't wish on anyone. D
(David Troupes)

■ million

(continued from page 7

late 80's to mid 90's are no longer around. Shows like "Seinfeld," "The Nanny," "Cheers," "Growing Pains," and "Roseanne," simply don't even compute. Before "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" came about, the biggest shows on TV were "ER," "Frasier," and "The Practice." Right there I can see a problem with these three top shows. Two of them ("ER" and "The Practice") are on at 10:00pm, and the third is a comedy that widely relies on sex jokes. The three top series on television on not family friendly oriented. The quiz show can be just immediately developed something that can be watched by the entire family with no questions asked.

This, I believe is not the reason that the quiz shows are so huge. The main concept of people watching the quiz shows are not younger viewers, they are older viewers who find Regis appealing and have a fairly high intelligence level. So here's another reason. Clearly people are watching these shows for such a great number. People are either sucked into thinking it's something that you need a brain to watch, and if you're a viewer, than you're somehow smarter than the average television watcher. I mean, are there honestly people who watch Jeopardy on a regular basis, who won't consistently try to tell you that they're smarter, because they get more questions right? The reason that I say that the quiz shows are tricking the viewers into believing this is because nothing could be further from the truth. ABC would like nothing more than to have some idiot watching "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?," who absolutely needs to watch the next episode, to see if some guy that they've never met before wins a million dollars. That's called more ratings.

The final reason that could explain the craze is the one that I think hits it right on the head. The title of the FOX quiz show hits it right on the head. People are greedy! "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?" claims to give anyone who wants a chance to be on the show a shot, by letting them call in, and play over the phone. The best show that reaps off of people's greed is CBS' "Winning Lines." During the first half of the show, all of the answers are numbers, and if the seven winning numbers spell out a viewers phone number in any order, then that viewer can call in and win money. The bottom line is that people watch all of these shows, with the thought in the back of their head that someday, they'll be "the next millionaire."

The one thing that I've learned after watching all of these quiz shows is that they are fun. They don't really annoy me that much, and the concept is really cool. Of course, next year, the game show hype will be dead, and biggest craze will be "Survivor," you can tell all your friends that you heard it here first.

So the next time you run into that jerk who always asks if it's hot enough for you, just keep your mouth shut. Because you know that no matter how you respond to his question, he's going to say, "Is that... "Ugh. I'm not even going to bother.

Santitos crosses film's borders

By Lorenza Munoz
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD - If studio filmmaking is a risky venture at best, then making and selling Spanish-language movies for U.S. Latinos is a giant leap into the unknown. But over the weekend one company aggressively jumped into the void of distributing Spanish-language films with a Mexican romantic comedy, Santitos.

The Los Angeles-based Latin Universe launched an unprecedented nine-state, 155-theater release of the $1.5-million movie on Friday.

Latin Universe backed the release with a $1-million Spanish-only marketing campaign - a significant amount of money for Spanish media publicity. They have, for the most part, completely bypassed the English-language media and the art-house market.

Whether their gambit is foolhardy or visionary remains to be seen. In its first weekend the film took in about $130,000 - about $840 per screen - which seems a pittance by Hollywood standards, but it is a figure the company was expecting for its first weekend.

Ted Perkins, president of Latin Universe, acknowledges it is on a very steep learning curve, essentially exploring uncharted waters.

"It is going to take some time to build this audience," he said. "It's a gradual process."

The producers also acknowledge that success may be found through trial and error.

"This is virgin territory," said Lemore Syvan, of Goldheart Pictures, co-producers of the film. "We knew (the first weekend) was not going to be a big splash weekend. We are relying on solid word of mouth."

Perkins said the film has received such positive reviews from mainstream English-language critics that the company hopes to distribute the movie in some art-house theaters within the next three weeks.

Many observers are questioning the wisdom of launching such a small movie, with stars relatively unknown to U.S. Latinos on such a wide basis. Others are questioning whether enough publicity was garnered for the film and why the company decided to open it on Super Bowl weekend - a traditionally slow period at the box office.

But whatever the results, Latin Universe is making history. The film, which has English subtitles, is reminiscent of the 1992 hit "Like Water for Chocolate," with its magical realism and sweet, romantic narratives. The movie, based on the best-selling book Esperanza's Box of Saints, by Maria Amparo Escandon, won the Sundance Film Festival Latin American prize last year.

Latin Universe's approach to selling Santitos is what convinced Mexican director Alejandro Springall to sign with the distribution company instead of other U.S. studios that courted him.

"When I sat with the traditional distributors, I asked them to give me a real strategy for the Hispanic market," said Springall. "But they always saw it as a foreign-language movie for the art-house market. I have always thought that Spanish is not a foreign language in this country. I wanted it to be treated as a mainstream picture for the Hispanics here."

The Santitos marketing campaign has smartly used cultural touchstones – such as religion, sex, gossip and wrestling – to capture people's attention. They are marketing Santitos as a romantic comedy featuring a medallesome priest who watches soap operas, a wrestler masked as the Angel of Justice, a sex-crazed demon and a beautiful woman who drives them all crazy. The film stars Mexican actors Dolores Heredia, Demian Bichir and Alberto Estrella, all well-known actors and actresses in Mexico, but perhaps not as familiar to U.S Latinos.

Detailed knowledge on the habits, trends and tastes of the Spanish-speaking moviegoing audience is limited. Whereas mainstream studios have audience trends and habits down to a science, even knowing how many ounces of popcorn an average moviegoer will eat, the Latino market has been one big confounding question mark.

Visit our Jam Central Department. Guitars, amps, drumsets, sheet music and more MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Now online at www.MediaPlay.com
Sale ends February 12, 2000.
Product selection and pricing may vary online.
Cassettes available on select titles.
802010 1534

University of Massachusetts
Something Every Friday
Presents

Friday, February 4, 2000 The FREE movie
Campus Center Auditorium, "Three Kings" will 8pm, FREE follow the performance

■ notes

(continued from page 16

first shot, it was his first collegiate goal. Niewantowski could not have picked a better time to score his first goal: it was the game-winner against Providence College as well as the first HE win of the season for the Minutemen.

Speaking of wins versus the Friars, UMass swept Providence in all three matchups this season. The sweep was the third such for UMass since it joined the league in the 1995-96 campaign.

Another highlight was the 0-0 tie that the Maroon and White skated to with Merrimack College two weeks ago. That kick was only the third time in HE history that a game has ended scoreless.

The Minutemen have a big weekend ahead of them, as they take on HE foes Boston University and UMass-Lowell. BU travels to the Mullins Center on Friday night carrying first place in HE in their bags, while the River Hawks visit Amherst on Sunday for a matchup that will determine the Governors Cup as well as vital HE positioning.

UMass dropped two heartbreakers to the Terriers earlier in the season, while the Maroon and White post a 0-1-1 record versus Lowell.

Nick Stephens (above) and Jay Shaw have both been a part of some exciting Hockey East matchups for the Maroon and White this year.

Violence sacks NFL for a loss

League's image faces fourth and long

David Rose

These days, the players of the National Football League are taking the term "personal foul" to a whole new level, and unfortunately also to an all-time low.

These are multi-million dollar a year players who throw it all away because they can't control themselves.

For years, the NFL has had its problems with substance abuse. That has not changed. But never before have players in the NFL seen legal trouble the likes of this year.

The talk about the NFL should be about the most exciting finish in Super Bowl history. Instead, the talk is about murders and drugs. It is a sad affair.

We all know about the Drug Policy (or lack thereof) that is enforced by the NFL. Although suspensions are nice, they are acting more like a slap on the wrist instead of sending messages to its players.

Players such as Leon Lett are getting second and third opportunities to make millions of dollars after their own stupidity almost threw it all away. It is a shame that players can be suspended time after time after time for disobeying the NFL Drug Policy and still continue to get the chance to play.

If it was a regular job, you know what a person who did this time and time again is called. FIRED. However, if you are 6-6, 320 pounds and can sack the quarterback, you get all the mulligans you want.

Players such as Bam Morris who messed up and spent time in jail because he just did not listen after he was warned by a judge still got chance after chance to make millions. Although he retired, he still can't stay away from trouble as he and former Kansas City Chiefs teammate Tamarick Vanover have both been linked to a drug investigation that involves several states. Vanover, one of the most dangerous punt returners in the NFL, is being led down the path towards the Black Hole that comes with the territory of choosing crime over a promising career.

Also in the past couple of months, Indianapolis Colts defensive back Steve Muhammad was charged with beating his wife just days before she died. Although Muhammad had nothing to do with his wife's death, he still faces domestic battery charges from the beating.

Another couple of incidents involved two troubled Miami Dolphins.

Demitrius Underwood was trouble from the day he got drafted. He refused to play for the Minnesota Vikings, then the Dolphins signed him, but his life was in a tale spin. His life almost ended during the season when he stabbed himself in the neck. A troubled soul's life, and he wanted to end it all.

Also, troubled running back Cecil Collins was arrested as part of a burglary. It seems he did his best running of the year trying to run from officers.

After all of this, Lett, Vanover, Muhammad, Underwood, Collins and Morris seem like choirboys compared to two players who have rocked the NFL in recent weeks with their parts in senseless, hideous acts of violence.

The NFL in the past couple of years has gone through players charged with abuse, drug possession charges, weapons possession charges, etc. But the NFL never had to deal with one of its players being charged with murder.

In 1997, Rae Carruth was a first round draft pick of the Carolina Panthers. Carruth had a bright future in 1999 and was about to have a baby with his girlfriend, Cherica Adams. However, by the time the year was over, Adams had been killed and Carruth was in the trunk of a car in Tennessee running from the law. Now, instead of looking forward to Sundays on the gridiron, Carruth will hope to be looking forward to being alive on any more Sundays; he will go to trial on murder charges in which prosecutors will seek the death penalty.

The NFL suffered a black eye with this incident. Carruth was the first active player ever charged with murder, and it is sad because the real victim in this entire case will be the child. When this baby grows up, it will not know its mother or father, and that is the shame of it all.

The NFL had one murder charge on its mind when, unthinkably, just a month later another shocking development came down the pike after Super Bowl XXXIV.

Ray Lewis was the NFL's leading tackler with the Baltimore Ravens this past year, with 167. He was in Atlanta for Super Bowl XXXIV on Sunday Night. Afterwards, he should have been on his way to Hawaii and the paradise of the Pro Bowl. Instead, he was on his way to a jail cell with no parole and a double-murder charge hanging over his head: two men were stabbed to death on Sunday night after an argument outside of an Atlanta club.

If Lewis was involved, then he and the people he was with did not make themselves any less incriminating by shooting five gun shots out of the window of a black Lincoln Navigator stretch limousine. If convicted, Lewis will either spend life in jail or get the death penalty.

Ray Lewis

I hope for his sake that Lewis is exonerated of these charges and found innocent, but the fact that he is even charged with these crimes leaves a bad taste in the mouth of the NFL.

To be fair to commissioner Paul Tagliabue, he can't be a babysitter for every player in the league. At his press conference on the Friday before the Super Bowl, Tagliabue said, "Can we separate ourselves from society? Of course not. We can't predict what NFL players will do any more than we can predict students shooting other students or workers shooting fellow workers."

He is right. You can't say that you know when someone is going to commit a violent act. If you had the ability to do that, you would be working for the FBI and there would be no crimes in the United States of America.

However, if the recent rash of crimes committed by the league's players does not open up the eyes of the NFL, than nothing ever will.

Likewise, if this does not open up the player's eyes as well as to the dangers of being in the spotlight, than nothing will either.

This once again proves that anybody can commit these heinous acts. Whether you are a man, woman, child, poor and on the streets or rich and famous, anybody can commit these types of crimes.

Famous people just get more attention.

An NFL player can't make a wrong move or it becomes front-page headlines. But there's a major difference between everyday life and committing a crime fit for a savage beast.

David Rose is a Collegian correspondent

Friday February 4th

2nd Game Matinee against UMASS Lowell Sunday 6th

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Miller Lite Bottles $2.25
Michelob + Michelob Light Draft $1.75
Rum + Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES
MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY - SYB Productions DJ's Fooz, Creme, and Uneek
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

S Y B
PRODUCTIONS
Featuring: DJ Fooz, DJ Creme, and DJ Uneek
SYB Productions is now booking for the Spring semester
From formals to house parties to after-hours, SYB does it all
Let SYB bring the club to you with full sound and lighting systems, huge music catalog, custom 25 song request list,
and DJ's that know how to MAKE YOU MOVE!
CALL 537 - 8527
www.sybproductions.com

UMathletics: the game face

"What are you lookin' at, Willis?"

For years it was merely a quote from Different Strokes character Arnold Drummond, played by Gary Coleman.

After years of analyzing the popular television program, we now realize that Arnold's intimidation factor wasn't so much about the attitude as it was about the mean face. So this photo essay is dedicated to the UMass winter athletes with some of the best game faces going.

Make all the kitty-cat jokes you want about Kitwana Rhymer (top left) of the men's hoop team. He's got the game face of a lion. Just ask the members of the Duquesne and Virginia Tech frontcourts. Mildly put, he tore them a new you-know-what.

The late Kerry Von Ench is no longer the Texas Tornado. That distinction belongs to the fiery shooting guard and Lone Star State native of the women's basketball team, Tonia Thomas (bottom left). Don't get on this girl's bad side, or she'll tear through you like a... well, tornado.

She may do her dirty work in the pool, but check out the mug on Sarah Newell (bottom right) of the women's swim team, who, with that look, could make even Mark Spitz wet his pants ... granted he'd be in the pool, so no one would notice.

Plain and simple: Joanie O'Brien's (top right) team comes ready to play. Period. The UMass women's basketball team may not have all the talent in the world, but it plays hard. Any player looking for intensity need not look far. It starts with the coach.

Where's your game face?

-Aaron Saykin

Fizzus Tastus Smilus

(inviting to the touchus)

Experience refreshing Coca-Cola® classic in an ice-cold glass bottle at The University Store, University C-Stores and Newman Center. Offer ends February 12, 2000.

Coca-Cola enjoy

Minutemen

continued from page 16

Unfortunately, while Temple's arrival fell perfectly into the Minutemen's schedule, Texas' visit couldn't have come at a worse time for either team. The 13th-ranked Longhorns crashed to the ground in an 85-59 loss to Oklahoma Monday night, a Sooner team UT defeated three weeks prior. Texas trampled UMass 76-65 down in Austin last season en route to the Big 12 crown.

Texas is as big, if not bigger, than the Owls, whose big men pummeled the Minutemen underneath to the tune of a 48-20 advantage. It didn't stop there and the box score said nothing of exactly how dominant Temple was. The swooping Owls scooped up nearly every loose ball and UMass was limited to zero second-chance points, collecting just four offensive rebounds. Rhymer and Chris Kirkland, the team's two leading board men, grabbed a grand total of four rebounds.

Rhymer is the likely candidate to draw Player of the Year candidate Chris Mihm, who averages 18.2 points and 10.3 rebounds as a junior for the Longhorns. Mihm, a lock for the lottery if he foregoes his senior season to turn pro, went for 19 and 11 in Texas' 7-point victory over then-No. 1 Michigan State in the Puerto Rico Classic. The Minutemen remember him keenly from the time the Texas big man registered 20 points and 17 rebounds in last year's Longhorn victory. Not only is Mihm a threat indoors but also overseas, stepping out beyond the arc to knock down 6 of 11 attempts from deep.

It's the third leg of the marathon and the Minutemen need to prove they still have some kick in them. If UMass is shooting for an at-large bid, running the table is about its only option. At 11-9, a nine-win run into the conference tourney would include a non-conference gem over Texas as well as clean-up jobs at Temple and at St. Bonaventure. Throw in momentum and a solid showing in the A-10 Tournament, and UMass has 20-plus and there's no doubt the Minutemen are dancing. But without a win against the nation's elite to their credit, the Minutemen might have to squeeze in the back door by way of the conference showdown in Philly. While Florida State and Villanova are quality triumphs, the selection committee will have no problem overlooking the Minutemen in favor of a team that's proven it has a shot at more than just an NCAA Tournament vacation.

Brett Mauser is a Collegian columnist.

Transfer Shannon Crooks has brought more than scoring to the UMass lineup: he's also one of the team's best on-the-ball defenders.

NHL

continued from page 16

After all, if Yashin did come back and only scored 65 points instead of 120, could fans then sue him?

If the Expos didn't trade away all of their talent, could they still be sued? If the Vancouver Grizzlies ever did win games, could they be sued for the heart attacks such victories would cause?

The problem with giving people the right to sue, even in this situation where a lawsuit makes sense, sets up a system ripe to be taken advantage of. While players should be responsible for meeting their contractual obligations, and players shouldn't be a bunch of crying, whining babies, giving fans the right to sue because players aren't playing isn't fair.

The logic behind the judge's decision is that fans are buying into a product and if that product doesn't satisfy, fans can then sue. But fans are buying into a performance, what is now almost a spectacle, and while they should be allowed to expect a certain level of performance, they are watching humans perform, and humans can't be held to the same standards as objects or things or products.

Even if those humans are obnoxious ones who are so selfish as to maintain that their $3.6 million contracts per year aren't enough.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Cancer won't slow NHL coach Neilson

By Helene Elliott
Los Angeles Times

PHILADELPHIA – It began during training camp, with a lethargic feeling and a cough he couldn't shake. While visiting Anaheim and Los Angeles in November, Flyer Coach Roger Neilson made light of his obvious fatigue and limited a few days in the sun would restore his energy and make everything right again.

If only it were that simple. If only sunshine and relaxation could cure the multiple myeloma – bone marrow cancer – that has attacked his body.

"For two months I was kind of under the weather. It was a weird thing," Neilson said. "That was all part of it. That was the start of the immune-system breakdown."

As he spoke, a rectangular pouch holding a pump and powerful cancer-fighting drugs rested against his left hip, feeding a chemical cocktail through a tube threaded into his chest. He was early in his third cycle of chemotherapy and was to be tethered to that pouch for 96 hours, ending Thursday. After that, he will take as many as 25 pills a day for 17 more days. Some days he's tired enough to nap, but other days he needs only four hours sleep. He has not missed a practice or game since getting his diagnosis Dec. 9.

"There's almost been no change in him. There's been none in his work habits," Flyer General Manager Bob Clarke said. "He's got that strong faith. And I think for a bright man, and he is a bright man, he's also got a very simple life. His life is hockey. To me, other than seeing he's getting chemo with a pump and stuff like that, you'd never notice anything's different. He takes steroids when he's on the pump, so he's fired up some days like he's had a little too much coffee.

"He talks about the cancer much like any other subject. He's not afraid or worried or anything. At least if he is he's not showing it."

Nor is Neilson, 63, showing any of the awful side effects of chemotherapy, such as hair loss. "Does he get me covered with all kinds of pills," said Neilson, who has joked about wearing goofy wigs every day if he loses his gray-brown curls. "It's like a walk in the park."

More like a race to stay ahead of an insidious foe and make the most of every moment he has. How many moments, no one can know.

Multiple myeloma strikes about 15,000 people a year and causes about 10,000 deaths annually. Two years ago it killed Neilson's sister, Joan, his only living relative, but doctors told him there's no genetic link. Her cancer was more advanced, and doctors at Hahnemann University Hospital in Philadelphia have told him he probably will live at least five years and maybe as many as 15. Childless and never married, Neilson has always been fit and active and still rides his well-worn mountain bike to the Flyers' practice complex.

"If anything he's been more diligent. I see a strength in his work ethic a little more," goalie John Vanbiesbrouck said. "Not the fact that he's on the ice longer, but there's just more emphasis put on things and he's trying to get our team built up for the playoffs and get us back to where we can challenge the Devils. He's got a lot of endurance, which is really amazing."

In early March Neilson will undergo a stem cell bone marrow transplant, in which his marrow will be removed, cleansed and returned to his body. Recovery will take about six weeks, mostly in isolation to guard against infection, and he will miss the first round of the playoffs.

But first, he will coach the Flyers against the Mighty Ducks Thursday night at the First Union Center, and Sunday he will assist Maple Leaf Coach Pat Quinn in coaching the North American team at the NHL All-Star game at Toronto. He can't stop. Won't stop. If he does, the cancer might gain on him.

"If you're sitting at home thinking about it, that could be tough. I'm here and I've got videos to watch and there's always things to do," he said. "I've added an hour a day doing my mail, and there's all this All-Star stuff coming up. I work hard anyway with the Buckley camps, the runs for coaches and players. There's never a quiet moment and I think that's probably the best thing. I talked to (champion cyclist) Lance Armstrong and he said 'Keep busy.'"

Whipple

continued from page 16

tus. The previous year, Kerry Taylor was an All-American at that spot.

Whipple again sought out the services of two prospects that will likely make the transition easier. Sean Young, a 6-foot-5 tower from Nashua High School in New Hampshire (the same school that produced UMass' starting middle linebacker and 1999 Buck Buchanan Award finalist Kole Ayi) and Eugene Sigmund, a sophomore from Valley Forge Junior College, were added to the roster.

"Young will be a guy that we redshirt." Whipple said about the future of the right end position. "Sigmund is a guy that played at Valley Forge. He weighs 255 pounds and can do all the things that we ask for. We saw the tape and he played against college competition. The guy's a little more mature, and we think he's going to be really good. We'd like to redshirt Sean Young, who, physically, is as good as any guy we've had."

With returning tailback Marcel Shipp primed to challenge for the NCAA Division I-AA career rushing record next season and four starters back on the offensive line for the 2000 season, the coaching staff turned primarily to defense when continuing their offseason search.

While 1999's starting cornerback, Jerard White, takes part in the NFL combines in preparation for the professional draft, the Minutemen have solidified their defensive backfield, which intercepted 27 passes and held opposing offenses to a mere 160.9 yards in the air per game last season.

Whipple and his staff lured defensive back Rob Williams away from Division I Auburn University to help out on pass coverage.

"Rob has the potential to continue the long line of outstanding defensive backs at UMass," defensive coordinator Don Brown said. "He has all the skills necessary to be an outstanding player in the Atlantic 10."

At linebacker, where 1999's outside starters Matt Dawson and Dan Healey have both finished their collegiate careers, the Minutemen will receive the services of three newcomers: Leron Arele, from Glen Rock High School in New Jersey, and Bryan Buckley, from Central Bucks West High School in Pennsylvania, are high school stars that will join Virginia Military Institute transfer Ian Dyche to bolster the linebacking corps. That position already boasts Ayi and impressive youngsters Cores Potter, who had four sacks and two picks last year, and redshirt freshman Jeremy Cain.

What's Left Sale

Final Winter Markdowns
50-75% off
Clothes, Shoes & Accessories

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

EVEN THE GROUNDHOG WILL COME OUT FOR THE SPECIALS!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink and Drive

Everyday pricing
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, BUD ICE, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, AMBER ROCK, COORS LIGHT, COORS $39.99 +DEP.
1/2 KEGS NATURAL, NATURAL ICE, $34.99 +DEP.
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING STEEL RAIL, PORTER, TRADITIONAL, I.P.A. $82.99 +DEP.

LITE & LITE ICE 30 PACK $16.49 +DEP.
COORS EXTRA GOLD 30 PACK $10.99 +DEP.
CORONA & CORONA LIGHT $18.49 +DEP.
TSING TAO 4 PK. BOTTLES $5.99 +DEP.
HARPOON 12 PK. BOTTLE $9.99 +DEP.
ROLLING ROCK 12 PACK $9.99 +DEP.

WINES OF THE MONTH
CARTA VIEJA $4.99
LIVINGSTON CELLARS $6.99
CITRA WINES $5.99
FOXHORN WINES $6.49
BLACKSTONE MERLOT $8.99
MARTINI & ROSSI ASTI SPUMANTE $8.49

POLAND SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
BURNETT'S GIN $11.99
FLEISCHMANN'S PREFERRED $11.99
BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99
THE GLENLIVET SINGLE MALT SCOTCH $23.99
CAROLAN'S IRISH CREAM $7.99

Discounts Available on Cases of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 2/3/00 THRU WEDS. 2/9/00
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring "Miller Lite" $16.49 30/PK
Loon Pale Ale "While they Last" New Hampshire "Micro" $9.99
MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE OR "GROLSCH LAGER" $4.99 6/PK
"Pabst Blue Ribbon" $9.49 cse bots.
"Sutter Home" Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc Concha y Toro "All Flavors" (Everyday Pricing) $6.99 1.5 Liter $8.99 1.5 liter
Captain Morgan $18.99 1.75 Liter
Absolut Vodka $14.99 Full Liter
Vodka 80° EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 Lt
Check Out RUSSELL'S In Door Specials
• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 12:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
FEB. 23-26 ANTHONY'S FAVORITE 65HHH NIKI KNOCKERS
VALENTINES SHOW!!
SUNDAY FEB. 13TH "THE CENTERFOLDS" ALL-MALE REVUE
DOORS OPEN 7PM
BUY TIX NOW - SAVE $$!
18+ SEATING
Now Recruiting Attractive Entertainers to Join Our Team! NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY Call Scott Today at 413-533-8880
500 New Ludlow Rd. - South Hadley, MA
CLUBline 413/532-3621
HOTline 413/538-6969
Visit Us At — www.anthonys.net

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTDNES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons aat www.cantones.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000. Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

1 Bedroom apartment for rent. Amherst Center location. $530/month Available 2/1. 253-4463.

AUTO FOR SALE

'88 Honda Accord for sale. Good condition. Low mileage. $2000 o/bo. Call 253-9195.

1989 Honda Accord LXI Green 4 dr sdn. 181,000 miles. $2300.00. Call 323-4323.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPAIGN JOBS with the Sierra Club. Full-time and part-time. $300-400/wk. Call Casey 256-6434.

New Students Program. Public Relations Jobs. Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Office for tour guides, student admissions reps, and summer orientation counselors. Deadline is Feb. 11, 2000.

EMPLOYMENT

Cool Candy Company on bus route in Amherst seeks outgoing phone sales reps. You can work around your classes with our flexible schedule: choose one of two daily shifts(four hours each), minimum of three shifts per week. Shifts are 10am-2pm or 1pm-5pm. Earn up to $10 an hour with base salary plus commission. Requires some sales experience but personality is most important. Don't miss this great opportunity-call Beth right now to set up an interview! 1-888-556-5599.

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Camp Poyntelle seeks counselors for co-ed Northeast PA, overnight Jewish Federation camp-3hrs fromNYC-General, Sports, Drama, H2O & Arts. 1-800-973-3866 summers@poyntelle.com or www.poyntelle.com

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Two paid internships available. Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots activism and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a spring internship position (with stipend) for you. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Like to play? Need money? The Pelham after-school program needs responsible and reliable assistants, who love kids. Tues and Thurs 3 to 5:30 pm. Contact Lennie Ware 253-5944 or leave message 253-3595.

Earn $530 weekly distributing phone cards. No experience necessary. full or part-time. Call 1-800-572-3361.

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous RY, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus fundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Foor and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Computer desk for sale. 1yr old. Perfect condition. $150/neg. Call Mandi 256-4915.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

Don't think sororities are for you? Come and see why we're different. Iota Gamma Upsilon is holding open rush Sun 2/6, Mon 2/7, Tues 2/8 @ 6pm. 406 North Pleasant St, white house across from Hillel. For more info please call Danielle 253-7573.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bedroom house 10 minutes from Amherst center. Available NOW. $300/month. 256-2384.

Upstairs bedroom in Puffton. $333?month inc. Inc. heat and hot water. On bus route. Needed ASAP call (413) 348-3393.

1 bedroom in 2 Bedroom apartment. Looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker. 3/4 mile from campus. Effective Immediately! Call Alyssa 253-4275.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 or 2 people to sublet master bedroom in 3 bedroom, Mill Valley apts. Call Maura 256-6777.

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

STEREO EQUIPMENT

BUY/SELL/TRADE. Large selection, used/ reconditioned components/speakers. Great prices. Satisfaction guaranteed. PA/DJ equipment too. A/V Exchange 253-5312.

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $229 rt. Europe $169 ow. Other worldwide destinations cheap. ONLY TERRORISTS GET YOU THERE CHEAPER! Book tickets on-line www.airtech.com or 212-219-7000.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call 800-326-2009.

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS ON SPRING BREAK!
CANCUN JAMAICA NASSAU
SPACE IS LIMITED!
32 hrs of FREE DRINKS!
Call now 1-800-293-1443 or visit
StudentCity.com

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Place your ads in The Collegian NOW!! Call us at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

FRIDAY, FEB. 4

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

SATURDAY, FEB. 5

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable will perform an improvisational comedy show at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. Anyone is welcome.

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at 2 and 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed acappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailbox.com for more information.

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 15 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-3660 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesdays nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support — AL-ANON and ALA-TEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions
University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

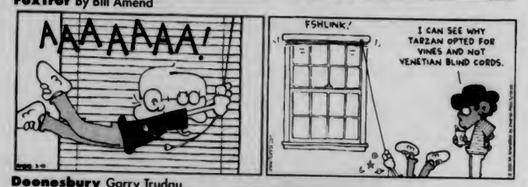
Ustore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 3, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		National Geographic's Africa		Mystery! "Touching Evil" (R		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News (E	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) (R		48 Hours: Mr. Adair		News (E	Late Show (E
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) (R		48 Hours: Mr. Adair		News	Late Show (E
WCVB	5	News (E	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (E	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown (E		News (E	Late Show (E
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends (E	Nanny (E	Popular "Caged" (In Stereo) (E		Charmed "Awakened" (E		News		Friends (E	Nightline (E
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (E	Friends (E	Jesse (E	Frasier (E	Stark Raving	ER "Acby Road" (In Stereo) (E		News	Nanny (E
WTXX	20	Judge Lana	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV (E	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (E				News	Real TV (R) (E	Change-Heart	Tonight Show
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (E	Ent. Tonight	Friends (E	Jesse (E	Frasier (E	Stark Raving	ER "Acby Road" (In Stereo) (E		News	Caroline
WTIC	61	Simpsons (E	Frasier (E	Seinfeld (E	Friends (E	★★ "Dumb & Dumber" (1994, Comedy) Jim Carrey, (In Stereo) (E				News		Friends (E	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News (E	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (E	Friends (E	Jesse (E	Frasier (E	Stark Raving	ER "Acby Road" (In Stereo) (E		News (E	Frasier (E
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		This Old Hse.	Dr's. on Call	Mystery! "Touching Evil" (R		Come Back Jack		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N	Tonight Show
WGGB	40	News (E	ABC News	Seinfeld (E	Frasier (E	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown (E		News (E	Nightline (E
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (E	Judge Judy (E	Seinfeld (E	Frasier (E	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (E				Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne (E	Roseanne (E	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Dirty Harry" (1971, Drama) Clint Eastwood, Harry Guardino,				★★½ "Missing in Action" (1984, Adventure) Chuck Norris
A&E	105	L.A. Law "Pigmalion"		Law & Order "Prisoner of Love"		Biography: Casanova		Investigative Reports (R) (E		Inside Story (R)		Law & Order "Snatched" (E
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline News	hour (E	Crossfire (E	World Today (E		Larry King Live (E		Newsstand (E		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)		★★½ "She Devil" (1989, Comedy) Meryl Streep, Roseanne Barr,		Stein's Money	Turn Ben	Daily Show		Stein's Money
DISC	21	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Lost Jungle		On the Inside: Solve-Impossib		Science Mysteries (R)		Into the Unknown		On the Inside: Solve-Impossib
ESPN	33	Sportscenter (E		College Basketball: Kansas at Iowa (Live)				College Basketball: Cincinnati at North Carolina-Charlotte (Live)				Sportscenter (E
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Debbie Allen		"Chicago Hope "Winging It" (E		"The Courage to Love" (2000, Drama) Vanessa Williams (E				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Celebrity	Music Videos	Say What Kraa TRL (R) (In Stereo)				Celebrity	Celebrity	Sensatises
NICK	55	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (E	Rugrats (E	Thornberrys	Skeeter	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons (E	I Love Lucy	M.T. Moore
SCIFI	59	Sliders (In Stereo) (E		★★ "The Car" (1977, Horror) James Brolin, Kathleen Lloyd (E				★★ "Slug" (1995, Science Fiction) Mario Van Peebles (E				★★ "Slug" (1995) (E
TLC	27	28 Homie Again	Home Again	48 Hours (R)		World's Deadliest Volcanoes		Collapse: Overload		Collapse: Under Pressure		World's Deadliest Volcanoes
TNT	43	In the Heat of the Night (E		ER "Fathers and Sons" (E		Figure Skating: U.S. Japan Open (E						"Coal Miner's Daughter" (1980)
USA	32	Baywatch (In Stereo) (E		JAG (In Stereo) (E		Walker, Texas Ranger (E		★★ "Never Talk to Strangers" (1995) Rebecca De Mornay, (E				Walker, Texas Ranger (E
HBO	30	(5:45) ★★½ "Renaissance Man" (1994) Danny DeVito. "PG-13" (E				Inside the NFL (In Stereo) (E		★★★★ "Platoon" (1986, Drama) Tom Berenger, (In Stereo) (E				Shock Video 6: Turn-On TV 6
MAX	49	★★ "A Perfect Murder" (1998, Suspense) Michael Douglas. "R" (E				★½ "Men of War" (1995) Dolph Lundgren. "R" (E		"I Fled Us" (1999, Suspense) Dolph Lundgren. "R"				★★½ "The Peacekeeper" (1997)
SHOW	55	★★ "The Planet of Junior Brown" (1991) Martin Villafana. "NR" (E				★★★ "My Best Friend's Wedding" (1997) Julia Roberts. "PG-13" (E		"Under Lock and Key" (1995) Wendi Westbrook.				Lina's (R) (E

HSCN 4 Housing Services Cable Network

HSCN Bulletin Board		Gavel to Gavel
CBS/3	Hartford	NBC/22 Springfield
CBS/4	Boston	CNN Headline News
ABC/5	Boston	CNN
PBS/57	Springfield	CNN Fn
HSCN	Movie Ch.	CNN SI
UPN/20	Hartford	TBS
Weather Channel		BET
NBC/30 New Britain		College TV Network
Fox/61	Hartford	Univision
PBS/24	Hartford	Comedy Central
WOCH & HSCN		Cartoon Network
International		TV Land
UMass Academic TV		C-Span
WB/New Haven		ZDTV (Tentative)
Sundance		Bloomberg Financial Network
The Learning Channel		History Channel
UVC-TV19		HSCN Programming
ABC/40 Springfield



Over the Hedge By T. Lewis & Michael

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

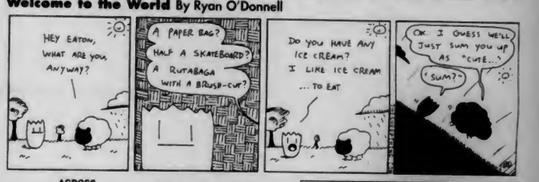
FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury Garry Trudau

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams



Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – When you come up against a stubborn competitor, do your best to soften his or her outlook. Soon you can actually begin to work together.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Someone may be trying to get your attention today, but ultimately for the wrong reasons. Keep your wits about you and your head on straight.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may find yourself missing the way things used to be, and today you'll have a chance to relive a favorite outing with a loved one.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – It's important for you to put your best foot forward at all times today. Try the right one. You cannot afford to be taken for anything less than you really are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You and a friend may realize, quite suddenly, that things are shaping up a little differently between you than you had anticipated. Make out more often.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You won't be able to take advantage of anyone at this time, so instead, let yourself be taken advantage of. You might as well resign yourself to doing things according to a crystal ruler.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone you work with may make you nervous at this time. Are you sure you're not seeing things from an overly-sensitive or emotional point of view? Are you sure it isn't your fault?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You're likely to receive a message today that is difficult at first to decipher. Do your best, and try to read between the lines. Or turn the message right-side up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A friend will be grateful for a favor you granted recently, and he or she is likely to ask for another before the day is out. Grant it freely. But grant only one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Someone is looking out for you, even if you're not looking out for yourself, so you can be sure – almost – to avoid major pitfalls today.

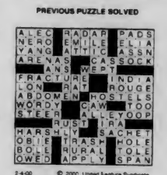
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're likely to be visited, and revisited, by someone who has discovered that he or she can learn a great deal from you at this time. That person is your student. Mold them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You've been thinking a great deal about changing jobs, but today you may realize that you are, after all, in just the right place for now. But tomorrow, change away.

Quote of the Day

"A lot of people on this campus need to be recycled."

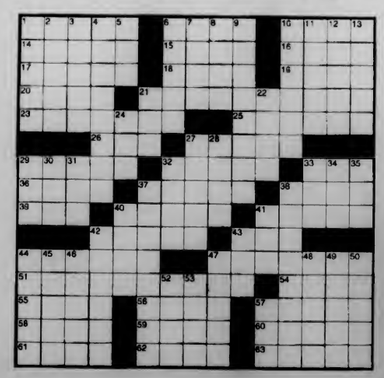
–Gary Mendese



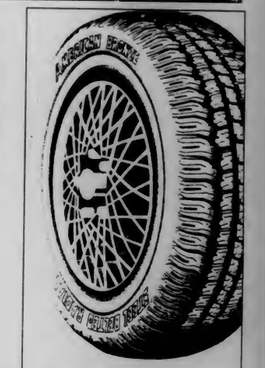
ACROSS

1 Embarrass
6 Gusted
10 — Bird Johnson
14 Gamma follower
15 Verdi opera
16 Sheriff Andy's son
17 Jargon
18 Eye drop
19 Entertainer Irene —
20 Nasty
21 Items on bulletin boards
23 Bell tower
25 Tardiest
26 Curve
27 Similar
29 Rim
32 Selling
33 Dog doc
36 Ms. Brockett
37 Prompting
38 Jest
39 Sixth sense
40 Suet eaters
41 Used oars
42 Specks
43 Sir Head
44 Emerge
47 Nail part
51 Pilgrim's food
54 Throat-clearing sound
55 Jai —
58 Uttered
57 Nap
58 Harness part
59 — Stanley Gardner
60 Watchful
61 Writer Millay
62 Beach material
63 Type of moth

DOWN



1 Monroe's successor
2 Pierre's cap
3 Seaweeds
4 Prehistoric time
5 Bonnet
6 Wash
7 In — of; replacing
8 Dutch cheese
9 Singing sound
10 Find
11 Swiffy
12 Daggers
13 Baker's need
21 RN's specialty
22 Receive
24 "School" start
27 Etching fluids
28 Telescope part
29 Type of neckline
30 Asner and Bradley
31 Split
32 Confident
33 Calm
34 — out: scrape by
35 Actor Danson
37 Oranges and grapefruits
38 Genially
40 Sailor's vessel
41 Decay
42 Saudi city
43 Man
44 Knowing
45 Headed
46 Like Jane?
47 Granted
48 Fledgling's cry
49 Sly looks
50 Unoccupied
52 — away
53 Brickmaker's oven
57 Droop



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-4-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician: Roberto Delgado
Copy Editor: Adam White
Production Supervisor: Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff: Dan McGuinness-Rossi, Jim Gilbert

NHL fans drop their gloves at Yashin holdout

Is it possible for the fans of the Ottawa Senators to get any justice at all? Maybe, but only if a judge and jury decided that they are right.

Never mind the fact that it is possible that long suffering Senator fans will lose their team because it doesn't make enough money. Holdout and whiner extraordinaire Alexei Yashin has been suspended for the season for refusing to play.

Under contract, while he was guaranteed a paycheck of $3.6 million to play this year, Yashin decided that a player of his caliber deserved something more, a contract extension something in the area of $11.5 million a season, or at least $23 million over two seasons. The end result? The man didn't get his money, and rather than suck it up, he sat and continues to sit.

Sam Wilkinson

Fans of the team, which showed so much promise in the last few years, were slightly miffed, as after a great season they'd purchased fairly expensive tickets, at least in part because they hoped to see their star player shoot and score.

But rather than sit and accept the fact that their star player was, in actuality, something of a self-absorbed moron, they did something to better their positions, they sued him for $27.5 million dollars.

Yashin and his agent were miffed that fans, common folk, would have the audacity to sue them, so they went to a Canadian judge to get the kind of fair ruling that an athlete should get: the case would be thrown out and Yashin would post until his demands were met.

The judge was not amused, upholding the lawsuit by pointing out that individuals can sue when an entertainment product is purchased and there is then a loss of enjoyment or dissatisfaction with the product. What the Senators fans are trying to say is that when the purchase tickets, they expect something and that Yashin and his agent are behaving so foolishly is making it impossible for the Senators to meets fans expectations; essentially, Yashin is devaluing tickets with his holdout. Beyond that, the fans are maintaining that Yashin is only holding out so fans will support him and force the Senators into a huge, short-term contract.

In an ideal world, the fans win this lawsuit.

Yashin is devaluing tickets, of that there is no doubt. Without him on the team, the Senators lack a serious scoring threat, and while they are currently towards the top of the standings, the loss of Yashin hurts a team that could use another serious scoring threat after Radek Bonk and Shawn MacEachern. Should fans win the lawsuit, justice will suddenly be available for fans throughout, at least, Canada, and would probably open the door for some similar lawsuits in the United States. After all, what long-suffering fan wouldn't want the opportunity to sue players who cry that $3.6 million dollars, even if they are Canadian dollars, isn't enough. What long-suffering fan wouldn't the opportunity to sue after a horrible season in which players give up halfway through?

The ramifications of such a reality are mind numbing.

Every whining, moaning and complaining athlete would be subject to a lawsuit from unsatisfied fans and theoretically, any team that wasn't doing enough to honor an agreement with a fan as far as an "entertainment package" is concerned would be subject to a lawsuit.

This would be justice for long suffering fans of the Montreal Expos.

This would be justice for fans of the Vancouver Grizzlies.

The fact is that this kind of lawsuit would lead to fan justice in any league, not just the NFL. Fans could sue, or at least attempt to and base their lawsuit on the Canadian decision, when players like Joey Galloway of the Seattle Seahawks and Marshall Faulk of Indianapolis Colts, who were under contract, held out in the attempt to get more money and could have hurt their teams in the process. And then there are players like Kenny Anderson, who, while under contract, was traded and then refused to play for the Vancouver Grizzlies in the NBA.

Because fans could sue, every NBA, MLS, WNBA, MLB, NFL or NBA team would be in the legal crosshairs of fans everywhere.

Unfortunately, it is for that exact reason, despite a deep desire that we all have to see it end otherwise, that the fans will lose the lawsuit. Fans cannot be given the power to sue when a player holds out or doesn't live up to his or her end of the bargain.

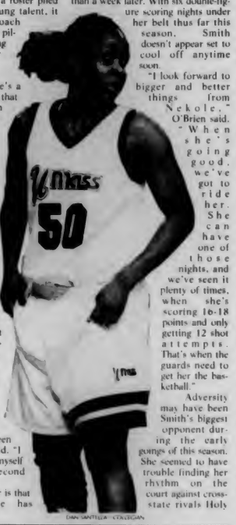
Turn to NHL, page 13

Unstoppable force

Forward Smith anchors Minutewomen

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Heading into this year's basketball campaign, the Massachusetts Minutewomen seemed to have nearly as many questions as answers. With a vast majority of the team's rebounding lost to graduation, and a roster piled high with untested young talent, it appeared as though coach Jamie O'Brien had few pillars to look to in keeping her team in the hunt for postseason glory.



But she had one.

"I don't think there's a player in the conference that can stop Nekole Smith one-on-one," O'Brien said in a preseason press conference. "She'll be one player we'll look for some really big things from this year."

To put it mildly, the 6-foot-2 sophomore forward has gone a long way toward making her coach's words ring true. Heading into Sunday's showdown with conference rival Temple, Smith ranks second on the team in scoring with a 9.4 points-per-game average and has been the catalyst in a number of memorable UMass victories. But most importantly, the Michigan native has provided key floor leadership despite playing less than two full seasons in Maroon and White.

"It seems like I've been here forever," Smith said. "I have to keep reminding myself that this is only my second year."

The fact of the matter is that Smith's inexperience has become a mere footnote to her on-court mastery. After a somewhat rocky start to the '99-'00 campaign, No. 50's game has caught fire since the holiday break: Smith dropped a season-high 20 points on Xavier on January 14th before ripping Fordham for 20 points and 10 rebounds less than a week later. With six double-figure scoring nights under her belt thus far this season, Smith doesn't appear set to cool off anytime soon.

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN

"I look forward to bigger and better things from Nekole," O'Brien said. "When she's going good, we've got to ride her. She can have one of those nights, and we've seen it plenty of times, when she's scoring 16-18 points and only getting 12 shot attempts. That's when the guards need to get her the basketball."

Adversity may have been Smith's biggest opponent during the early goings of this season. She seemed to have trouble finding her rhythm on the court against cross-state rivals Holy Cross and Boston College, and then an auto accident immediately following the BC game further damaged her ability to concentrate. But throughout the entire ordeal, both player and coach refused to make excuses for Smith's on-court woes.

"I have no idea why it took me so long to get on track," Smith said. "Sophomore slump, maybe? But as the season has gone on, I've gotten more comfortable with what I have to do, instead of trying to do too much."

"Nekole struggled earlier in the season because she was trying so hard to be that go-to player," O'Brien said. "But once we sat her down, and she said she was more comfortable coming off the bench, she's kind of come into her own a little bit."

At first glance, one would wonder how a team could possibly benefit from having one of its most prolific scorers watch the opening action of each game from the pine. But as the coach is quick to point out, Smith provides a humongous lift to the team as a reserve even as she polishes the intangibles that make for a complete player.

"It would be easy to put Nekole into the starting lineup," O'Brien said. "But she's a great spark to have off the bench. And as long as I can get her back to play a little bit of defense and rebound the basketball, I think everything else will go with the flow." The Minutewomen hope that flow takes them on a hard charge at the regular-season Atlantic 10 title, a run that will have them peaking just in time for the postseason tournament. It may seem ludicrous for a team that started the season 0-6 to be entertaining thoughts of a postseason run, but according to Smith, these aren't the same Minutewomen that stumbled out of the gate in November.

"The team that takes the floor now is a little bit more focused, and a little bit more determined," Smith said. "We also have some seniors who aren't ready to leave yet. We're doing it for them, we're doing it for us, and we're doing it for our coaches. We all want to win."

Men's hockey keeps it close in H-East

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

A season of peaks and valleys is what the Massachusetts hockey team has endured thus far. The Minutemen have dominated non-conference opponents, posting an impressive 6-3-1 record, but have fallen on hard times in Hockey East games with a paltry 4-10-2 mark.

Minuteman Hockey
News and Notes

However, there is light at the end of the tunnel for coach Joe Mallen and his slew of young talent. The Maroon and White have lost six one-goal games and two two-goal games, for a total of eight losses by ten goals. It's in the close games that UMass' lack of experience comes into play. Although the team has experienced a lack of success in the close games, this has been a remarkable year for the Minutemen, with several of their players having banner campaigns.

Senior assistant captain Jeff Blanchard came into the season having played in 95 consecutive games, eclipsing the record that was held by former star and current Edmonton Oiler Brad Norton. Blanchard has played in all 26 games this year, bringing his streak to 121.

On top of Blanchard's Cal Ripkenesque streak, he is also the team's second leading scorer with 23 points (8 goals, 15 assists). The 23 points has vaulted last year's returning scorer into ninth place in school history with 81 career points (28 goals, 51 assists).

Blanchard is not the only player on the UMass squad that is torching opponents for points this season. Junior assistant captain Jeff Turner leads the team with 25 points (11 goals, 14 assists). For much of the season, these two scoring threats were on the same line, but coach Mallen wanted more consistency throughout the lineup, and hence the tandem was split.

Insert Tim Turner into Blanchard's spot and you have a duo just as potent, but this time there is more than just the brotherhood of being teammates. Tim came to Amherst to get a chance to play alongside brother Jeff, and now they aren't just teammates, they are linemates.

The Maroon and White have another pair of brothers in Jay and Justin Shaw. Jay, who is a physical player, has scored two game-winning goals this season. Justin, who sat out much of the season with mononucleosis, has returned and added another solid defender to UMass' blueline.

The Maroon and White did suffer a setback on defense, however, when Chris Brannen left the team to pursue the rest of his junior hockey eligibility.

The Minutemen are also receiving strong contributions up and down the scoresheet. Whenever a player gets a chance to step in, he produces. Case in point: Kevin Poulin and Brad Nizwantowski.

Poulin, in his 10 games played, has posted one goal and three assists. The Lewiston, ME native has seen time on the power play as well as on the vaunted penalty kill in his short stint in the lineup.

Nizwantowski, a freshman that excelled in three sports (hockey, baseball and football) at Cushing Academy, rolled with the punches for the first 17 games of the season and made the best of his playing time once it rolled around.

On January 7, the Peabody resident picked off a clearing pass in front of the net and fired his first collegiate shot. Not only was it his

Turn to NOTES, page 11

UM's gridiron greats to reload; two QBs added

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team announced at least 11 signees for the coming season yesterday, as coach Mark Whipple and his staff continue through an active offseason.

Dealing with perhaps the highest-profile vacancy left by the graduating class of 2000, the Minutemen added two quarterbacks to their roster – Matt Guice, a freshman who played with current UMass wide receiver and 1999 All-Atlantic 10 performer Adrian Zullo at St. Thomas Aquinas High School in Florida, and Richard Lucero, a junior college transfer from Phoenix Community College, who was named Arizona Community College Athletic Conference Player of the Year in 1999 after throwing for a national junior record of eight touchdowns in a game.

Last season's signal caller, Todd Bankhead, also transferred in from the junior college ranks to break nearly every passing record the school has, including career yards and touchdowns. With the shoes Bankhead left behind to fill, the field general walked all the way through the 1998 Division I-AA National Championship Game. In 1999, No. 10 threw for 3,093 yards and 17 touchdowns in guiding the team to a tie for the A-10 title. Guice and Lucero will compete with returning quarterbacks Kelly Seibert and Ed Campbell for the job.

"Guice1 played in a championship program, he went to prep school and he played at a high level," Whipple said. "Zullo talked highly of him. Zullo only caught 17 passes in his senior year (of high school), but he said he's got a strong, strong arm and he's a great leader. His father (Jim) played for the Cleveland Browns, so he's got it in his blood. Then you look at Lucero and his numbers. People forget that Todd Bankhead came here and he was a part-time player (in junior college) and he had a pretty good career (at UMass). If these guys have that kind of career (we'll be in good shape.) It just makes for competition. That's what I'm happy about."

Whoever takes the snaps next season, they will be without the services of graduating tight end Sean Higgins, whose 51 catches and 615 yards made him the second straight starting Massachusetts player at his position to gain All-Conference sta-

Turn to WHIPPLE, page 13

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN

Not content to rest on his laurels, UMass football coach Mark Whipple has been busy recruiting some of the nation's top talent for next season.

Minutemen look to rebound

Roundballers seek redemption after rout

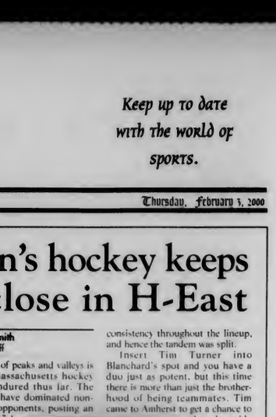
By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

They had 'em.

Three in a row. Five of six. Fresh off the defensive effort of the season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team toed the line with the Temple Owls. Not in a place where Temple hadn't lost all season, but rather in a place where its history hadn't shined so brightly. Coming in, the Owls remained standing just once in 10 tries at the Mullins Center, but any uneasiness was quickly erased as Temple showed why it is the class of the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Minuteman Hoops
News and Notes

The Owls not only made a point in the 75-48 pasting of the Minutemen in front of 8,048 raging fans at the Mullins, but they also distanced themselves from fellow A-10 East competition. With Temple way out in front at 8-1, UMass (11-9 overall, 5-3 Atlantic 10) finds itself in one heck of a logjam in TU's wake. St. Bonaventure, which handed the Owls their only conference loss three weeks back, a 57-56 nailbiter in Olean, stands at 5-2, a half game ahead of UMass heading into this weekend. The Bonnies greeted the Minutemen in the New Year with a convincing 70-60 victory. So with key losses in its own division, UMass needs to climb out of its hole with just eight conference games remaining, a schedule which includes rematches with the aforementioned Easterners, St. Joseph's, at 4-4, has some work to do, but plays five of its final eight games in Philadelphia, a field which includes Temple and SBU.



The jockeying for position continues as just one non-conference game stands between the Minutemen and the postseason. With each game counting, UMass plays five of its remaining eight A-10 clashes away from Amherst which, in Flint's mind, might be a blessing for the road warriors. The Minutemen are 3-0 in the A-10 on foreign soil.

The Maroon and White suffered tremendously without Kitwana Rhymer for the final 12 minutes of the first half, this after the Virgin Islands native picked up his second ticket at the 11:35 mark on an attempted block. Freshman Micah Brand was brave in relief, but the experience of Kevin Lyde and Lamont Barnes in the paint was too much for an undersized Minuteman squad to handle.

Temple's offense went through Mark Karcher, who was simply too much. Mike Babul has lined up next to the opposition's leading forward throughout his four-year stay. Karcher, like he had in Temple's win at the Apollo, lit Babul up for 17 points in 28 minutes.

However, Flint got exactly what he got from the Amherst faithful, getting over eight grand to support the formerly surging Minutemen. It was 1,400 more fans than UMass' 1-point win against Villanova and over 3,200 more than UMass' showdown with A-10 West-leading Dayton. While it didn't rival the atmosphere against Kansas last season, the crowd nearly went the distance, that is, until the lead became clearly insuperable. So it's apparent the student body will support a winner, the Minutemen rolling to that point, but the question remains whether or not the LaSalles and the George Washingtons draw peoples' attention.

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 13

DAN SANTELLI / COLLEGIAN

Shooting guard Monty Mack's offensive skills have him sitting at second place among the conference scoring leaders.

Atlantic 10 Standings

EAST	Conf.	Overall
Temple	8-1	15-4
St. Bonaventure	5-2	13-5
UMASS	5-3	11-9
St. Joseph's	4-4	9-8
Fordham	3-5	10-10
Rhode Island	2-6	5-16

WEST	Conf.	Overall
Dayton	6-2	16-4
Virginia Tech	3-4	9-10
Xavier	4-4	13-7
Duquesne	3-5	8-12
G. Washington	3-4	9-11
LaSalle	1-6	7-11

Last night: George Washington 84, Duquesne 76
Xavier 65, Dayton 64

Tonight: St. Joseph's @ Virginia Tech		7 pm
Saturday: Temple @ Rhode Island (FCC)		noon
Virginia Tech @ LaSalle		2 pm
Texas @ UMASS		3 pm
Xavier @ George Washington		4 pm
Sunday: Duquesne @ Dayton		2 pm
Fordham @ St. Bonaventure		5 pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 11 Friday, February 4, 2000

Alumni Scholar speaks on novel's history

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Correspondent

KARA STOREY COLLEGIAN

UMass Alum Sandra Jackson-Opoku spoke yesterday in Memorial Hall about her award-winning novel, The River Where Blood is Born. Following the talk, Jackson-Opoku answered questions posed by the audience and held a book signing.

Sandra Jackson-Opoku spoke as the Eleanor Bateman Alumni Scholar in Residence last night at Memorial Hall. Sandra is an award winning poet, fiction writer, scriptwriter, and journalist. Along with all of these prestigious titles, Jackson is also known by many as a great storyteller.

Jackson began her speech by asking the audience, "A story, a story, you ready for a story?" That, she explained, was a traditional way to begin an African American story. She also said storytelling, in any culture, is ultimately a two part process. One person must be willing to speak, and the other must be willing to listen.

The title of the novel she refers to as "her oldest child," one that took her 21 years to complete, is called, The River Where Blood is Born. This title, she said came from her original intrigue and fascination with rivers. Growing up on the west side of Chicago, she said she only had regular access to the Chicago River, which she claimed to be very tame.

"Rivers represented a road that connected me to the larger world, outside my own little island, my island of isolation," Jackson said.

Her novel consists of many fictional stories of women spanning over 215 years. She often referred to it as, "the metaphysical journey of a family of women." The novel, she said, "articulates for her, the question of who am I and where am I from."

In 1974, she traveled to Jamaica. She considered this her first step back to Africa. The trip was her first time away from the United States and while there, she struggled with what she referred to as an identity problem, not knowing exactly "who she was." At UMass, Jackson continued to pursue her passion, and once again made the decision to travel, this time to Africa through the exchange program.

In Lagos she claims, her book, and "the river," were born. For Jackson, her time in Africa was a momentous one. She said she was observing and experiencing both positive and negative things. She also kept many journals while in Africa, but explained that she didn't think anything like a book would become of them.

Although, the original title of the novel was Songs and Daughters, it was later changed for marketing reasons, Jackson said. In addition, she spoke of her struggles in finding an agent. It wasn't until another piece she had written, Mother of a Mountain, was published did an agent approach her.

Despite this, the fight continued for Jackson to find a suitable situation in which to publish her book. She said for some time many were telling her to take what money she could and run, but she stood by her work, believing that her novel would one day become a success. After some patience and a lot of work with her agent, Jackson said her book was finally published.

Jackson stated that this novel has truly been a journey for her to "learn a story and share it with others."

Also during her lecture yesterday, she said she believes that three worlds always exist within one another and are always touching our lives in some way. These worlds are known as the living, the dead, and the unborn. Every story in her novel deals with at least one of the three she said.

Some members in the audience said they felt that no matter which passage Jackson read to the group, one of the "worlds," were apparent. One woman said she felt she could relate her own life to what was being read.

Jackson concluded her speech with this quote, "a story cannot just be told, it has to be accepted."

At the conclusion of the event, Jackson was presented with a Gift from the Alumna Scholar Program.

University budget takes center stage at Senate meeting

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The issue of projected budget cuts for the upcoming school year dominated yesterday's first Faculty Senate meeting of the year.

Throughout the meeting, the reason for the lack of budget and its effects upon the University as a whole were addressed by faculty, staff and student groups.

Chancellor David K. Scott explained the reason for the budget cuts, saying it was due to the fact that the state did not give the University adequate funding over a five-year period, and that on the whole, over the past twenty years, UMass had received less funding than it needed.

"In the past we were not treated as an average state agency, we were always given less," Scott explained, and later asked, "How can we seem so rich to people on the outside and feel so poor?"

He explained that budget cuts were necessary to make sure that the University remains in a positive financial standing and receives the money necessary to keep the University financially afloat.

"It would be unconscious and irresponsible of me to allow the University to float into next year without any thought to the budget," Scott said.

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS), however, felt differently about the reasons surrounding the next year's proposed budget cuts.

According to Jon Zibble, a representative of GSS, one main reason for the budget cuts was due to outrageous spending on the part of UMass. He questioned the potential cuts due to the fact that the

Disunity endangers government's ability to prevent terrorism

By David A. Vise and Lorraine Adams
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – The federal government has a disorganized patchwork of 148 separate law enforcement entities, making the nation more vulnerable to terrorist attacks and creating an urgent need to streamline and consolidate power, former FBI and CIA director William H. Webster told Congress on Thursday.

Webster, chairman of a congressionally chartered panel that studied ways to enhance the nation's crime-fighting ability, said the attorney general needs broad new authority over all aspects of federal law enforcement. He recommended empowering the FBI by giving it control over the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), as well as the enforcement functions of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF), which is now part of the Treasury Department.

"The risks and probabilities of our experiencing major terrorist threats continue to grow," Webster told the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on criminal justice oversight.

"These suggestions have been made before, but there is increased urgency that they be considered due to terrorism and global crime. It is not an effort to aggrandize one agency over another ... but to create less confusion and more effective results."

If recent political history is any guide, Webster's Commission on the Advancement of Federal Law Enforcement is unlikely to achieve the transfer of authority it recommended. Although Webster characterized the overlapping anti-drug efforts of the FBI and the DEA as "ripe for unnecessary trouble," putting the agencies together was suggested during President Clinton's first term and dropped after political turf fights.

N. Ireland loses rights to law

By Marjorie Miller
Los Angeles Times

LONDON – The Northern Ireland peace process unraveled further on Thursday as the British government announced that it would resume direct rule over the province within days unless the Irish Republican Army takes steps to disarm.

Northern Ireland Secretary Peter Mandelson told the House of Commons that he would introduce legislation Friday to suspend Belfast's 2-month-old government and transfer power back to London.

Trying to buy time for 11th-hour negotiations, Mandelson said it would take several days to implement the legislation, and that the process could be halted immediately if the IRA were to budge.

Prime Minister Tony Blair met with his Irish counterpart, Bertie Ahern, for about two hours late Thursday, hoping that Ahern might have some advances to report after daylong talks with the IRA's political wing, Sinn Fein. But afterward, the two leaders acknowledged their efforts had fallen short so far.

A sudden change of heart by the IRA seemed improbable. Sinn Fein leaders angrily accused the British government and Northern Ireland's First Minister David Trimble of violating the 1998 Good Friday agreement.

"If the institutions are suspended, it's the greatest disaster to befall Ireland in the last 100 years, and I hope that doesn't happen," Sinn Fein negotiator Martin McGuinness told reporters in Belfast.

McGuinness is education minister in the Protestant-Catholic government of Northern Ireland that was formed in December after 25 years of British rule and a sectarian war between pro-British Protestants and Catholic nationalists who want the province united with the Irish Republic.

Britain's move to retake power from Belfast was the gravest setback yet in the peace process, although it was intended to stave off what the government considers to be an even worse outcome. Trimble's resignation

Stellar record leads to honor for professor

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President William Bulger presented Computer Science Professor W. Bruce Croft with a Distinguished Professor award Tuesday afternoon in Boston.

The honor, announced by the University's Board of Trustees, recognizes Croft for his outstanding academic distinction.

Chancellor David K. Scott said Croft's record of more than 100 publications in benchmark journals and conference proceedings is exemplary in providing him with this honor.

"Professor Croft has clearly established himself as a world-renowned leader in a key field of computer science," Scott said. "The University of Massachusetts benefits from the presence of such an eminent scholar."

According to a statement, Croft has laid the algorithmic foundations for systems that locate relevant text within large bodies of information. He is highly regarded as a scholar in the field of information retrieval using encyclopedias or sets of documents such as the worldwide web.

Using such information retrieval processes, Croft has been particularly successful in linking research results to industrial needs.

Founder and director of the Center for Intelligent Information Retrieval (CIIR), funded by the National Science Foundation, the facility has brought together faculty members, research scientists and research staff from more than 70 companies and government agencies.

Through such efforts, Croft has assisted such technological research organizations in developing applications based on research and the training of the next generation of researchers.

In 1997, Croft was elected a member of the Association of Computer Machinery (ACM). The following year, he was appointed to the Computer Science and Telecommunications Board of the National Research Council.

He has also been a distinguished lecturer at the University of California Irvine, Carnegie-Mellon University, Cornell University and the ETH in Switzerland.

W. Bruce Croft

Croft received his Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge, England, in 1979. In that same year, he joined the University faculty and has held the rank of full professor in the Computer Science department since 1991.

Croft was not available for comment as of press time.

The Department of Computer Science offers an undergraduate program in computer science leading to the Bachelor of Science degree. Students who earn this degree are prepared to assume responsible and challenging positions in the computing profession, and are also prepared for graduate work in computing, according to the department's website.

Students admitted to the major join a community that completes advanced research in computer science. Majors are encouraged to become involved with one of the department's many research projects, particularly during their senior year.

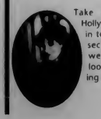
The Department of Computer Science offers a tuition-free masters degree, accompanied by a small assistantship, to any undergraduate computer science major at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, who completes the program with an overall GPA of at least 3.5.

KARA STOREY COLLEGIAN

This ain't band camp...
Sophomore music education major Megan Murphy practices her clarinet yesterday in one of the many rehersal rooms in the Fine Arts Center.

EXTENDED FORECAST

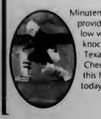
Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 32	HIGH: 33	HIGH: 29
LOW: 10	LOW: 14	LOW: 10



Cooking for a Job

See what Wes Wrightson has to say in today's Ed/Op page.

PAGE 4



Being Sandra Bullock

Take a closer look on Hollywood's girl next door in today's Arts and Living section. Check out this week's video pick and look at flashy eye-catching photos.

PAGE 6

Paint Prowler

Minuteman Micah Brand will provide some punch down low when UMass goes for a knockout against No. 13 Texas at home tomorrow. Check out a preview of this heavyweight fight in today's sports.

PAGE 10

Arts & Living 6
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

Compiled by Brian Lohnes • Photos by Kara Stokes

Who would you like to see as the next president?

"Al Gore, because he will be a positive influence on education and the environment."

Diana Carri
Sophomore, Biology

"I really don't care. I'm not too big into politics."

Hai Duong
Sophomore, School of Management

"Bill Bradley, he quit his job to take care of his dying wife."

Elisabeth Lassard
Junior, Communication Disorders

"Gary Bauer, I like his family values and what he stands for."

Mike Deibler
Junior, Social Thought and Political Economy

"Al Gore, I agree with a lot of his views."

Felicia Lundquist
Senior, Spanish and Sociology

"Al Gore brings a lot of Clinton's attributes and if we had an economic crisis he would be the best qualified to handle it."

Paul Barros
Junior, Political Science and Economics

■ faculty

continued from page 1

University received a large amount of money from the state this year that was contributed to the University's budget.

"We have gotten more money than we ever have in the history of UMass," Zibble said.

He explained that the University spends nearly $16 million over the amount that they had budgeted for distance-learning programs. Meanwhile, the scholarship program that allots money to both high school valedictorians and salutatorians planning to attend UMass was over funded.

"We should never overspend before we find out how much money we are going to get," Zibble said, adding that the University invested money into these programs before receiving its budget for this year, thereby spending money that had never been allotted.

In response to allegations that the University misallocated funds, Scott urged students to look at the budget for themselves, saying, "there is nothing to be hidden about the budget."

Others in attendance at the meeting uttered their dismay as to how the one to three percent budget cuts would affect their individual associations on campus. Linda Griffin, a representative for the Massachusetts Society of Professors, expressed concern regarding tenured faculty. She explained that budget cuts might affect faculty, and may result in possible layoffs on campus.

"The top goal for the University must be strong academic programs," she explained.

Individual professors in attendance spoke out regarding how the budget cuts are already affecting academic programs on campus. Faculty senator Lisa Saunders, a professor of women's studies, explained that classes had already been cancelled due to the budget cuts.

"There have been cuts in our program, there have been courses that were cancelled," Saunders said.

Nearly all in attendance agreed that the University system as a whole must unite and petition the state to increase funding for the campus. Scott suggested that, "What we need to do is to mount a campaign for an investment in the Amherst campus."

Student Trustee Seth Avakian concurred in his statements, explaining that students and faculty alike should request money from the state rather than leaving it up to UMass President William Bulger.

"I don't think that the president can deliver $1 billion," Avakian said, adding, "I think that we can."

Bradley hits NY after NH loss

By Alan Guy
Washington Square News

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - Democratic presidential hopeful Bill Bradley kicked off his New York campaign for his party's nomination Wednesday by addressing an audience that packed Judson Memorial Church.

The rally began with comments in support of Bradley and his platform from a variety of national and local notables, including former mayor Ed Koch, and concluded with a speech by Bradley himself. While the usual political topics were raised during the event, positive comments on Bradley's candor, character and idealism seemed to connect with the many younger members of the audience.

"Al Gore represents the same kind of politics as Clinton, which the country is tired of," said Mike Bruno, a student in the College of Arts and Science. "Bradley is more of an idealist."

The crowd was laden with high school and college students.

"The crowd was a good mixture of ages," said John Oleske, an NYU Law student and Bradley supporter. "There was a lot of young energy and excitement."

Energy and idealism seemed to dominate the event, with lofty goals, but not many specifics on how to implement them, being offered by the speakers. A broad array of hopes, ranging from racial unity to gays in the military, were spoken about.

"I think if you want to serve your country, you have a right to serve your country," said New York City councilman Phil Reed.

A performance by singer Patti Smith added to the grassroots feel of the event. "Bill Bradley is owned by no one," Smith said. "He is the peoples' candidate; he is owned by the American people."

The frequent mention of dreams and idealism by Bradley and his campaign has led many pundits to compare Bradley to former presidential hopefuls Adlai Stevenson and George McGovern. Koch compared Bradley to another Democrat who appealed to the idealistic and the young within the party.

"Every 30 years or so there is, in politics, a crusade," he said. "The last one I really remember was the crusade for Bobby Kennedy. I have that same feeling in this hall today. What we need so desperately, what people want so desperately is a president they can believe in and believe will tell the truth."

Fizzus Tastus Smilus

{ inviting to the touchus }

Experience refreshing Coca-Cola classic in an ice-cold glass bottle at The University Store, University C-Stores and Newman Center. Offer ends February 12, 2000.

Coca-Cola enjoy

Students engineer website for alumni communication

Chemical engineering students at the University of Massachusetts now have access to an online website that allows them to find departmental announcements and links to other engineering web pages.

The page was created in response to a growing demand from students and faculty to place the Chemical Engineering Department in the spotlight. Chemical Engineering Professor Kert Connor headed the original task of creating the website.

Seniors Jon Halverson and Erik Cameron, both chemical engineering majors, took over the development of the site, a process they said took almost a year.

Halverson said they created the page as a result of graduating students losing communications with other alumni.

"There was just poor communications between fellow members of graduated classes," Halverson said. "They seem to graduate and lose all communication."

Students can now access alumni information, including phone numbers and e-mails of past graduates. Halverson said, however, that the process has been difficult.

"It's been pretty hard because you have to contact the Alumni Department and they're pretty tight," Halverson said. "You can't get much information. We ask alumni to volunteer their information and it goes on the site."

In addition, the web page features engineering programs that students can download and use to perform calculations and research. The digital hyper-matrix site also includes its own server, operated by students, although Halverson said they've run into some problems.

"If we look in the log files, we can see that people have tried to hack the site," Halverson said. "This is quite common. Leave CHIEF alone, we're harmless."

Halverson said he, Cameron and two other engineering students devote their time into writing scripts that attempt to prevent hackers from entering the site.

The website can be accessed at http://chief.ecs.umass.edu

-Jason Trenkle

Correction:

In yesterday's issue of the Daily Collegian (Thurs., Feb. 3, 2000), the article entitled "Poly Sci professors eye election", by Brian Lohnes, contained incorrectly attributed quotes. Jeffrey Sedgwick, a political science faculty member, was not spoken to on the subject matter, and none of the quotes are his. The Collegian apologizes for the error, and is currently in the process of trying to identify the correct speaker.

Microsoft to push, shove way to state legislature

By Joseph Menn
Los Angeles Times

Microsoft Corp. and other powerful software companies are quietly pushing state legislation across the nation that would dramatically reduce consumer rights for individuals and businesses who buy or lease software and database information.

The push comes as software companies are beefing up their lobbying effort to pass favorable laws while their industry is at peak popularity among politicians who want to keep their local economies booming, consumer groups say.

"(This) is an example of newly powerful software giants using the promise of high-tech jobs to push through legislation that restricts consumer and business-customer rights," said James Tierney, former Maine attorney general, who opposes the effort.

The tech bills spring from a proposal with an arcane name, the Uniform Computer Information Transactions Act, or UCITA. Should states pass this legislation, the impact on consumers would be dramatic.

-If customers fall behind on fees or software lease payments, sellers would have the right to reach into customers' computers and remotely shut off programs.

-The UCITA bills include a provision that e-mail could serve as formal legal notice of everything from a change in terms of the contract to a warning that service will be cut off, all without any evidence that the e-mail ever reached an individual.

-The fine print of nondisclosure clauses in software packages could be used by software makers to block the publishing of reviews of their product.

"We already see software licenses that purport to ban publication of critical articles," said University of Arizona law professor Jean Braucher. "UCITA would increase this sort of chill."

Selling their souls
Senior Communications major Heidi Chapendale, Freshman Business major Florence Pettiquot, and Mount Holyoke Sophomore Lauren Thompson fill out information in exchange for free stuff in the Student Union.

University of Massachusetts
Something Every Friday
Presents

Keith Robinson

Friday, February 4, 2000 The FREE movie
Campus Center Auditorium, "Three Kings" will
8pm, FREE follow the performance

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

Where do you see yourself this summer?
Choose A or B?

A. Sharing a trail with a mountain goat as you hike through snow capped glacier peaks?
B. Commuting in bumper to bumper traffic?

A. Meeting your new best friend under the "Big Sky" of Montana?
B. Spending the summer with the same old crowd?

A. Watching millions of stars & the northern lights on a clear, cool August night?
B. Spending hot & humid summer nights next to an air conditioner?.

If you answered "A" to any of the above, choose a summer in the "Last Best Place".

We will be interviewing in Boston Tuesday February 15th for our 2000 summer season.
Call (800) 368-3689 today to schedule an interview.
Visit us at www.gkpark.com

after this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of [cake].

In the course of facing challenges like this, you'll learn how to think on your feet. Stay cool under pressure. Take charge. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. You'll find there's nothing like a little climbing to help prepare you for getting to the top.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

For information on 2 and 3 year scholarships call the UMass Army ROTC 545-2321

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion
Ours or theirs?

According to a new rule instated this year, any student at this University who is caught reproducing professors' notes or any other class materials can be prosecuted for copyright infringement.

This new law came into effect after last semester, when eight professors discovered that their class notes were being posted on the Internet. Apparently several students were "abusing" their privileges, and were paid by Internet companies to share their lecture notes with others taking the course. Those professors involved were shocked at the news and whole-heartedly objected to their material being published on the World Wide Web.

But why would they object to such a thing? Are professors' lecture notes sacred that they can't even be shared with other students taking the course? Perhaps they are afraid students are sharing their notes with the general population. But that makes no sense. The odds of someone not in a course wanting to read its lecture notes are pretty slim to say the least.

Aside from these professors' fears about the unauthorized distribution of University materials, there is another issue. Whose notes are they? Are they the professors'? The Massachusetts Society of Professors thinks so, which is how this unjust "law" has been passed. According to the society, all course materials are created by the teacher of the course and therefore belong solely to him or her. But is this accurate? Are these materials really the professor's?

If one takes the time to attend a course, listen to the lecturer and take notes, do those notes belong to the student, not the professor. If one loses a notebook, is it returned to the presiding professor? No, it is returned to the student, the person who listened to his instructor and wrote down what he deemed necessary in a format of his own. He is the author of the notes, not the professor.

Songs and books are copyrighted for a reason. This is done to protect the author's monetary interests, as well as his reputation for creating an original work. These things are copyrighted so no person can take someone else's creation and claim it for his own. But what does a professor have to protect with copyright? Unless he wrote the textbook for the class, he has nothing to claim as his own. The professor didn't "create" the subject matter of the course he is teaching. He learned the information from someone else at some point and now that he has hopefully mastered spoken material, he is passing it down to you in his own way.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s famous "I Have a Dream" speech was clearly original. Dr. King created something of his own and passed it on to us. He wanted to teach us something. He didn't frown upon others reproducing his speech, in fact, he encouraged it. He believed in his ideas so much that he wanted everyone to hear them. Perhaps our professors could learn something from him.

If our professors are so proud of "their" work and hold it so tightly to their chests, then why not have it shown to all who are interested in reading it? After all, students are here to learn and teachers are here to teach. If they are worried about students making a few dollars without asking for their doctoral permission, then they are clearly in the wrong profession.

It is rather unfortunate that such selfishness has surfaced here at the University. It's unfortunate that professors feel their lecture notes should be copyrighted, but they're confused about something. What they don't understand is that if the students are the ones coming up with the notes and writing them in their own words, then the copyright should lie not with the professors, but with the students.

Time is definitely relentless

I have indulged in the editorial pages in this paper for years. The columns have been entertaining, funny and witty, but rarely have I given them much thought after recycling the paper. It's my hope that I can share with you, the intelligent reader, some of my thoughts and experiences.

Your time here is yours. I mean this literally; every person on this campus – undergraduates, graduates, professors, Deans and so on – have choices. This is not news, but it is. Think about the choices that you make in a day. Why did you make them? Did you make the choices you really wanted to make? Stop reading this for a moment and think about your day so far. Are you happy with the choices you've made? If you're not, that's fine. Everything in life is learning. We are all learning, so be patient with yourself and others. Time is relentless, it moves forward in all directions. We all have two choices: get dragged along for the ride or forge a life that is fulfilling and rewarding. Which do you want?

Ethan Bergeron

Learn. Everything about this place is designed to help us learn in every possible aspect. If you don't believe that UMass has lessons it can teach, then change it. If you have an interest in something, pick up a course guide and find out when the lectures are. If the University doesn't offer it, maybe Amherst does. Look around, sit in on classes that are not in your schedule. You don't have to take notes, just listen. I know you're thinking, "Who has time for this? I have my own classes and papers to write." Try it. The feeling you get after you have learned something that you didn't know before is addictive.

However, the classes are the least important aspect of your education here. The people at this University are the real education, learning how to deal with waves of confusions that take the form of words coming from fellow students. The education is in translating different backgrounds and experiences into similarities.

Look at the people you pass everyday, maybe even smile. It sounds easy, and it is, so why not? Stop reading again, and if you can think of a good reason not to smile at someone during the day, I want to hear your reasons. I fell into the trap of ignoring the people I go to school with for too long. Strike up a conversation with the person sitting next to you in the lounge. I'll give you something to say: "I like your whatever, where did you get it?" Stop reading this column and try it.

"This is your life. I'm not trying to sound like a Nike ad, but tomorrow is today."

Talking with someone is a form of showing respect; it's a way of saying, "I see you sitting next to me and I'm not going to ignore you." I'm not saying that it's a bad idea to be introspective, but everything in moderation.

Love. Love your friends, love your family, love the person who gives you change in the parking garage, love everybody. When you love everyone, it's easy to forgive them, because you understand they are just learning like the rest of us. Most importantly, love yourself. It is one of the hardest things in life to do. Why is loving yourself so hard to do? Because you're with yourself everyday, all day. Someone sees every action that you make, and that someone is you. It's difficult, but if you truly love yourself and can love yourself in spite of your faults, loving life is easy. I'm not sure that I'm there yet but I'm working on it.

Get fired up. There are hundreds, if not thousands of things to do in a 10-mile radius. Try something new, like ballroom dancing. This is your life. I'm not trying to sound like a Nike ad, but tomorrow is today. Do what you love, whether that is underwater basket weaving or playing the sitar – whatever... just do it (that was honestly unintentional). Forgive people. By holding on to anger, you only hurt yourself. Don't let people you care about become estranged. Call them if they care about you. It will bring them joy to hear your voice. Try to think of someone, right now, who is becoming estranged. I urge you to call them today and bridge the gap with forgiveness.

It was not my intention to tell you how to live your lives. All the things that I've written are out of desire to share some experiences and mistakes in hopes of preventing you, the intelligent reader, from making them. Scratch that. Go out and make your mistakes. Ask questions. Take your lumps and learn.

Ethan Bergeron is a UMass student

Write for Ed/Op

Your Opinion
Increase in Price

To the editor:

So you think the price of textbooks at the Textbook Annex is high now? Wait until next year. I work at the Annex, and have had a chance to review the pricing that we are likely to pay next year. There are surveys that have been done across the country on prices. Jeff Zeilenga, Ed.D, is the Auxiliary Services Director at the University of Missouri-Columbia. His prices survey found that students pay 4 1/2 percent more for used books at privately owned stores than university-owned stores. New books were 3 percent higher. The things we buy in the University Store were 19 percent higher in his survey. I don't know about you, but I think that we are paying enough presently, and at least now, all the money the store makes stays on campus. I don't want to pay more for stuff I need so that it can be sent to Follett's headquarters in Chicago.

Students ought to take a hard look at this issue. There are many misconceptions about how this impending privatization that will affect campus stores. Because this University may be bringing in a large corporation with millions of dollars, the general reaction seems to be that the University stores will sell what you need for less. Prices will go up and the amount of money that actually goes into the University will go down. Our leaders don't seem to have paid any attention to prices. They have been told by Follett that they'll use the same margins the store currently uses. That may be so, but they will also control how much the items cost the store, and when the prices of what you're buying increases. That's just how it works. So we better speak up now if we are going to do anything about it. Don't just assume that Follett is interested solely in the growth and well being of the University. Chances are that it is a large money-making corporation that is here to make money for themselves, not UMass. Tell the Chancellor how you feel by sending him an e-mail or writing a letter. It's important for you to voice how you feel.

Daisy Richards
Amherst

What do you mean work?

Wes Wrightson

The past winter break for me was the first time I actually had to make some important life decisions. For one, being a senior in his supposed last semester at this prized institution means deciding what career path to chose or, basically, what to do after school ends. Come next September I'm either going to be (a) working at Emery Worldwide Packaging (a dead-end job tailored for people who didn't get past their freshman year of high school) as I did this past break for a cool $14.00/hr., (b) working on Martha's Vineyard for the summer and being a beach bum, (c) going to Japan as a member of the JET Program where I would be learning about Public and International Relations there for about two years, (d) being a member of the Peace Corps (I am in the midst of applying right now), or (e) working at my town's dump like as I did for a while last summer (being a moron without any sort of job offer kind of blows).

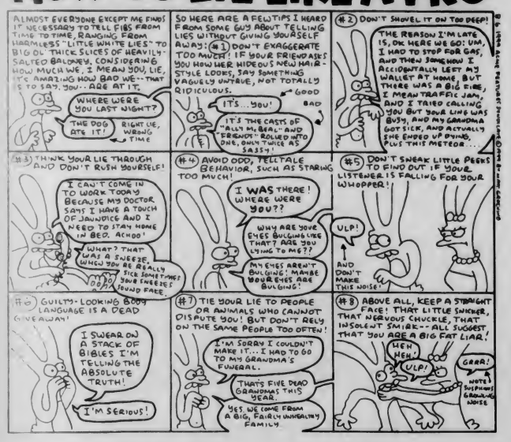
I know that I would love to work in the Peace Corps. That would allow me to help others while learning a lot about myself: what I'm strong in and what I lack. I lack in many areas so this would help. I know that going to a third-world country, and helping those less fortunate than us (collectively, those here at UMass that can afford a comfortable lifestyle and enjoy the surroundings) is a mind-altering experience. I think that going to a place like East Africa (places like Uganda, Rwanda or Burundi) or Western Africa would allow me to speak French once again. I took the language for two years before high school, and then throughout high school as well. The Peace Corps also helps by offering the experience of seeing and feeling what it is like to be a minority (something that I can identify with as I was in an all-black school while in South Africa).

"The Peace Corps also helps by offering the experience of seeing and feeling what it is like to be a minority."

Although I would be giving up a huge part of my life for two years, it would be well worth it. I could travel, meet interesting people, and maybe make a difference in someone's life. My Mom said it best when she said, "Change starts with yourself and then you move outwards."

The JET Program is something that is special to me. Since Japanese is my minor here at school, why not put it to good use after I'm done? The JET Program offers a choice of three programs to choose from. I'm shooting for the one that would help in the area of being a "people person," but I'm also interested in the program where I would help local Japanese athletes in their respective sports. I know that being a part of this prestigious program would benefit me in the long run, but I would, like being a part of the Peace Corps, have to give up two years of my life. I would have to put certain things on hold (relationships, friendships, and all the like). Japan is a place that offers a person like myself endless opportunities. I could go to all of the cultural centers like Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Hiroshima and Sapporo, and all the while also doing other things like going hiking in the mountains and reading some of the indigenous literature, as well as learning a lot in the way of international relations.

My parents are moving to Vancouver in June, as my mother is from there, and apparently she and my father made a deal that when he retires as a veterinarian, they would move back to where she grew up. Now here is a predicament: when I graduate (assuming I actually do so) where the heck do I call home? Where do I go when I'm out of the ole Zoo? I could go to Japan if I get accepted into this JET Program, I could go to Africa if I get accepted into the Peace Corps or I could end up in Boston if I decide on any Public Relations jobs. Man, I have choices to make.



Life as a senior here at school has never been as stressing as it is now. My best friend here, a cool kat named Trevor, already has a sweet job lined up for himself in Boston while I am still up in the air. I know that whatever happens to me at the end of the semester will all be for a reason, and most likely will take me abroad (Good job, Trevor, and congratulations!). I only hope that I have something lined up for myself soon, too. To all the seniors out there who don't have jobs lined up already... our day will come. Hey, the sun has to shine on a dog's ass sometime, 'ya know?

Wes Wrightson is a Collegian columnist.

...whether you want to write news, Ed/Op or one of the ..., we're looking for you. ... Campus Center ...

LIFE IN HELL

HOW TO LIE LIKE A PRO

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1992 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor Jolyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Marc Mersichel Finance Manager
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Ian Randall Distribution Manager
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Jenna Gorkovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Grein News Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Kara Stokes Photography Editor Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Brett Maurer Co-Sports Editor Ben Alumed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

$ Business $

Welcome to Business

Welcome the newest page of the Collegian. In an effort to provide students with a greater variety of interesting and informative news, the executive board has decided to implemen the new business page.

The page will run every other Friday, and will include business news, School of Management events, and articles chronicling the successes of UMass alumni.

As with every page in the Collegian, articles are welcomed from any student here at the University. Any business news that you wish to share can be brought to the Campus Center basement.

Finally, if you are a member a business-oriented student club, please let us know. Your guest speakers and programs are great business news. To inform us of a story, please call 545-3500.

-Shawn Ilnitch

Bigwords.com reaches Number One

By Shawn Ilnitch
Collegian Staff

The guys in the orange suits are not here to hurt you. They are here to help you.

These are the words coming from John Bates, chief evangelist of Bigwords.com, the company that was recently named the number one online textbook retailer in the world. In addition, the company has become the number three online supplier of books, behind only Amazon.com and barnesandnoble.com.

What has made Bigwords number one? The answers, according to Bates, are numerous. First of all, Bigwords is the only online textbook retailer that owns its own fulfillment, that is, the company fills orders from its own 80,000 square foot warehouse. The second reason, Bates believes, is the advertising campaign that Bigwords has undertaken.

This campaign is composed of two parts, the first of which is a grass roots effort. Bigwords has sent representatives wearing orange jump suits to college campuses across the nation. These representatives endorse Bigwords, and, many times can be seen handing out superballs. This campaign, Bates is hoping, will spread the word throughout college campuses.

This second campaign involves big names in the world of pop culture. Tom Green, host of MTV's popular "Tom Green Show", has represented the company in television ads, while Verne Troyer, "Mini-Me" from the latest Austin Powers movie, was at hand at the Bigwords ball drop, which took place on December 8th in Washington State Park in New York. The event saw 20,000 superballs drop from the sky, and students who were lucky enough to catch one of the special blue balls were eligible for a $10,000 scholarship.

The purpose of the ball drop was to raise awareness of Bigwords new buyback program. According to its website, Bigwords promises to pay back 50 percent more than campus bookstores. Another campaign being promoted is the new pre-buy program. If students order their books early enough, they can save an additional 15 percent on their textbooks on orders $500 or less. Bates explains that the reason for these programs is that Bigwords wants to make buying college textbooks "as painless as possible".

Bigwords has not always been number one. The company began in August of 1998, marketing to only eight schools in Southern California. Within a month and a half, they had received orders from over 200 different schools. Bates warns that because of this, Internet companies must be ready to go national or even global in a heartbeat. He also adds that the fast growth of dot com companies has led to a shortage of skilled workers to run the business side of the company. Good news for business majors.

Bates compares traditional campus bookstores to camels, explaining that a long time ago people used camels to transport all their goods. Today camels are still around, but are rarely used to transport goods. Bates sees campus bookstores changing roles as the Internet becomes a stronger force in college students' lives.

Bates offers college students the following advice: network, stay in touch with your classmates, gain skills, and do not be afraid to try to make something happen.

Mini-Me (Verne Troyer) with Bates at the ball drop

A scene from the ball drop in New York

Rate worries hit Wall St.

By Chris Brennan
Collegian Staff

Why is Wall Street always in pandemonium over Alan Greenspan? Alan Greenspan is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. Are you saying "who cares?" Some people say he is the second most powerful man in the country. Greenspan and the Federal Reserve have the power to change interest rates, inflation and economic growth. The Federal Reserve uses tools to affect monetary policy. The tools used are the Fed's control over the Federal Funds rate, the discount rate and its ability to limit reserves.

The federal funds rate is not a rate that consumers use daily. Instead, it is a rate strictly for banks. The Federal Funds Market consists of the supply and demand of a bank's reserve. The Federal Funds Market is very simple; it is a desk in New York City, not quite as elaborate as the New York Stock Exchange. The banks that have excess reserves contact the Federal Funds Market in hopes of lending their monies to a bank that needs their reserves. This lending is generally considered for a time period of one day, or overnight. It is not long-term like the discount rate. That is the rate at which banks borrow from the Federal Reserve, one that only changes from time to time. The last tool of the monetary policy is its ability to monitor the amount of its reserves that a banks needs to hold.

How can the tools of the monetary policy affect the economy? One way is that with a raise in interest rates, people are not willing to purchase goods that need to be financed, houses and cars. How can this affect you as an investor? Investors and analysts hang on Alan Greenspan's every word, like a teenage girl who listens to the Backstreet Boys. The simple act of an increase in interest rates causes an inverse effect between bond prices and yields. If you could get a bond that pays a dividend of sixty dollars (6 percent) a year or a dividend that pays seventy dollars (7 percent) a year, which would you rather have? You would probably be willing to pay more for the bond that yields seventy dollars. However, if a new bond were to yield fifty dollars (5 percent) you would be not willing to pay as much for a new bond with a smaller yield. That was a basic explanation of the inverse relationship between the bonds and yields.

This concept is also simply termed "interest rate risk" and is most commonly used with bonds. If you are an investor who chooses to focus on stocks rather than bonds, then how can this apply to you? With an increase in interest rates, bond prices fall and with higher yielding bonds, stock prices become less attractive. In preparation for the expected rate increase on Feb. 2nd, the market has adjusted. However, if the Fed were to change the rates differenth than expected, the market would still have to adjust for the unexpected interest rate. However, beware of less demand in the marketplace, as it might endanger corporate profits. For more information, check out the Federal Reserve Boards website at (www.bog.frb.fed.us).

Minimum Wage Increases 14.3 %

By Shawn Ilnitch
Collegian Staff

College students now have another reason to party. Thanks to a minimum wage increase that took effect on January 1st, the average college student may be able to buy another pizza or six-pack of beer per week.

Thanks to a 14.3 percent increase, the minimum wage is now at six dollars per hour.

Good news for college students, right? Maybe not.

Because of a strong economy, minimum wage jobs are becoming less and less common. Two groups that they do remain strong with, however, are college and high school students. Does the raise mean good news for these two groups?

The average college student may work 20 hours a week, and most college jobs are at minimum wage. With a 75-cent raise, it means 15 more dollars a week. Therefore, they can buy another pizza or some more beer. Down the road, though, problems could arise. The owner of the pizza shop will notice that he is paying his high school- or college-aged students more money, which means less profit for him. In the short run it is likely that he will not do anything, but eventually it could pose some problems.

In the future, he may try to get his profit back. He can do this two ways. First, he can cut hours, meaning fewer jobs for college or high school students. His second option is to raise prices, which leads students to spending their raise on higher-priced goods.

Often times, a rise in the minimum wage can lead to inflation. As the minimum wage increases, prices increase. Therefore, after the increase, people are still only able to buy the same amount of goods. With our strong economy, however, this may not be the case. Many of today's jobs are already above minimum wage. The effect of the increase on prices should not be too significant.

The new hike is the largest in the history of minimum wage, which was instituted in 1938, beginning at 25 cents per hour. The last increase took place in 1997, when the wage was increased to 5.15 from 4.75.

The minimum wage increase comes at a time of unparalleled economic prosperity, unlike the increase of 1991, which raised the wage 45 cents per hour when businesses were already struggling. This led to the elimination of many of these low-paying jobs that were not absolutely necessary.

The beginning of 2000 brings good news for college students, who finally get their share of our booming economy.

SOM to get new building

By Shawn Ilnitch
Collegian Staff

The School of Management is thinking big, as in big-name speakers and big buildings.

In February, Jack Smith, CEO and chairman of the board of General Motors will be on campus to speak with students. Smith graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1960. He serves on the Chancellor's Executive Committee here at the University. Dennis Hanna, Dean of SOM, feels that bringing speakers to the students teaches them lessons that they may not be able to learn in class.

Even bigger than the speakers, however, will be the new 40,000 square foot addition to SOM. Work is scheduled to begin in either the spring semester or the summer. The new building will add more classroom space, as well as an onsite trading room that will allow students to trade stocks. Hanna sees the building as an opportunity for students to learn much more.

In addition to the new classrooms and trading room, the new building will house a new SOM student center, allowing students from SOM to network, a skill that, according to Hanna, "is one of the most important that students learn at the University." With such a small size, the SOM seems the perfect place for networking, either with fellow students or alumni.

Another important part of the UMass experience, according to Hanna, is hands-on experience. With over 200 paid and unpaid internships and co-ops, SOM seems ready to offer students a chance to gain this experience.

Hanna also expressed an appreciation for student-run businesses, stating, "They are an asset to the University". The student-run businesses on campus allow students to get great everyday experience, as well as opportunities to make real business decisions.

When asked about curriculum changes, Hanna explained that SOM tries to remain pro-active. This allows them to evolve the courses rather than change them all at once. With the rise of Internet commerce, SOM will be adding more courses in electronic business. In addition, the school will be offering its first web-based course this semester.

SOM is also trying to develop a partnership with Dell and IBM to give students more chances to work with electronic business.

SOM remains one of the most competitive programs at UMass. Hanna adds that half of the students from SOM's graduating class transfer in after their freshman year.

KARA STOKES/COLLEGIAN

Ice cream saviors hit the web

By Shawn Ilnitch and Amy Garganta
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts graduate Garret LoPorto is protesting, but he is not protesting war or politics. He is protesting the possible takeover of the well-known ice cream corporation Ben and Jerry's.

The price of stock in Ben and Jerry's has stabilized in the low to mid twenties, prompting a cry from some shareholders. These shareholders want Ben and Jerry's to increase its profits, while many other shareholders want Ben and Jerry's to remain the way it is. Ben and Jerry's is widely known for its contributions to society. Currently, the company donates 7.5% of its pre-tax profits to charities. Additionally, the Vermont-based business purchases over 300 million tons of milk per year from local dairy farmers at a premium price.

LoPorto is one of the stockholders who wants Ben and Jerry's to stay independent. LoPorto first met Ben Cohen, a partner of Ben and Jerry's, last year, shortly after getting his degree in computer engineering. He was introduced by another UMass alumni, John Zaccone, who met Cohen at a rally. Cohen informed Zaccone that he was in search of someone to design a new web page. Soon after, LoPorto began work on Ben and Jerry's home page.

Along the way, LoPorto has begun his own company, Quantamlight.com, specializing in web page design. His newest project is savebenandjerrys.com, a website devoted to saving Ben and Jerry's from the pending corporate takeover.

The website has received over 10,000 hits. It offers a forum for supporters to post their thoughts, a link to stock information, and a link to the I'Bay listing, where Ben and Jerry's has been put up for auction. The auction of course, is not real, but an attempt by one supporter to show how easily a company can be manipulated.

Three companies have reportedly expressed an interest in taking over the ice cream duo. They are Unilever Breyers Brand Ice Cream, and Roncadin. LoPorto describes these companies as, "wanting to skim the company alive and use its gentle lamb skin brand identity to fool unsuspecting consumers into purchasing their soulless profit-driven products."

LoPorto is urging anyone who enjoys the ice cream to log on, speak out, and above all, buy Ben and Jerry's stock. It is his hope that enough people will buy to prevent the sellout.

Write for the Collegian
Business Page
Call Shawn @ 545-3500

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

This week's video pick: angsty, hip Hackers

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

The rapid pace at which our society assimilated personal computers into our daily lives, and especially the emergence of modern technologies and the Internet, gave sudden rise to a certain sub-culture of urban and middle-class America, an elitist society of information junkies who prided themselves on understanding the changing nature of electronic communication, and the implications those changes would have in both the corporate and private sectors. And, as in any nascent society, a mythology was created to support and embody the society's ideals, a pantheon of heroes and villains as timelessly epic as if the Greeks themselves had breathed life into their nerdy lungs. One of the earliest works of mythology produced by this society (by way of Hollywood, admittedly, but grand nonetheless) was the movie Hackers, a cinematic milestone as emotionally and culturally rich as it is frickin' hilarious.

The movie opens with Crash Override, a.k.a. Dade Murphy, arriving in New York City as a senior in high school, where he quickly hooks up with a team of subversive hackers also attending high school. As he attempts to woo the alluring Acid Burn, he and his crack squad of hackers stumbles upon the plot of an evil corporate hacker. The Plague, to ransom the world for lots of money and sink some oil tankers. Hackers to the rescue!

By today's standards, the technology displayed in Hackers (released in 1995) is outdated and silly. By 1995 standards, however, the technology displayed in Hackers is...slightly less outdated and silly. The attempt to dumb down computer talk and the specifics of hacking, computer viruses, etc., renders that portion of the movie shallow and pointless. The acting lineup, led by Angelina Jolie as Acid Burn, Jonny Lee Miller as Crash Override, and Matthew Lillard as Cereal Killer, is passable at best; you could nicely call it an appropriate homage to the movie's camps style. The plot is so ludicrously silly that it's not worth thinking about. But wait, this is a video pick, right? There must be something worth seeing here, or I wouldn't have picked the movie.

What makes Hackers a worthwhile rent (and we're talking for a Sunday afternoon) is its function as a time capsule of geekdom, a sociological study on the emerging world of the Internet and electronic communication. Hackers is the web surfer's Top Gun, an advertisement for its own system of values and the achievements possible if you adhere loyally to its way of life. The movie romanticizes the idea of being a hacker until little or no truth remains, but the manner in which it does so speaks volumes about the expectations modern culture places on its teens, and the perception of teens that they are inheriting a technological world that previous generations cannot possibly understand.

Also, it's frickin' hilarious. Thrill to the excitement as the team of hackers drools over Acid Burn's "fly laptop," with its 28.8 bps modem. Killer refresh rate! Hackers is like one of those episodes of Star Trek that's so bad it's good, and for anyone who, like myself, is willing to admit belonging at least partially to the ranks of computer nerds everywhere, it's a heart-warming and giggle-inducing glance in the mirror.

COURTESY HOLLYWOOD PICTURES COMPANY

Johnny Lee Miller, as Dade Murphy, also known as Crash Override, also known as Zero Cool, can hardly believe how fun life as a hacker is.

The girl next door knocks again

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

As the completely unpromising Gun Shy sets to open today, the question, "What ever happened to Sandra Bullock?" leaps to mind. Upon closer examination however, the question answers itself. Sandra Bullock has never made two good movies.

In fact, Sandra Bullock is, or at least was, one of the few "it girls" who came into American popular culture's consciousness without doing one remarkable thing. Think about it. Sarah Michelle Gellar became popular after the smart, witty "Buffy" TV series launched. Cameron Diaz rocketed to fame after the crude, but hysterical There's Something About Mary. Neve Campbell rode Scream to "it girl" status. Jennifer Love Hewitt did the same with I Know What You Did Last Summer. More recently, Keri Russell took on the role of "Felicity" and her golden curls won her media acclaim. After "Dawson's Creek" hit the WB, Katie Holmes pierced cameras with her puppy dog brown eyes and tough tomboy attitude. Angelina Jolie won an Emmy for "Gia"; Rolling Stone immediately making her "it girl" and sex goddess.

Sandra Bullock has done nothing like this. After the little known Fire on the Amazon, during which Sandra has several racy scenes, she did Demolition Man. The film starred then A-stars Sylvester Stallone and Denzel Washington, as well as a young Sandra Bullock. It was a less than impressive fare to be generous.

Her next film, Speed, was the one which made Sandra an "it girl." Now, I liked Speed. Speed was an excellent action film, and I could even argue that it rejuvenated the genre, especially for the '90s. However, I would hardly call the film groundbreaking or significant—certainly not good enough to thrust the bubbly Bullock into the limelight going on six years now.

COURTESY HOLLYWOOD PICTURES COMPANY

Even Sandra Bullock doesn't know why we like her.

What followed Speed was a sea of dumb thrillers, bad romantic comedies, and unknown flops. In fact, it seems as if Sandra Bullock has been making the same three or four movies over and over again since Speed debuted.

Based on the John Grisham novel, A Time to Kill was probably her second best movie. Her only contribution to it was perhaps a sleek, tight wardrobe.

While You were Sleeping, with Bill Pullman, Two If by Sea, with Denis Leary, and In Love and War, with MacKenzie Austin, were all the same film. That was the rumor circulating about anyway. Nobody ever saw any of the box office bombs to confirm it. The Net joins Speed 2: Cruise Control, in the mindless action films starring Sandra Bullock category. At least, The Net had a somewhat futuristic vision of society and new technology. Speed 2 was set on a cruise ship! They brought back the romantic interest rather than the action hero. It will go down as perhaps the worst sequel ever made.

In other less than desirable career choices, Sandra made the Southern melodrama drawl, Hope Floats, the contrived estrogen fest, Practical Magic, and the offbeat romantic comedy, Forces of Nature. And that's it. That's Sandra Bullock's career. Well, that, and the romantic comedy Gun Shy with Liam Neeson, opening today.

So, why is Sandra Bullock still making films? Believe it or not, it's because she's a box-office draw. Bullock currently holds the longest streak for opening a film over $13 million dollars (six films), starting with Speed 2.

For some reason, America loves Sandra Bullock. Maybe it's her outgoing personality, or charming insticism, or simply her pure honesty, but people pay to see her films. Unfortunately, none of the qualities, which make Sandra Bullock such an attractive performer for many people to see, resonate in any of her predictably lame, formulaic movies.

Never having done anything to improve her career, Sandra Bullock is still riding the wave and the "it girl" status created by Speed. After Gun Shy opens though, this wave is almost sure to come crashing down.

COURTESY NEW WORLD THEATER

The New World Theater's Clothes

This weekend the New World Theater will fuse elements of Indian dance, music and poetry in their new production "Clothes" at Mt. Holyoke's Rooke Theatre on Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

amc
There is a Difference!
Balance in Golden
No child under 6 in any PG-13 or R rated film after 6PM.
Mt. Farms 4 • Mt. Farms Mall
584-9153

THE HURRICANE: R
Today at (4:10 @ $3.50) 7:10 10:10
Sat 1:00 (4:10@ $3.50) 7:10 10:10
Sun at 1:00 (4:10 @ $3.50) 7:40
Mon - Thur at (4:40 @ $3.50) 7:50

SCREAM 3: R
Today at (4:30 @ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sat at 1:20 (4:30 @ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sunday at 1:20 (4:30 @ $3.50) 7:50
Mon - Thur at (5:10 @ $3.50) 8:00

STUART LITTLE: PG
Today at (4:40@ $3.50) 7:20 9:20
Sat at 1:30 (4:40@ $3.50) 7:20 9:20
Sun at 1:30 (4:40 @ $3.50) 7:30
Mon - Thur (5:20@3.50) 7:40

THE GREEN MILE: R
Today at 7:40
Sat at 7:40
Sun at 7:30
Mon - Thur 7:40

PLAY IT TO THE BONE: R
Today at (4:20 @$3.50)
Sat at 1:10 (4:20 @ $3.50)
Sun at 1:10 (4:20 @ $3.50)
Mon-Thur (4:50 @ $3.50)

$3.50 'Twi-lite' Show Daily!
Special Engagement
No Passes or Coupons

JUNIORS AND SENIORS
Thinking about a Career in Social Work?
Wonder which School of Social Work to Attend?
COME HEAR
CAROLYN DUBOIS
1974 U-MASS Sociology Major Graduate
Now at the Smith School of Social Work
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8TH
7:30-9:00 PM
MACHMER W-15

WIRELESS Hook-Ups
•Motorola Pagers:
As low as $99 for pager and one year of service
•Largest selection of prepaid phonecards as low as 1¢ min
Great international rates as well.
We take phone orders
•100% digital cellphones (PCS)
starting at $49
Prepay option available
Free weekend offer with contract
All phones have voicemail, caller ID, call waiting, call forwarding, and phone back.

Goten
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE
Call for reservations and hours of operation
Come sit and relax as our chefs exhibit their talents in preparing for you the finest foods at your table.
For nearly 30 years our large shoji tables and private dining room have made goten a favorite for birthdays, anniversaries, meetings, and private functions of all kinds.
Affordable seafood, chicken, and steak dinner specials are available daily except Saturday, so come in today and try our fine Japanese cuisine.
Now accepting OCMP
Open for Valentines Day
104 Old Amherst Road • Off Route 116 • On bus route
Sunderland • (413) 665-3628

...U HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT HOW MUCH YOU'RE DRINK...
...THER OR NOT IT'S A PROBLEM, WE CAN HELP YOU FIGURE IT OUT.
...EN WAS YOUR LAST SOBER WEEKEND?
FOR A CONFIDENTIAL APPOINTMENT
Contact REAP @ 545-0137
(Residential Education Alcohol Program)
REAP is a UMass Student Assistance Program located in Moore Residence Hall Lobby, Southwest.

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in
AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Excellent Salary & Benefit Package After Graduation
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From

- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!
FRESHMEN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@acad.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE R.O.T.C

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE • JOIN US!

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons aat www.cantones.com

Klub Kai is now booking private parties (birthday, crash or date party, fundraisers, graduation party etc) for spring semester 2000. Call early for choice of dates. Cheng @ 586-2774 after 4:30pm.

Don't think sororities are for you? Come and see why we're different. Iota Gamma Upsilon is holding open rush Sun 2/6, Mon 2/7, Tues 2/8 @ 6pm. 406 North Pleasant St, white house across from Hillel. For more info please call Danielle 253-7573.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

1 Bedroom apartment for rent. Amherst Center location. $530/month. Available 2/1. 253-4463.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Toyota Celeca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636.

'88 Honda Accord for sale. Good condition. Low mileage. $2000 o/bo. Call 253-9195.

1989 Honda Accord LXI Green 4 dr sdn. 181,000 miles. $2300.00 Call 323-4323.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL!
IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Trail's End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts and crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film). Waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON_LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Cool Candy Company on bus route in Amherst seeks outgoing phone sales reps. You can work around your classes with our flexible schedule: choose one of two daily shifts(four hours each), minimum of three shifts per week. Shifts are 10am-2pm or 1pm-5pm. Earn up to $10 an hour with base salary plus commision. Requires some sales experience but personality is most important. Don't miss this great opportunity-call Beth right now to set up an interview! 1-888-556-5599.

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPAIGN JOBS with the Sierra Club. Full-time and part-time. $300-400/wk. Call Casey 256-6434.

New Students Program. Public Relations Jobs. Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Office for tour guides, student admissions reps, and summer orientation counselors. Deadline is Feb. 11, 2000.

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

EMPLOYMENT

Two paid internships available. Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots activism and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a spring internship position (with stipend) for you. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous RY, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.collegeproedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Computer desk for sale. 1yr old. Perfect condition. $150/neg. Call Mandi 256-4915.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bedroom house 10 minutes from Amherst center. Available NOW. $300/month. 256-2384.

Upstairs bedroom in Puffton. $333?month inc. Inc. heat and hot water. On bus route. Needed ASAP call (413) 348-3393.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 or 2 people to sublet master bedroom in 3 bedroom. Mill Valley Apts. Call Maura 256-6777.

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

STEREO EQUIPMENT

BUY/SELL/TRADE. Large selection, used/reconditioned components/speakers. Great prices. Satisfaction guaranteed. PA/DJ equipment too. A/V Exchange 253-5312.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Advertise here in The Collegian
Call us NOW at 545-3500!!

Five College Community Calendar

FRIDAY, FEB. 4

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

SATURDAY, FEB. 5

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable will perform an improvisational comedy show at 8 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center. Anyone is welcome.

Theater – A collaborative theater piece entitled "In Relation To" will be presented in the Curtain Theater at the Fine Arts Center at 2 and 8 p.m. The event is sponsored in part by the UMass Arts Council. Call 545-3490 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed acappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – The Fluency Support Group meets the second Wednesday of each month. The first meeting is Wednesday, Feb. 9 at 7 p.m. in the Arnold House, room 11. Contact Lisa Hannahan at 577-4023 for more details.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Workshops – UVC-TV 19 workshops begin Feb. 8 from 7-9 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend and get hands-on experience at the station located behind the Hatch in the Student Union. Space is limited. Call 545-1336 for more information.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions
University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Good to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	26	CNN SI
8	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel	28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WCCH & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
14	International	33	TV Land
15	Unitess Academic TV	34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 4, 2000

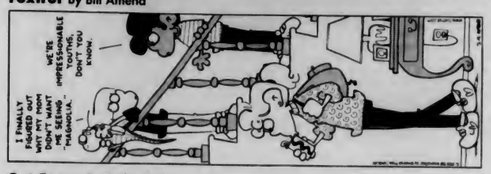
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Lords of the Mafia (In Stereo)		Nova "The Diamond Deception"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Kids-Darndest	Cosby	Miss USA Pageant (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Kids-Darndest	Cosby	Miss USA Pageant (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	★★ "Pulcher" (1997, Comedy) Robin Williams. (In Stereo)		20/20				News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Jamie Foxx	Jamie Foxx	Steve Harvey	For Your Love	News		News	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Reunion"		Dateline "New Family"		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	4	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	★★ "Sinking Distance" (1993, Drama) Bruce Willis. (In Stereo)		News		Real TV (R)		Change-Heart	Carolina
WVIT	30	News		NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Providence "The Reunion"		Dateline "New Family"		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World's Wildest Police Videos		Greed: The Series (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Reunion"		Dateline "New Family"		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Doo Wop 50 (R) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	★★ "Flubber" (1997, Comedy) Robin Williams. (In Stereo)		20/20				News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	★★ "Sinking Distance" (1993, Drama) Bruce Willis. (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)				Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★½ "Overboard" (1987, Comedy) Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell.						★★★ "Deceived" (1991, Suspense) Goldie Hawn,
A&E	43	L.A. Law "The Wizard of Odds"		Law & Order "Pinocchio"		Biography: Donna Quinlupeis		Investigative Reports (R)		Poirot		Law & Order "Savages"
CNN	10	Worldview	Moneyline News hour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Duckman	Duckman
DISC	49	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery	"Rattlesnakes"	On the Inside: Miss America		News	Discover Mag.	Storm Warning!		On the Inside: Miss America
ESPN	45	Sportscenter		Outside the Lines		NFL Dream Session (R)		Winter X-Games (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Natalie Cole"		Chicago Hope "Cabin Fever"		"Heart of a Child" (1994, Drama) Ann Jillian, Michele Greene.				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	53	MTV Jams	Real Sulls	Celebrity	News	Say What Kns	TRL Wanna	TRL (In Stereo)		Daria (R)	Daria (R)	Undressed (R)	Loveline
NICK	51	All That	Catalog	Henry and June Jam (In Stereo)				Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	Love Lucy	M.T. Moore
SCIFI	66	Sliders (In Stereo)		Sliders "Pilot" (In Stereo)		Sliders "Pilot" (In Stereo)		Sliders "Seer"		Lexx: The Series "Luvliner"		Sliders "Pilot" (In Stereo)
TLC	26	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "After Life" (R)		Dangerous Pursuits (R)		Hunt for Amazing Treasures		Curse of the Hope Diamond		Dangerous Pursuits (R)
TNT	42	In the Heat of the Night		ER "Finals Show" (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Sacramento Kings at Indiana Pacers. (In Stereo Live)						NBA Basketball: Suns at SuperSonics
USA	69	Baywatch (In Stereo)		JAG (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger		★★★ "Red Rock West" (1993, Suspense) Nicolas Cage.				"Weekend at Bernie's II" (1993)
HBO	59	(5:00) ★★★ "9 to 5" (1980) "PG"		Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		★½ "Soldier" (1998) Kurt Russell. "R"		★★ "Executive Power" (1997, Suspense) Craig Sheffer. "R"					Dennis Miller
MAX	60	★★★ "Without Limits" (1998, Biography) Billy Crudup. "PG-13"				"Legal Deceit" (1997) Lela Rochon. "NR"		"I Still Know What You Did Last Summer" (1998)				Second Skin	Erotic
SHOW	56	(4:45)		★½ "Haunted Honeymoon" (1986) Gene Wilder.		★ "Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare" (1991)		Movie News		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits	"Sin Desp."	Red Shoe



Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You'll have to clarify your plans before putting them into motion today. Get together with friends to determine just what is possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – There's no reason to think that this day cannot pan out exactly as you had planned, but you must leave room for some improvisation during the evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may have to endure a slow start today before things begin to pick up and give you what you're really after. Don't get careless later on.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You'll win a good deal of praise today as you accomplish something others have only attempted. Some will be critical, but you know the truth.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You will have to chip away at an obstacle slowly today before you will be able to move past it. Progress may be slowed, but only for a while.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Someone is likely to tell you a secret before the day is out, and things may become quite complicated as a result.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Don't let anyone get a jump on you today. Make a quick start yourself, and you should be able to keep all the competition safely at a distance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Do you want to start early today, or work later than usual tonight? A decision will have to be made that affects your schedule all day long.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may discover that someone who claims to be a critic is really a fan, and may soon become a long-term supporter you can count on.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Surprises are in store today, but you mustn't be premature in making decisions. Expect things to be "routine," but be ready for anything!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A question of taste mustn't be allowed to drive a wedge between you and a friend. There's room in this big world for all kinds!

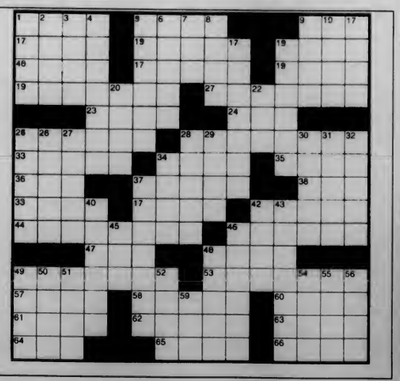
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're in search of a hero, when in fact you may not have to look any further than your own back yard. Someone you know fits the bill.

Quote of the Day

"Shut your mouth and know your role."

–WWF Wrestler The Rock

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 Longtime buy
5 Sliders' place
9 Devotee
12 Imported car
13 Maui feasts
15 — one's time
16 Hair spirits
17 Angry
18 Spend time in a hammock, perhaps 19 Crimson Tide's sch.
21 Like kids on Dec. 25
23 "Drive" one
24 Cap
25 Rocks formed from clay
28 Stack of logs
33 Uncultivated wagons
34 Algerian port
35 Shut noisily
36 Toronto's prov.
37 Takes it easy
38 Mideast sheikdoms
39 Harem rooms
41 Makes a choice
42 Handed out cards
44 Like a bruise
46 "Crocodile —"
47 Road hazard
48 Singing voice
49 Sailors' spacecrash
53 Lured
57 Captain's cry
60 Speedy
61 Hosiery
62 Russian planes
63 Theater area
64 Unresponsive
65 Lusty food
66 Wide-spouted pitcher
68 Hot tubs

DOWN
1 It's a long story
2 Breaks in the action
3 Brainstorm
4 Like some horses
5 Bird calls
6 Virginia cavorns
7 Battery size
8 Type of swan
9 Decree
10 Woodworking tool
11 Lack
14 Church employees
15 Airships
20 Parties and dinners
22 No gentleman
29 A' one tet
26 Certain Indian
27 Lead to the —
28 Indignation
29 Boors
30 Epic by Homer
31 Dapper
32 Hem it up
34 "Sorry"
40 Hangs around
42 Ooze
43 Do some cleaning
43 Navel officers
45 Hiss
46 Tamper
48 Farmhouse color
49 Boot part
50 Buckeye State
51 Cartoon bear
54 Temple
56 Wings
58 Columnist Bombeck
59 Society newcomers
59 Handle roughly

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Wanna be a Collegian photographer???
There will be a meeting Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom for all returning photographers and anyone interested in joining the photo department.

No menu today. Call 545-2626...maybe it's tropical oasis night.

Collegian Staff
Night Editor: Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Brett Mauser
Production Supervisor: Alan Basque
Production Staff: Vlad Zakushevskiy, Elana Premack

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Minutemen hope to lasso 'Horns

After rout, UM hopes to "rebound" against Texas

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Only a day stands between the Massachusetts men's basketball team and what has now become the biggest game of its season. The contention can certainly be made that each contest from here on out sits doused in importance but when the Minutemen take the floor tomorrow afternoon against No. 13 Texas, morale becomes nearly as important as a victory.

The mood at the Mullins Center rode quite the roller coaster Tuesday night when Temple came calling, but unfortunately, the pandemonium was only temporary. The Owls quickly disposed of the Minutemen, 75-48, sending much of the crowd home long before the final buzzer had sounded.

This one hurt. So much was made of the Minutemen's recent rise to just 1 1/2 games out of first in the Atlantic 10 East, but UMass head coach James "Bruiser" Flint believes too much is being made of the loss.

"We just lost to a great team," Flint said. "They rebound well and they play great defense. They didn't let [Monty] beat them so we had trouble scoring."

The Longhorns (14-6 overall, 6-2 Big 12) are looking for redemption as well, after being handed a brutal 24-point loss to Oklahoma Monday night, marking their worst defeat of the season. The loss puts further damper on an already suspect road record for UT, as the 'Horns are 2-5 away from the Erwin Center. However, Texas comes equipped with one of the nation's brightest stars, 7'0" center Chris Mihm. The Austin native stayed home to play for his hometown 'Horns and averages 18 points and 10 rebounds. Last year in the second-ever meeting between UMass and Texas, a 76-65 UT victory, Mihm torched the Minutemen for 20 points and 17 rebounds.

MEN'S B-BALL
UMASS VS. TEXAS
TOMORROW 3 PM
91.1 FM-WMHA
BRETT MAUSER-PLAY
AARON SAYKIN-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW

"Mihm's the best center in the country and if he leave to go pro, he's a top five pick," Flint said.

Texas' girth hardly stops there. Gabe Muoneke scored 18 in last season's triumph, dropping nine of 16 from the floor to complement Mihm's breakout. In fact, the Longhorns' three leading scorers are also the leading rebounders for Rick Barnes' squad.

With that in mind, UMass must amend its ways after an embarrassing performance on the glass against Temple. The Owls outrebounded the Minutemen 48-20 and capitalized with a 15-0 advantage in second-chance points.

"We definitely have to make it crowded in the paint for them," Flint said. "We have to make their perimeter guys make some shots."

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Jonathan DePina and the men's hoop squad will face a tall order when No. 13 Texas invades the Mullins Center tomorrow.

UMass takes on SCU as Wolverines await

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow at 1:00 p.m., the No. 10 Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will take on Southern Connecticut University in Boyden Gymnasium. Southern Connecticut is normally an easily defeated team for the Minutemen, but according to head coach Roy Johnson, SCU has a few tricks up its sleeve this year.

"They got a few great recruits last year," Johnson said. "But we're going forward with our best lineup. We can't count out Southern Connecticut as a team. Some guys on their team are very good and I think there will be some great performances."

This is the last meet the Minutemen will have before the Michigan Wolverines, the defending national champions, come to town. But Johnson feels his team is ready for the challenge, and plans on his squad posting some high scores this weekend.

"We're in great shape," said Johnson. "I'm pretty optimistic and I'd like to see our guys make the most of this meet. We've got some talented kids, but practice makes perfect. The guys seem to be a little slow during workout, but hopefully they can clean up their routines a bit more and get it together for the meet."

This weekend's dual meet also marks the last time senior co-captain Jeff LaVallee will compete before he goes off to this year's Winter Nationals. If he performs well and makes the U.S. National Team, LaVallee will have a realistic shot in making the 2000 Olympic Team. "I think it's really exciting to see a kid who could make the Olympics and this is his last meet before Winter Nationals," Johnson said. "It would be really nice to have people come to the meet and cheer him on." And to add another award to his large collection, the Stafford Springs, Conn. native was named UMass/WHMP Athlete of the Week on Tuesday.

LaVallee captured five events in last week's domination of M.I.T. and Vermont, taking five first-place finishes en route to a UM victory.

But LaVallee is not the only weapon for the Maroon and White. Junior Bryan McNulty could easily tumble his way to a first place finish on the floor exercise, and freshman Justin Hammar could take the gold on the pommel horse. If history repeats itself, junior Mike Alexander could be one of the top scorers on high bar and vault, and junior Andy Leis, who holds the second highest UMass score on pommel horse (9.85), can be a great threat this weekend as well.

"The guys are doing a lot of great things," Johnson said. "There are a lot of upgrades [to the routines] we're doing. [Freshman] Ben Jacobs has a few skills added to his p-bar set that should up his score. [Junior] Clayton Kent's p-bars are coming along, too. As a freshman, he was very skilled on floor, but was lacking in the other events. But he's been working hard on upgrading his difficulty. He's very clean and looks like a world-class gymnast."

The Minutemen seek to put all of their talent together to bring in a big home score this weekend, and to gain the experience necessary to take on Michigan in two weeks.

UMass hockey to play a pair

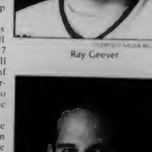
BU, Lowell prepare to invade Mullins Center

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

When the schedule for the Massachusetts hockey team was announced last summer, it was inevitable that the Minutemen would get to this point on their 34-game slate.

With eight games remaining in the regular season, UMass (10-13-3, 4-10-2 in Hockey East) is about to embark on a stretch in which it will face seven foe 10 teams in the next month.

But first things first. This weekend, the Minutemen will host Boston University tonight, 7 p.m.] and UMass-Lowell Sunday, 2 p.m.] in a pair of games that could very well determine how the locals will fit into the Hockey East puzzle as the season winds down.



Two wins would easily separate the Maroon and White from clubs like Merrimack, Providence College and Lowell. But two losses, however, might just have UMass looking up at the rest of the teams in the conference when it heads up to Orono, Maine next weekend to face the Black Bears.

Boston University comes into the William D. Mullins Center tonight sitting atop the conference and ranked No. 4 in the nation. The Terriers overtook New Hampshire for the top spot last weekend by taking three of four points from the Wildcats.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Ray Greever

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jay Shaw

Although it has rebounded mightily from a 2-5 mark to open the season, the Beantown school [15-6-6, 10-1-5 in Hockey East] has been tested twice by the Minutemen this season. The Terriers posted a pair of one-goal victories on the weekend of Dec. 3 and 4. However, since the turn of the calendar to the new millennium, Boston University is unbeaten (4-0-4).

The Terriers are led by forwards Tommi Degerman (12 goals-16 assists-28 points), Carl Corrazini (14-12-26), Chris Heron (11-15-26) and Dan Cavanaugh (6-19-25). In addition, goaltender Ricky DiPietro is the reigning Hockey East Rookie of the Week and is solid between the pipes.

Lowell will make the trip to Amherst on Sunday with the hopes of winning the Alumni Cup outright for the third straight season. However, if the Minutemen defeat the Riverhawks, then the season series will be split right down the middle at 1-1-1.

The Riverhawks upended the Minutemen 3-0 last Sunday afternoon at Tsongas Arena. With the win, Lowell moved into eighth place in the conference.

Top scorers for Lowell include Chris Bell (8-15-23), Yorick Treille (7-8-15) and Ed McGrane (4-11-15). Goaltender Cam McCormick was on the winning end of the shutout last weekend for Lowell.

The Minutemen will need a strong team effort to earn all four important Hockey East points this weekend. Leading the way offensively for UMass is junior alternate captain Jeff Turner (11-14-23), senior alternate captain Jeff Blanchard (8-15-23) and freshman Tim Turner (3-13-16).

Junior goaltender Markus Helanen will look to reach the double-digit mark in victories this weekend. The Vantaa, Finland native has a 9-10-1 record in 20 games this season.

Sequel unlikely as first conference win has Temple geared for Minutewomen

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

If Temple is still as bad as it was last week, then the members of the Massachusetts women's basketball team may want to attend church for a little absolution before they kill the Owls again.

When the Minutewomen (9-11, 6-3 Atlantic 10) travel to Philadelphia tomorrow – the city of brotherly love – they might not be received with open arms by a Temple team they turned into a human sacrifice last Thursday at the Mullins Center, 69-42.

But the Owls' miserly play may not necessarily appear tomorrow. Despite most preconceived notions about a Temple slaughter, this contest has the potential to develop into a crusade.

In all fairness, things have changed for both teams since their last meeting. UMass ought to give a hoot about the Owls, who actually won their first A-10 Conference game of the season with a 68-49 win at Rhode Island on Jan. 29. And while Temple (6-14, 1-8 A-10) just might be riding the laurels of its over-the-hump win, the Minutewomen could still be feeling the after-effects of an exhausting loss to St. Joseph's last Saturday.

UMass led at the half of that contest before falling 62-49 to the Hawks, who extended their lead in the A-10 East Division to two games over the Minutewomen. Although a week of practice has allowed UMass the necessary time to forget about St. Joe's and concentrate on Temple, it's obvious that thoughts of the defeat continue to linger, as some of the players are intent on atoning for the recent defeat.

"In the second half against St. Joe's, we kind of went on a mental vacation," sophomore forward Nekole Smith said. "They hit some big shots, but they just more or less capitalized on our mental mistakes."

In their first meeting against the Owls, the Minutewomen took advantage of horrendous Temple shooting (20.5 percent) and were under little pressure to play mistake-free basketball. Yet in their win over the Rams, the Owls scorched the nets at a 47.6 percent clip.

On the other side of the ball, the Owls must contend with a UMass squad that had been promising an up-tempo game since the preseason, a game that only recently seems to be fully under control. The Minutewomen have been successful in distinguishing between the situations when they should or should not run.

"Tempo has been an up-and-down thing for us this year," said Smith, who has been UMass' best scoring threat in the controlled offense. "Sometimes we'll look to speed up the game, and sometimes we'll try to slow it down and set up the offense. Especially in the post play, we'll look for the high-low. That's something that has been there for us a lot this year, and we've definitely utilized that."

UMass will look to capitalize on a Temple defense that has allowed its opponents to shoot nearly 50 percent from the field and to score over 66 points on average.

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Fantastic freshman Jen Butler will be one player looking for a big game Sunday when the Minutewomen trek to Philadelphia for a date with Temple.

Seven seniors wrap up against Fordham

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Currently standing at 6-4 before its last meet of the season, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team will attempt to quell the Fordham Rams in the Minutewomen's final home meet of the season. It takes place Saturday at noon at Rogers Pool. Fordham women's swimming has taken three out of its last four meets with its sole loss only being decided by a mere eight points. The Rams' record is at 6-5.

"Fordham is a much improved team from last year," said head swimming and diving coach Bob Newcomb. "They have some very talented freshmen in and they are definitely a more formidable opponent then they have been in years past."

Yet, the Massachusetts women of the water are not about to go belly up when faced with the surging Rams swimming program. Although bearing a similar record, the Minutewomen hold a first place finish at the Rhode Island Invitational, and two of their losses came against the strong swimming programs of the Universities of Miami and Connecticut.

"The sheer volume of more talented athletes is definitely going to help us and I think diving is definitely going to help us," said Newcomb when asked about what factors will possibly tip the scales in the Minutewomen's favor on Saturday."

These positive aspects can be named as easily as those women who have wreaked havoc on the competition this season. Sophomores Anne Dettloff has and Andrea Kazanjian have frequently placed and won their events, sometimes winning more than once in the same meet. Junior Sarah Newell has been a dominant force in the breaststroke event and recently recovered Becky Hunnewell, out for some of the season with a shoulder injury, has made her presence felt since her comeback.

Freshman Kate Allery and Junior Robin Velona have performed admirably in the diving events.

Senior Elizabeth Risotto, who has commanded the backstroke event this season, is another a powerful force steering UMass towards a win in the final home meet. The meet against Fordham is Senior Day, marking the last time the seniors will compete in front of their home crowd. Risotto will also be one of seven seniors with teammates Tricia Argentina, Lyndsay Crenshaw, Lia Lansky, Claudia Clement, Andrea Spencer, and Marci Hupp, who will be honored on Saturday in at the Minutewomen's final home meet.

UM seniors greet Rams at Rogers

By Farrah Alexander
Collegian Staff

The talent is there. Now all the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team has to do is apply it, as it did earlier in the season when the Minutemen pieced together a string of wins.

UMass has its sights set on defeating the Fordham Rams this Saturday at the Rogers Pool. The team has historically been successful against the Rams, taking victories in all four of their previous matchups.

There are special implications in Saturday's midday meet, as five seniors seniors Billy Getty, Bryan Grimes, Ed Hefferon, Henry Turner and Wes Wrightson compete in their final home meet.

Having lost their last two meets, against Maryland-Baltimore County, and most recently against Rutgers, the Minutemen will be looking to redeem themselves.

The Scarlet Knights took a stab at the Minutemen, defeating them 150-135 last weekend, in what was UM's second loss. But seizing an individual win for the Maroon and White was freshman Tommy Keane of Melrose, MA, who posted a first place finish in the 500 freestyle with a time of 4:42:16. Teammate Anthony Biachini also contributed to the Minutemen's effort, capturing second-place in the 500 free in only his third time competing in the event.

Junior Billy Brown of Fullerton, CA., and Mike Sabina also proved themselves valuable last Saturday, finishing one-two in both the 100 and 200-yard breaststrokes with times of 59:07 and 2:07.61 respectively.

Freshman Justin Houck grabbed the first-place spot in the 1000 freestyle with the top time of 9:49:41, while junior Chris Arsenault finished the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 51:07. Houck earned the Atlantic 10 Conference men's swimming Rookie of the Week title just two weeks ago for his impressive performance in the R.I. Invitational.

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVJ Issue 9

Monday, February 7, 2000

Interfaith service celebrates life of Martin Luther King, Jr.

AC holds annual event, Bernice King speaks

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Correspondent

An interfaith service celebrating the life and works of civil rights activist Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and featuring a speech by his daughter, the Rev. Dr. Bernice King, drew a large crowd to Johnson Chapel on the Amherst College campus yesterday.

The service, a traditional annual event on the campus, has drawn other notable speakers in past years, including Rev. Jesse Jackson and Coretta Scott King. Amherst College President Tom Gerety said yesterday that Martin Luther King, Jr. had spoken at Amherst College in Johnson Chapel years ago. Of the event's long-standing tradition, Gerety said, "We like to think of this hall as the Amherst home for the King legacy."

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Rev. Dr. Bernice King, daughter of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., spoke at Amherst College yesterday in the annual celebration honoring her father.

Attendees at this year's service, who hailed from a wide array of faiths, races and age groups, were greeted as they entered the chapel by a performance on traditional African instruments by a group of percussionists led by Abdul Baki, visiting Professor of Black Studies at Amherst College.

Before King's appearance, those gathered heard from other speakers, including clergy from different faiths and enjoyed musical performances from different traditions, including gospel. Secular elements of the service featured readings from the collected writings of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

David W. Blight, Professor of Black Studies at Amherst College, gave an introductory speech for King. He cited Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as one of the foremost figures in American history, and called his "I Have A Dream" speech "the Gettysburg Address of the twentieth century." Blight emphasized the importance of the service in continuing the work of the late reverend. In reference to Bernice King, Blight reflected on her highly public role as "the daughter of martyrdom," in which she emerged into the public spotlight with an address to the United Nations concerning South African apartheid.

She currently serves as the assistant pastor of Greater Rising Star Baptist Church in Atlanta, GA, overseeing the youth and women's ministry.

After this introduction, King took to the podium, introducing herself first as a member of the clergy. "I'm a preacher, and I don't apologize for that." She instructed her audience to respond to her speech as they would a minister telling them, "if it's true say 'amen,' if it's not, say 'Lord, help.'"

Once she had familiarized herself with the audience, who followed her instructions by responding with 'amens,' King began her speech by referring to the Amherst community with its five colleges as an intellectual, affluent one, and one she meant to inspire to activism.

"I have come to disturb the comfortable," she said. At the same time, she encouraged her listeners to relax and take away all they could from what she was about to say. "It is no accident that you are here," she remarked.

"We have advanced in many ways, ways we should be proud of," King went on. "But there is still much to be done. The enemy of success is the last success." She spoke of "brokenness" and "division" in modern society, saying that the difficulty in solving these problems lies not in a lack of action, but in the methods of solving them. According to King "many times when

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

The Amherst College Women's Chorus helped celebrate the occasion by singing such songs as "A Child Is Born," written by Nick Page.

Turn to KING page 3

Apparel Marketing major to be dropped in three years due to budget concerns

By Melissa Hommel
Collegian Staff

Three years from now...students at the University of Massachusetts will no longer be able to graduate with a degree in Apparel Marketing.

"We were notified by the Dean that we were being eliminated due to budget concerns," said Martha Baker, an undergraduate advisor and faculty member within the major.

She explained that both students and faculty were notified about the decision last week and that many were in a state of shock.

"Many students are very upset about this," she said.

The UMass major is currently made up of 98 percent women and is the only program offered to students within the entire state. Although only a rough estimate, Baker said she believed there were 2,000 students enrolled in the major. It is a division of the consumer studies program, which also includes family and consumer science programs. Students who are active in the major later seek jobs in the fashion industry in a wide variety of careers.

The major allows students to get hands-on experience in the world of fashion by offering internships with larger corporations such as The Gap, K Penney, T.J. Max, Fairchild Publications, London Fog and MTV House of Style. According to Baker, students who intern with these companies are later offered jobs following completion of college.

She also said the two full-time professors who teach within the major will likely be reassigned to another department. Many other staff members involved in the major are uncertain about the future.

"I am still trying to figure out what I am going to do," she said.

Baker explained that many students attended the school strictly for the purpose of becoming part of the major. She went on to say that the closest school offering a similar program was at the University of Rhode Island.

Senior Apparel Marketing major Mariah Bothwick also expressed dismay about the elimination of the major. She explained that she was specifically angry about the fact that students were not informed about the possibility that the major could be eliminated until the final decision had already been made.

"We weren't even notified about this beforehand," she explained. "We didn't even get a formal letter."

According to Bothwick, a large number of students in the major felt they were not able to voice their opinions on the subject.

"There wasn't enough time for us to take action," she said.

Another issue prevalent to the elimination of the major is the role of women on campus, Baker explained. Because the major is primarily made up of women, many of the females feel they are being discriminated against due to their gender.

Bothwick speculated that a primarily male-dominated major would not be eliminated, while a major made up of a large amount of women is not being taken as seriously.

"If this were Sports Management this would never have been done," she said.

Other students expressed disbelief that the major was being eliminated due to the sheer success of the program.

Sophomore Apparel Marketing major Tara Hughes explained, "It doesn't make sense. We hear from our professors that enrollment in the major is increasing. It is not that the interest is not there."

Bothwick made a similar statement commenting, "I am very disappointed. I think that this is a very good program."

A meeting with the dean of consumer studies is scheduled for anyone interested in speaking about the elimination of the major, and will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 8 at 6:30 p.m. in Morill 1-329.

The administration was not available for comment at press time.

New anti-AIDS drug studied

By Thomas H. Maugh II
Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO – One is called the "Berlin patient." Another is the "Washington patient." A third is the "Bethesda patient."

The three men, and a handful of others, were on the minds of AIDS researchers gathered last week because they have been able to achieve something that few others have – staying off expensive and burdensome AIDS drugs for long periods.

The men are walking advertisements for a new approach to HIV infections called structured treatment interruption, or STI, a controversial technique that at least some clinicians think can induce the immune system to combat the deadly virus.

STIs involve intermittently taking patients off their drug regimens in the hope that increased exposure to the virus during such periods will stimulate the immune system and thereby aid in control of the infection.

Although the approach has so far been tried on only a few patients, some researchers think it should receive much more intensive testing.

"We'll see hundreds more patients tested in the next few years," said Dr. Franco Lori of the Research Institute for Genetic and Human Therapy in Washington and Pavia, Italy.

STIs were but one of many themes discussed at the Seventh Conference on Retroviruses and Opportunistic Infections in San Francisco. Others included new classes of drugs to expand the arsenal of weapons against HIV, new members of the older drug classes that are more powerful, yet more readily ingested, and new insights into the long-term side effects of existing drugs.

Researchers were particularly excited about the gains that have been achieved to date and the prospects of even more drugs to come.

"We're really seeing tremendous benefits from our current treatment approaches," said Dr. Daniel Kuritzkes of the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver. "We've had a dramatic reduction in progression to AIDS."

His colleague at the center, Dr. Robert T. Schooley, said, "Each new drug makes all the others more useful" by increasing the number of drug combinations available.

The idea for STIs was planted last year when Lori reported on the Berlin patient, whose treatment with cocktails of AIDS drugs had twice been interrupted for a few weeks before it was permanently discontinued. Levels of the virus in his blood have not rebounded, as they have in virtually all other patients who have stopped taking their drugs.

Lori's report was greeted with much skepticism, but many researchers apparently went home and tried it on a few of their own patients.

"Last year, everyone thought we were crazy," said Lori's colleague, Dr. Julianna Lisziewicz. "This year, there [were] 34 abstracts about it" at the meeting.

Lori reported on a middle-aged government contractor, called the Washington patient, who went through six periods without therapy before finally halting it successfully.

Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institutes of Health has reported another success, the so-called Bethesda patient, and a couple of other teams have had some success as well.

But they also have had many failures. Overall, only about one out of every three or four patients on whom the technique has been tried has successfully halted therapy.

The rationale for the strategy is that intensive treatment with HIV drugs

Turn to DRUGS page 3

UM employee working hard for 64 yrs.

Dorothy Rose has seen UMass through many changes

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Correspondent

Dorothy M. Rose is the oldest employee at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. Born in 1916 in Amherst, she has worked at UMass for 64 years. She said she has lived her life simply, "taking one day at a time," answering phones and filing mail in offices all around campus.

When Rose first started working at the university, the school was still known as Massachusetts Agricultural College. Her father was the night watchman for the east side of campus, and seven nights a week he walked a 16 mile route around the college, getting paid $109 a month. Her uncle was in charge of the Maintenance Department and he helped her to get a job in the office straight out of high school, making 15 cents an hour.

"It wasn't good by any means," Rose said. "We never had any money. [But] If you wanted a job, you did what they wanted you to do and they paid you what they wanted to pay you, and if you didn't, then you didn't have a job."

Part of her daily routine was speaking with the maintenance workers when they would come to her office. "I filled out slips. That's what I did most of the time and then they would go to the treasurer's office," Rose said.

Rose has worked at UMass almost continually since that first job, except for a brief period when she worked as the secretary for the Dean of Faculty, Ali Hannigan Davis, at Smith College. However, she said she left the position because "there was no future over there as far as I was concerned." She returned to UMass as soon as there was a position open.

She has witnessed countless changes around campus and in town. "You went with it, when you were here day by day, you went with it and enjoyed it all."

She retired several years ago, but has since returned and is now working ten hours a week as a clerical assistant in the College of Food and Natural Resources' personnel office. She spends her time filing mail and answering phones.

Old age keeps some people from participating in the things they love. Rose is not one to be kept away from her work. "It's interesting to be here, and anything that people want, if I can, I do it," said Rose. "I like to work."

Rose hopes to be working here for several more years but she's not making any definite plans. For now, she said, "I am just taking one day at a time."

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

Texas wrecks us

The UMass men's basketball team fell to 16th-ranked Texas, 68-57, thanks to a woeful first half performance which saw the Minutemen score just 16 points. Check the back page for full coverage.

EXTENDED FORECAST

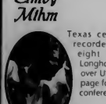
Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 42	HIGH: 26	HIGH: 42
LOW: 7	LOW: 13	LOW: 24

COURTESY OF WNEC.EDU

The Next Dr. Seuss Is Loose

Check out columnist Seth Koenig's latest lament-- in rhyme-- plus a word about recycling here at Umass. The Ed/Op page delivers!

EDITORIAL PAGE 4



The Third Time's a Scream

Turn to arts for a review of Wes Craven's latest and final touch on the Scream series. Also, Morphine stuns fans at Pearl Street and Snapcase's latest masterpiece. Arts. Read it or we'll threaten you on the phone and chase you in a ghost mask.

ARTS PAGE 7

Cimby Mihm

Texas center Chris Mihm recorded a school record eight blocks in the Longhorns' 68-57 triumph over UMass. Read the back page for more on this non-conference clash.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 7
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Inmate swap raises concerns

By Richard C. Paddock
Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — The Russian army triumphantly announced over the weekend that it had freed captured paratrooper Nikolai Zavarzin in a special forces operation carried out behind enemy lines in Chechnya.

Zavarzin appeared on state television Saturday evening, a few hours after the reported rescue, reassured his parents that he was fine, and said he wanted "to thank the people who helped me get out of there."

There was just one hitch: The Russian government had already announced, on Thursday, that Zavarzin was one of three prisoners of war released by the Chechen rebels in exchange for arrested Radio Liberty correspondent Andrei Babitsky.

Russian officials reached Sunday said they could not explain how Zavarzin could have been released in Thursday's prisoner swap if he remained a Chechen prisoner until Saturday. It also remained unclear why commandos would need to rescue the private if he was part of a negotiated trade.

The discrepancy underscored fears that the Russian government is not telling the truth about what happened to Babitsky, a ten-year veteran of the U.S.-funded Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty network.

Babitsky was arrested by Russian Interior Ministry troops near the Chechen capital, Grozny, in mid-January and was never permitted to contact his family or employers. Yesterday, more than three days after the supposed trade, Babitsky's wife and radio station still had not heard from him.

The rebels have said they know nothing about a prisoner exchange with the Russians. In an interview yesterday with the radio network, Chechen President Aslan Maskhadov said he was in touch with all the rebel commanders and could guarantee that Babitsky was not in Chechen hands.

Some of Babitsky's supporters fear that the correspondent was killed while in Russian custody, and that the prisoner swap – first announced by the Kremlin – was fabricated to cover up his death.

"I think it's highly unlikely, given his experience there, that in a three-day period he would not get to a telephone and contact us – unless he is unable to," said Jeff Trimble, broadcasting director for Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty.

In Washington, President Clinton's chief of staff, John Podesta, said the United States has "made strong protests to the Russian government" concerning the Babitsky case.

"We don't know his status, and we're obviously very concerned about it," Podesta said on "Fox News Sunday." "We have made our views known to the Russian government. We've pressed them on this."

The prisoner exchange was announced Thursday by Sergei V. Yastrzhembsky, the Kremlin's chief spokesman on Chechnya. He named Zavarzin and two other soldiers as the three men the rebels had let go in the trade for Babitsky. Later Thursday, Yastrzhembsky's office said that Zavarzin had been released earlier in the day, before Babitsky was turned over to the rebels.

On Friday, the government released an undated videotape shot by the FSB – the main successor agency to the KGB – that it said shows the exchange.

While the government has said that Babitsky wanted to participate in the exchange, he looks grim and worried in the video and at one point seems to be struggling to keep from crying.

The video shows him being handed over to an armed man wearing a mask who grabs him roughly, while two soldiers accompanied by a Russian in civilian dress walk past. There is no footage of the soldiers being released by the Chechens, their supposed captors are never shown, and none of the three men are named.

Father makes life-or-death decision

Iranian case takes on national importance

By Matthew McAllester
Newsday

TEHRAN, Iran – Around him, hundreds of people shouted for mercy. Hundreds of others called for punishment. And many more stood ready to react with violence. Ebrahim Mohebi felt the weight of his country's stability on his shoulders as he faced the very personal decision about whether to save the life of 17-year-old Morteza Amini Moqaddam, who stood a few yards away with a noose around his neck in a Tehran city square.

Mohebi's tragedy, a father's loss of a son in a street fight, had become a national issue. His personal choice – whether to spare the life of his son's killer or to watch the boy be raised into the cold morning air by his neck – had become unavoidably political. No ordinary citizen, Mohebi's son Shahid had been Basiji – a religious policeman. You simply do not kill a Basiji in Iran. And if you do, you can expect quick and final justice.

It was before 6 a.m. on Jan. 2. Under Islamic law, the father of the murdered man could overturn the court's ruling and spare Moqaddam's life. The minutes ticked by and still Mohebi said nothing.

It was because Shahid Mohebi, 24 when he died, was a member of the volunteer police force that is infamous for enforcing the country's religious laws that the case became a potential spark in the tinderbox that is contemporary Iran. With reformists and conservative politicians struggling for power in the parliamentary elections on Feb. 18, the people of Iran are also highly sensitive to power struggles between the old and the new in their daily lives and on their streets. Nearly everything seems at stake in Iran at the start of the new century – its cultural and political future, its standing in the world – and the country's politicians on both sides of the ideological divide are trying to negotiate that future without causing bloodshed.

With a flourishing arts and culture scene, an increasingly free press, an enormous generation of young people, and a vibrant if cautious group of reformist politicians desperate to take the reins of power, Iran is undergoing the kind of dramatic changes not seen since the Islamic Revolution in 1979. Still, hardly anyone in Iran appears to want violence, so even the most radical leaders are doing their best to avoid confrontation.

What both sides fear most nearly happened in July, when Basijis and students clashed in Tehran, sparking days of bloody riots that at one point seemed to be on the verge of turning into a new Iranian revolution – this one repudiating the harsher characteristics of the revolution that happened 20 years previously. The Mohebi case had the potential to cause another flare-up along the lines of the student riots, say politicians, observers, and people involved with the case.

"People have had enough," said Amir-Ali, 18, a young man who watched the case closely and is sick of the Basijis. "They're not scared anymore. Every Basiji's father has a Peugeot. I don't even have a bicycle to get home on. They take all the money."

"In Iran there are two opposite currents at the moment," said Mohammed Mehrabadi, 55, who is part of the committee that runs the mosque Ebrahim Mohebi attends. Fearing unrest, he urged his friend to save Moqaddam's life. "Although the current that is anti-Basiji and anti-government is minor, bear in mind that youths can clash. It's obvious that there are people who are probably against the regime and the Basijis are a great supporter of the government."

Students battle for rights at UMexico

By James F. Smith
Los Angeles Times

MEXICO CITY — When students first went on strike last April to protest new fees at the National Autonomous University of Mexico, there was an air of righteous struggle for free education at public universities in this poor country.

More than nine months later, as strikers at the barricades fight bloody skirmishes with students who want to go back to classes, that original lofty purpose is a fading memory. The shutdown at what was once one of Latin America's most prestigious universities has degenerated into a sullen, increasingly polarized, and dangerous standoff.

For the first time since the strike began, federal riot police entered a university building Tuesday night and broke up a daylong battle that left 57 people injured. Police arrested 248 people, most of them strikers and sympathizers – and later brought criminal charges against 171 – in a major escalation of what has become the most vexing political conflict in Mexico.

With negotiations still deadlocked after the latest talks between strikers and university authorities ended early Saturday, some fear the strike could end in an explosion of violence as the university administration loses patience and the dwindling cadre of strikers – leftist activists known as "mega-ultras" – grows evermore hard-line.

However the strike finally ends, both sides agree that it reflects a much larger dispute over the purpose of university education in Mexico. That debate is only likely to begin in earnest once the strike is over, when university students and faculty at last sit down in a planned congress that could shape public university education for decades to come.

The strike has already exacted a heavy price. Some of the 271,000 students at UNAM, as the largest university in the Western Hemisphere is known, have lost an entire academic year or have enrolled elsewhere. Others have furtively attended clandestine classes off-campus, working without computers or libraries.

The strike erupted April 20 after Francisco Barnes, then rector of the university, raised annual fees from two cents to about $145. Barnes soon agreed to withdraw the new fees, but the strikers' demands grew.

"The tuition fee at UNAM is like the price of bread in revolutionary France. It is our equivalent of the issue that framed the French Revolution," said Sergio Zermeno, an education analyst at the university's Institute for Social Science Research. "UNAM is the nucleus that reflects the whole universe of problems in Mexico."

Zermeno opposes the strike but foresees grave consequences if negotiations fail and the campus is retaken by force. Radical strikers "could even withdraw to become urban guerrillas if they are denied a space," he said. "Nobody is seeing the danger we face in the country."

The strikers' broad goal is to reclaim a system they feel is increasingly designed to provide a quality education for a small elite while training the majority of students for such jobs as running factories and tourist hotels. In this group's eyes, the fight for UNAM is part of the wider war against the market economy and perceived disparities it fosters.

For opponents of the university shutdown, the post-strike objective is nothing less than restoring the academic quality of an institution they feel has largely been surrendered to populist, left-wing ideologies at the expense of intellectual rigor.

The battlefield for this confrontation is the 3-square-mile campus that opened in 1954 in southern Mexico City as an educational mecca for the nation's brightest youth. The buildings are adorned with patriotic murals by David Alfaro Siqueiros and Juan O'Gorman. For now, though, the campus is almost deserted apart from the few hundred strikers still camped out in buildings within.

Turn to STRIKE page 3

Correction:

In Thursday's issue of the Daily Collegian (Feb. 3, 2000), the article entitled "Poly Sci professors eye election," contained incorrectly credited quotes. The quotes attributed to Jeffrey Sedgwick were actually those of George Sulzner, a professor from the political science department. The Collegian apologizes for this error.

TERESA CANINO RIVERA/ COLLEGIAN

Campus is great... and cold.

These students make their way around campus in the shadow of the Chapel while trying to avoid the cold.

■ King

continued from page 1

we approach brokenness and division, we approach from the head and not from the heart."

King reiterated her father's message of unconditional love and social responsibility for one's fellow man, tailoring this message for life at the turn of the millennium. She cited technological advances such as the Internet as a step in the right direction, but with the wrong results – "we have connected to each other by technology," she said, "but not in human relationships."

"It will be a great tragedy when we come to the end of our American journey and find that we may have been technologically correct, we may have been intellectually precise, and we may even have been economically secure, but in the area of human relationships, we have failed; we have not learned how to love as God loves," she said. "Our minds do not have the capacity, our technology does not have the capacity, and our money is not nearly enough." The statement was greeted with cheers and applause.

King also named three evils that she said she feels threaten American society – what she called spirits of arrogance and elitism, materialism and greed, and selfishness. Of arrogance and elitism, she said that American culture "bombards the human psyche" with ideas of racial and economic labels, classes, and limits.

According to King, this "bombardment" takes place most prominently in the classroom. In response to this, she said, "American history must be all people's history." The spirit of materialism and greed, King said, contributes to "economic injustice" in this country. She said she feels that King's protests for the redistribution of wealth in America are what made him a target for assassination, and that the problem still continues.

Finally, of selfishness, King remarked bluntly, "We just don't care about each other. We are so individualistically inclined that it's snuffing out America. What happened to social responsibility? We don't have time. It's all about me, myself, and I."

In conclusion, King encouraged listeners to break down the barriers between people and "operate in the spirit of unconditional love." Gesturing to the crowd gathered, King pronounced, "We came to America on different ships and boats. But we are all in the same boat now."

The responsibility for social change and unconditional love of one's neighbor, according to King, are imperative for everyone. "This is what is required of us," she said.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

King attracted quite a crowd yesterday at Johnson Chapel on the campus of Amherst College.

■ drugs

continued from page 1

reduces the level of the virus to such a low level in a patient's body that the immune system "forgets" about the virus and doesn't retain the capability of attacking infected cells.

When treatment is halted, the theory says, the amount of virus increases to levels high enough to stimulate the immune system into a protective reaction.

But high levels of the virus, of course, overwhelm the immune system and destroy the very cells designed to attack it. So the trick is to have enough virus present to stimulate the immune system without having too much available to overwhelm it.

One key piece of evidence supporting this idea comes from a group of intensively studied Kenyan prostitutes who had been repeatedly exposed to HIV but had not developed infections, even after many years. But after they retired, six of the women became HIV-positive, Dr. Sarah Rowland-Jones of Oxford University reported recently.

The theory is that continued exposure to HIV stimulated the women's immune systems sufficiently so that the virus was unable to gain a foothold. Once their bodies were no longer exposed regularly to the virus, however, immune surveillance stopped, allowing latent pockets of the virus, which previously had not caused a full-blown infection, to multiply explosively.

The Kenyan women apparently had an unusual immune response to the virus that allowed them to reject it when they were continually exposed. Lori and Lisziewicz think a similar effect can be achieved by using less powerful AIDS drugs that allow some virus to be exposed to the immune system.

They studied two groups of HIV-positive patients. One group of ten patients received the conventional cocktail therapy of three drugs, including a protease inhibitor, one of a powerful set of drugs introduced in 1995 that dramatically reduced progression to AIDS. The other group of ten received a less potent combination of the drugs hydroxyurea and didanosine, which reduced viral levels, but not as sharply as conventional therapy.

Lori and Lisziewicz planned regular eight-week drug interruptions, or holidays, for both groups – although therapy would be resumed if virus levels climbed significantly. All of those in the experimental group were able to make it through the first eight-week holiday, the researchers reported, but the majority of those receiving conventional therapy were not.

■ strike

continued from page 2

Makeshift barriers of building rubble and old tires block the entrances, and a spray-painted warning adorns the wall outside a hall renamed Che Guevara Auditorium: "If we lift the strike now, we will never get off our knees."

Miguel Sanchez, a student in the philosophy and letters department, was among the strikers waiting outside the hall for the weekly meeting of the General Strike Council.

"We are the dike; if the dike breaks, all the rest of the universities in Mexico will be flooded too," Sanchez said. "A defeat here will mean that we give the state an opening... They will dismantle what is the essence of a public university and establish a system that only feeds the needs of the big corporations in the private sector."

He sees better prospects if a deal is struck, whereas "the costs of a unilateral solution would be enormous, not just for UNAM but for Mexican society."

That view harks back to the October 1968 massacre of scores of protesting university strikers by the army in Mexico City. That event is seared into the public memory, and President Ernesto Zedillo has said the government will not use force to end the current UNAM strike – angering those who complain he is abdicating responsibility.

Outside the blocked gate near the engineering department, graduate student Alberto Rivera said he had sympathized with the strikers at first, "but what we wanted to achieve we have achieved. The university has withdrawn the payment scheme. Now the great majority supports ending the strike. A lot was won, but at this point it's just all losing and losing."

Highly controversial is the demand that the university reinstate the automatic admission of students from the network of huge "prep" schools that account for 102,000 of UNAM's student body. These automatic admissions meant that spaces for outside students were sharply limited each year. In 1997, automatic entry was replaced with minimum achievement levels.

Familiar sights

The eerie quiet of campus along with this tree seems to put the library on the set of a Tim Burton film.

The Daily Collegian is looking to hire Multicultural and Jewish Affairs editors.

cover your butt.
better yet, help cover your
[tuition].

College can mean maneuvering through a lot of different obstacles, but tuition payments shouldn't be one of them. In Army ROTC, you'll have a shot at a scholarship worth thousands. And make friends you can count on. Talk to an Army ROTC advisor today. We've got you covered.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK
Where do you see yourself this summer?
Choose A or B?

A. Sharing a trail with a mountain goat as you hike through snow capped glacier peaks?
B. Commuting in bumper to bumper traffic?

A. Meeting your new best friend under the "Big Sky" of Montana?
B. Spending the summer with the same old crowd?

A. Watching millions of stars & the northern lights on a clear, cool August night?
B. Spending hot & humid summer nights next to an air conditioner?.

If you answered "A" to any of the above, choose a summer in the "Last Best Place".

St. Mary Lodge & Resort
Glacier Park's Finest

We will be interviewing in Boston Tuesday February 15th for our 2000 summer season.
Call (800) 368-3689 today to schedule an interview.
Visit us at www.glcpark.com

University of Massachusetts Boston
Teach Next Year
Graduate College of Education

Question #1 Would you love to teach?
Question #2 Do you believe you can bring your talent and emerging expertise to high school students?
Question #3 Can you see yourself in a classroom of the future at a dynamic urban high school?

If your answer to all three questions is yes, consider becoming part of an active school-university partnership through enrollment in Teach Next Year at UMass Boston.

Teach Next Year offers :
- a one-year route to teacher certification and a master's degree through an experimental, experiential school-based program;
- a full year of graduate study at UMass Boston integrated with teaching at Boston's Dorchester High School;
- the first steps along your pathway to a career as a high school teacher.

Do you qualify?
Applicants must have a bachelor's degree in one of the liberal arts or sciences, or anticipate earning one by June. Teach Next Year is designed for college graduates who have records of leadership and achievement and who seek the opportunity to begin teaching in an urban high school. Persons of all backgrounds are encouraged to apply.

Costs?
Each Teach Next Year participant receives a full-tuition grant, a waiver of most fees, and a $10,000 graduate assistantship.

Priority consideration is given to applications completed by March 1, 2000. Please call or email us for more information:
617.287.7662
june.kuzmeskus@umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

UMASS
Student Speaker
Undergraduate Commencement

Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Undergraduate Commencement Speaker.

Who's Eligible?: Graduating Amherst campus senior (Class of 2000).

Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interest to graduating seniors as well as to parents and other guests. It should address your impressions and experience(s), both academic and extra curricular.

Format: Submit approximately three word-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to five minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.

Selection Process: A non-voting staff person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. Three to five individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.

Deadline: Wednesday, February 9, 2000, 4:30pm.

Submit Proposals To: Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

States and foreign policy

What do China, North Korea, Cuba, Switzerland, Nigeria, and Burma have in common? They are all countries that have been targeted with sanctions by individual states in the U.S. Indeed, in the face of State Department criticism, states – like Massachusetts – have passed laws which ban business with various companies that have business interests in countries with objectionable human rights policies.

Massachusetts jumped on a high horse a couple of years ago and passed a statute stating that companies with direct or indirect business interests in Burma could not compete for state contracts. This includes parent companies that have subsidiaries that do business in Burma, even if this business is in a totally unrelated line of work.

In November of 1998 this statute was struck down by a federal district court. In June of 1999 the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit also struck it down. Massachusetts has appealed to the Supreme Court, which has not heard the case yet.

While the goals of the Massachusetts legislature are laudable, the chosen course of action is unconstitutional and is potentially dangerous. States do not have the power to make foreign policy; only the federal government does. While the federal government often falls short of many citizens' expectations in its relations with countries where human rights violations are occurring, it is not the place of state governments to correct these shortcomings.

After all, the Constitution gives Congress the power to regulate foreign trade, and it is this argument to which the courts must return. There is no escaping the fact that Articles I and II of the Constitution ascribe the duties of foreign policy – such as regulation and taxation of foreign commerce and the definition and punishment of offenses against international law – to the president and Congress. Furthermore, Article I expressly forbids states to enter into treaties, alliances, agreements, or compacts with foreign powers.

These ideas on states' rights versus federal rights have their basis in the Federalist Papers written by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay to swing New York public opinion in favor of the Constitution.

Alexander Hamilton makes the point in one of them that any foreign policy action by a state would be ascribed the country as a whole; therefore the power to set policy should reside at the level of the federal government.

If this was not explicitly stated in the Constitution, one state could potentially bring the U.S. to war over a trade issue. Lacking the ability to declare war, the state would have its hands tied – which probably would not matter if the other country attacked the U.S., in which case the whole country would be embroiled in a war.

Another example illustrates how the U.S. could face conflict within and without. If one state were to refuse to do business with China, another state may join the first state. Eventually, there are ten or twenty states that don't want to do any business with China, and the U.S. faces both a conflict with China and an internal conflict that could lead to a serious division in the Union.

These issues are tricky for states because of globalization, which has given states a greater role in business and commerce. States compete with foreign businesses, host foreign consulates, and may have large numbers of immigrants from particular countries. Because of these factors, those who favor sanctions claim that state and local governments should take the lead in combating international human rights violations.

Furthermore, some may argue that states are merely filling the gap left by the federal government, which does not always seem to be sensitive to human rights issues and also has provided a lack of leadership on what states can and cannot do in these circumstances.

The Supreme Court will provide an important ruling on this matter. Given the Constitution that they are to protect and defend, only one conclusion seems inescapable. However, if the Supreme Court does decide against Massachusetts' statute, then it is up to the next president and the State Department to provide leadership on this issue.

We've got too much mail

I'll bet you thought I'd never come back. Okay, so I'm a little egotistical thinking that any of you really care that this is my first column of the semester. I'm actually glad that I'm writing on Mondays now, because last semester only three out of the five people on this campus who have classes on Friday read my columns. One of the three was blind and the other two just liked to laugh at my picture. But anyway, as usual you can look forward to a semester of me whining about practically everything. However, I think I'm a little older and a little wiser than I was a month ago. For instance, I haven't gone back to Hooters, even though my brother tells me that I'm some sort of a celebrity there now. And I'd just like to point out that I was the first person to warn people of those Pokemon toys that kids were choking on. But a lot of good my warnings did, since another person died. Damn Pokemon, and his damn balls!

Ryan Benharris

Anyway, it's gripe time. What am I mad about this week? Well when you think about the most hideous and awful things about this university, you may mention the pee in the stairways of Pierpont or the basketball coach, but you may look over the most evil aspect of all: recycling! That's right, much like people who walk slowly, people who throw things out of 27 story-building windows, and privatization of the campus center, recycling on the campus sends me into a tirade.

I have a special bond with the recycling program. As some of you may know, I'm an RA in Orchard Hill. Throughout RA training, the "absolute need to recycle" was crammed down our throats about three thousand times, until we all felt guilty about throwing away the filthy piece of rubbery DC chicken. We were constantly exposed to posters and speakers telling us of the privileges of recycling and the dangers of throwing things in the trash.

Now, to get things straight, I have nothing against recycling. It's good for the environment, and it prevents us from dying, and death is bad, so recycling is good. Also, I come from a town where the landfill is full and we are forced into mandatory recycling, so I'm no stranger to the ways that recycling works. What I do have something against is the slip-shod, second- rate way that this university chooses to pursue recycling programs. The people who try to educate students, and especially RAs about recycling are doing a good job. I commend them on their ability to try to spread a good word about something that's a good idea. However, I think there are some major flaws in the system.

During RA training, I volunteered to deliver the mail to the residents.

What I learned was appalling. There was literally almost one hundred pounds of junk mail that is sent through the university. Everything from credit card applications and flyers to postcards that were sent to every male resident in the resident halls advertising for an "unbeatable subscription price" for Playboy. Whoever is responsible for all of this crap, knock it off! It's not fair to the people who have to deliver the mail, and it certainly is not fair to the residents who are forced to receive all of the junk and then listen to me babble something about recycling in a floor meeting. To the people who want to get a kick-start in improving recycling at UMass, go after the university. Tell them that they need to stop the big businesses from sending us so much stuff in the mail because it's affecting everyone.

I'm more than happy to encourage people to recycle. I strongly recommend that you place the Collegian that you're reading right now in the proper recycling bin. My floor is awesome and they recycle a lot as well. I do not, however, expect to be harassed about recycling before authorities above me get the proper attention that is necessary. It's like Teddy Kennedy telling me to buckle my seat belt and not drink and drive.

I love the University of Massachusetts. I love the environment. I love my TV, and I love all of you. I'd hate to see everything go to waste because of poor recycling habits. However, if I get any more crap in my mailbox, it's going right in the trash where it belongs!

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

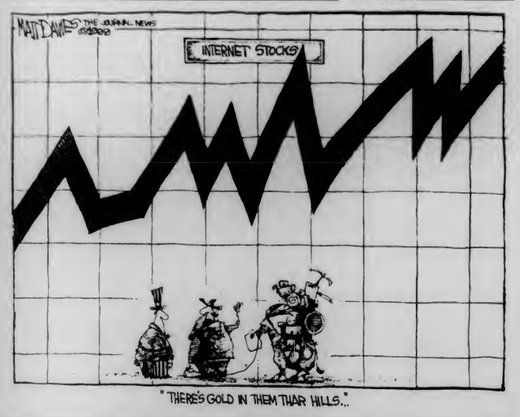
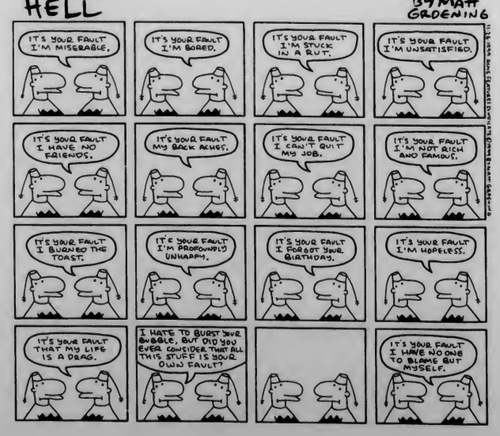
Ed/Op is always seeking random column submissions from students, faculty, and UMass staff on current, interesting topics that are well written and well organized. If you have any questions, call 545-1361 and ask for Gary or Alexis.

One class, two class – red class, blue class



I have a great story. Oh, do I? I do.
About some neat students, like me and like you.
This story won't teach, it has simply no use,
But it might be good fun told like Dr. Suess.
This tale is of kids from Boston, this town,
From Worcester, from Dartmouth, and clear all around.
This tale is of kids from all the UMasses,
This tale is of kids who can't get into their classes.
I signed up for Comm., and Anthro. and such,
But Whitmore said, "Uh-uh, you can't, there's too much.
Too many students like yourself have now tried.
Too many signed up, so poor you, you're denied."
I need just four classes to be known as full-time.
Isn't it funny how I'm bitching in rhyme?
Without my 12 credits I get no cash aid,
If I'm not a "real" student, I just don't get paid.
Here at UMass, to get a check they require
Twelve credits, 13, 14, or higher.
I can't live off no money. No joke, I just can't.
I can't afford food, bottled water or pants.
I can't afford coffee, my paper or tea.
I can't swing my rent! My rent! Mercy me!
I'll live in the cold, outside in a box.
Complete with no classes, and a bed made of rocks.
No job will I see, I'll smell like dead fish.
I'm at UMass for classes. For those classes I wish.
I'll be walking around without any drawers.
Because I'll have three classes, I'll be mighty poor.
Not only that, I'll be bored out of my dome.
No classes to go to, no place to call home.
With no money, no radio, no television to watch,
With no money or pants, the wind's at my crotch.
So cold – freakin' cold – so cold is my ass.
I would have some pants, if I got into that class!
Just three tiny credits – I'll sit on the floor.
If there's no room inside, I'll peak through the door.
I won't even learn, I promise, no work.
I'll sit in the hallway, like I'm just a jerk.
I just want the class on my schedule, that's all.



Seth Koenig

No taking up space, I'll hear through the wall.
If I end up failing, that's fine, I don't care.
I just want money. I want pants to wear.
I used the auto-syncratic fanciful phone,
That lets you register when you're all alone.
It told me to punch in my four-digit pass,
my ID number, my grade, and that of the class.
It then said, "I'm sorry, but Whitmore was right!
That course is too full. This isn't your night."
It continued to taunt in its mechanical voice—
"You're stuck without pants, You ain't got a choice.
Get used to the cold, the rock bed, and the breeze.
Get used to the box and that wind at your knees.
That 17,000 you pay every time,
Doesn't guarantee classes or living, you'll find.
Consider it a donation, or a gift to the poor.
Help out the administration. Who really needs more?
While you, just a student – a loser named Seth,
Is complaining and whining all under his breath,
There are Chancellors and Deans who really need dough.
Their hot tubs are lukewarm! Their Hummers don't go!
You're selfish and slimey and grimey and bad!
You just don't appreciate the good things you've had.
While you, loser Seth, are enjoying your dirt,
Your administrators are leading a life full of hurt.
For students like you keep complaining of courses.
Those poor souls at the top have only six horses.
How do you feel when you see all you've got
Compared to the president's chopper and yacht?
So, no, you can't have all the classes you want!"
That is what the mechanical phone voice did taunt.
I'm not really sure why I listened so long.
I'm a glutton for punishment – my mindset's all wrong.
So if you're looking for a meaning, or moral, my friend,
It's that everything sucks, and you're screwed in the end.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilintich Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlowsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grebb News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beth Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Women's Issues

Monday, February 7, 2000

Editor's Note

Well, the Women's Issues page is back for another semester. This time around, I am the editor. So let me take a moment to tell you about myself and my ideas for the page.

My name is Christine Connare. I am a senior journalism major. I will be graduating this semester. So if you are interested in my position it will be empty next semester.

Last semester I worked on the page with my editor, Kathleen Ralls. We comprised the staff for the Women's Issues page. It was just the two of us every other week coming up with story ideas, researching, interviewing, and writing the stories. We covered everything from Tibetan nuns to outstanding female athletes here at UMass.

The one thing that shocked me during my experience with the Women's Issues page last semester was the lack of writers. Despite the fact that we are at a large university with so many diverse views, we could not find even a handful of students interested in covering news on campus.

This semester I would like to actually have a staff of writers. I have gone to several departments on campus advertising for writers. So far I have heard from some interested writers. Even if you do not want to write but you have some event or person you would like us to cover, just drop by The Collegian.

Writing for the paper is not like writing a 20-page term paper. It actually can be fun and interesting. You can even pitch your own ideas to me. On a campus so large, there are always issues and stories that cannot be covered on the front page. A page like the Women's Issues page can offer space for some of these issues to be discussed. However, we need a handful of people to help bring topics to light.

-Christine Connare

Write for Diversity!

V-Day to be honored at UMass

By Christine Connare
Collegian Staff

This year on February 14, some UMass students will be marking the day as a celebration for women. The day has become known as V-Day. V-Day is a campaign to end sexual violence and abuse against women. The day will be honored at UMass with a performance of Eve Ensler's "The Vagina Monologues."

"The Vagina Monologues" is composed of 18 monologues. The play is based on Eve Ensler's book. Ensler interviewed hundreds of women, of all ages and ethnic backgrounds, on their relationships with their bodies. She compiled the wide range of responses into a book.

This year, over 200 colleges will be performing the play on February 14, as part of The V-Day 2000 College Initiative. It was student Rachel Edelman, a sophomore psychology and theater major, who proposed that UMass should become involved in V-Day. She approached the Everywoman's Center with the idea and the project got under way.

As director and producer, Edelman has been working non-stop on the project. As the time for auditions approached, she would ask complete strangers at bus stops if they were interested in auditioning for the play. Her efforts seem to have paid off.

"I managed to get a great cast," said Edelman.

The group of women rehearse five days a week. According to Edelman, the women have become very close during rehearsals, and every subject is up for conversation.

"It's a lot of estrogen in one room. Sometimes we have to keep the door open," said Edelman.

Edelman is hoping for a large audience for the show. She has sent out nearly 1,000 flyers to business companies, media outlets, and organizations.

She also hopes that the audience will walk away with a new perspective.

"I want them to sense a connection with something new, a different idea of what they know about the truth of women and women's bodies," said Edelman.

Assistant director Chanel Dubofsky, a senior Jewish Studies and English major, also has high hopes for the show.

"I hope the show breaks down barriers and makes people not afraid of the word [vagina]," says Dudofsky.

Dudosky says she admires the hard work and courage of the performers. She wanted to become involved in the play in some way, yet she was too afraid to take the stage and deliver a monologue. Instead she took the position of assistant director.

About the cast Dudofsky said, "There's so much talent. They all have such an understanding of their parts."

The monologues deal with a wide range of women's issues. Some deal with menstruation, while another chronicles giving birth. The last monologue in the show is performed by Leah Hamilton. The monologue is called, "I was there in the Room." It is a poetic description of one woman watching her friend give birth. Hamilton likes the idea of ending the play with this particular monologue.

"The monologue sums up the play. It ends with the beginning," said Hamilton.

Hamilton, a Spanish and Latin American Studies major, also works at the Everywoman's Center. She is personally involved in women's rights issues and believes this play is a great way to highlight some key subjects.

"I think it is a good idea to involve arts with politics. It brings in more people," said Hamilton.

Edelman's goal for the remainder of her time here at UMass is to continue to perform the monologues each year.

"The Vagina Monologues" will be performed in the Campus Center Auditorium on Monday, February 14, 2000, at 4:30 and 7 p.m. The performance is sponsored by the Jewish Women's Collective, the Everywoman's Center, and the Stonewall Center. The performance is free. Donations will be accepted at the door.

The cast of "The Vagina Monologues" during rehearsal.

Democrats argue over abortion

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Recently, abortion has returned to the forefront of many political conversations. It's an issue that, in the past, rarely caused Democratic primary candidates to struggle, but, as Al Gore and Bill Bradley debate over who is more committed to a woman's right to choose, many Republicans are reacting positively.

"I love it," Linda DiVall, a Republican pollster said in a Boston Globe article. "To have Democrats embroiled on abortion, even for a couple of days, thows women voters that they, too, have divisions on the issue."

According to abortion-rights activists, Gore and Bradley have taken the same position on the issue. They both support abortion, standing by the 1996 platform of the Democratic Party in which a woman's right to have an abortion and receive public funding to pay for it was endorsed.

"I am strongly pro-choice," Bradley said. "I believe that the decision whether or not to terminate a pregnancy is a private one between a woman and her doctor, and we must protect that privacy."

Similarly, Gore said in a speech on June 1, 1999 in Washington D.C., "I will always defend a woman's right to choose. Every time Congress has tried to play politics with that fundamental personal right – imposing gag rules, and attaching anti-choice language to any bill they can think of – we have stood up to them and stopped them."

But some believe that this added attention to Gore and Bradley's stand on abortion has caused the focus to shift from where it really belongs.

"The real issue, and the threat they should be focusing on, is that the Republicans [candidates], even those who have toned down their rhetoric on abortion in their campaigns, are rabidly anti-choice and as president will deny women their legal rights," Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League said in a Boston Globe article.

As the two front-running Republican candidates, both George W. Bush and John McCain have taken a stand against abortion.

"I believe that life is valuable, even when it is unwanted, even when it is physically imperfect. I believe our society has a responsibility to defend the vulnerable and the weak," Bush said. "And I believe our nation should set a goal: that unborn children should be welcomed in life and protected in law."

McCain said in an Associated Press article, "I'd like to see a point where Roe vs. Wade is irrelevant, and could be repealed because abortion is no longer necessary."

Neither Republican is on the hot seat regarding the issue, as Gore has been in the last two weeks. He has had to defend his own stand on the 1973 Supreme Court case Roe vs. Wade, the decision to legalize abortion. After Bradley attacked the vice president's credibility on abortion, Gore said he never wavered from his support of the case.

The issue of abortion, which will continue to be discussed through the election, is considered by many women to be one of the most important factors in choosing whom they will support.

Information from George W. Bush and Bill Bradley's campaign websites was used in this article.

Campus safety for this semester

By Shara Rosen
Collegian Correspondent

Last semester three women reported that they were attacked during the day on campus. The immediate response of the public drew so much attention to these acts of violence that students walked around in constant fear for their safety. Police were stationed around the campus both during the day and at night as measures to increase campus security. Students formed rallies, protests, and walkouts to establish a voice that reached the students and the administration.

However, after a short winter recess, students returned to campus in a euphoric state. Their concerns and fears seemed to be less abundant. It seems as though the hype along with the amount of safety precautions has decreased. Police and security vehicles are less visible than they once were. Even security in the dorms is more relaxed.

As student Matt Heslam explains, "When you can walk across campus without spotting some kind of security, it leaves you feeling uneasy. It's a shady situation."

Some students believe that when an issue is not in the newspapers it isn't happening. Others feel the concern eased after the discovery that one student faked her own attack. This can explain why the majority of students do not feel their safety is still in jeopardy. It appears as though the majority of women now walk around at night without worry.

Some students believe security has nearly diminished in some areas on campus. Dorm security has always been a major issue. It appeared to be tightened during the attacks last semester. But how tightly controlled is it now? Some students in the Coolidge dormitory are concerned with the current status of dorm security.

"There have been more nights without it than with it," said Julie Rootenberg, a resident of Coolidge.

Is it the responsibility of the student body to demand the services and precautions needed to keep UMass a safe environment? We as a community are entitled to a safe campus. Sadly enough, it seems actions are taken only after a traumatic event. Ironically, the campus seems to have gone back to normal. This sends out a dangerous message to women and assailants. The student rallies displayed disgust, but is that enough?

The idea of rape seems to be repressed memory of something that happened a long time ago. However, the facts don't change. Rape happens all the time. The danger of repressing such violence makes women more vulnerable to become the victim. While it is not healthy to walk around in fear, it is also not healthy to be careless in any environment. Rape is a serious violation that does not discriminate— it can happen to any woman.

It is the responsibility of the individual to keep safe, aided by the safety services provided here at this school. As mentioned before, rape is something that does not discriminate— it can happen to anyone. There are services on campus such as the escort service that can provide transportation. Being unaware of your surroundings puts you at risk.

As UMass sophomore Julie O'Connor said, "Just because you don't hear of things in the media doesn't mean they aren't going on."

A month's security patrol, rallies, walkouts, and awareness will not stop rape from happening. A possibility for change can start within the community if the community continues to exhibit its intolerance against violent crimes such as rape. We cannot turn our cheek in ignorance.

A look at women's contributions to rock music

By Dan Levenson
Collegian Correspondent

From Janis Joplin to Grace Slick, Cass Elliot to Sheryl Crow, since the earliest days of rock and roll, a host of female musicians have contributed to the development and direction of popular music.

In the 1960s, a new sound burst onto the music scene— it was rock music with a psychedelic twist. Bands like Big Brother and The Holding Company, Jefferson Airplane, and The Mammas and The Papas all featured powerful female vocalists who played an impressive part in the chorus of voices in a new generation of recording artists.

One of the most impressive, known both for her amazing stage presence and harmonic voice, was "Mama" Cass Elliot. She was a key member of The Mamas and the Papas. She brought a unique voice to the group, and the ability to harmonize with the other members of the band. Her tragic death at an early age put an end to her promising career. Fortunately her legacy lives on in the albums she helped produce. These albums continue to sell well today.

I recently spoke with a few UMass students to get their opinion on the influence of women in modern popular music.

Kezia Lamoreaux, a senior communications major and music fan, felt certain female artists had contributed considerably to the rock world, while others had made a less positive impact on the scene.

"My favorite female artist is Ani DiFranco, but I also think that women like Chrissie Hynde of the Pretenders have had a big impact on music," she said.

Lamoreaux was less keen about rocker-turned-actress Courtney Love. Hole, Love's band, recently ran into trouble with their record label for failing to fulfill their contract.

"She calls too much attention to how the public sees her as opposed to the relevance of her music; she spends a lot of time trying to shock people," said Lamoreaux.

Matt O'Connor, a senior math major and critic of popular culture, enthusiastically shared his views on the subject.

"I enjoy women in rock," he said. He agreed that a variety of female performers have made a huge impact on the music scene.

On the subject of his favorite female rocker, O'Connor didn't have to think twice. He replied, "Kay Hanley, the lead singer for Letters To Cleo; she's a stone cold fox."

Noting that many musical stars have made the crossover from music to other forms of media, O'Connor commented on an appearance by a well-known female artist in a comedic cartoon.

"I was impressed with the performance of Barbara Streisand on South Park, when she battled Robert Smith of The Cure. It was a good crossover move for her to try and get the younger generation involved and searching for old Barbara Streisand records at Mystery Train," said O'Connor.

He also stated that he is a fan of DiFranco's music as well, especially her live performances.

UMass student and vocalist Wendy Levesque cited Carole King as a powerful influence both on women in popular music, and in her own musical endeavors.

"She totally affected my life at such an early age, even when I didn't realize how influential she was to women in rock," she said. "It's like the original girl and her piano."

When asked who the next great female voice in music levesque thought about it for a few minutes and replied, "Christina Aguilera. I know that sounds really stupid, but if you listen to her voice and how much time she has ahead of her, she could really go far because she has a good voice. She does need a new choreographer, though."

Whether you like them or hate them, no one can deny that in the last forty years and beyond, female artists have contributed an unquestionably valuable and varied influence on the landscape of popular American music.

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in

AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From
- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!
FRESHMAN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@acad.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE •
JOIN US!

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Final Scream a fitting finale

Scream 3
Directed by Wes Craven
with Neve Campbell, Courtney Cox, David Arquette
Playing at Mountains Farms Theaters

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

The Scream franchise's pseudo-intellectual banter and acute self-awareness has defined post-modernism for pop culture-conscious teenagers. Scream was so great because it allowed the audience (large proportions of which were teens) an ironic reading of not only the film itself, but also the entire horror genre. In fact, it intended for them to do so. Scream let the audience know that they were watching a film, and much of the film's charm, wit, and brilliance arose from this point.

Scream 3 arrives with a rather heavy burden to carry. After Scream became a word-of-mouth hit, many people were disappointed by the second installment's ending. (Scream 3 makes light of the infamous script-on-the-Net incident, which likely caused a late rewrite.) While Scream 3 is neither perfect nor as good as the original, it serves as a fabulous homage to the series and to trilogies in general, making it a worthwhile and enjoyable effort.

The scene for Scream 3 shifts from Woodsboro and Windsor College to Hollywood, California – more specifically to the set of Stab 3, the final film in the trilogy based on the Sydney Prescott story. (You can already see where this is going – a film within a film; a trilogy within a trilogy, etc.) The fiendly ghost-faced killer returns, killing now famous talk-show host, Cotton Weary (making a cameo in Stab 3), and sequentially the cast members of Stab 3. Of course, this drives Sydney out of hiding and into the arms of Dewey (serving as technical advisor on Stab 3) and Gail Weathers, who, in a brilliant detail, just missed getting a job on "60 Minutes 2."

The film goes through the motions of establishing Stab 3's cast and systematically relating them to the people from the previous films – both Screams and Stabs (obligatory Tori Spelling and David Schwimmer references ensue), but largely falls short in trilogy parody. Perhaps the one exception is Parkey Posey, whose hilarious Gail Weathers impersonation leads to some magnificent catty exchanges between her and Courtney Cox. However, even the intriguing idea of the killer murdering cast members according to Stab 3's script (there are three different versions) is never fully explored.

What Scream 3 does do wonderfully, though, is parody the previous two films. The recreation of Woodsboro on the Stab 3 set allows for some amazingly eerie resonance from Scream. Sarah Michelle Gellar's "Cici" and her death sequence from Scream 2 are reinvented through Jenny McCarthy (the "Candy" of Stab 3). Scream 3 uses this type of recreation tactic a lot (see the soundproof glass scene of Scream 2), aligning it well with the spirit of the original. These scenes add an undercurrent that is genuinely disconcerting, as well as their obvious ironic intention. Randy even returns (thanks to videotape) to shed light on the rules of the trilogy.

Of all the Screams, Wes Craven does his best work here. Determined to establish Scream as the definitive (and only?) horror trilogy, Craven directs with great attention to detail and timing, perfectly recreating some of his own classic shots. I was particularly impressed with the latter half of the film, during which Craven draws out the somewhat epic motif of good versus evil. The final close-up of the killer (and ultimate cause of everything) with the luminescent knife piercing his chest is undoubtedly an instant classic.

Scream 3 tosses a lot at the audience, perhaps meriting a second viewing just to make sure that you get all the in-jokes, but maintains a fairly linear and interesting (if you like mystery) plot. It's still fun and witty, and even scary. My one major quibble is with the ending, which seems to pawn off the previous two films as mere coincidence – kind of a cop-out rather than an explanation.

Yes, as the Scream series continued, the references probably drifted too far from their original purpose of parody to pop culture. Yes, the films progressively became more straight horror films than anything else. But, Scream has managed to be fresh enough and clever enough to maintain widespread interest through three movies. The Scream trilogy represents a truly innovative and refreshing premise, especially for a seemingly limited genre, that was well-executed and brilliantly marketed. If you excuse the slew of wannabe slasher flicks and bad teen dramas which followed Scream's release, a very different and very significant trilogy remains.

Scream 3 continues this tradition without sacrificing ingenuity or intent of the original. Any fan should be more than satisfied with this conclusion to the series that made us laugh and made us scream. B

Neve Campbell displays this face a lot in the trilogy-completing Scream 3.

Scream rekindles box office

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Scream 3 was expected to romp at the box office this weekend. With a built-in fan base, an all-time record screen count (3467), and no film cracking double-digit box office last weekend, Scream 3 had all the factors working in its favor. Nobody knew just how much Scream 3 would talk, though. After all, the all-time record for any February opener is $22 million set by The Empire Strikes Back re-release in 1997.

Well, the answer came early Sunday afternoon as Scream 3 had an estimated weekend gross of $35.2 million. The total, an obvious record, was more than the rest of the top ten films gross combined. Despite the aforementioned enormous screen count, Scream 3 still managed an eye-opening $10,152 per-screen average. Consider Eye of the Beholder averaged only $3,369 per-screen last week on approximately half the screens. This was the second record opening for the franchise, as Scream 2 set the benchmark for December films ($32.9 million) back in 1997.

Great buzz continues to carry Denzel Washington's The Hurricane which actually jumped up a spot to second place. The $4.8 million weekend was an unnoticeable 14 percent drop-off for the film. If it continues at this rate, then when Oscar nominations are announced Feb. 15, it could really take off.

Next came Stuart Little, which actually managed to gain business from week to week. The cartoon tacked on about $30,000 from last week to bring its gross to $4.8 million. It also climbed one spot, and even after eight weeks, remains on 2700+ screens – the only other film in the top ten with more than 2500.

Next Friday finished off its first month as the box office this weekend with $4.3 million. The surprise upstart opened to $16.9 million three weeks ago and has grossed $45.5 million as of today. Despite the film's stronger than expected performance, the 2.69 multiplier is well below the average 2.9.

Eye of the Beholder surprisingly held up well, falling 32 percent – about average – from last week's gross. Still, the film toppled four places, all the way to fifth with a $4 million weekend. Ashley Judd and Ewan McGregor have been good enough for $11.8 million to date.

For a second straight week, the bottom of the top-ten list is filled with holiday holdovers and potential Oscar gems. The Green Mile dipped outside the top ten for the first time to sixth, but still maintains interest and screen counts. A $4 million weekend brought its cumulative to $120 million and the film is carrying 2335 screens.

Galaxy Quest was good for $3.5 million weekend, bringing its cumulative gross to $62.9 million. Down to You continued moving in that direction with a 27 percent drop-off. The Miramax disaster grossed $2.9 million for the weekend frame and $16.8 million to date. Girl Interrupted did $2.6 million for the weekend and $25 million so far. The top ten was rounded out by The Talented Mr. Ripley, which managed $2.3 million in its seventh week.

With only a topless Leo to contend with in the form of The Beach next weekend, Scream 3 should have no trouble claiming its second consecutive weekend, and possibly many more in the coming month.

Morphine Orchestra plays Noho, reincarnated band mesmerizing

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Imagine, if you will, the sound of a baritone saxophone, a soprano saxophone, a trumpet, a keyboard, a bass, and two drums, all brought to a mesmerizing focus by the soulful tones of a veteran female vocalist and her equally emotive male counterpart. The music is slow and restrained, but bursting at the seams with emotion. It slides, it flows, its fluid notes supported by a rich, solid rhythm section.

When I arrived to interview Dana Colley and Billy Conway of Orchestra Morphine, that's just what I experienced. The nine piece band was finishing its sound check, one final greasing of the wheels before the doors opened at 7:30 p.m. on Friday night at Pearl Street Nightclub.

Orchestra Morphine is the reincarnation of the cherished Boston band Morphine, which found its foundation torn from beneath it when lead singer and visionary two-string slide bassist Mark Sandman died suddenly of a heart attack several months ago. Even with such an array of musical talent, Sandman's absence, his tragic non-involvement in this tour, coats every effort with a certain inevitable sadness.

"Mark was a song writer," drummer Billy Conway said. "We were the guys who tried to get him where he was going." He later added, "He seemed to be able to pick up any instrument and within minutes do something that sounded like Mark."

Orchestra Morphine will be playing a set primarily taken from Morphine's final album, The Night, completed shortly before Sandman's death. Although Morphine had traditionally been a three-man operation, The Night features extensive use of guest musicians and textural experimentation, moving the band considerably forward from their bass-sax-drums roots.

"We weren't afraid of doing whatever it took to make the song sing, using additional sounds and musicians," says Conway. The decision to tour as a nine-piece band in Sandman's absence, then, makes a lot sense.

"We're not doing this because of a record deal," says saxophonist Dana Colley. "We're doing this because we want to celebrate Mark's life."

With that sentiment in mind, I watched Orchestra Morphine take the stage to a crowd that, although considerably below sell-out size, displayed immense love and enthusiasm for the band and the show to come. Flower arrangements were placed at the front of the stage. Colley took center stage, visibly hesitant. This was Orchestra Morphine's first official show, and analogies to a ship lacking her captain wouldn't be entirely off the mark here. But then the music began, and within moments, all hesitation was erased. Morphine's music is notoriously hard to categorize; the term "low rock" has been coined to describe the sound created by Colley's sax and Sandman's slide bass, and breathy baritone vocals. The transition to Orchestra Morphine created a fuller sound, allowing the songs to escalate and diminish, drift and soar. The opening song, "Not Like That Anymore," featured a vocals – and percussion-only – chorus, with all band members contributing, singing into their instrument microphones if necessary. This gave way to an elation of saxophones and keyboards; Orchestra Morphine may have been playing and rehearsing together a short while, but their sound was seamless. Lead singers Laurie Sargent and Christian McNeil gave absolutely phenomenal performances, doing wonderful justice to Sandman's songs. Virtuosic instrumental breaks were frequent, considering the incredible collection of talent on stage; keyboardist Evan Harriman, trumpeter Tom Halter, and saxophonist Russ Gershon (who played with Sandman in their band, the Hypnotonics) all had ample opportunity to show off their skill.

Most of the songs are from The Night, but several of Morphine's five earlier albums were represented as well. Highlights included "I Know You Part III" from 1997's Like Swimming, and "In Spite of Me" from 1993's Cure For Pain.

As the night went on, the band, and especially Colley, eased into the experience and enjoyed themselves on stage more with every song, their enthusiasm spilling over onto the audience; several later songs had the crowd clapping and singing along, and the night closed with "You Look Like Rain" off of Morphine's 1992 album, Good. During the third chorus, the band quieted, then stopped, leaving the audience emphatically chanting one of Sandman's signature lyrics, "you look like rain, you look like rain..." In a turbulent, soulful melody. It was a touching, even magical moment, one of many that night. The concert was a testament that great men may die, but great music enjoys a beautiful immortality.

Clothes presented at Mt. Holyoke

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

The New World Theatre brought a taste of India to Mt. Holyoke's Rooke Theatre this weekend with its production of Clothes, a mixed performance piece adapted from Chitra Divakaruni's collection of short fiction entitled Arranged Marriages.

As is the case with all New World Theatre productions, Clothes fused several different theatrical elements into one unit with the intention of promoting cultural awareness. The production unconventionally follows the story of Sumita (Arpana Sindhoor), a young Indian woman who is leaving her country for America where she'll marry a man she doesn't know.

Once in California, Sumita finds herself claustrophobic in a world with financial instability, a house of in-laws, and eventually, when her husband is killed, alone. All of this is narrated by another actress, Purva Bedi, and doubly represented by the lovely dancing of Sindhoor.

Director Roberta Uno did a fine job bringing the production together.

Exchanges between Sindhoor as Sumita, and Bedi as she stepped into scenes playing a variety of roles (i.e. Sumita's husband, father, in-laws) were relatively smooth. Bedi's acting, for the most part, was impressive. She did well making each role she portrayed distinct. Sindhoor's monologue delivers of her much fewer lines was redeemed by her consistent grace in movement.

And technically the show couldn't have asked for much more. Set designer Leandro Soto crafted a beautiful scene, emphasizing the symbolism of the play's title with a subtle combination of colors that perfectly complimented John Howard's fantastic lighting design.

Adding perhaps the most haunting aspect of the production was the three-piece orchestra, comprised of vocalist Saavitri Ramanand, Ram Nath on flute, and David Nelson on drums. While the script and dance told Sumita's story, the original score by Sukanya Prabhakar was providing its own soulful interpretation of it.

Certainly Clothes was worthwhile largely because of the exposure it gave anyone, including myself, foreign to Indian art, Bharat Natyam, the style of dance practiced throughout the piece, is gorgeous and quite unlike contemporary Western movement, highlighting not only the elegance of the dancer's body, but also the power of her facial expressions. The music was deeply rhythmic and the script rich with poetical language.

I was a bit surprised to find that Sumita's story, one not impossible in Indian culture, where a woman is taken, as she says in the show, "from the known to the unknown" seemed a bit trivialized. For example, her husband works in a 7-11, and Sumita's greatest dream is to work in the store with him. But, since this is based on a story by an Indian woman and adapted for the stage by the author herself, it's odd that I would suspect that unfortunate stereotypes were supported in Clothes. And despite those awkward moments, Clothes finished with a simple and splendid picture of a culture somewhat overlooked in the art world, and the dignity of a woman choosing independence.

安城中國餐店
AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
253-7835 or 253-2813
62 Main Street, Amherst

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

COURTESY VICTORY RECORDS

Hardcore legends Snapcase impress with their latest disc Designs for Automotion.

Snapcase's Designs brilliant

SNAPCASE
Designs for Automotion
Victory

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

You can tell when a band is giving one hundred percent. Snapcase is such a band. Every aspect of the band is permeated by a sense of dedication and conviction. Intense live shows, incredible albums, and a refusal to conform to any musical limitations are all trademarks of this band which uses any and all means to get their message out. Its latest release, Designs for Automotion, further solidifies their position as one of the most powerful and intelligent bands making heavy music today.

Snapcase formed during the early part of the '90s in Buffalo, New York, and has gone through some line-up changes throughout its history. The band currently consists of vocalist Daryl Taberski, guitarists Jon Salemi and Frank Vicario, drummer Tim Redmond, and, replacing former member Bob Whiteside on bass, Dustin Perry. The group has three releases under its belt; their debut album Lookinglasself, the EP Steps, and 1997's amazing Progression Through Unlearning. In addition, last year's split EP, snapcasevsboysetsfire, had Snapcase contributing two new recordings, one of which, "Energy Dome," made it onto the new album. The band also claimed a spot on 1998's Warped Tour, and opened for the Deftones on their 1998 tour which was a stellar bill that featured the likes of Pitchshifter and fellow New Yorkers Quicksand.

Designs for Automotion continues with the fast-paced aggressive style that worked so well on Progression Through Unlearning. "Target" starts the proceedings with a boom. A pounding chorus is layered on top of a jumpy bass line and two different riffs. "Disconnector" spices things up a bit by dealing with a subject matter not often heard in hardcore music— love. A failed relationship is the basis for the song, and Taberski's vocals convey the pain and anger that the lyrics suggest. Another welcome change of pace is "ambition now," which slows the tempo down but still manages to be every bit as forceful and convincing. It's slightly reminiscent of "Jada Bloom" by Vision of Disorder. "Typecast modulator" hits like a ten-ton hammer with a brutal riff and some intense drumming, and "break the static" follows in the same vein.

"Energy Dome" is the perfect Snapcase song. It has the trademark Snapcase guitar sound, inventive riffing, and more speed and riff changes than you ever thought could be crammed into a two-and-a-half minute song. The lyrics are typically awesome, promoting self-worth and awareness. "You need to rise up and revolutionize your thinking/You need to wake up and activate the dreams of your soul" are two lines that more than any others convey the outlook of Snapcase.

Snapcase is one of very few hardcore bands whose lyrics are as exciting as its music. The subjects that are dealt with are current but timeless, and are held together by an overwhelming sense of positivity, a theme that goes unexplored by many of today's more popular heavy bands. "Target" and "are you tuned in?" both warn against the mindlessness and useless information of television, while "box seat" explores the dangers of becoming a slave to a consumer society. "Typecast modulator" speaks of refusing to be given a personality and instead carving one out for yourself. The terrific "bleeding orange" is a realization that being a faceless drone for some big corporation is no way to live, and that following your dreams is the only way to truly achieve happiness.

Like all aspects of its music, Snapcase is not content with mediocrity, and the packaging is definitely eye-catching. The group once again recruited artist Linibert Fabian, who provided the artwork in Progression Through Unlearning, to design their cover and contribute additional pieces. The slipcase cover art and the booklet cover art are both exceptional, my favorite piece being a picture in the booklet that contains a fetus wearing a pair of headphones.

Snapcase has delivered another incredible effort, one that sustains the energy of its previous efforts while adding new elements to elevate its music far above that of its peers. Snapcase takes risks on this album, both lyrically and conceptually, that most hardcore bands would never dream of, and that is among the many reasons it is such an important band at this time. Grade: A

Evidence of Feminism defines what it means to be a feminist

By Anna Faktorovich
Collegian Staff

Imagine, if you please, a room drenched with the smell of glue and heavy paint, full of women talking all at once, their voices echoing through the closed space of the Wheeler Gallery. They are looking at art, but they are really looking at reflections of themselves.

On Saturday, Feb. 5, there was an opening reception for Evidence of Feminism. The show features a variety of different artistic mediums as well as several different approaches to and views of what it means to be a female, and what it means to be feminist.

With enough some of the sculptures had mirrors in them. Looking in them, visitors can, literally, see themselves as feminists.

18 good-byes, by Mira Cantor, stood out from the landscape of wonderfully creative artistic works. She studied in Egypt, where she came up with the scheme for her works. The 18 pieces of cloth look like draperies that cover the Egyptian female bodies. While Mira was working on this piece, John F. Kennedy, Jr. died. Since handkerchiefs are associated with waving good-bye, she named the piece 18 good-byes in memory of John F. Kennedy, Jr.

Another striking piece in the exhibit is the Disinhibition by Lydia Nettler. In the piece, there are two adult figures that are separating from each other and are moving in opposite directions, tearing apart two children that lay at their feet. The viewer is left to wonder if it is a symbol for divorce tearing apart American families, or perhaps some other force tearing us to pieces. And both interpretations are feasible.

A portrait of an elderly woman, Mary Letha Elting, by Rachel Folsom, stands out as a powerful depiction of a lifetime of struggle and refusal to lie down. The portrait is a positive image of a female who "had the opportunity to develop and pursue passionate interest and the chance to make a difference in the world."

One of the main points that the exhibit portrays is the existence in our society of a Fear of Feminism, as the title and construction of Linda Batchelor's structure states. In this detailed piece, the female is "trying to stomp out ignorance."

In a similarly striking piece by Elizabeth Solley Caine, titled Reflection: The Feminine Feminist, the proclamation "sugar, spice and sometimes nice" covers the spectrum of contrasting definitions of femininity. The paintbrush, cooking utensil, a dog, and a rose create a flood of association for the viewer.

One of the strongest feminist statements is made by Harriet Diamond and is titled Reflections If I Ran the MOMA. The MOMA is actually the Museum of Modern Art in New York. According to the artist, the MOMA practices tokenism and only puts in a few female artists rather than providing true equality. In response to MOMA's tokenism, Harriet Diamond creates a piece with many pictures of works done by female artists and just one by a male – Van Gogh.

A light, ironic sense of humor runs through the exhibit. One cannot help smiling at the sight of drastically exaggerated stereotypes of feminist extremists that look like monstrous creatures, covered in fireworks of tampons, parading in a sort of freak show. Mixed into the stereotypes of what a feminist must look like are stereotypes of the "girly toy" – a pink pony that exaggerates what the "proper" female should be in society.

"Feminists come in different shapes and sizes," said Linda Batchelor. "There are radicals, moderates and others. The one goal that we all have in common is obtaining respect."

COURTESY FVT RECORDS

Fat, ugly, and ready to love!
2Get+her is an upcoming MTV film that spoofs popular boy bands.

Simpsons' Maude to die on Feb. 13

By Paul Brownfield
Los Angeles Times

As Fox's long-running animated hit "The Simpsons" gets set to kill off a character during February sweeps, the actress who voiced the role of Maude Flanders is saying her character's rumored demise is a case of death-by-corporate-greed.

Maggie Roswell, who played Maude, wife of Simpsons' neighbor and Christian do-gooder Ned Flanders, says she left the show last spring because 20th Century Fox Television, the studio that produces "The Simpsons," refused to give her a raise. In previous reports on Roswell's departure, Fox has said the actress left the show because she no longer wanted to commute to Los Angeles from her Denver home.

"There's a presence that I helped create in Springfield," said Roswell, referring to the show's hometown. An actress and writer from Los Angeles, Roswell has lived the last four years in Denver, where she and her husband run a recording studio for voice-over work. Before leaving the show last spring, she had been with "The Simpsons" since its inception as a prime-time series in 1989.

In addition to Maude Flanders, Roswell voiced other Springfield residents, including Helen Lovejoy, wife of Rev. Lovejoy, and Miss Hoover, one of Lisa Simpsons' schoolteachers. This season, Maude's appearances on the show have been minimal, with another voice actress filling in.

"Simpsons" producers haven't revealed who will be rubbed out in the show's Feb. 13 episode, but the show's title provides a potential clue that Maude will be offed. The episode is called "Alone Again, Natura-Diddly," a reference to Ned Flanders' particular way of speaking.

Mike Scully, executive producer of the show, was in-transit and could not be reached for comment.

Roswell's contract grievance isn't new to "The Simpsons" – or to Fox, which has seen squabbles with actors go public on other shows, including "The X-Files." Two years ago, the five major voice actors on "The Simpsons" – Dan Castellaneta (Homer), Nancy Cartwright (Bart), Yeardley Smith (Lisa), Harry Shearer (Mr. Burns, Smithers), and Hank Azaria (Moe the bartender, Chief Wiggum, Apu) – held out for big raises, eventually winning multimillion-dollar packages to stay on the show.

Roswell, by contrast, says she was asking for $6,000 an episode – an increase from the $1,500 to $2,000 an episode she earned the last three seasons for her recurring guest voices, she said. When Fox offered a raise of $150, she decided to quit, because the raise didn't even cover the cost of having to fly to Los Angeles to record her portions of the scripts, she said. Pamela Hayden, who voices the role of Bart's friend Milhouse, threatened a similar walkout earlier this season before receiving a raise.

Roswell's tactics, however, fell short, perhaps proving what "Simpsons" fans may discover Feb. 13 – that Maude is an expendable character.

"I was part of the backbone of 'The Simpsons,' and I didn't think [the requested raise] was exorbitant," Roswell said. "I wasn't asking for what the other cast members make. I was just trying to recoup all the costs I had in travel. If they'd flown me in, I'd still be working."

Imagine...
Guster..Ben Harper...The Collegian..
Meeting them all in the next 72 Hours...
The Collegian....oh how dreamy....

Exploring the Coastal Environment

May 30-July 13, 2000

This inquiry-based, hands-on program provides an introduction to maritime history, nautical science, oceanography, and coastal zone management. Highlights include a four-day research trip to Nantucket Island and a week aboard the schooner Ernestina as it joins Tall Ships 2000 sailing from New York to Boston. Nine undergraduate credits.

To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston MA 02125-3393

617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

UMASS BOSTON

creamy

Auditions For:
NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
Everyone Welcome!
February 8, 2000
6:00 PM
Campus Center Rm. 168C
For more information call
Chris Lumsdon at 577-5186.

Senior sayonara
Elizabeth Risotto was one of seven seniors who bid farewell to the Rogers Pool faithful as the Minutewomen squared off against Fordham. See tomorrow's sports page for full coverage.

Women's gym falls at WVU, defeats Radford in tri-meet

By James Piehl
Collegian Staff

It wasn't all rain and it wasn't all roses for the Massachusetts women's gymnastics team this weekend as it fell to No. 17 West Virginia 196.275 to 190.175. The Minutewomen were able to grab second, placing ahead of Radford University who mustered a 187.675 in this weekend's tri-meet.

With the split, UM's women's gym stays even at 4-4 on the season. UMass has taken four tough losses early this season but the Minutewomen have faced some top opponents. UM dropped a heartbreaker at New Hampshire earlier this season when the Wildcats edged them out 192.925 to 191.950. After that it was No. 8 Penn State and No. 19 Florida that pushed UMass back down to .500 at 3-3.

Freshman Katie Teft carried her Atlantic 10 Rookie-of-the-Week honors into the competition and showed everyone just why she had gotten the distinction. Teft scored a 9.850 on the bars to rank second, a career-high 39.075 in the all-around for third place, and another career-high of 9.725 in the vault for sixth place.

Teft was named A-10 Rookie-of-the-Week for her performance against the No. 8 Nittany Lions and the No. 19 Gators. Teft placed second on the bars with a 9.900. She had also set her previous career high in the vault at 9.650 before this weekend's meet. In addition, Teft holds the conference best record in the bars with a 9.950, which she set against then-eighth-ranked New Hampshire.

Despite the tough competition in West Virginia the Minutewomen had three other members tally career-best performances in the vault. Freshman Jen Gendron scored a 9.650 to take eighth in the event, while senior Rene Franklin chalked up a 9.600 for 11th and junior Jobi Goldberg posted a 9.575 for 12th place.

UMass had help from its long-standing squad members this past weekend in the split. Junior Mary Moore ranked sixth on the balance beam registering a 9.700, while senior squad mate Mandy Mosby placed fifth on the floor exercise with a 9.825 and fourth in the all-around amassing a 38.300.

Moore also recorded a season-high 9.675 on the vault to place seventh, while sophomore teammate Tracy Chew chipped in her season-high on the bars with a 9.350 to capture ninth.

The Minutewomen had tremendous output from its squadron this weekend in what proved to be a tough test. All in all, UM put in the effort. Year in and year out, the Minutewomen toe the line with the nation's best and this year is no different. That doesn't mean the effort should be any less and the competition reduced slightly. The women's gym troop put up some big numbers in the contest but West Virginia was just able to put up some bigger ones.

UMass is poised for a rematch with still No. 8 ranked Penn State. UM will battle the Nittany Lions this Saturday at 4 p.m. in Boyden. The Minutewomen will hope the home gym advantage will aid them in the daunting task of knocking Penn State from its perch.

The gauntlet is down and the challenge is set for this weekend. The pressure is mounting, and a big win against a big name can prove big things for the Massachusetts gymnastics team here in Amherst. Not only will a win elevate the Minutewomen over .500 but it will also prove this year's squad is a legitimate contender that can't be pushed around or intimidated by labels.

■ doom

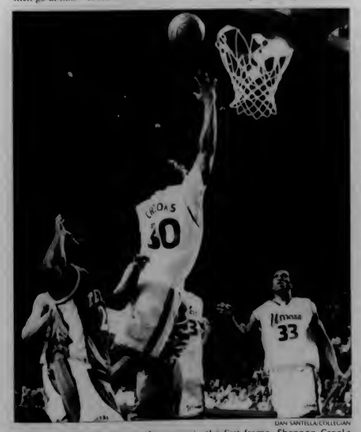
continued from page 12

and then some. Taking the initiative to penetrate the Longhorns zone look on defense, Crooks was handcuffed inside. Upon entering the paint, he was immediately forced to alter his shot, much of that due to Texas 7-footer Chris Mihm. Mihm swatted away six blocks, en route to a school-record eight rejections in the game. His presence inside partially contributed to not just Crooks' abysmal 0-for-9 performance, but the team's miserable 21 percent first half shooting.



"We got tentative after Mihm blocked a couple of shots," Flint said. "If the guy is going to block your shot, then go at him – at least let him block it."

The Minutemen have relied heavily on Mack, Crooks and Chris Kirkland to provide the scoring punch. While head coach James "Bruiser" Flint hopes to get at least 50 points from his big three, he also needs solid complements to those that fill the bucket. Flint would get his 50. Crooks and Kirkland scoring a team-high 17 with Mack chipping in with 16. He would get just seven from the rest of the squad.

It was a continuation from Tuesday night, where UMass shot 38 percent on its way to a 73-48 loss to Temple. The Minutemen went 13 possessions without scoring, which spanned nearly ten minutes. At the 14:10 mark, Crooks canned a pair of free throws, which would be all for the Maroon and White until Kirkland converted on a layup with 5:06 remaining. With that hiatus, UMass' four-point lead turned into an eight-point Texas advantage.

To make matters worse the Longhorns weren't finished. Rick Barnes' regiment stung the Minutemen with another 9-0 to close the half. Mihm finished with 12 points, six rebounds, and six blocks while the Minutemen struggled to find an answer. Mack led UMass with eight, half of UMass' total output through 20 minutes.

The Minutemen would respond but it wouldn't be enough. They shot 52 percent after halftime, closing to within six, but the hole they built themselves in the opening frame was the dagger in their heart. As UMass had, Texas began finding its stroke, shooting a cool 61 percent.

DAN SANTILLI/COLLEGIAN

After a horrid shooting performance in the first frame, Shannon Crooks scored 15 of his team-high 17 points in the Minutemen's second-half charge that fell just short in the end.

Texas 68, UMass 57

at Mullins Center
Amherst, MA

TEXAS (19-6)	Min	FG M-A	FT M-A	REB O-D-T	A	F	PTS
Gabe Muoneke	32	7-11	2-2	2-0-2	3	2	16
Chris Owens	15	2-5	0-2	2-3-5	0	1	4
Chris Mihm	37	4-10	10-10	2-10-12	0	1	18
Ivan Wagner	27	1-3	4-4	1-2-3	5	3	8
Lawrence Williams	33	6-7	0-0	0-4-4	0	4	17
William Wyatt	3	0-0	0-0	1-0-1	0	0	0
Chris McClellan	15	1-1	3-4	0-1-1	3	1	3
Damon Kelly	34	2-5	0-1	0-2-2	5	0	4
Chris Ogden	4	0-0	0-0	0-1-1	0	0	0
TEAM				0-4-4
TOTALS	200	22-41	19-23	8-39-47	15	12	68

FG% - 53.7% 3PT% - 30% 3-point goals: 5-13, 385
UMass (19-5): Mack 5-11 3-4 16; Crooks 5-9 7-9 17; Kirkland 4-8 2-2 10; Moore 2-3 0-0 4; Rhyme 1-3 0-0 2; Bielus 1-2 0-0 2; Flynn 0-1 0-0 0; Brandi 0-0 0-0 0; Mosby 0-0 0-0 0; Teft 0-0 0-0 0; Gendron 0-0 0-0 0; Goldberg 0-0 0-0 0; Chew 0-0 0-0 0; Franklin 0-0 0-0 0; TEAM 0-0 0-0 0; TOTALS 19-45 12-15 57

FG% - 42.2% 3PT% - 25% 3-point goals: 4-16, 250
Texas (19-6): Muoneke 2-3 0-0 4; Owens 0-0 0-0 0; Mihm 6-9 6-6 18; Wagner 2-3 0-0 4; Williams 5-6 1-1 11; McClellan 0-1 0-0 0; Kelly 0-2 0-0 0; Wyatt 0-0 0-0 0; Ogden 0-0 0-0 0; TEAM 0-0 0-0 0; TOTALS 15-24 7-7 37

Technical fouls: none
Attendance: 8,145

SCORE BY PERIODS	1st	2nd	TOTAL
Texas	31	37	68
Massachusetts	16	41	57

■ BU

continued from page 12

our part," BU coach Jack Parker said.

A little over two minutes later, the Terriers would strike again, this time on a shorthanded tally. With John Sabo in the penalty box UMass was looking to extend its lead. Rather than extend its lead, they gave up the equalizer after a defensive lapse behind the net.

Getting ready to start the play up ice, two Minuteman defenders skated into each other and the puck squirted to Jack Baker, who subsequently found Carl Corazzini in front of the net. Corazzini then beat a defenseless Markus Helanen with a high wrist shot, and the game was tied.

Midway through the final frame BU would get the game-winner on another power play goal, this one by Freddy Meyer. The goal by Meyer was his first of the season and the first of his career.

"It wasn't pretty to watch, and it must have been disgusting to watch the third period," Parker said. "UMass played so well in the first two periods, and we played as poorly a period as we played all year in the second period. They didn't give us four inches, they were right in our face. It was a great effort by UMass.

"I think the penalties changed the course of the game. We played a good game of solid hockey," Mallen said. "The momentum of the game really changed with the penalties."

The Maroon and White jumped out to an early advantage when Jedd Crumb broke in alone on Terrier netminder Rick DiPietro and beat him top shelf. Tim Turner pushed the puck forward to Crumb and it looked as if he would go offside as the pass hit him in the skates, but the sophomore made a great play to bring it to his stick, and the end result was a 1-0 UMass advantage.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jedd Crumb

The Minutemen extended their lead when Luke Duplessis scored his second goal of the season when he beat DiPietro. The defenseman found himself streaking down the right wing boards and as he was ready to shoot was hauled down. As he was being hauled down, Duplessis had the presence of mind to attempt a shot. The shot fooled DiPietro and the Minutemen subsequently had a 2-0 lead.

"The best team didn't win tonight. Looking at good opportunities, time of possession, et cetera, we were lucky to go out and get two points," Parker said.

■ Lowell

continued from page 12

"I was a little nervous, which is usual, but I was really just trying to figure out what move I was going to use. We're lucky because going up against Markus [Helanen] and Mike [Johnson] in practice only helps in situations like this," he said. "I figured that because the ice was bad I would just go in and shoot the puck, but it didn't settle down, so I just kept going with it. It was still on end the last time I looked at it, but it went in [the net]."

Turner's goal might have been the game-winner had it not been for some miscommunication on a UMass power play about two minutes earlier. All five UMass players were caught inside the Lowell zone, allowing Dan Fontas to grab a loose puck in neutral ice and walk in all alone on Helanen. The Lowell forward faked out the Minutemen goalie and gave his team a brief 3-2 lead.

Not to be outdone by his older brother, UMass freshman forward Tim Turner had one of his best days as a Minuteman against the River Hawks. He scored a pair of power play goals that turned a 2-0 third period deficit into a tie game.

The first goal came only 1:09 into the final frame and cut the Lowell lead in half. Sophomore defenseman Toni Soderholm set the play up from the left point, threading a pass to Jeff Turner at the right side of the goal crease. Turner wasted no time in sliding a pass across the slot to his brother, who buried the disc into an empty cage.

"There's nothing like getting set up by my brother. That was a big power play for us and because we got a goal right away it told the guys that we were right back in the game," Tim Turner said.

Tim Turner then netted his second goal of the game at the 7:47 mark of the third period, deflecting a Jedd Crumb shot between the legs of McCormick to tie the game.

All in all, the Turner brothers had four points combined and were a big reason why the Minutemen were able to battle back and earn an important Hockey East point.

"Back in October I said that there are good ties and bad ties and there's no question that today was a good tie," Mallen said. "We got behind two goals heading into the third period and came back. Then we got an absolutely clutch performance from Jeff Turner on the penalty shot. That's a lot of pressure to have on one guy, especially when there's only 22 seconds remaining and then [Lowell] just scored [to take the lead]."

You heard me, write for sports!!!

They decide what you read.
You decide what you pay.

What's on the syllabus is what you're going to be reading. What you're going to pay, however, can be up to you. That is, if you shop at VarsityBooks.com. At VarsityBooks.com you can save up to 40% on your textbooks, get them in one to three business days, and all of this from a Web site that's completely reliable and secure. So there you have it, you decide.

SAVE UP TO 40% ON TEXTBOOKS.

Savings off distributor's suggested price. Books delivered in no more than three business days. Some restrictions apply. See site for details.

VarsityBooks.com

© 1999 varsitybooks.com Inc.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS. WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638.

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

Don't think sororities are for you? Come and see why we're different. Iota Gamma Upsilon is holding open rush Sun 2/6, Mon 2/7, Tues 2/8 @ 6pm. 406 North Pleasant St, white house across from Hillel. For more info please call Danielle 253-7573.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Toyota Celaca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636.

'88 Honda Accord for sale. Good condition. Low mileage. $2000 o/bo. Call 253-9195.

1989 Honda Accord LXI Green 4 dr sdn. 181,000 miles. $2300.00 Call 323-4323.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00 Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Office Assistant Needed. Students needed to work afternoon hours. Must have Win. 95/Office 97 experience. Good phone skills. Previous office experience a plus. SALARY $7.00-8.00. Fill out application at Blaisdell House. 545-2842.

Mad Scientists Wanted. Conduct fun, exciting, educational, science activities with kids. After school High energy. Experience with groups of children. Reliable car. 413-584-7243.

Camp Poyntelle seeks counselors for co-ed Northeast PA, overnight Jewish Federation camp-3hrs fromNYC-General, Sports, Drama, H2O & Arts. 1-800-973-3866 summers@poyntelle.com or www.poyntelle.com

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Prestigious Northeastern Pannsylvania camp. Trails End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TDP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Cool Candy Company on bus route in Amherst seeks outgoing phone sales reps. You can work around your classes with our flexible schedule: choose one of two daily shifts(four hours each), minimum of three shifts per week. Shifts are 10am-2pm or 1pm-5pm. Earn up to $10 an hour with base salary plus commission. Requires some sales experience but personality is most important. Don't miss this great opportunity- call Beth right now to set up an interview! 1-888-556-5599.

CAMPAIGN JOBS with the Sierra Club. Full-time and part-time. $300-400/wk. Call Casey 256-6434.

New Students Program. Public Relations Jobs. Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Office for tour guides, student admissions reps, and summer orientation counselors. Deadline is Feb. 11, 2000.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Two paid internships available. Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots activism and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a spring internship position (with stipend) for you. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Seeking cluster of personal care attendants for adventerous wry, Hampshire senior. Fri 7:30-10am. Weekends 8-10:30am. Mon-Sun 12:00-4pm. Mon-Sun 6-10pm. Vehicle preferred. Work schedule permits study time. No experience necessary for willing persons. Three references required. Call Patrick 559-4780 or 549-0733.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.collegeproedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

FOR SALE

Double papasan sofa $125. Good condition. Paid $300+ new. 665-0589.

Downhill skis 4 sale. Atomic 10.26 w/bind $350. K2merlin Race w/bind $250. Rossi7sk w/bind $175. All 188cm. call quick. Jordan 397-9729.

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons w/retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call: (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONALS

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bedroom house 10 minutes from Amherst center. Available NOW. $300/month. 256-2384.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance, 549-1906.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

STEREO EQUIPMENT

BUY/SELL/TRADE. Large selection, used/ reconditioned components/speakers. Great prices. Satisfaction guaranteed. PA/DJ equipment too. A/V Exchange 253-5312.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS ON SPRING BREAK!
CANCUN JAMAICA BAHAMAS
PRICE IS LOWER!
32 FREE DRINKS!
Call us 1-800-293-1443 www.StudentCity.com

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural.Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Place your ads here in The Collegian
Call us at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

TUESDAY FEB. 8

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

Workshop – UVC-TV 19 will hold a workshop from 7-9 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend and get hands-on experience at the station, which is located behind the Hatch in the Student Union. Space is limited. Call 545-1356 for more information.

WEDNESDAY FEB. 9

Support – The Fluency Support Group will meet at 7 p.m. in Arnold House room 11. Contact Lisa at 577-4025 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 15 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Send in your events to FYI

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions
University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 7, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(32) Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience		Duke Ellington's Washington		Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Ladies Man	Raymond	Becker	Family Law "A Mother's Son"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Ladies Man	Raymond	Becker	Family Law "A Mother's Son"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	"Mary & Rhoda" (2000, Comedy)		Mary Tyler Moore		Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Words" (In Stereo)		Zoe,	Brutally Norm.	News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Freaks and Geeks (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	Moesha	Partners	Grown Ups	Malcolm-Eddie	News		Real TV (R)	Caroline's
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Freaks and Geeks (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	'70s Show		Ally McBeal (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Freaks and Geeks (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience		Duke Ellington's Washington		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	"Mary & Rhoda" (2000, Comedy)		Mary Tyler Moore		Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	Moesha	Partners	Grown Ups	Malcolm-Eddie	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Philadelphia 76ers at Indiana Pacers. (Live)					Inside NBA	"Boyz N the Hood" (1991)
A&E	51	L.A. Law "Cannon of Ethics"		Law & Order "Double Blind"		Biography "Roman Polanski"		Investigative Reports (R)		City Confidential (R)		Law & Order "Second Opinion"
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour	Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	53	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stern's Money	★★ "Better Off Dead" (1985, Comedy)		John Cusack,		Strangers	Upright	Daily Show	Stern's Money
DISC	33	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Weird		On the Inside "The Pentagon"		Great Siberian Explosion (R)		Treasures of the Earth (R)		On the Inside "The Pentagon"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Georgetown at Miami. (Live)				College Basketball: Kansas at Oklahoma State. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	52	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Beyond Chance (R)		"Frequent Flyer" (1996, Drama)	Jack Wagner, Shelley Hack,			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	35	MTV Jams (In Stereo)		Tom Green	Making-Video	Say What Kirke TRL (R) (In Stereo)				Road Rules	Make-Video	Loveline (R) (In Stereo)
NICK	42	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	43	Sliders (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Poltergeist: The Legacy
TLC	34	Home Again	Home Again	Trauma Center (R)		Paramedics "On the Edge"		Vietnam: The Soldiers' Story		Vietnam: The Soldiers' Story		Paramedics "On the Edge" (R)
TNT	30	In the Heat of the Night		ER "Obstruction of Justice"		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo Live)				"Shutterspeed" (2000, Drama)	Steve Borden. (In Stereo)
USA	29	Baywatch "Rubber Ducky"		JAG "Against All Enemies"		Walker, Texas Ranger		WWF Raw		WWF War Zone		Farm Club.com
HBO	46	(5:15) ★★½ "Rollor" (1984) 'PG'		Worst Witch	Dear America	★★★ "Titanic" (1997, Drama) Leonardo DiCaprio, Kate Winslet. (In Stereo) 'PG-13'						Beach: First	Strippers
MAX	45	(4:30)	★★½ "7 Looks Could Kill" (1991) Richard Grieco,			★★★ "Ed Wood" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Johnny Depp. 'R'				★★★ "The Package" (1989, Drama) Gene Hackman. 'R'
SHOW	44	"Enchanted" (1999, Comedy-Drama) Sydney Penny. 'NR'				★★½ "A Simple Plan" (1998, Drama) Bill Paxton. (In Stereo) 'R'				Filmmaker	Filmmaker	Filmmaker	Filmmaker

HBO Family Services Cable Network

3	HSCN Bulletin Board	31	Govt In Covnt
4	CBS/3 Hartford	32	NBC/22 Springfield
5	CBS/4 Boston	33	CNN Headline News
6	ABC/5 Boston	34	CNN
7	PBS/57 Springfield	35	CNN Fn
8	HSCN Movie Ch.	36	CNN Si
9	UPN/20 Hartford	37	TBS
10	Weather Channel	38	BET
11	NBC/30 New Britain	39	College TV Network
12	Fox/61 Hartford	40	Univision
13	PBS/24 Hartford	41	Comedy Central
14	WCCH & HSCN	42	Cartoon Network
15	International	43	TV Land
16	Umass Academic TV	44	C-Span
17	WB/New Haven	45	ZDTV (Tentative)
18	Sundance	46	Bloomberg Financial Network
19	The Learning Channel	47	History Channel
20	UVC-TV19	48	HSCN Programming
21	ABC/40 Springfield

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This is a good day for making specific adjustments to a project that is near and dear to your heart. Don't take any shortcuts at this time. Happy Birthday, Jeremy!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can keep a crisis from arising at home today simply by sharing a little bit more information with those who are depending on you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're sure to get constant reminders today of just how far you still have to go, but you must also appreciate just how far you've already come!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Why choose between this or that when you can, with a little creative thinking, come up with a way to have them both? Don't settle for less!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may have trouble getting through to someone today because of something you have done. Keep trying – he or she is being unusually resistant.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Quality is the major factor at this time; do less, but do it better! Those in charge are sure to be impressed with your priorities right now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone may be trying to get you to do something you don't want to do. You have the advantage because you know exactly what's going on!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – An unconventional approach can pay off handsomely for you at this time, but take care you don't endanger anyone else unnecessarily.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A family affair that you thought would be tedious is likely to prove far more frolicsome that you could have imagined. Enjoy!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You are likely to discover today that someone who has been in your "inner circle" is really far more different from you than expected.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Take care when working closely with anyone whose primary thought is of himself. You're feeling far more generous and selfless at this time.

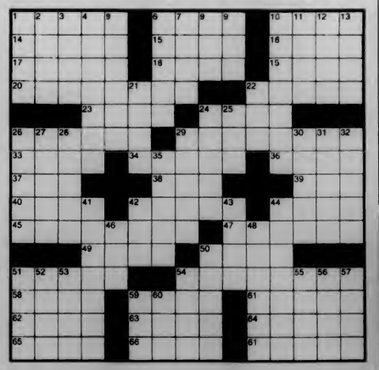
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Personal appearances are very important today, and you don't want anyone to get the wrong idea because you presented yourself poorly.

Quote of the Day

"What's your favorite button on the calculator?"

–One BioChem major to another

ACROSS
1 Woodwinds
6 Tizzy
10 Shout
14 Garlic unit
15 Juno, to the Greeks
16 Adams or Brickell
17 Eye color
18 Served perfectly
19 Coats an arm — big
20 Fictional sleuth
22 Clutch
23 Shipbuilding material
24 Ore repository
26 Declare
29 Beautiful
33 Placed
34 Suspends
36 Actress Deanny
37 "— Mutual Friend"
38 Water in Quebec
39 Family mem.
40 Lyric poems
42 Monsters
44 Poses
45 Swing an airplane to reduce speed
47 Irish dramatist
49 Kinds
50 Smelt
51 Wild horse
54 State of uncertainty
58 Bank rupt
59 Mt. Olympus ruler
61 Deep South
62 End of a threat
63 Give forth
64 Hamburger extra
65 Garden intruder
66 Squirrels collect them
67 Takes a nap



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-7-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Publisher Adolph —
2 Dull
3 Seep
4 Turned inside out
5 Dealer
6 Tumbledown cabin
7 Type of line
8 Vexation
9 Young boy
10 Wished (for)
11 — St. Vincent Millay
12 Pot covers
13 Pounce
21 Vow
22 Musician's job
24 Fashion magazine
25 Sounds of hesitation
26 Distant
27 Riyadh resident
28 Colts' fathers
29 Tree knot
30 Caravan stop
31 Join forces
32 Impudent
35 Sponsorship
41 Climbed (a rope)
42 Hardwood
43 Ice-cream treat
44 Canned fish
46 RN's specialty
48 Andes vulture
50 Expels
51 Make tea
52 — of thumb
53 Serrie tributary
54 Leave a job
55 Graph part
56 Brawl
57 Urges
59 Kind of meditation
60 Flightless bird

There will be a MANDATORY Night Graphics meeting Tuesday, 2/8, at 8 pm.

Awww... no menu today.

Sorry.

Night Editor: Vanessa Walliser
Photo Technician: Dan Santella
Copy Editor: Samantha Poulsen
Production Supervisor: Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff: Teresa Rodrigues, Katie Rose

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Monday, February 7, 2000

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Chris Kirkland drives on Texas' Chris Mihm but Mihm would have the last word as the Longhorns knocked off UMass 68-57 at the Mullins Center on Saturday.

Horns Hook 'em

Second half surge falls short as Minutemen unable to overcome early shooting woes

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Compiling the lowest first half total in Massachusetts basketball history with 16 points, the Minutemen came within six points of No. 16 Texas in the latter half only to crumble, 68-57, on Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center in front of a regional telecast on ABC.

UMass (11-10, 5-3 Atlantic 10) has dropped two straight including a crushing 75-48 loss to A-10 East rival Temple last week. Just one week ago, the Minutemen had collected three straight conference wins over Rhode Island, Duquesne, and Virginia Tech. UMass will host the La Salle Explorers Wednesday night at 7 p.m. The defending Big 12 champions (15-6, 6-2 Big 12) soothed themselves after being trounced by Oklahoma last weekend, 83-59.

Texas	68
UMass	57

Senior Monty Mack stands even with Marcus Camby for 10th place on the Massachusetts all-time scoring chart with 1,387 points. The South Boston native and Camby are tied for second all-time for scoring the most points in three seasons, behind only Jim McCoy. McCoy (1988-1992), who tallied 1,818 points in three seasons, is also the school's all-time leading scoring with 2,374 career points.

Mack, Chris Kirkland, and Shannon Crooks combined for 50 of the 57 points for UMass on the afternoon.

"We attacked better in the second half, that's the bottom line," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "They had two or three guys on [Mack], we can't hope that Monty scores 30 points every game."

National Player of the Year candidate Chris Mihm picked up his thirteenth double-double of the year as the 7-foot junior proved why he is almost unstoppable with 18 points and 12 rebounds. The center, who moved into the Longhorns' 15th slot for all-time leading scorer with 1,202 points, also set a new school record for blocks with eight.

The Minutemen held their only lead in the first seven minutes of the half, led by five quick points from Mack. The Longhorns then performed a 12-0 spurt to set the tone with a 17-9 lead with 6:14 left behind six points courtesy of Mihm. Kirkland cut the Texas oil spill short when he converted for a putback layup under the basket at 5:06.

UMass netted just two more field goals in the half as Texas, driven by a pair of three-pointers by Lawrence Williams, answered with 11 more points to nearly double the Minutemen's offensive output at 31-16.

"I just felt pretty good, I got into one of those zones when I just couldn't miss," said Williams, who finished with 17 points on a near-perfect 6-for-7 shooting.

Massachusetts, which earned just three trips to the foul line in the first half, shot 21 percent from the floor. Crooks couldn't seem to find the seam in the box and one defense the Longhorns shielded Mack with. The point guard went 0-for-9 with three turnovers in the first half.

"If the guy's going to block your shot, then go at him - at least let him block it," Flint said of Mihm.

Williams picked up where he left off with two more treys in the first two minutes. Kirkland, who finished with 19 points and nine boards, contributed five consecutive points for UMass before Mike Babul and Crooks drilled back-to-back threes to cut the lead to 41-27. For the next five minutes, Crooks and Mack teamed up for 11 points including two 3-pointers in a row from Mack to chop the lead to single digits at 49-40. At 8:31, Crooks, who righted himself for 17 points, all but two in the second half, continued his hot streak as he hit from downtown, to cut the deficit to six at 51-45.

"In the second half, all of a sudden we started attacking, and then we got ourselves back in the game," said Flint.

Offensively, UMass gained confidence with each shot, no longer shying away from the swatting arms of Mihm and Co. Babul, Kirkland and Mack equaled the challenge with unbridled aggressiveness on defense. Drumming up 14 steals, they chased down balls that bounced into the backcourt and cut off passes in direct flight for Mihm. Both Mack and Kirkland swiped four balls on the afternoon.

Down nine with 1:44 left, UMass played into the foul game, which Texas was prepared for. The Longhorns have spent the last two or three weeks shooting 100 foul shots a day in practice. Proof? Mihm stepped up ten times and made good every time. Ivan Wagner was a perfect 4-for-4 as the team shot 83 percent for the game.

Despite it being a non-conference clash, UMass fell further behind A-10 East-leading Temple, who crushed Rhode Island, 74-40, to pick up a half game.

Turn to DOOM page 9

First half funk spells doom for UM

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

For 20 minutes, the Massachusetts men's basketball team played the best it had all season. Tenacious defense flustered the 16th-ranked Texas Longhorns while the Minutemen found the range on offense.

For 20 minutes, they were the worst they'd ever been.

Ever.

16 points. It was all the Minutemen would get in the first half in their 68-57 loss to the Horns. In a game where it needed every second on the clock to go shot for shot with the defending Big 12 champions, UMass (11-10 overall, 5-3 Atlantic 10) instead settled for the worst scoring half in the team's history. Even worse, it wasted a gutsy comeback after intermission that would fall just short despite its flirtation with fate.

Monty Mack had a hot start, notching a quick five out of the starting gates, but then the Minutemen went cold – ice-cold. Like it had wandered beyond the fiery atmosphere of the Mullins Center in favor of the wintry February conditions. Mack's cohorts knocked down just three of their 21 shot attempts in the first half as Texas (15-6 overall, 6-2 Big 12) opened a 31-16 halftime lead. With all the misses, UMass needed boards, and boards they would not get.

"I'm used to it right now," Mack said. "Just because they take me away doesn't mean that other guys are not open. They just give me a decoy."

In the first half, Shannon Crooks dipped into the freezing temperatures

Turn to DOOM page 9

Women's hoops shocked by Temple as Owls survive offensive nightmare

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – How fitting that this game unfolded in the Cradle of Liberty. To put it mildly, both offenses were absolutely sleep-walking through this one.

In a game in which neither team could establish any semblance of an offensive rhythm, the Temple Owls outlasted the Massachusetts Minutewomen, 42-40, before a small but enthusiastic crowd at the Apollo. The two teams combined for 38 turnovers and shot well below their season averages from the field over the course of the extremely physical contest.

"You give up 42 points, you certainly expect to win the basketball game. Our offense certainly leaves much to be desired," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "We set basketball back an awful lot with our offensive performance today."

UMass (9-12, 6-4 Atlantic 10) entered the game with a mixture of determination and apprehension after a full week off. O'Brien's troops were eager to erase the lingering sting of a 62-49 home loss to St. Joseph's last Saturday, at the expense of a Temple team they had pummeled, 69-42, two days earlier. But the Minutewomen also knew that Temple (7-14, 2-8 A-10) had to have made some adjustments prior to yesterday's showdown, tweaking its offensive scheme so as to avoid another woeful scoring output against the Maroon and White (the Owls could manage only nine field goals in the January 27 rout).

"The first time we played them, we took them out of the game early," O'Brien said. "There was no question that they were going to make some adjustments this time around."

UMass was also forced to take the floor without freshman sparkplug Jennifer Butler; the team scoring leader was still feeling the aftereffects of a practice injury suffered earlier in the week when she banged heads with teammate Nekole Smith.

The action in this game began furiously, with both teams playing aggressive defense and scrapping hard for every loose ball. UMass forward Caroline Nehls controlled the opening tip, but the Minutewomen coughed up the ball on the ensuing possession when an errant entry pass from floor general Kathy Coyner was picked off by Temple senior Nicole Chaszar. Teammate Melissa Eagles nailed a 16-foot runner to open the scoring, but UMass quickly answered behind a deadeye three from the left wing by forward Amber Sneed.

UMass	40
Temple	42

After Smith canned a pair of free throws and the Owls answered with a transition hoop by forward Icesha Turnage and a freebie from center Lisa Jackubowicz, both squads stumbled into a six minute-plus scoring drought. Nehls finally broke the lock with a pair of foul shots at the 8:38 mark, then a layup by Jackubowicz preempted a 6-0 UMass run hammered out behind successive hoops by Sneed, Smith, and Alison MacFarland.

COURTESY MELISSA EAGLES

Kristin Cannon

The Owls would claw back and take the lead at halftime, 16-15, behind a 7-0 run over the last 3:12 of the period. The Temple spurt was highlighted by dynamic Chaszar steals on back-to-back UMass possessions, both of which led to easy Jackubowicz buckets. The sophomore center had netted eight points on 3-of-5 shooting over the first 20 minutes, while the bewildered Minutewomen had connected on a season-low 18-percent from the floor (four-of-22), and committed 11 turnovers in the face of the tenacious Temple defense.

"Early on, we just threw the ball at the basket, taking some really quick shots, and then we panicked," O'Brien said. "And their big kids really took it to us. In practice we try to work on getting in front, but today we just didn't get it done, and they took advantage of that."

The offensive ineptitude continued for both teams in the second half, as quick third fouls on both Nehls and Smith forced the Maroon and White to go with an exceptionally small lineup for much of the game's second half action. Temple's guard corps no doubt recognized this trend and sought to attack it, constantly feeding the 6-foot-1 Jackubowicz with entry passes and over-the-top dumps to set her up against smaller defenders such as Sneed. Jackubowicz would finish with a game-high 17 points.

Temple coach Kristen Foley found a temporary cure for her team's outside scoring illness in the second half in the form of freshman guard Regan Apo. The former New Jersey High School Player of the Year capitalized on lax UMass defense to score seven points in a four minute span around the 12:45 mark, including a picture-perfect trifecta from the right corner and a swooping breakaway layup off an Owl fast break.

But the outcome of the game hung in the balance until the closing seconds, when Jackubowicz capitalized on the fouling out of both Nehls and Smith to score six straight points, including a three-point play that put her team ahead, 42-40, with 14.6 seconds on the clock. O'Brien then sent freshman sniper Kristin Cannon into the game, setting up a dramatic game-winning shot opportunity for the Ohio native. But Cannon's rainbow from the right wing was off-target, and the Minutewomen watched time run out on a truly disheartening upset.

"That's just one of those situations," O'Brien said. "Kristen is a great shooter, and if I'm her, I'd probably take the same shot. But unfortunately, we didn't make that play."

The Maroon and White returns to action Friday, when the team treks to Pittsburgh for an evening war with Duquesne. Tip-off is slated for 7:05 p.m..

Ice caves in at home

BU arrives late, leaves with win

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Jack Parker must have had a speech in between the second and third periods that mirrored that of football coaching legend Vince Lombardi.

With the Massachusetts hockey team leading 2-0, Boston University stormed back, as they had done in two previous games against the Minutemen this season, for three third period goals to escape the Mullins Center with a 3-2 victory. The win improved the Hockey East-leading Terriers' record to 16-6-6, 11-1-5 HE, while the loss dropped the Maroon and White to 10-14-3, 4-11-2 HE.

BU	3
UMass	2

"It's a travesty to lose a game at home when you play so well and have a two-goal lead only to give up three in the third period," UMass coach Joe Mallen said.

After a sluggish first two periods in which the Terriers only forged nine shots on Minuteman goalie Markus Helanen, BU, as they have been know to do, clawed their way back into the game.

Tommi Degerman started the BU charge when he scored on the power play at the 3:02 mark to cut the UMass lead in half. Degerman's goal seemed to ignite a fire in the Terrier offense as it exploded for two more special teams goals to leave Amherst with the win.

"As the game progressed in the third period, once we got the first goal, things were more emotional on

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jedd Crumb scored the game's first goal, but the Minutemen surrendered three third period goals to BU in the Huskies' 3-2 win.

Turn to BU, page 9

Minutemen rally to tie UM-Lowell

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The last time Jeff Turner had an opportunity to score on a penalty shot he was unsuccessful. Fortunately, for the Massachusetts hockey team, the Saginaw, Mich., product made sure that he came through in the clutch this time around.

UM-Lowell	3
UMass	3

With the Minutemen trailing 3-2 with 23 seconds left in regulation of yesterday's Hockey East matchup with UMass-Lowell, River Hawks forward Yorrick Trelle intentionally knocked the net of its moorings in order to get a stoppage in play.

However, an NCAA rule states that in the final two minutes of regulation, teams have the option of choosing a penalty shot rather than a two-minute power play. With the game on the line, UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen wasted no time in choosing the former, sending the club's leading goal scorer out to take the shot.

Turner battled a puck that was on end from the moment he left the center circle, but still managed to lift a shot under the right shoulder of Lowell goaltender Cam McCormick to knot the game.

Neither team scored in the extra period, as the two squads skated to a 3-3 tie at the William D. Mullins Center.

Following the game, the junior alternate captain for the Massachusetts hockey team recalled a similar situation when he was playing junior hockey for the Rochester Mustangs. On that occasion, also trailing by a goal late in regulation, Turner missed a chance to tie the game for his club. This time, though, it was a different story.

Turn to LOWELL, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 10 — Tuesday, February 8, 2000

Three UMass students assaulted over weekend

UMPD Compostite Sketch

Individuals sought in indecent assault charge

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Correspondent

An incident of vandalism and indecent assault and battery was reported to the University of Massachusetts Police Department on Saturday, Feb. 5.

Police received a call at around 1:00 a.m. of a report of vandalism in the Pierpont Residence Hall. Upon arrival they were told that three Caucasian males had been observed near a bathroom where a sink had been ripped from the wall. As the three individuals were leaving, one of them grabbed a female student's breasts.

A composite sketch of the suspect accused of assaulting the female student was released yesterday morning.

According to the police the suspect is a white male, approximately 6'3, weighing about 175 pounds, with spiked dark brown hair, approximately 20 years of age, and was last seen wearing a gray sweater with a one to two inch black horizontal stripe, and dark pants.

The other two individuals are described as white males, about 5'7" in height with short light hair. Anyone with information pertaining to this incident should contact the University Police at 545-2121

Two sexual assaults reported in dorms

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Correspondent

After two sexual assaults and one physical assault in a three-week span last semester, UMass students were once again the victims of violent attacks. In the past four days, two separate incidents of rape were reported to the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

The first assault was originally reported early in the morning last Friday, Feb. 4 to UMass police as an assault and battery charge. Over the weekend, police upgraded the charge to an acquaintance rape.

Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMass Police Department, said the individual accused of the rape is not in custody but is, "under investigation." He stated that it "wasn't clear yet" where the rape had taken place, but only that it was in a dorm in Southwest.

According to the police they received a sexual evidence kit yesterday morning. A sexual evidence kit is used to prove whether or not there was contact between two people either sexually or physically. The results from the kit were not available at press time.

A second incident also took place in Southwest. A report issued by the UMPD said that, "Police received a report of a rape at approximately 1:00 a.m. on Sunday, Feb. 6. The incident was reported to have occurred at approximately 1:00 a.m. when an unknown male assaulted a female student in an elevator at Washington Tower as it traveled to an upper floor."

At this time the victim has not been able to provide a description of the assailant. Police are investigating the situation and ask that anyone with any information regarding this incident should call the campus police.

Lyons said he was not aware of any previous incidents involving the elevators in the high rises.

According to Lyons, there is "no connection" between these incidents and last semester's assaults.

Last semester in November there were three assaults reported in proximity to the campus pond that heightened awareness on campus safety.

A security update issued by Chancellor Scott on Jan. 22, recommended that students "do not walk in unlit areas, carry your whistle alarms, travel with friends, know who you are letting into your residence hall or apartment building, and be aware of your surroundings."

On Nov. 2 a female student reported being raped at 5:30 p.m. On Nov. 9, a female student reported being raped in the bushes near the Metawampee Lawn at 2:30 p.m. and on Nov. 14, a female student reported being pepper-sprayed by three individuals who then punched her before she was able to escape.

A fourth assault was reported in which a female student claimed she had been slashed by an attacker with a knife in a parking lot near where a student rally was taking place to protest campus violence. She admitted later to falsifying the incident.

Last semester, as a result of the assaults, security and students security patrol were increased, including a regular security patrol around the campus pond. An emergency call box was placed in the area in which several of the incidents had taken place and personal whistle alarms were also issued to students.

Any student who is the victim of rape or sexual assaults should either dial 911 for emergency services or the call the Everywoman's Center's 24-hour Rape Crisis Hotline at (413) 545-0800.

UMass professor awarded National Medal of Science

By Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

As one of 12 scientists receiving the 1999 National Medal of Science, Distinguished University Professor Lynn Margulis of Geosciences will travel to the White House this March.

"I'm extremely pleased to be in the company of these fine scholars," Margulis said.

According to Associate Department Head Richard Yuretich, members of the department were not surprised at the announcement of Margulis' achievement.

"She's a well deserving individual for this award," Yuretich said. "She's a distinguished scientist, no question about it. She's transforming our thinking about the interaction between life and the earth's surface."

The medal honors contributions by those who have significantly advanced knowledge in biology, engineering, mathematics, physics, and other behavioral sciences.

"I study the evolution of cells, which includes organisms that have vastly more interesting life histories and sex lives than those of people and other mammals," Margulis said.

"The live beings I study are unique, bizarre, environmentally significant, and to me, profoundly interesting. They are unlike all animals and plants. Their ancestors thrived in the Proterozoic Eon (2500-541million years ago). Indeed, from the view point of their long evolutionary history and genuine diversity, we mammals are all exactly the same," said Margulis.

Jessie Gunnard is in her first year as a graduate student in the Geosciences. After taking Environmental Evolution with Margulis last semester, Gunnard decided to become a teaching assistant for the course.

Gunnard explained that the course requires students to perform many presentations. The students can learn from one another, Gunnard explained. "In her class, you learn the material well enough to teach it to others."

Margulis' personality also makes a positive impression on people around her. "She's so full of energy. She's very interested in her students; she wants to help them," Gunnard said.

"No scientific work is complete until it is described. I've been fortunate enough to work with all of my children in crafting these descriptions," said Margulis.

Some of her works include, "What is Life?," "Slanted Truths," "What is

Turn to SCIENCE, page 3

Russian wars take toll

By Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post

ROSTOV-ON-DON, Russia – Tatiana and Victor Klochkov, mute with grief, came here to the 124th Forensic Military Laboratory two days after Christmas, expecting to bring home their son's body.

They were told he had died about 12 miles from Grozny, the shell-shattered capital of Chechnya. A band of rebels pretending to be refugees ambushed his unit on Dec. 5, they were told, and their boy was shot in the head.

But when the body was wheeled out, the wooden platform bore the remains not of their blond, freckled 21-year-old Sergei Victorovich Klochkov, but of a dark-haired stranger. A label around the young man's left wrist identified him as Sergei Vladimirovich Klochkov.

A month later, Tatiana and Victor Klochkov still don't know whether their son is alive or dead. One recent night, in their snow-swept cottage in the village of Divnaye, five hours southeast of Rostov-on-Don, they and a few close relatives gathered to consider, once again, the agonizing possibilities of what could have befallen him.

"God help him come home!" Sergei's white-haired uncle burst forth from his faded armchair in the

Turn to RUSSIA, page 2

Administrators discuss cuts

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

BETSY BECKER/COLLEGIAN

Daniel Koroma, a second year doctorate student majoring in international education, helped man the table urging students to contact Chancellor Scott about the recent budget cuts on the Campus Center Concourse yesterday.

When new students arrive at the University of Massachusetts next fall they will find two less programs to engage their attention.

The apparel marketing and family and consumer sciences programs within the department of consumer studies will no longer be accepting admissions.

"We must be certain that we can offer students the best possible experience. While we can give our current students a good experience in their major, we are not sure we can continue to do so," Cora Marrett provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs said in making the announcement.

The decision, according to Marrett was made after dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, Robert Helgeson asked her to consider closing the department of consumer studies because of a lack of faculty.

Over the past five years nearly half the faculty has left the department and has yet to be replaced.

Concerned about the resources in the department for several years, Helgeson according to a statement said his decision to act now predates the current budget situation.

Marrett said she agreed to suspend admissions for the coming semester while a review is conducted on the future of the department.

Sheila Mommen, head of the Consumer Studies department said the decision was very upsetting.

"It is a decision based on the budget," Mommen said. "We prepare our students to go into the fields where they can compete very competitively. Do you really want to eliminate a major that allows women to achieve and thrive?

"It is not just Apparel Marketing, it is the whole department," Mommen said. "It's an inexpensive program to run and yet effects many students campus wide."

It was also said by Marrett that regardless of the future of the closing of the department, all current students would be allowed to finish their degrees.

Many students and faculty alike are distressed regarding the current situation. A forum on the issue is being held tonight at 6:30 p.m. in Morrill 1-329 at which time the Dean of Consumer Studies will speak.

SETH KOENIG/COLLEGIAN

Butterfield is back in the action.

Gil – T begins the evening in the Hip-Hop and Jungle Warfare Room at the Fidel Show on Saturday in Butterfield. See Arts, page 6, for details.

Drive to fix Social Security hits snag

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Last year's urgent drive to enact reforms to head off the long-term bankruptcy of Social Security has given way to what many economists and fiscal experts say is misplaced confidence that large projected budget surpluses will eliminate most of the problem.

Many economists are skeptical that trillions of dollars in projected surpluses will actually materialize over the coming decade, given the spending pressures confronting Congress. But even if they do, many budget experts and seniors-advocacy groups warn that it won't be enough to cover future Social Security and Medicare costs as the number of retiring baby boomers begins to eclipse the number in the work force.

They insist that by putting off action for at least another year, the White House and congressional leaders are passing up a good opportunity to adopt an early and relatively modest fix.

"This is one you can keep putting off before it really causes problems," said Urban Institute economist Marilyn Moon, one of two public members of the Social Security and Medicare board of trustees. "The irony is that just when you have the most ability to deal with the problems, there's the least inclination to do it."

Less than a year ago, President Clinton and congressional leaders of both parties were eagerly promoting proposals for Social Security's long-term salvation, everything from allowing younger workers to invest some of their payroll taxes in the booming stock market to cutting future benefits.

Republicans and Democrats say

Turn to SOCIAL SECURITY, page 2

EXTENDED FORECAST

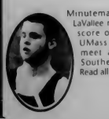
Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 28	HIGH: 42	HIGH: 37
LOW: 12	LOW: 25	LOW: 22

SOURCE: LUN.UMASS.EDU

Valentine's Day Massacre

Collegian columnist Jason Trenkle recants Valentine's Day he'll never forget on the Ed/Op page inside.

ED/OP PAGE 4



Spin City

Eight DJs turned Butterfield into a groove-shakin' party, David Lynch dabbles in good, clean, filmmaking and hip-hop is held up to the harsh light of socio-economic examination. Arts: delivered to your door in 30 minutes or the next one's free.

ARTS PAGE 6

Pioneer CaVallee

Minuteman gymnast Jeff LaVallee recorded an overall score of 36.55, leading UMass to a victory in a meet against MIT and Southern Connecticut. Read all about it in Sports.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 6
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 1
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Police log

Arrests
Feb. 2
Alean P. Owen, age 24, of Fayetville, N.C. was arrested and charged with equipment violations, driving an unregistered motor vehicle and unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle.

Andrew I. Maclay, age 23, of Stroudsburg, Pa. was arrested and charged with drunk driving, speeding, marked-lane, and driving while not in possession of his license.
Feb. 4

Roque A. Vianna, age 27, a UMass student was arrested and charged with domestic assault and battery.

Brian R. Castiglioni, age 19, of Bellingham was arrested and charged with possession of a false license or I.D. card and underage possession of liquor.
Feb. 5

Casimir F. Laizer, age 57, of S. Hadley was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct, assault and battery and threatening to commit murder.

Larceny
Feb. 3
A backpack was reported stolen from the Textbook Annex.

An undisclosed amount of cash was stolen from an office in the Franklin D.C.
Feb. 4

An attempted breaking and entering of a motor vehicle was reported in lot #22.
A watch and ring worth over $250 were reported stolen from a suite in Cashin Dorm.
Feb. 5

An individual in Pierpont Dorm reported the theft and misuse of a credit card.

An individual in Machmer Hall reported the theft and misuse of a credit card.

A cell phone was reported stolen from Machmer Hall.

A motor vehicle was reported stolen from lot #42 located south of the Boyden Gym.

Vandalism
Feb. 4
Graffiti was reported on a stairwell wall in Coolidge Dorm referring to the housing staff.
Feb. 5

Homophobic graffiti was reported on a bathroom stall door in Patterson Dorm.

Homophobic graffiti was reported on a hall emergency door in Pierpont Dorm.
Feb. 6

Graffiti was reported on the seventh floor lounge in Kennedy Dorm.

■ Russia

continued from page 1

residential phone books; they're afraid the government will abuse the data.

"People think the fingerprints could be used against them, that they could be on some kind of blacklist," said Sergei Pankratov, deputy head of the Interior Ministry's criminology center.

On desolate railroad sidings outside Rostov-on-Don, 750 miles southeast of Moscow, refrigerated railroad cars still hold 258 bodies from the last Chechen war. Officials at the forensic laboratory won't say how many bodies from this war remain unidentified, but financing has been a problem. In August, the lab director told reporters he had yet to receive a ruble of his annual budget.

Three weeks after they received their son's last letter, on Dec. 4, the Klochkovs were summoned to the lab building. They were shown a videotape of the body, and "we saw at once it wasn't him," said Tatiana Klochkov. The body was brought from the morgue, but they were certain it wasn't their son. Victor Klochkov saw a few more videotapes but didn't see Sergei.

Now they wait, hoping that if their son in fact died on Dec. 5, Tatiana's blood sample and fingerprints will help lab workers identify him. In the interview at their home, the couple rarely spoke, allowing relatives to describe the situation for them until Tatiana Klochkova collapsed in tears.

"It's been two months now," said Victor Klochkov as he led a reporter from the room. "She is even more upset than I am."

The family isn't bitter about the war that may have taken Sergei. In villages like Dvinoye, patriotism runs high.

■ social security

continued from page 1

they still favor some of these approaches, but clearly a lot of the steam has gone out of the drive as a strong economy and soaring budget estimates have had the effect of pushing the day of reckoning a little further into the future. Instead of clamoring for structural changes in the system, many in Congress and on the campaign trail say the government can shore up the system simply by walling off the surpluses generated by the payroll tax and devoting them exclusively to Social Security and debt reduction.

"There's enough money to take care of Social Security," Texas Gov. George W. Bush said recently. "There is enough money to meet the basic needs of our government, and there is enough money to give the American people a substantial tax cut, and that's exactly what I'm going to do."

Bush and the other GOP presidential candidates favor some form of privatization of Social Security. Sen. John McCain, (R-Ariz.), for example, has proposed giving younger workers the option of investing at least 20 percent of their payroll taxes in private accounts. But most Republican contenders have been careful not to provide many details, and none appears to favor immediate action.

On the Democratic side, Vice President Al Gore and former Sen. Bill Bradley staunchly oppose any form of Social Security privatization and have vowed to oppose any attempts to reduce current retirement benefits or raise the retirement age to save money.

"I think it's unlikely you will see in a campaign a candidate willing to spell out in detail a proposal for Social Security because, no matter how well intentioned, there's no painless way to solve the problem," said John Rother of AARP, the leading national senior lobby.

"Scandalous" author defends his work

By Howard Kurtz
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – One year after beating the rap in a Senate impeachment trial, President Clinton is still worried about his legacy. And so is Michael Isikoff, the reporter most closely identified with the Monica Lewinsky scandal.

Isikoff is incensed over his portrayal in Jeffrey Toobin's new best-selling book, "A Vast Conspiracy: The Real Story of the Sex Scandal That Nearly Brought Down a President." Isikoff's boss, Newsweek Managing Editor Ann McDaniel, has fired off a letter to Random House, Toobin's publisher, calling the depiction of Isikoff "egregiously unfair" and "a false and malicious portrait that is unrecognizable to those of us who work with Mike."

In painting Isikoff as "obsessed with the president's sex life," she writes, "Toobin twists the facts to cast Isikoff in the worst possible light."

Toobin is unperturbed. "It is amazing to me that a journalist could see fit to describe the president of the United States as 'far more psychologically disturbed than the public ever imagined,' " he says, "and at the same time he whines about a little criticism from me. ... He was repeatedly used by Clinton's enemies who knew of his interest in sex."

At issue is whether Isikoff will be remembered as a dogged journalist who exposed Clinton's deceptions or a dupe in a plot hatched by Linda Tripp and Lucianne Goldberg to trap a president they despised. Toward that end, Toobin describes Isikoff as greedily seeking to cash in with a big book.

Left out of the New Yorker writer's narrative, however, is that Toobin himself had considered collaborating with Isikoff on a book about the Lewinsky saga. They discussed the idea over lunch in New York in the spring of 1998, and Isikoff says Toobin spoke of splitting a big advance.

"Perhaps I should have mentioned this lunch," Toobin admits. But his own book is in a different category, he says, because "I was not a player in this story."

On one of the famous tapes, Tripp quotes Isikoff as saying that "in the present climate, I doubt you'd find a publisher. But if I were to work with you and allow some of this to get out into the mainstream media, then that would set you up" for a potential book. Toobin questions whether "Isikoff and Tripp were both stoking the story so they could profit from it in the form of book deals."

While Isikoff also investigated the stories involving Paula Jones (during his time as a Washington Post reporter) and Kathleen Willey, he insists he is no sexual snoop. He says he wrote nothing about Clinton's sex life from 1994 to 1997, except to knock down a book by an ex-FBI agent that the president was sneaking off to late-night trysts at the Marriott.

Isikoff insists that Toobin never asked him about some of the charges he leveled in the book. Toobin said, "I interviewed the guy, I read his book, I exchanged letters with him. That to me counts as a thorough reporting job."

The tale of the Idaho Statesman and Micron Technology gets more and more curious.

First Jim Bartimo, the Statesman's former business editor, said he quit the Boise newspaper last fall after management insisted that a lengthy story on Micron be shown in advance to the company, the area's largest employer. Bartimo, who has worked for the Wall Street Journal and Bloomberg News, says the story was subsequently softened.

Now the previous business editor, Paul Beebe, says he was fired last April for changing the lead sentence on a story about, yes, Micron. The story involved a complaint by Taiwanese manufacturers that Micron was illegally dumping computer chips in their country. Beebe, noting that Micron had earlier filed similar complaints against Japanese rivals in the 1980s, changed the lead to read: "Several Taiwanese semiconductor companies are accusing Micron Technology Inc. of unfair trading practices; giving the Boise company a taste of its own medicine."

Now the previous business editor, Paul Beebe, says he was fired last April for changing the lead sentence on a story about, yes, Micron. The story involved a complaint by Taiwanese manufacturers that Micron was illegally dumping computer chips in their country. Beebe, noting that Micron had earlier filed similar complaints against Japanese rivals in the 1980s, changed the lead to read: "Several Taiwanese semiconductor companies are accusing Micron Technology Inc. of unfair trading practices; giving the Boise company a taste of its own medicine."

BILLY REDDICK/COLLEGIAN

Finger lickin', finga lickin good, y'all?
Binora Walcott, a sophomore theatre major, plays more than just a good sport yesterday as she advertised the new chicken eatery in the Hatch.

■ science

continued from page 1

Sex?" and "Microcosmos."

Before becoming an author, researcher, and a professor, Margulis said she had a desire to be with nature.

"I think I was always interested in being in nature, which was difficult living in the very busy south side of Chicago," she said.

"Science, to me, is simply a way the best way, to find out about the world," Margulis said.

"I was hired by two key people: James Walker, former chair of the former Botany Department, and Fred Byron, former Dean and current Vice Chancellor for Research. I'm eternally grateful to the two of them. They arranged to remodel the space in Morrill South. According to Walker, the remodeling of 316 for teaching Environmental Evolution is the only time in the history of the University when research space was converted back into teaching space."

Margulis commented that oftentimes universities are so focused on research, that teaching receives a back seat. As an example, she referred to the majority of classes, which are large and impersonal.

In regards to her success, Margulis credits UMass for allowing her to perform research.

"UMass has permitted me to do research at a rate that was impossible for all of my previous professional life," she said.

In her modesty, Margulis also gives a lot of credit to Administrative Assistant Donna Reppard, who will be joining her as a guest at the ceremony in Washington D.C.

"[While working in another office], she took my class as a UMass employee, tuition-free," said Margulis. Soon after, Reppard moved over to the Geoscience Department.

"She's so good with people. She keeps the office moving... She makes it possible for me, my graduate students and my colleagues to do science," Margulis commented.

Likewise, Reppard enjoys working with Margulis. "She has inspired me so much that I'm going back to school [part time] to get a masters in environmental science at Antioch New England Graduate School," exclaimed Reppard.

After all her accomplishments, Margulis said she still did not expect to be awarded the National Medal of Science.

"I was completely surprised and delighted." She said it was especially nice to hear that she would be receiving the award during spring break on March 14, Einstein's birthday.

BILLY REDDICK/COLLEGIAN

Proffessor Lynn Margulis, geosciences.

www.DailyCollegian.com
Is that your FINAL answer?

Wild things are happening

Bell Atlantic knows which way the future is headed, and we want you to go with us. We are one of the top performers in the hotly competitive communications and information industry ... essentially a one-stop shop for all of our customers' communication needs.

We're looking for bright, innovative, high-energy people to join us in positions from Maine to West Virginia and help us design a wildly different world. Here, you'll use your bachelor's degree in Civil, Electrical, Industrial or Mechanical Engineering; Computer Science; Telecommunications; or Math to play a key role in designing, supporting and/or maintaining one of the nation's most sophisticated telecom networks. Business, Accounting and Operations majors are also encouraged to apply for operational support positions. To find out more, contact your Career Services office, and see us at the following events:

Alana Job Fair: February 16th
Summer Intern/Coop Fair: February 17th
On-Campus Interviews: February 17th & 18th

Or for more specific information about the entry-level positions available, visit our Web site at www.BellAtlantic.com. Bell Atlantic is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer.

FORTUNE

Bell Atlantic

www.BellAtlantic.com

Annual Campus-wide Career Fair
Wednesday
February 16, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 3 pm

Get Ready for the Career Fairs! Attend any or all of these work shops presented by the Campus Career Network

Tuesday, February 8
Room 803 Campus Center
10:00 am-Noon
Walk-in resume review- bring your resume and questions for Marc Dobbins, College Relations manager and Alyson Zeitlin, College Relations Specialist Ames Department Stores

12:00 noon
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised your major)
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

1:00pm -3:00pm
Walk-in practice interviews - find out what to expect
With Marc Dobbins, College Relations Manager and Alyson Zeitlin, College Relations Specialist
Ames Department Stores

3:00pm
Salary - What's fair? What to ask for?
When to ask for it?
Clark Edwards
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)

Wednesday, February 9
Room 803 Campus Center
11:00am
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)
Joan Stoia
Director, Campus Career Network
1:00pm - 3:00pm
Register online with the Campus career Network - your link ti campus interviews and more!
Demonstrations every 1/2 hour
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network.

Thursday, February 10
Room 803 Campus Center
9:00am - 11:00am
Register online with the Campus Career Network - your link to campus interviews and more!
Demonstrations every 1/2 hour
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

1:00 pm
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

Friday, February 11
Room 803 Campus Center
1:00 pm
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

Monday, February 14
Room 811 Campus Center
11:00am
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

1:00pm
How to Get Job Referrals at a Career Fair (even if they haven't advertised for YOUR major)
Tina Acker
Associate Director, Campus Career Network

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

A fashion faux pas

The decision by the University of Massachusetts Administration to rid the campus of Apparel Marketing as a major sends a dangerous and embarrassing message to current faculty members and students, as well prospective students and the companies that were benefiting from student talent.

That the University couldn't accurately allocate funds is embarrassing enough; that the University then chose, of all majors, Apparel Marketing, is unconscionable.

Apparel Marketing is a major with close to 275 students enrolled, and while not an overwhelming majority of UMass students, 275 students is a significant enough number to consider when it comes to eliminating a major. The major itself allows for students to enter internships with The Gap, Fairchild Publications and MTV House of Style, among others. Those are students who would be representing the University at well-known and respected institutions, but now, UMass is saying that those majors aren't as important to them as other departments. That includes departments that are comparatively smaller in size than Apparel Marketing.

The Astronomy Department wouldn't release their major figures, but would confirm that their number of majors was less than that of Apparel Marketing's 275.

The Journalism Department has only 158 student majors.

The Landscape Architecture Department has only 115 student majors.

The Philosophy Department has only 65 student majors.

But it is the Apparel Marketing department that is being considered for closure, rather than any of those three departments. The question that the UMass administration needs to ask itself, first and foremost, is why would a department larger than most others be considered for possible closure?

After all, wouldn't a department that is singular in its existence within the state of Massachusetts be considered for elimination only after departments that might be found at other campuses in state, especially departments that are smaller in enrollment? Wouldn't a department sending students around the nation to well known companies be in the UMass Administration's good graces?

The indicators are apparently not. In three years time, 275 students will apparently lose their major, and while most of those students will have probably graduated, the elimination of this program is the elimination of a program that brings students to UMass and, in turn, takes UMass to the world.

Apparently such things aren't valued by a University administration who budgeted funds so poorly as to necessitate the elimination of an entire major from the University. Students once interested in UMass may now look west towards the University of Rhode Island, the closest school offering an Apparel Marketing major. That is most likely to affect, not out-of-state students, but rather in-state ones who will now be forced to go out of the state to get an education previously offered at what was supposed to be their state school.

The idea that UMass would rid itself of a major, especially a major specific to one campus within the entire state of Massachusetts, is an embarrassment to the UMass and an affront to students past, present and future who might have thought have coming to Amherst for a public education.

The Daily Collegian feels the decision to rid our University of Apparel Marketing is a dangerous and embarrassing decision. It is a move that sends the wrong message to current students and faculty, as well as prospective students and corporations who had known UMass as a provider of great new talent. Now, the University will be known for its lack of adequate funding, its inability to accurately budget, and, not its commitment to education, but rather, its commitment to the bottom line.

As such, it is highly recommended that the Administration of our University rethink their current position and find the funding necessary to keep the Apparel Marketing major.

I, evil Ricky Martin robot

Boomer Pinches

I didn't realize just how bad Arielle's obsession with robots was until my dog died last November. My dog's name was Judd Nelson. The day after Judd Nelson died, Arielle and I took a trip over to the dry cleaners to see if they could remove some glutinous rice stains that had somehow been smeared all over her jacket.

"It's too bad about Judd Nelson," I said as we pulled out of the parking lot.

Arielle shook her head. "Well, what did you expect?"

"You heartless pig," I said. "Can't you see I'm stricken with grief?"

We stopped at a traffic light and she turned towards me. "Look, I feel bad for you and all, but let's face it. None of this would've happened if you'd had a robot instead of a dog."

"Robot?"

"Robots don't die, man. Robots just keep on going. We should get rid of all pets and everyone should just buy robots."

"Arielle, that's crazy talk. Dogs are loyal and cuddly. Robots are heartless monsters."

"Not Johnny 5 from Short Circuit. He could sing and dance, dude. He rocked."

"Sweet creeping Jesus," I said, "you've lost it. That Johnny 5 was a potty-mouthed menace. His best friends were Steve Gutenberg and Fischer Stevens. You want a technological terror like that running loose on the streets of America?"

"My point," said Arielle, "is that if we all had robots instead of pets, nobody would be crying about their dead dog."

She had become a junkie of mass-marketed technology. Most of her paychecks go towards the purchase of an obscene number of overpriced gadgets from online merchants, including an atrocity called the Toothbrush Buddy, a battery-powered electric toothbrush with a special "tongue-brushing" feature and a valve that squirts mouthwash into your mouth while you scrub your molars. Her kitchen is filled with all sorts of appliances that make a lot of noise while apparently serving no useful domestic purpose.

She's also very excited about the current presidential race. "I can't believe we finally have a robot running for president," she said one night while we watched some TV coverage of the campaign. "I'm totally going to vote for him. A robot, man. A robot could really whip this country into shape."

"That's no robot, you lunatic," I finally told her. "That's Steve Forbes."

But what Arielle really wants is her own personal robot slave. I have always harbored a sneaking suspicion that the only reason the Industrial Revolution ever happened is because the rich and powerful men of this country desperately needed a cheap and efficient workforce to fill the hole left by slavery after the Civil War. Arielle claims that if she had a robot slave to handle all of her responsibilities, she would have more free time to play solitaire on her computer. Every time a commercial for Bicentennial Man would come on last December, she would call me up in a kind of rapture. "Did you see the part where the girl tells the robot to jump out the window and he actually does it? That was awesome. Robots'll do anything, man!"

I decided it was time for an intervention. I sat her down and said, "Look, Arielle. This whole robot business, it'll come to no good end. You're better off letting it go. This is the kind of stuff that drove Philip K. Dick crazy."

But trying to make her understand this was like trying to justify jungle warfare tactics to a Buddhist monk. You get no response save a blank, horrified stare, and then they burst into flames.

And really, why shouldn't Arielle believe in robots? We've come a long way since Fritz Lang's 1926 film, Metropolis, in which Maria, the inspirational leader of the common workers, is replaced by an evil robot doppelganger. In that flick, the workers discovered the deception and destroyed the evil robot. In today's world, if a popular figure were replaced by some robot – for the sake of argument, let's say it's Ricky Martin – every man, woman and child would line up to buy one. Some corporation would patent the idea and turn out millions of evil robots. In living rooms across America, family members of all ages and ethnic backgrounds would be entertained for hours on end by the sexually ambiguous Puerto Rican pop phenomenon known as "the Evil Ricky Martin Robot."

"Trying to make her understand this was like trying to justify jungle warfare tactics to a Buddhist monk. You get no response save a blank, horrified stare, and then they burst into flames."

The truth of the matter is that we've been taught to love machines since the dawn of the Industrial Revolution, whether the machine in question is a car, a laptop computer, or R2-D2. This goal of American capitalism has always been to create a nation of consumers obsessed with owning the newest and hippest products on the market. But I think the real turning point was the advent of the Baby Boomers, who by and large wanted for nothing growing up, and as a result their appetite for self-gratification grew exponentially. Thus, the hedonism of the late 1960s and the 1970s evolved into the pure greed of the 1980s and the unchecked consumerism of the 1990s.

What particularly bothers me about this so-called "Information Age" that we live in is that it revolves around a technology whose ultimate purpose is to render human beings obsolete – namely computers. The Holy Grail of software companies is a completely automated society in which all our needs will be taken care of by machines, and people will function only as consumers. Bill Gates and his ilk would have us believe that any technological advancement serves to better the human race. And certainly there are some instances in which he is right, most notably in the field of medicine. But lately technology continues to progress at an ever-quickening rate while we're all standing around watching it with greedy eyes, like kids in a toy store.

Technology is reducing us to a nation of shoppers. Poor Arielle is just a harbinger of America in the 21st century: a culture of devoted techno-fetishists whose only remaining purpose in life is to spend lots of money on the sleekest, fastest machines they can find, riding out the American Dream at terminal velocity across a landscape of digital highways and online shopping malls, tearing through everything in their path until the whole thing finally flies apart and the pieces are left scattered along the road for some future generation to stumble across and wonder what the hell we were doing to ourselves.

Boomer Pinches is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/op is always seeking column submissions from students, faculty and UMass staff on current and interesting topics that are well written and well organized. If you have any questions, call 5-1361 and ask for Gary or Alexis.

An evening with two Smith girls and a video camera

Do you know what the ideal evening out with a girl would be on Valentine's Day? Try doubling the dosage and adding a video camera. Now that's what I would call a menage a trois gone wrong. Well, that's exactly what happened to one of my closest friends and I during an excursion two years ago to Northampton around Valentine's Day. It happened while I was a freshman, a naive and inexperienced child roaming the streets of Noho on a Friday night during Valentine's Day.

I always hated Valentine's Day because it was one of those holidays that was created to mock single men. Every year I would ask myself, "It's Valentine's Day. Now, what will I do with myself?" Most of my single high school male friends would get together and complain about how much it sucks, and then usually one of them would suggest renting some kind of pornographic flick. I remember hearing about one of the flicks they rented that was called "Sammy's Hot Romance." Still, every Valentine's Day, I would do the same thing: I would go to a singles dance club and try to find some kind of woman that was sensitive and caring.

Jason Trenkle

I think it's important now to note that I grew up in Maine before coming to UMass. I wouldn't call most of the women "quality craftsmanship"; in fact, I read somewhere that Maine has the highest rate of pregnancies in New England. All this in the place they call "Vacationland" with the motto "The Way Life Should Be." And this is the same place where sketchy people go around beating up sheep and tipping cows after inebriating them with alcohol. If this is what students on my weekend night call exciting, my life hasn't been that bad.

But when I first arrived at the University, Northampton was an eyesore, albeit one with a lot to do and a vast number of women I could meet. It was the ideal location for any single guy on Valentine's Day. At least I believed that I could save my face and find that true someone who would make it all worth i

There she was that night, the Smith College girl of my dreams; she was perfect. Those deep brown eyes, the darkish black hair that reflected my deepest fantasy and a voice that made your spine tingle when she called your name.

I knew I was in seventh heaven. I advanced toward her, thoughts gushing through my mind as to what I should say. There was so much I wanted to tell her, but the words would not form on my lips. I've never been known to be too slick with first impressions. Some of my friends used to quiz me on what the best "one-liner" was. I remember ones such as "That looks good on you. Can I wear you?" Or how about "That looks very becoming on you. Of course, if I were on you..." I never believed in pulling that kind of stuff. First, it doesn't work, and second, if you are low enough to use them to begin with, you might as well go join those cow-tipping natives in Maine.

Anyway, I resume my story with the confrontation between us. The mysterious girl and I made eye-contact. I began to feel my eyes burn (well, not actually, but it's a good line to say to any girl). Then, she stepped forward, inches from my body, longing to feel me next to her. Then suddenly she whispered, "hello," and retreated from me to her original point along the dance floor.

What should I do? If I followed her, it would appear too obvious. However, if I lollygagged with other dancers, she might come back to talk. I continued to gaze at her, thoughts racing through my mind, when suddenly the judgment had been made. My eyes, which weren't meant to following her path, sought the truth I hadn't been longing for.

She had another girlfriend from Smith. I couldn't believe it. Even the most desperate romanticist on campus couldn't come to terms with another woman, let alone one with a lesbian. Now I know I may not be the most handsome guy on earth, but the feeling of being rejected like this goes beyond what I can say in this editorial. I laughed thinking I'd have better luck if I had dressed up as a woman (but don't laugh because that's something I actually did during summer camp).

Then suddenly, to my dismay, I saw something that I will never forget. I saw a man with a video camera. But this wasn't any ordinary guy with a video camera. It was a guy with a video camera filming one of the best experiences he could ever have on Valentine's Day: spending it with his girlfriend.

I thought about it for a while and realized that this might be something that he could look back on for years to come; of course, I'd never tell my kids I flirted with a lesbian. Still, what he held in his hand was something that was far more important than any passing whim of a fantasy.

Since that day, I have never looked at Valentine's Day in the same way. Perhaps there are naive single guys just like me, believing that they have to strike lucky to have that perfect Valentine's Day match. What they don't realize is that perhaps they aren't looking closely enough. The perfect Valentine's Day is not spent searching for that one special dream-fulfilling evening; it's one that is spent with the special people you care about. And I plan on doing just that; I have that special person and I don't plan on leaving the video camera behind.

Jason Trenkle is a Collegian columnist.

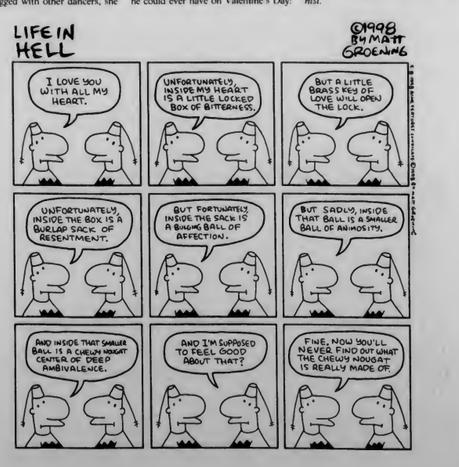
Ed/op welcomes letters to the editor about campus concerns and issues. Letters to the editor should be between 400 and 500 words and should be well organized. In addition, letters should be typed and include the writer's name, phone number and address. (The address and phone number will not be printed). If possible, please put your letter on disk and turn that in with your printed copy. Letters should be placed in the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement, room 113.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Griffin News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Ian Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

International Affairs

Attention turned to Afghanistan

In a United States State Department Survey titled, "Patterns of Global Terrorism," hijacks account for only two of 273 international "terrorist" incidents in 1999. However, it is only the second month of the year 2000, and already a hijack has been put on the list for this year's international "terrorist" incidents.

Yet another plane was hijacked early Sunday morning, this time on its way from Kabul, Afghanistan. The plane had been en route to Mazar-I-Sharif only an hour away, when it was hijacked shortly after takeoff. It was then forced to make stops in Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan and Russia before finally landing at Stansted Airport in Britain, 30 miles from London.

British and United Nations officials believe that the hijackers are closely interrelated are connected to Ahmad Shah Masood and are specific terrorists that are demanding the release of Ismail Khan, a key opposition figure in Afghanistan.

Catherine Turner

If the hijackers are, in fact, connected to the Anti-Taliban movement, then it is less of a "terrorist" move, than one of desperation. Though it is certainly not right to hijack a plane and force its passengers to endure long and grueling days of fear and uncomfortable seating, it could be worse.

Whenever this plane stopped, it released passengers in exchange for hot meals, baby food, fresh water and medical supplies. How many hijackers would be so considerate? And there have been no reports of the "terrorists" harming any of the passengers, just that they are armed with knives, guns and grenades. Now the tally is up to 27 released of the original 186 passengers and crew aboard.

Now I'm not saying that hijacking a plane is a good thing to do. I'm not condoning the use of guns or knives or grenades to make demands of an international audience. However, this does seem to be more of a noble action than one based solely on violence.

Once again, if the instigators of this action are members of an Anti-Taliban movement, perhaps this is a move to draw attention to a suffering country. Chances are that these men that are holding the passengers hostage will be arrested or killed, making them perhaps martyrs, rather than lunatics.

If you realize what these men are fighting against, it is easier to see why drastic measures must be taken to publicize their strife stricken country.

In 1996, an Islamic Fundamentalist movement, the Talibian, replaced the ruling government in Afghanistan. The group consists of the ethnic majority, the Pashtun, which are Sunni Muslims. The Taliban government claims 90 percent of the country and has implemented a strict Islamic code that forbids women from working and education, forces men to wear beards, outlaws all entertainment including music and television, and also runs public executions and floggings.

The people in this country are suffering. Imagine if the United States was taken over by a group of fundamentalists, and women were barred from going outdoors, reading books and even having their wrists exposed. Imagine if you were forced to watch the public slaughter of innocent people. Wouldn't you want to draw international attention to this monstrosity?

The man that these hijackers want to see released is the governor of the Heart province that borders Iran. He is an ethnic Tajik and was a respected leader to the Anti-Talibans because of his efforts to stop the rapes, looting and murders that followed the central government's demise when Taliban took the Capital of Kabul.

The opposition alliance is comprised of religious and ethnic minorities including Shi'ites, Tajiks, Hazaras and Uzbeks. Though officials from the Anti-Taliban group deny responsibility for this hijacking, they have made efforts to release Khan through peaceful channels, including the U.N.

The years of constant airplane hijacks in the Middle East are over, and there have been few hijackings since. However, if you look at the most recent episodes, including the Indian Airlines hijacking by Kashmiri Separatists in December, and the 1994 hijacking of Air France by Algerian Islamic gunmen, this particular incident seems to be more of a cry for help than an ultimatum.

Most likely this conflict will end peacefully, although Khan will probably not be released, the remaining passengers will go home. My hope is that after the world breathes its sigh of relief, that it will then turn its attention to the real victims, the Afghanis left under Taliban rule.

Catherine Turner is a Collegian columnist.

Coalition formed in Austria

Right-wing party isolates country from EU

By Emily Oko
Collegian Correspondent

The establishment of a new Austrian government that includes a far right party has drawn international attention in the past week and is deteriorating relations with the European Union (EU), the United States and other countries.

Austria, a member country of the EU since 1995, reached an agreement on Friday to form a coalition government of the Austrian People's Party and the Freedom Party after a three-month turmoil following the 1999 parliamentary election.

The inclusion of the far right Freedom Party, led by Joerg Haider, known for his anti-foreigner sentiments, has aroused criticism against this decision. The EU has resolved to impose sanctions on Austria.

International attention, which is rarely leveled towards this small and neutral country, made headlines when coalition talks between the Social Democrats and the People's Party failed last month.

In the parliamentary election in October 1999, the Social Democrats won the biggest share of votes, but did not have enough support to form a majority government. When they tried to renew their 13-year coalition with the People's Party, they could not reach an agreement.

The negotiation between the People's Party and the Freedom Party began two days after the partnership attempt between Social Democrats and the People's Party collapsed. The Freedom Party has been growing amazingly fast since Haider became its leader in 1986, leaping to second place in the October election.

Haider's hostility towards immigration and skepticism about the EU are sometimes even referred to as Neo-Nazi. Still, his outspoken words and his charisma attract many Austrians who want to have "change" after the 50-year of control by the socialist with little progress.

However, to include Haider's party in the government alerted many people in and outside Austria. During the negotiation, demonstrations took place in the capital city of Vienna. The EU, as well as other countries such as Israel or the United States, threatened that they would cut ties with Austria if Haider's party were to join the coalition.

Joerg Haider, Austria's right wing party leader

Despite massive objections, Austrian President Thomas Klestil swore in the new coalition of the People's Party with the Freedom Party on Friday.

The new Cabinet consists of five members from each party, and People's Party head Wolfgang Schuessel is the new Chancellor. Haider will remain governor of the state of Carinthia and will not join the Cabinet.

Before approving the new government, Klestil had leaders Schuessel and Haider sign the "Declaration of Values of European Democracy," which he prepared himself in order to calm international concerns. He said that he felt compelled to carry out the results of the elections last October in spite of the massive foreign opposition. He also gave a speech on national television Friday, stressing that Austria is indeed a democratic country, and asking everyone to give the new government a chance to prove itself.

Even so, the EU decided that each of the 14 other member countries should minimize bilateral relations with Austria. They said that Haider's view didn't have any value or place in the European Union. It is the first time in the EU's history that it has imposed sanctions on a member country, and there is skepticism that this might slow down the EU's future plans (such as the expansion towards East Europe or the common security issue).

Israel, with a history that cannot be explained without mentioning the Nazi era, has already recalled its ambassador from Vienna. The United States also announced that it would limit its contacts with Austria.

These interventions are arousing anger in Austria. According to a poll, 58 percent of the people who were questioned felt that the EU was overreacting in its decision to isolate Austria.

Countries are judging the new government, before it has done anything. In fact both Switzerland and Japan have announced that they will wait and closely observe the new government before they make any judgments.

The outcome of this dramatic change in Austrian politics might lead it into a situation that they have never experienced. The world will have to wait until the next parliamentary election in four years for the answer.

More Chinese move into Tibet

By Shawna Magarik
Collegian Correspondent

Tibetans have a living culture that is slowly dying. Tibet's unique culture and religion is systematically being destroyed, and is in danger of being lost forever.

Immediately after the Communist party took power in China in 1949 it began asserting its claim that Tibet was part of Chinese territory. By October 1950, the People's Liberation Army had penetrated Tibet as far as Chamdo, the capital of the Kham province, and headquarters of the Tibetan Army's Eastern Command. Tibet was also infiltrated from the Northeast along the border of the province Amdo. By 1954, 222,000 members of the People's Liberation Army were stationed in Tibet.

Today, well over half of Tibet's original territory has been absorbed into Chinese property. Only central Tibet (U-Tsang) and part of eastern Tibet (Kham) are recognized by China as the so-called "Tibet Autonomous Region." Tibet has been deemed "the world's largest remaining colony."

Tibet was a distinct nation, which had maintained its own government, religion, language, laws and customs. Over the centuries, because of China, the Tibetans lost much of their cultural definition. They have since been in a struggle to regain their freedom and keep their culture intact.

Tibet fully embraced Buddhism in the eighth century. The objective of the Tibetan culture since then has been the cultivation of a good heart and a calm, clear mind. Since the beginning of Chinese occupation, Tibetan Buddhism became the principal target for communist reforms.

Only 13 of Tibet's 6,000 monasteries have not been destroyed or desecrated. By 1969, there were no longer any practicing monks or nuns remaining in Tibet. Today, China's Communist Party permits limited practice of religion, but controls and severely restricts Tibet's monasteries and nunneries.

There have been years of human rights violations including disappearances, arbitrary and prolonged detention without trial or charge, and labor camps. Passive citizens who practice non-violence are beaten with clubs and other means by the Chinese police and then are thrown into crowded automobiles and shipped off to labor camps. At these camps they are forced to work and are occasionally tortured. Women, including nuns suffer sexual violence and rape.

The Chinese government, for periods up to ten or 20 years, has imprisoned one in every ten Tibetans. Those who escape these ends find themselves trapped in world of disease and hunger.

There are many issues in Tibet, but the most pressing issue today is the Chinese population influx into the country. The influx is a combination of the direct transfer of Chinese residents by the government, induced relocation, and spontaneous migration with indirect government support.

This influx is assimilating Tibetans into China at an enormous rate. The rate has now reached a point where the distinct identity of the Tibetans and their ancient civilization is being overwhelmed and its continued separate existence is in jeopardy.

One project sanctioned by the Chinese is attempting to relocate 60,000 Han and Hui Chinese into a Tibetan and Mongol Autonomous Area known as Tulan Dzong as part of the Amdo region of Tibet. The project would also incorporate the construction of a 40-meter dam in an environmentally sensitive area and force 2,500 Tibetan nomads out of the area. The local Mongol population would be outnumbered and their way of life either changed or lost forever.

Who is really in charge of Russia?

By Simon Perks
Keele University Student, England

Russia entered the 21st century with no leader and no hope for change. Boris Yeltsin's resignation in the final hours of 1999 surprised many, yet offered the chance for a new start. Unfortunately, this opportunity will remain unfulfilled. The chaos and confusion surrounding Russia's leaders will continue. With the presidential election only two months away, who is really in charge?

Three main groups vie for control of the world's largest country. The first of these is prime minister and acting president, Vladimir Putin and his entourage.

As a former head of the Federal Security Service, Putin is well versed in the politics of power. He has already filled key Kremlin posts with loyal subordinates, and garnered the support of a large proportion of the Duma, the lower house of parliament. Supported by the state media, including the two major TV channels, he is currently Russia's most popular politician, mostly due to his ruthless handling of the war in Chechnya.

Vladimir Putin, the new Prime Minister of Russia.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Putin has declared the need for a strong state. He has also called for more powerful armed forces. While such nationalist talk gains the support of the military, it does little to address the more fundamental problems of poverty and unemployment. While what Putin intends to do with Russia remains unclear.

Also contending for power are Russia's regional leaders. The country's federal structure gives extensive powers to the directly elected heads of its 89 regions, many of whom use this local power base as a springboard into national politics.

Uri Lushkov, the Mayor of Moscow, is one of the front-runners in the race for the presidency. Another man to watch is the former army general Alexander Lebed, currently governor of the Krasnoyarsk region.

As Kremlin politicians concentrate on their internal wrangling, Russia's regional leaders are becoming more and more popular. With many regions, particularly the ethnic republics, becoming increasingly independent of the Moscow government, Putin will have to adopt a much harder line if he is to protect the country's territorial integrity. This will be a difficult task, for he is relying on the support of regional leaders in his bid for the presidency.

The third group competing in Russia's power struggle comprises the country's business tycoons, who became rich in the post-communist rush for privatization.

Emboldened by their prosperity under Yeltsin's presidency, these industrialists are now playing an increasingly prominent role in the political arena. Gazprom and Lukoil, two of Russia's largest energy firms, each financed between 80 and 100 candidates in last December's parliamentary elections. All the while pro-Kremlin media magnates used biased and selective coverage to promote government parties and attack the opposition.

With Yeltsin gone, and possibly fearing a government crusade against corruption that would certainly be popular with voters, Russia's business oligarchs are going on the offensive.

Two of the most prominent, Boris Berezovsky and Roman Abramovich, have secured election to the Duma providing them with parliamentary immunity from prosecution. The media empire of Vladimir Gusinsky, which owns NTV, is the only major anti-Kremlin TV channel and is becoming critical of the government's handling of the war in Chechnya. Images of dead Russian soldiers and cheering Chechen rebels could seriously harm Putin's popularity.

So who will become Russia's new president? The most likely victor is Putin, though it will by no means be a one horse race. The war in Chechnya is looking less successful every day, and there are rumors that Lushkov's Fatherland party is preparing a campaign of compromising material against the acting president.

The battle for the presidency will be fought not on the basis of policy ideas or leadership potential, but by media manipulation, dirty money and behind-the-scenes string pulling. Regardless of who wins the election on March 26th, Russian politics will continue to be marred by dishonesty and stagnation.

Horrible wreck in Germany

By Carrie Sheffield
Collegian Correspondent

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

This is the crash sight of the German train wreck

Unfortunately, its occurance is not isolated.

Sadly, you can read about a car crash with fatalities on any given day in just about every newspaper across the country. But, it is rare that one ever hears of a train wreck. In fact, one seldom thinks twice about the safety of riding on a train.

Early Sunday morning at 12:18 a.m. an overnight express train derailed near Cologne, Germany in a small town called Bruehl.

The train was en-route to Basel, Switzerland from Amsterdam when it plunged down an embankment and crashed through the garage of a house. No one in the house was injured, but more than 100 train passengers were hurt, nine were pronounced dead and authorities fear that more bodies lie trapped beneath the wreckage.

The actual cause of the accident is unknown. Officials say that the track near where the accident occurred had been under repair recently and the train had to be diverted from the main line of track and then rejoin again after the construction.

Unfortunately, this devastating train wreck in Germany is not the only crash in Europe the recent year. This train wreck has brought about the scrutiny of other train accidents and discussion regarding steps to be taken to improve train safety.

On Jan. 4, a train running northbound through Norway crashed into another train running southbound after running a red light. The railroad traffic controllers had no time to warn the oncoming train and the two collided causing a fire to sweep through the wreckage burning nineteen victims alive and injuring thirty.

Computers showed that the railroad controllers had four minutes to warn the two trains but were occupied navigating other trains at the time and did not realize what was about to happen until thirty-five seconds before the crash.

On Oct. 8, a London train passed a red danger signal before colliding with an inbound train, and causing Britain's worst accident in over a decade. The crash killed more than thirty people. Railroad controllers were unable to stop the inbound Great Western train before it struck the commuter train at signal 109.

Blame has not been place on either driver, both of whom died in the crash. Signal 109 in London is known to be extremely dangerous. Poor visibility has caused drivers to miss the light eight times in the past four years.

An automatic protection system could have stopped the crash from happening but it is not due to be installed until 2003.

On Aug. 8, in India a horrific train accident killed 275 people. The Awadh-express train collided with the New Delhi train about 300 miles north of Calcutta, and officials say that the Awadh train was at fault for being on the wrong track. After the crash India's railway minister, Nitish Kumar announced his resignation. The crash was the worst in India since 1995.

Due to all the recent negligence in the railroad industry governments are looking more skeptically at the safety precautions taken. General feelings of safely riding in trains have diminished drastically in the past year. There is no longer naivety of the danger in using ams form of transportation. But, the railroad industry and governments' around the world have received a startling wakeup call that will most likely spark measures to restore public faith in railway systems once again.

Write for International Affairs

DJs at Butterfield deliver the grooves

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

"Those Crazy Kids" struck again on Saturday night in the Butterfield basement with a collaboration of eight DJ's in a show that drew over 500 people, titled Fidel. The party ran from 9:00 pm until 1:00 a.m. and was thrown by Epic and Those Crazy Kids Productions in conjunction with Butterfield House Council and Final Cut Sound.

Fidel boasted two rooms, the first of which was the main room and called the "Well-Rolled House Room", and another that specialized in jungle and dance-hall reggae called the "Hip Hop Battle and Jungle Warfare".

The main room was started off at 9:00 by Leftnut. Sean Maloney, in a dark room with scattered light. A warm scrolling light bubbled behind the turntable technician as the crowd filtering in, dueling with glowing florescent bars. As Leftnut began his set, the group was scattered, but thickening. His funky French disco house began the evening with style, working the gathering groups into a rhythm.

The immersion in sound left the growing crowd swimming in their own movements, letting the music do the dancing for them. Pulsating green, red, purple, blue and yellow light bounced on the ceiling with the beat.

In the second room, Gil-T, or Jeff Gil, spun a much faster pace, working a panicked rhythm that whipped the dedicated few who initially were quick enough to keep up with the feverishly pitched frenzy.

The Hip Hop Battle and Jungle Warfare Room offered less in the way of lights, but it mattered little to the atmosphere, which was inviting because of its minimalism.

At roughly 10:00, after losing a handful of its crowd to the tempered beat of Room Two, the main room retaliated with an abrupt swelling of people more active than before. At this time, IT, or Jonathan Tyler, took over behind the tables, relieving Leftnut of his duties. The highlight of the second DJ in Room One came a third of the way through his set when he dropped the Soft Cell classic "Tainted Love" into the mix. The enthusiastic group pitched in with a chorus of "you take my tears and that's not really love" to keep the feeling going.

A few steps down the hall, Kid Vicious, a.k.a. Tom Johnson, took over for Gil-T. Kid Vicious, who spun jiggy jump-up jungle style, sounded a pinch more eerie. At one point with a whistling finding its way over the pounding beat that kept the walls flexing, Vicious also introduced rapid rap to the set, sustaining the emotion of the room, as the crowd worked its way into a circle.

With two hours to go in the party, the door was still active, welcoming a steady stream of constituents. By this time, Carey Lotus, whose real name is Carey Morewedge, was on the other side of that door with a thick vibe thrubbing over an energetic beat, creating the perfect atmosphere for a contingent whose vigor was still growing half way through the show. Morewedge and partner Justin Wong masterminded Fidel, which, with another DJ collaboration called "Slick" in the fall, is the second of its kind that the two have thrown this school year.

While Lotus incorporated a jazzy saxophone into his set, the second room, led by Com.Plex, who simply goes by Max away from the turntables, spun a similar set to Lotus' startup. With a faster beat, Com.Plex captured the room with a thicker overtone than the previous technicians. A high-pitched chatter served as ear candy instead of the sax that guided Lotus' progression, and the densely packed Jungle Warfare group continued to dance tirelessly.

Representing the Drunk Monks Sound, Atmosphere and Trendz tagteamed the second room to finish the night. Atmosphere was called "a master scratcher" and Trendz an expert in dance hall by Wong.

The final DJ in the main room was Hush, a.k.a. Johnny LoBello, who is co-owner of the Grow Room in Amherst Center. LoBello provided the apex of the party with his hard disco and tribal house variety, sending much of the 500 people who remained in the basement near 1:00 into the early hours of the morning in style.

SETH KOENIG/ COLLEGIAN

Carey Lotus was the third DJ to take the turntables in the main room at the Fidel Show last Saturday in Butterfield.

Lynch's newest a gem

The Straight Story
Directed by David Lynch
with Richard Farnsworth and Sissy Spacek
Playing at Pleasant Street Theater

David Lynch, director of such movies as The Elephant Man, Wild at Heart and Eraserhead brings us a stirring film about personal pain and loss. Lynch is a director whose cinematic vision is, at times, weird, creepy and obtuse. With his new film, The Straight Story, he goes for G-rated fare rather than the R-rated fare that we as the audience have come to know him by.

The film stars Richard Farnsworth as a desolate 73 year-old man named Alvin Straight who travels cross-country to visit his brother. Richard Farnsworth gives us the performance of a lifetime as a brother who feels the need to tie up lose ends with himself and his family. Alvin lives with his daughter, Rose (Sissy Spacek), a sweet but slow woman with a pronounced speech impediment. Alvin is a fixture in his small town, and people worry about him both because of his age and the fact that he lives with his daughter.

After a recent accident, he is dependent on two canes as a means of getting around, and to make matters worse, his eyesight is failing, making it nearly impossible to obtain a driver's license. However, the last person to suffered through a terrible stroke, he decides to mend a relationship that, for all intents and purposes, has failed.

Alvin figures out a plan to get to his brother, Lyle: he will drive his lawnmower across Iowa until he reaches him. The movie's story(s) take center stage at each stop Alvin comes to: he teaches those that meet him a little more about life and along the way we learn a little more about Alvin.

In the film, we never get to hear what went on between Farnsworth and his brother in the past – about why their relationship failed. It is my belief that his brother was the individual who was baby-sitting Farnsworth's daughter, when a fire broke out many years ago.

The long trek that Farnsworth makes on his own lawnmower represents his own journey to remember and to forgive his brother even if it means swallowing his own pride. He needs a couple of encounts staring into the sky remembering his past and his contemplating his future. Eventually, he remembers he and his brother laughing and giggling... just two brothers sharing a good moment at a time in their innocent childhood. After all was said and done, it is still his brother.

Farnsworth is such a cerebral actor – his portrayal of this down-to-earth man is nearly heartbreaking in its elegance. His performance here pulls it all together so beautifully that Lynch's serene vision becomes its most focused and realized in the smallest moments of the film.

The film is very symbolic, and you have to really appreciate every aspect of Farnsworth's thoughts and actions in order to appreciate the film as a whole. If you appreciate the smaller things in life, things like watching the sun come up, the tide come in or go out, watching a storm rain its self out or sitting at a campfire telling stories, then perhaps you might find yourself as stunned by The Straight Story as I was. A

Rap: A Paradox in Progression

"The thing that men and women need to do is stick together/ Progressions can't be made if we're separate forever..."

– A Tribe Called Quest "Verses from the Abstract" Low End Theory (five. 1991)

I begin with this quotation as a contextual window to a hypothesis concerning social unification and the paradox of rap music.

As a manifestation of male feminism, Q-Tip's rhyming couplet is a shimmering ray in rap's illimitable sea of regressive conceptualism. But as a lyrical fragment, the words are boundlessly revolutionary and staggeringly rare.

In an age where hip-hop has a media prevalence parallel to dot com. ads and primetime quiz shows, it is imperative to step back and examine its content subjectively. As a zealot of rap culture, my personal biases are superlative and I will readily (and journalistically) defend the sanctity of its eminent soul. However, as binary analyst of society and morality, I am additionally responsible for establishing an ethical frame of consciousness.

Undoubtedly, hip-hop has molded around and matured within the parameters of socioeconomic deprivation, ultimately embodying an expressionist movement. Still, despite its wondrously innovative nature, aspects such as violence, homophobia, sexism and a multitude of other socially detrimental attributes, have shaped the music as we know it; internally reflecting a nihilistic environment where such expression is commonplace.

Yet, like 21st century rap itself, these messages span far beyond the aforementioned parameters; externally mirroring, glorifying and further propagating historical attitudes of our patriarchal hegemony. Thus, braggadocio misogyny and latent dehumanization of women, in particular, is as prevailing in rap music as sampling and scratching.

Admittedly, some of the most delectable songs also happen to be utterly degrading and brutally counter-productive. And, having transfigured into an influential appendage of modern media, hip-hop duly perpetuates a temperament that horrifically objectifies women. This is not to say that the content of rap music assumes the responsibility for creating or recreating our system of social values. On the contrary, it merely reiterates the sweeping morality of our (urban, suburban and rural) populace.

Society validates, through virtually all mediated communication a dominated, domesticated and highly sexualized image of women. Since the primitive stages of media, this imagery has been intensely saturated and thereby transformed into commun idealism. Hence, a certain acceptability and even normality has invaded our interpretation of social relationships. Historically, this has resonated through the most affluent forms of popular culture.

Take, for example, Ralph Kramden, the tenaciously obese and domineering lead character in the 1940's TV show, The Honeymooner's: Without his explosive temper and violently abusive threats to knock his wife Alice off clear the planet ("bang! zoom!"), the comedy is (arguably) not nearly as humorous.

Figuratively, fast-forward through time (John Wayne, Clark Gable, Larry Flynt, Wayne Maser, Andrew Dice Clay, Luther Campbell, Howard Stern), and not much has changed. Today, vile television programming such as The Man Show and The X Show, reaffirm sex role stereotypes with unthinkably old-fashioned humor and a mocking contempt for feminism.

Although rap is not quite as deliberate in its sexism, its artists are equally regressive. Eminem, a sadistically morbid chauvinist, uses humorously vulgar tactics in his thematic attempts to murder his baby's mother. On numerous occasions, the late Notorious B.I.G., with his uniquely profound articulacy, nebulously glamorizes a life of homicide and rape. Strip Dr. Dre's "album of the year" masterpiece, Chronic 2001, of its despicable sentiments towards females (and effeminate males), and virtually every track is lost.

Again, while I am not proposing a clean-up act for rap, I am adamantly suggesting an ethical frame of consciousness for its listeners. The methods by which we interpret popular media, particularly the forms that most attract us as individuals, become crucial determinants in our value system and corresponding behavior.

Wherein, the course of social unification begins with our ability to process and morally analyze the messages we are fed. And, echoing Q-Tip's poignancy, togetherness is the key to progression.

David Katzoff is a Collegian columnist

JUNIORS AND SENIORS
Thinking about a Career in Social Work?
Wonder which School of Social Work to Attend?
COME HEAR
CAROLYN DUBOIS
1974 U-MASS Sociology Major Graduate
Now at the Smith School of Social Work
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8TH
7:30-9:00 PM
MACHMER W-15

Auditions For:
NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
Everyone Welcome!
February 8, 2000
6:00 PM
Campus Center Rm. 168C
For more information call
Chris Lumsdon at 577-5186

Call Anywhere in the USA for Only 2¢ a minute!
Good from any touchtone phone!
That's almost 8 full hours of calling for only $10.00
✓ Get your calling code instantly over the phone!
✓ All major credit cards accepted!
Call today 1.800.662.2104
100% Guaranteed! Q-Cards from QuestCom Make Big $$$ P/T
– even while you sit in class!
FREE Training. NO Fees. FREE Personalized Website! Distributors are needed at your school NOW! Everyone needs and uses our products! Great fundraising too for any group or organization! Let us show you how – it's easier than you think! Call today! 1.800.662.2104.
VOTED: Students' Best Buy!

Valentine's Day is Coming...
Give a special message to the love in your life, friend or crush with a Collegian classified.
Special section in Monday, February 14th issue of the Collegian
1/2 off student rate 10¢ per word, $2.00 min. Spot color free with purchase of heart graphic border.
To purchase stop by the Collegian newstand next to the UStore
Deadline Thurs., February 10th

UMASS
Student Speaker Undergraduate Commencement
Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker
Who is Eligible?: Graduating Amherst campus senior (Class of 2000)
Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interest to graduating seniors as well as to parents and other guests. It should address your impressions and experience(s), both academic and extra-curricular.
Format: Submit approximately three word-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to five minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.
Selection Process: A non-voting staff person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. Three to five individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
Deadline: Wednesday, February 9, 2000, 4:30pm.
Submit Proposals To: Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

Minutewomen finish third in RI

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's indoor track and field team was a-"ward"-ed this past weekend at the Rhode Island Invitational.

Senior Andrea Ward posted two personal records on the day leading the Minutewomen to its third place finish.

The native of Franklinville, NY., placed third in the high jump and fourth in the 55-meter hurdles picking up ten points for the Maroon and White.

Ward's 8.81 in the preliminary round of the 55-meter hurdles was the best time she posted in her career in Amherst. The 5'4.25" in the high jump tied her career best and was good enough for third on the all-time list at UMass.

Meanwhile, Sally Hirsch continued her dominance in the distance events as she finished second in the 3,000 meters. Her time of 10:06.96 is the best for the Minutewomen or, for that matter, any Atlantic-10 competitor as well, this season.

The UMass field athletes also had strong days as seniors Alison Tostevin and Giselle Nicholas (39'8.5") placed third in the shot putt and the weight throw (45'10.5"), respectively.

Sophomore Rhianna DaCruz continued to be the Minutewomen's best chance in the pole vault as she once again had a great showing with her third place vault of 10'5". Fellow sophomore Tiffany Chaplin placed fourth in the triple jump with a final tally of 34'8.25".

Despite the great individual performances put forth by these athletes, Atlantic Coast Conference foe Maryland went home with the first place prize after scoring a combined 221 points. The Minutewomen came away with 86 points for the third place finish.

UMass will next be in action Saturday when they travel to Boston for the Valentine's Classic.

UMass women's hockey chewed up by BU Terriers

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

They came out in the first period with a snarl. They tucked their tails and ran in the second. But in the end, these dogs had their day after all.

The Boston University women's ice hockey team overcame a valiant attempt by the University of Massachusetts to control the game in the second period, as the Terriers escaped with a 6-5 victory at the William D. Mullins Center auxiliary rink on Saturday.

The hard fought battle was finally won in overtime, as scores fluctuated and tempers flared. The Terriers skated out to a 3-1 lead in the first period, only to face the fury of the Minutewomen in the second period when the home team chalked up three unanswered goals to leave the score at 4-3.

The teams upped the stakes even further in the third period, combining for three goals to tie it up, 5-5, at the end of regulation. UMass played an intensely physical and competitive game, only to surrender the game winner less than four minutes into overtime.

"We usually have an advantage because of our strong offense," forward Molly Sherman said. "This weekend we let up once we had the lead, making our defense work. We weren't really helping them out a whole lot."

The game started slowly, with little aggression and limited passing coming out of the UMass lines. The Terriers dominated the scoreboard early, with forward Molly Griffith opening the scoring at the 9:04 mark. Following her lead, teammate Kanti Medeiros scored a speedy second goal only 1:09 later.

UMass got its only goal of the period from forward Janine Demoncourt, who found the BU net 7:42 into the game. Yet, as hard as the Minutewomen tried, the Terriers still managed to dominate the period as goalie Kristen Simonson netted another goal with 3:55 left in the period.

The mood of the game changed midway through the first period, when the Minutewomen picked up the pace by playing extremely physical competition for the rest of the game. The first in a line of both penalties and minor injuries, due to the increased physical play, occurred when BU forward Jen Elliot was taken out of the game after being sandwitched between two UMass defenders.

"Everyone was playing very physically," Sherman said. "Both teams were out to win."

UMass was on a hot streak during the second period, and completely dominated the scoring to leave the Terriers making vain attempts to stop them. Minutewoman forward Jessie Ravenolt scored the first goal of the period at 13:06.

Following in suite, teammate Jenna Nolan slid the puck past bewildered BU goalie Megan Conner twice at 8:48 and 5:22, respectively. While the BU defense was busy attempting to defend the goal, Sherman managed to put home yet another goal with 1:54 to go in the period.

"I was in front of the net, and Jenna gave me a great pass from the corner," Sherman said. "I just got my stick on it and got it in."

The score was left at 5-3 going into the third period of the game, and the Terriers were forced to do some fancy footwork in order to bridge the scoring gap and catch up. The Minutewomen fought them all the way, literally, and received three penalties for lighting at the 4:38, 2:50 and :45 marks.

"The BU coach started yelling at the refs, and it seemed like they started changing their calls in the third period," Sherman said. "Almost all the penalties in the period went against us."

While UMass was being called for penalties, BU was busy scoring enough goals to tie up the game in the last period. At 9:59, BU player Heather Coubrough scored a goal for the Terriers. Another goal followed in suite shortly after by Medeiros with just 22 seconds left in the period, which was just enough to tie the score at 5-5 and send both teams into a grueling overtime matchup.

"It was a decent game; we played our strongest game in the second period," Sherman said. "I think that by the third period, we were tired."

UMass skated into the extra set without enthusiasm, and remained fairly limited in its motion on the ice. The Terriers proved to be victorious in the end with a goal by Erica Babin at 3:53 to leave the final score at 6-5.

"I think that maybe by then, our intensity was gone," Sherman said. "Everyone was waiting for someone else to get the puck. No one was moving their legs or skating towards the puck."

The Minutewomen will hit the ice again on Friday, when they face off against Norwich at 7 p.m. in an away contest.

■ swimming

continued from page 12

In the diving events the Minutewomen cleaned the boards with brooms. UMass swept both the three-meter and one-meter events. In the three-meter Kate Allery came in first with Robin Velona and Kalyn Knopf coming in behind her. However, Velona would win the one-meter with Knopf and Allery completing the field.

This weekend's meet against Fordham was about more than just a victory over the Rams according to coach Newcomb. "It was about our seniors finishing out their careers."

Fordham was the last home win and time seniors Tricia Argentina, Claudia Clement, Lyndsay Crenshaw, Hupp, Lansky, Risotto and Andrea Spencer will compete in the chlorinated waters of UMass.

subliminal message:
the Collegian is good

Cold no problem as Massachusetts skiers heat up on the slopes

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Correspondent

When you are racing against 78 other skiers, first place is pretty good.

This past weekend at the Brown/U.Conn Carnival in Lincoln, NH freshman Pete Sanford propelled the Massachusetts Men's ski team to a first place finish in the slalom by finishing first overall with a time of 1:17.48.

Sanford, a freshman from Queenstown, New Zealand, became the first member of the team to win an event all year. Just three weeks ago, however, Sanford was water-skiing on the lakes of New Zealand. This semester he kicked off his water-skies, picked up his downhill skis and headed over to UMass. The team is sure glad he did.

In the slalom the Minutemen finished with a score of 235.54, just ahead of Plymouth State (236.78) and Boston College (237.54). Beau Gibson helped the cause by finishing fifth overall with a time of 1:18.86 and Ken Thoman finished eighth in the slalom with a time of 1:19.20.

When our big three (Sanford, Thoman, and Gibson) perform well, we have a very good chance of doing good in the race," stated 81 year-old head coach Bill MacConnell after the meet.

In the giant slalom UMass came in a very respectable third with a total score of 308.11, falling to Plymouth State (299.46) and Colby Sawyer (300.89). Thoman, a sophomore from Lebanon, Ohio finished first for the Minutemen and fifth overall with a time of 1:40.64.

Sanford also contributed to the Minutemen's score in the giant slalom by finishing ninth overall with a time of 1:41.46. Sophomore Rich Granger (1:46.01) came in 20th place, and rounded out the top three skiers for the team.

The women's team also had a very impressive showing in Lincoln, NH. They managed to even one-up the boys by finishing first in the giant slalom and second in the slalom. Tina King, a sophomore from Easthampton, MA placed third in the giant slalom with a time of 1:43.44 and 15th in the giant slalom at 1:26.44. Carolyn Lewenberg placed fourth in both the giant slalom and the slalom with respective times of 1:46.77 and 1:22.75.

Lauren Brodes finished out the scoring with a sixth place finish in the slalom at 1:24.03 and a tenth place overall finish in the giant slalom at 1:46.53.

"King, Lewenberg, and Brodes are our big three when it comes to the women," said MacConnell.

Throughout the two-day race, both teams were forced to fight bitter weather conditions. Saturday was cold and windy and Sunday was even worse. "When there are hard and brutal weather conditions people either step up and do better or they don't. We stepped up," said MacConnell. A delay occurred during the race, and many of the Maroon and White were stuck on the top of the mountain for a while waiting to compete. They still managed to put in their best performance of the season.

Mac Connell gave credit to his team for their dry-training work in the off-season and for their effort during the practice week. "When we're out there pounding gates five days a week, you get payback with good results."

Are you a morning person?
...uld you like to be ...le to work each ...ng before classes start?
Then d... Collegian ... the job ...
...oma down to ... ni...

PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
The Area's Most Complete Club 256-6446
All new Full Cybex Free Weights
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 • 2 Miles East of town Center
JOIN NOW FOR OUR 15 WEEK WINTER SPECIAL ($169) AND GET A FREE HFC T-SHIRT
WE ACCEPT MasterCard VISA

Sigma [fly] Alpha
Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.
FOR MORE INFORMATION ON 2 TO 3 YEAR SCHOLARSHIPS CALL THE UMASS ARMY ROTC AT 545-2321
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Attention College Students:
Exciting Careers and Scholarships in

AIR FORCE ROTC

- 2 & 3 Year Scholarships Available
- Scholarship Opportunities for Graduate Students
- Excellent Salary & Benefit Package After Graduation
- Over 200 Different Jobs to Choose From

- Open to All Academic Majors
- Unprecedented Opportunities to Fly!
- Take Air Force ROTC Classes at UMass through the 5 College Consortium
- You can try ROTC with no obligation to join the Air Force

REGISTER THIS SPRING!

FRESHMAN AND SOPHOMORES
Check out AERSTU 112 or AERSTU 224

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
Capt. Greg Scougall (413) 545-2437
scougall@acad.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/afrotc

AIR FORCE R.O.T.C.

AIR FORCE ROTC • LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE STARTS HERE • JOIN US!

Navarro's return still not enough

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

He's back.

This past weekend, senior co-captain Bo Navarro made his much anticipated return to the Massachusetts men's tennis team. After sitting out the fall season due to academic ineligibility, the doubles aficionado made his spring season debut at the three-day Cornell Winter Indoor Invitational at Ithaca, N.Y.

"It's unbelievable how much it helps," Coach Judy Dixon said of Navarro's return. "Bo's return makes us a very good team rather than just a good team. He's one of the finest doubles players we've had at UMass."

Unfortunately for the squad, Navarro's heralded comeback was overshadowed by a slew of injuries. Sophomore standout Steve Prisco and senior co-captain Parsa Samii are both nursing injuries that occurred during tournament play. Meanwhile, freshman prodigy Will Shaw remained home nursing a rotator cuff injury.

Despite their medical setbacks, the Minutemen did reasonably well among a competitive field that included Cornell, Buffalo, Marist, and St. Bonaventure.

In Flight A singles action, unseeded Prisco upset the No. 4 seed, Marist's Roberto Mayer with a score of 7-6, 7-6. He then cruised through to the semifinals, where he was eliminated by No.2 seed Greg Artzt of Cornell, 6-3, 6-1. Meanwhile, Navarro made it through to the second round, where he lost, 6-1, 6-1, to Cornell's Carl Thorsen.

It was during his Flight B singles duties that Samii succumbed to a bone bruise in his heel. He lost in the second round to the eventual tournament winner, Cornell's Joe Chrisman, with a score of 7-5, 6-3. Samii is expected to be back in action next week. Junior Fabien Rabanal also advanced to the second round before becoming a 6-3, 6-1 loser to Fern Kasiman of Buffalo.

Athough sophomore Todd Champeau was dealt a second round Flight C singles loss, he was able to snatch runner-up honors in the consolation tournament. Champeau bowed out to Marist's Juan Delgado, 6-3, 7-6, in the consolation final. In other Flight C action, junior Bill Greener advanced to the second round before being dealt a straight set 6-1, 6-1 defeat from Assumption's David Iervosi.

Navarro and Prisco paired up for Flight A doubles action. The duo advanced to the semifinals where they faced St. Bonaventure's Mikko Haulos and Vili Nurmi. Prisco was forced to retire after only four games with tightness in his thigh. He is expected to return to action next week versus Army and Seton Hall.

Champeau and senior Marco Casesa rounded out doubles action, progressing to the Flight B semifinals before submitting to Bloomsburg's Jay Nistad and Salim Chraibi, 8-3.

While Dixon is dismayed at the trio of injuries, she is not surprised. "A three-day tournament is a great way to start the year, but it's also very tough on their bodies," she commented, "we could really feel the effects of having to play so many matches in a couple of days."

An early set of injuries may prove to be particularly cumbersome to the squad, especially during the longer, more strenuous spring season. Despite the strength and leadership Navarro brings to the team, Dixon realizes that a repeat of the squad's undefeated fall record is highly unlikely.

"We now take on a schedule that's really much tougher than our fall schedule," Dixon noted, "We will not be undefeated. We're certainly going to have to work hard. What we're trying to do is get a regional ranking. That's our goal."

The Minutemen's quest for this goal will commence next weekend, when they face Army, their first regionally ranked opponent of the spring season.

UMass dominates Rams; A-10's awaits

Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of the 1999-2000 season, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving head coach Russ Yarworth felt that he had a special group of athletes on his team. After the 198-98 dismantling of Fordham on Saturday, which marked the end of the regular season for the Minutemen, we now know that Yarworth's instinct was correct.

With the victory, UM upped their final dual-meet record to 6-4 and provided a boost of confidence for the team as they head into the Atlantic-10 tournament.

"We're a little stronger than Fordham," coach Yarworth said, "We were just too deep for them. Our kids swam well."

For the seniors, it was the last time they would jump into their home loseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool and big performances were brought to the aquatic depths by all of them.

Billy Brown (58:32) and Wes Wrighton (1:03:26) swam strong in the 100-yard breaststroke as did Billy Getty (10:33:45) in the 1000-yard freestyle. Chris Arsenault (1:42:59) took the 200-yard freestyle and placed second in 100-yard freestyle with a time of 46:59. Henry Turner (54:52) took second in the 100-yard butterfly and Bryan Grimes (2:01:03) placed second in the 200-yard of the same event.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Ed Hefferon

Ed Hefferon took first place in each of the diving events with scores of 292.2 in the one meter and 296.775 in the three meter.

Freshmen Matt Woodfield (56:09) and Marcus Meyer (2:14:68) turned heads with solid performances in their events, respectively, the 100-yard backstroke and 200-yard breaststroke.

"The two freshman we shaved had lifetime best performances," Yarworth said, "It's just an indication of how well our other kids will do in a couple of weeks."

As Yarworth pointed out before the Fordham meet, "We've got a good group of kids ready to hopefully make some noise at conferences."

The Bell-Atlantic Atlantic 10 Championships will take place in Buffalo, NY, Thursday through Saturday, February 17th through the 19th.

UM will be looking to regain the A-10 title they lost last year to St. Bonaventure. Before the loss in the 1998-1999 season, the Minutemen had won the A-10 title three straight times.

Bryan Smith wants YOU to write for him and the Sports Department

2000 Request For Proposals

For the eighth consecutive year, the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice is soliciting innovative proposals for educational activities and programs which have the following goals:

- promote mutual respect
- enhance understanding of community, diversity and/or social justice issues
- encourage collaboration between different campus communities and constituencies

Eligibility:
Undergraduates, graduate students, staff and faculty, as individuals or groups

Award Criteria: Proposed activities,

- must bring together persons from two or more communities or constituencies in joint activities
- must demonstrate collaboration of communities or constituencies in the proposal planning process
- must promote mutual respect and understanding on the campus or in the larger community
- should represent new programs or collaborating partnerships as opposed to annual programs or continuations of past projects
- should be completed by the end of the fall 2000 semester

Examples of Activities Which Could be Funded:
Forums, speakers, film/video series, seminars, workshops, training programs, public education programs, outreach activities to secondary schools and home communities, community public service programs, faculty/student collaboration to develop new courses, performance events, printed materials, posters.

Required Proposal Components:

- a clear description of how the proposed activities will meet both the goals and award criteria
- a list of groups involved and contact person or persons responsible for the activity
- a plan for evaluating the impact and effectiveness of the activities
- a time line indicating when the activities would start and conclude
- a budget

Award Ranges:
$250 to $1500, with all awards expected to total $13,500

Submission Date and Location: Mailed, e-mailed to am@admin.umass.edu, faxed to 577-2455 or hand delivered by noon on Friday, March 10, 2000 to the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice, c/o Office of Human Relations, 206 Middlesex House.

Proposal Review and Award Announcements:
A committee of the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice reviews all proposals. Awards will be announced during the week of April 3, 1999.

Proposal Writing Assistance:
http://www.umass.edu/funding/FundHowTo.html

Additional information: Contact the Office of Human Relations at am@admin.umass.edu or (413) 545-0851.

Everybody Scores!

REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!

GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.
YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!
PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

$core BIG $core OFTEN Sweepstakes

mybytes.com™

UpCLOSE travel well BLOCKBUSTER CALGON SESSIONS.com SKECHERS OldGlory.com TripHub.com UNIVERSAL UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION

No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States, (except Florida) 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 02/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/21/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "$BSO Rules" Common Mates, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER™ name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc.Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. (Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER™ store locations.)
© 2000 YouthStream

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Toyota Celeca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636

'88 Honda Accord for sale. Good condition. Low mileage. $2000 o/bo. Call 253-9195.

1989 Honda Accord LXI Green 4 dr sdn. 181,000 miles. $2300.00 Call 323-4323.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Full time/part time line and prep. cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp Trails End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Loaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Office Assistant Needed. Students needed to work afternoon hours. Must have Win 95/Office 97 experience. Good phone skills. Previous office experience a plus. SALARY $7.00-8.00. Fill out application at Blaisdell House. 545-2842.

Mad Scientists Wanted. Conduct fun, exciting, educational, science activities with kids. After school. High energy. Experience with groups of children. Reliable car. 413-584-7243.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com

New Students Program. Public Relations Jobs. Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Office for tour guides, student admissions reps, and summer orientation counselors. Deadline is Feb. 11, 2000.

EMPLOYMENT

Cool Candy Company on bus route in Amherst seeks outgoing phone sales reps. You can work around your classes with our flexible schedule: choose one of two daily shifts(four hours each), minimum of three shifts per week. Shifts are 10am-2pm or 1pm-5pm. Earn up to $10 an hour with base salary plus commission. Requires some sales experience but personality is most important. Don't miss this great opportunity-call Beth right now to set up an interview! 1-888-556-5599.

CAMPAIGN JOBS with the Sierra Club. Full-time and part-time. $300-400/wk. Call Casey 256-6434.

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons w/retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

Double papasan sofa $125. Good condition. Paid $300+ new. 665-0589.

Downhill skis 4 sale. Atomic 10.26 w/bind $350. K2merlin Race w/bind $250. Rossi7sk w/bind $175. All 188cm. call quick. Jordan 397-9729.

Everyone has the right to be safe. Simple And Fast Effective Techniques Company is dedicated to keeping you, and the ones that you care about as protected as possible. One OPTION that we provide is the OC Alternative. OC is a chemical that is more powerful than mace and is not an irritant like pepperspray but an inflammatory agent. The instant inflamation of the breathing tubes, caused by the spray, cuts off all breathing except what is necessary to sustain life. Because it is an inflammatory rather than an irritant, OC effective against all of those who feel no pain, such as individuals on alcohol or drugs. The spray disables your attacker for 30-45 minutes and leaves a UV dye on your assailant for easy identification by the police. We are making the OC spray available in a keychain or pen form. The pen does not write but...it may save your life. Check for our other OPTIONS in this newspaper. If you are ready to make a wise, sound and inexpensive investment into the PROTECTION of yourself and your loved ones, then send a check, cash or money order to: Sensei David See rung, Aikido School of Self-Defense, 24 George St. Cohoes, NY 12047.

FOR SALE

Study, partying...violent sexual assaults. Unfortunately rapes are becoming far too common on our college campuses. The statistics are horrific. The silence regarding these crimes is one of the rapist's strongest weapons. The Safe-T company(Simple And Fast Effective-Techniques) is presenting a video that specifically targets defenses for female students and educators. The escape/evasion techniques demonstrated within our video do not take years of practice but were chosen for their simplicity and effectiveness. We cover areas of defense overlooked by many in our industry such as date rape evasion and escape from various grips and holds. What we are offering you and your loved ones are the tools to keep you safe and lessen your fear of harm. The price of the video is being offered at an incredibly low price of $19.95. Also included in the price of your tape is a free pass that will be honored at one of our upcoming Safe-T seminars. Those who train survive. Please send check or money order to: Sensei David Seerung, Aikido School of Self-Defense, 24 George St. Cohoes, Ny 12047. (518)237-0775. Please include $4.00 for shipping and handling.

PERSONALS

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

STEREO EQUIPMENT

BUY/SELL/TRADE. Large selection, used/reconditioned components/speakers. Great prices. Satisfaction guaranteed. PA/DJ equipment too. A/V Exchange 253-5312.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419 free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399!

springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179!

springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Volunteers Needed. Are you looking to do community service? For more info call Alpha Phi Omega 545-2068.

Used rap and r&b cds, magazines too. Want to buy or trade. 549-1371.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Go to www.dailycollegian.com for more of the Daily Collegian

Five College Community Calendar

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8

Meeting – The UMass Ballroom Dance Club will meet at 8:30 p.m. in Totman 101.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Das at 577-5186 for more details.

Workshop – UVC-TV 19 will hold a workshop from 7-9 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend and get hands-on experience at the station, which is located behind the Hatch in the Student Union. Space is limited. Call 545-1336 for more information.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9

Support – The Fluency Support Group will meet at 7 p.m. In Arnold House room 11. Contact Lisa at 577-4023 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School Of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting Feb. 9. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – ALANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-3261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

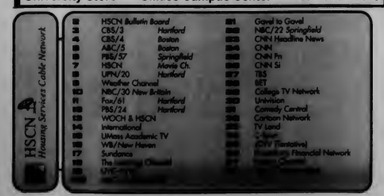
BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

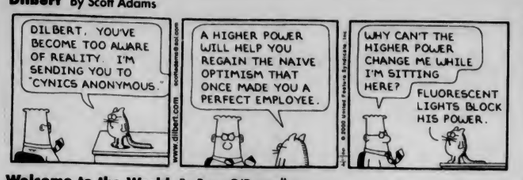
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card. When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions



University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%



We give all of our profits to support University Programs

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 8, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ	Business Rpt.	Women's College Basketball: Connecticut vs. Miami. (Live)				Secrets of Lost Empires II ⓒ		Nova "Trillion Dollar Bet" ⓒ		People-Here
WFSB	3	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Boomerang" ⓒ		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ⓒ		Judging Amy (In Stereo) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Boomerang" ⓒ		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ⓒ		Judging Amy (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	6		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Buffy the Vampire Slayer ⓒ		Angel "She" (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Just Shoot Me 3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Reel TV ⓒ		I Dare You Ultimate Challeng		Shasta ⓒ	Dilbert ⓒ	News	Real TV (R) ⓒ	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT		40	News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Ent. Tonight	Just Shoot Me 3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons ⓒ	Fraser ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Sexual Commercials 2		Party of Five (In Stereo) ⓒ		News	Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WWLP	9	22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Just Shoot Me 3rd Rock-Sun		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Secrets of Lost Empires II		Nova "Trillion Dollar Bet" ⓒ		Frontline "The Lost Children" (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Charlie Rose
WGGB	11	20	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK	12		Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	I Dare You Ultimate Challeng		Shasta ⓒ	Dilbert ⓒ	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22		Rosanne ⓒ	Rosanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Figure Skating: Champions on Ice-Winter Tour.				★★½ The Blue Lagoon (1980) Brooke Shields,
A&E	23		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Med Dog" ⓒ		Biography: Bob Crane		Investigative Reports (R) ⓒ		Love Chronicles (R) ⓒ	Law & Order "Computer Virus"
CNN	24	23	Worldview	Moneyline News	Hour ⓒ	Crossfire ⓒ	World Today ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ		Newsstand ⓒ	Sports	Moneyline ⓒ
COM	25	36	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show (R)	★★½ "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" (1986, Comedy) Matthew Broderick, Mia Sara.					Premium	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	26		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery "Wolverine" (R)	On the Inside: Parole			New Detectives "Blood Money"		FBI Files "Above the Law" (R)	On the Inside: Parole
ESPN	27		Sportscenter ⓒ		College Basketball: Michigan State at Purdue. (Live)				Winter X-Games (Live)			Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★½ "A Cry for Help: The Tracey Thurman Story" (1989, Drama)			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31		MTV Jams (In Stereo)		Tom Green	Making-Video	Road Rules	Road Rules	Tom Green (R)	Tom Green (R)	Tom Green	Lyricist	Undressed (R)	Loveline (R)
NICK	32		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Thornberrys	Sweetr	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons ⓒ	Lavarns	Happy Days
SCIFI	35		Sliders (In Stereo) ⓒ		Xena: Warrior Princess ⓒ		Xena: Warrior Princess ⓒ		Xena: Warrior Princess ⓒ		Xena: Warrior Princess ⓒ	Poltergeist: The Legacy ⓒ
TLC	37	28	Home Again	Home Again	Trauma Center (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Sexual Chemistry (R)		Designer Babies	Trauma: Life in the ER (R)
TNT	39		In the Heat of the Night ⓒ		ER "Think Warm Thoughts" ⓒ		NBA Basketball: Seattle SuperSonics at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live) ⓒ				David NBA	Midnight Run (In Stereo)
USA	40		Baywatch "Seize the Day" ⓒ		JAG "Above and Beyond" ⓒ		Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		★ The Minion (1998, Horror) Dolph Lundgren. (In Stereo) ⓒ			Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ
HBO	43		(5:30) ★★ Forbidden Planet (1954)		★★½ "A Little Girls" (1997, Documentary) (In Stereo) NR ⓒ				★★½ "Shiloh" (1999, Drama) Nicolas Cage. (In Stereo) "R" ⓒ			Sopranos "Commendatori" ⓒ
MAX	45		(5:00) ★★½ "Irrefutable Family" (1999, Drama) Glenn Close. "PG-13" ⓒ				★★½ "Clueless" (1995) Alicia Silverstone. "PG-13" ⓒ				"Good Cop, Bad Cop" (1999, Action) Lorenzo Lamas. "R" ⓒ		"Heist of Kim"
SHOW	46						★★½ I Got the Hook-Up (1998) Master P. "R" ⓒ		★★½ "I'm Gonna Git You Sucka" (1988) "R"			Filmmaker	"Desperately"

Dilbert By Scott Adams

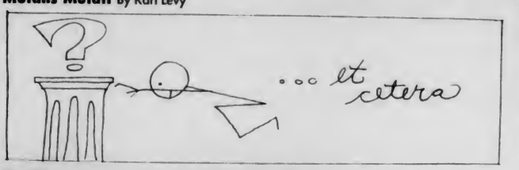
Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



Robotman By Jim Meddick

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Mutans Mutati By Karl Levy

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may feel as though the walls are closing in on you in some way, but in fact what you really need right now is a little more direct guidance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – How you deal with those who are younger and more inexperienced that you will make all the difference today. Don't get impatient with others!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Someone you've worked with in the past is likely to approach you today with an offer that appears attractive but which is fraught with danger.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Seek a creative way out of the trap you've fallen into at this time. Today, if you try to do what others name "impossible" you will be satisfied.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may not be able to free yourself up enough today to do what is asked of you by a friend or loved one who does things "differently."

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may find yourself yearning for a return to your youth and you can have just that, provided you look at a current problem creatively.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Success comes in hidden forms today. Realize that your struggles will pay off if you just give it the old college try.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Seek and ye shall find – or, at the very least, you'll come to a greater understanding of what it is you're really looking for now and later.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Form and function can be combined with great effect today. Take your cue from someone who seems to have it "all together" in many ways.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You have much in common with someone who shared a part of your life some time ago and today you realize you're still somehow linked.

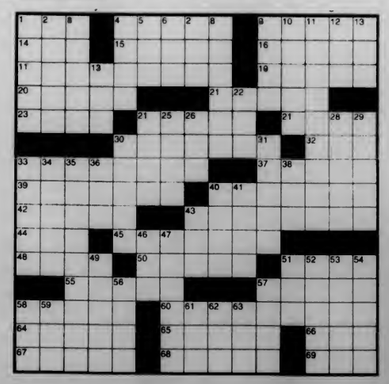
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The way things have been done in the past may not interest you very much today. You're far more interested in doing things in a new way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your generosity is well noted, but today you may be feeling rather selfish in some way. Indulge the temptation to do something for yourself.

Quote of the Day

"It is fundamentally important in this democracy that newspapers be trusted and that newspapers deserve the trust."

–David Lawrence Jr., journalist, educator, 1998



ACROSS
1 Shade tree
4 Ginger, e.g.
9 Began a card game
14 Society-column word
15 Detergent scent
16 Golden —
17 Decorative craft
19 Wed secretly
20 Happen
21 Not as common
23 "— else is new?"
24 Subarctic forest
27 John or Jane
30 Tropical fruits
32 Shooting marble
33 Lab sample
37 "The — Mutiny"
39 Like an eagle
40 Lady's dressing room
42 Nonsensical
43 Handkerchiefs
44 Confederate soldier
45 Mates
48 Untidy person
50 Persuades
51 Widow's — small amount
55 Synagogue figure
57 Taboos
58 Substantial
60 Backwoods
64 Bandleader Shaw
65 Ralph's land
66 Nautical affirmative
67 Glimpses quickly
68 Stem
69 "Titanic" cry

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Be a philanthropist
2 Bloodsucking worm
3 Saudi city
4 Asparagus
5 Type of rally
6 "— little teapot"
7 Gear tooth
8 Solar —
9 Mover and shaker
10 Actress Barkin
11 Profound love
12 Gross target
13 Kicker's stand
18 Not home
22 Motorist's org.
24 Docile
25 Imitated
26 Writer Fleming
28 Craving
29 Pitchers
30 Evergreens
31 Moves swiftly
33 Mixes
34 Type of discussion
35 Intricate
36 Cell occupant
38 Nabokov novel
40 Foundation
41 Wallet fillers
43 Insect
46 Tavern
47 African antelopes
49 Dyeing technique
51 Elsie's utterance
52 Cuzco natives
53 Japan's capital
54 Curvy letters
56 Brief farewells
57 Fargo's st
58 Page of an atlas
59 Before, in poems
61 Toronto's prov
62 Harem room
63 Nothing

The DC menu is missing!

Go to your nearest dining hall for a good meal!!

Night Editor: Ken McDonald
Photo Technician: Becky Reddick
Copy Editor: Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor: Seth Koenig
Production Staff: Lovea Garg, Janina Tangney

Worm is back in Dallas for the long haul

The following information is information relevant to this column.

There are 11 hair salons and 12 women's clothing stores (one bridal shop) within 1.8 miles of the Dallas Maverick's Reunion Arena. The closest tattoo parlor, Trilogy Tattoo, is one mile further, distanced at 2.8 miles from the arena's 777 Sports St. address in downtown Dallas.

Eric Soderstrom on the NBA

If you haven't guessed whom I am about to babble about, then let me formally introduce you:

Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, children of all ages, I would now like to direct your attention to the Lone Star State where 5-time NBA Champion Dennis Rodman has just signed onto the Dallas Mavericks for the remainder of the season. He will delight you with his screwball ego, his radiant skull, and above all, his rebounding robber-baron-like antics.

O.K., so let's try to get serious and you all know how hard that is when talking about "the Worm." To tell you the truth, the only way to effectively deal with Rodman is to let him be; you can't try to tell him what to do because he will not listen to you, and you surely cannot punish him because he will just flutter away until he feels like coming back.

He has proved to the world (in extreme ways) that there is indeed only one Rodman and it is for this reason that the public can't help but pay a great deal of attention to him. Sure, Kobe Bryant, Vince Carter and all of those young, talented players are exciting to watch (I think they rap, too) but has either of them ever put on a wedding dress (in public), wrestled with Hulk Hogan on Pay-Per-View, or colored their hair yellow, blue, green, and red with symbols representing AIDS awareness, peace and Pearl Jam? I don't think so.

I'm not a betting chap, but even I would put my money on the fact that Kobe and Vince don't have the guts to go after Karl Malone in such a way that Dennis did during the NBA finals a couple years back.

Rodman really does not have to play ball anymore. He has acquired five championship rings over his career (two with the Detroit Pistons, three with the Chicago Bulls) and has led the league in rebounding seven times. Dennis is good. It's that simple. Even Target Center camera operator Eugene Amos (If you forgot, Rodman administered a strong inexplicable kick to Amos in January, 1997, leaving him in a blank state as the Minnesota Timberwolves' Target Center floor) can't argue. Rodman's an animal.

So why, you ask, is he back? Attention. He misses it. He can't live without it. Sure he had that one publicity stint with former Baywatch beauty Carmen Electra, but that quickly died out. His brief career in Hollywood sank faster than Karate Kid III. But one thing that is for sure, he's definitely not back for the greenbacks. Rodman will be making roughly $470,000 for the next three months, which is surprisingly less than the $500,000 he reportedly received for his appearances over the Super Bowl weekend in Atlanta. Exposure is key to Dennis' existence. Without it, he is just another lunatic in the crowd, and if he's only that, he is unable to command the six-figure appearance fees that he does.

Rodman officially signed his contract with the Mavericks last Thursday. Head coach and general manager Don Nelson told the Associated Press that on Wednesday, "(Rodman) should be back and ready to play here" against Seattle.

Perhaps the most interesting story inside this big one is how Rodman is being promised certain freedoms that his teammates are forbidden. For example, Owner Cuban has promised Dennis that he will have no curfews or bed checks. Rodman will also be allowed a significantly later pre-game arrival time. Those luxuries aren't so extremely comfy. However, Rodman will also be allowed to ride a stationary bike instead of practicing. No, I am not joking. Good ol' Dennis will be able to sit on a high-tech stationed bike with, no doubt, a very comfortable seat while browsing the latest issue of something interesting instead of doing rebounding drills or just working on his overall game.

To tell you the truth, if Rodman, at thirty-eight years of age, can go out every night and grab 15-20 boards without practicing, awesome.

Rodman is expected to make his first appearance either today or tomorrow when he jumps onto the Mavericks' practice floor, or rather, his stationary bike.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

Men's gym pommels MIT and SCU

LaVallee takes first in five of six events

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

Posting a season high of 222.75 points, the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team said savonara to Southern Connecticut University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Saturday. The Minutemen walked away triumphantly with the crushing victory, sending SCU (188.10) and MIT (170.90) home with their tails between their legs.

This team is back in action. This weekend, school records were tied and personal bests were posted - all adding up to UMass' predicted punishing of the Owls and Engineers. And oh, how punishing it was.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN
Jeff LaVallee

Senior Jeff LaVallee, the Minutemen's only all-arounder for the meet, dominated the competition with an overall score of 56.55. The gymnastics dynamo took first place on five of the six events with scores of 9.60 on the still rings and horizontal bar and a 9.55 on the floor exercise. LaVallee finished up his string of wins with a 9.65 on vault and an impressive 9.70 on his best event, the parallel bars.

Most UMass gymnastics followers know who LaVallee is, but Justin Hammar? Just in case you weren't sure, he gave us something to refresh your memory: a near perfect pommel horse routine. The freshman took home the gold on the horse with a personal best of 9.85, tying junior Andy Leis and graduate Steve Christensen for the second place all-time score. And coming close to tying his old personal best, Leis took second on the event with an impressive 9.80. He also scored a season high of 9.45 on high bar, ranking him second on the event.

And once again, sophomore Matt Plumser answered his call. The New Jersey native ranked third on pommel horse with a personal best of 9.65, a great score for that event. Freshman Brett Nelligan came through for the Minutemen once again as well. The second generation Minuteman honed his vault (9.45), breaking his week-old personal best by 0.05 and giving him the silver on the event.

Junior Clayton Kent had something to say as well on Saturday. The New Hampshire native tumbled his way to a tie for third-place on the floor exercise (9.30) and fourth on vault (9.20). Junior Bryan McNulty, just passed Kent on the same events, with second and third place finishes of 9.35 and 9.30 respectively. And then there was Bacon. UMass junior Eric Bacon tied Kent for third on floor (9.30) and shared third place on high bar with freshman Ben Jacobs (9.00).

Relatively happy with the ending of the meet, head coach Roy Johnson had a lot to say. "We're getting better," Johnson said. "That's the important thing. Some of the highlights of the meet were Hammar's pommel horse routine and Jeff's floor. Nelligan continues to score his personal best on vault and Plumser's pommel horse routine was just great."

So this is it, folks. This is it until Michigan. LaVallee goes off to compete in Winter Nationals this weekend, but the rest of his team stays behind and waits. They wait for their routines to become crisper and cleaner; and most importantly, they wait for the Michigan Wolverines to come into town in two weeks.

"Instead of trying to win," Johnson explained, "we should focus on individual events. We can keep up with them on floor and pommels and if we beat them on those events, we should be in great shape when we see them again on March 30."

The March 30th Johnson is talking about is the first day of NCAA Nationals. Rightfully so, Johnson is very confident about his team and predicts that this year, the Minutemen will make its first-ever appearance at the event. And if the cards fall into the right place and UMass stays within the top 12, that's exactly what will happen.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN
The UMass men's gymnastics team soarded to new height in their win over Southern Connecticut and MIT.

Rams marooned by UMass

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

The H was O (heat was on) in the H2O this weekend as the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team were asking "how do you like your Ramburgers?" while Fordham University was grilled 210 to 86 on Saturday afternoon.

Although before the meet both teams entered the cool waters of Rogers pool with similar records, the Minutemen (being at 6-4 while Fordham was at 6-5, yet that was as close as it got as the water before Minutewomen had begun to heat up.

"Overall I think we swam very well," said head UMass coach Bob Newcomb. "The team swam very solid races, very smart, and were still trying to accomplish a lot of things that we are doing in workout. I was impressed."

Impressive it was, as the Maroon and White practically ran the board taking almost every event they competed in.

Some of the days highlights included Anne Dettloff and Marci Hupp going one-two in the 200-yard freestyle, while teammates Elizabeth Risotto and Becky Hunnewell matched that in the 200-yard backstroke.

Not to be out done, Lauren Bulkeley and Jills Dragon kept up the trend in the 200-yard breaststroke. Completing the sweep in the pool was Lia Lansky, Tricia Argentina, and Carly Mahon who owned the 200-yard fly.

Also coming up big for UMass was Andrea Spencer in the 100-yard fly with Buckley following behind her for another one-two finish. Spencer then returned in the 200-yard I.M. to take that event while Sarah Newell finished second. Newell would then take 100-yard breast with Dragon in third too.

Other winners for UMass were Hunnewell in the 100-yard backstroke with Lizzy Boyle in third. Andrea Kazanjian swam away with the 100-yard freestyle with teammate Molly Bulkley pulling in third.

Turn to SWIMMING page 7

Falling records fuel UMass men's track

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

Hear that?

It's the sound of Massachusetts men's indoor track records shattering to the ground.

Senior Vic Morency's annihilation of the UMass record books resumed this weekend at Kingston, R.I., where he led his team to a second place finish in a quad meet that featured Rhode Island, Maryland, and New Hampshire. It was there that Morency ensured his place in the annals of UMass track lore.

With his first-place shot put toss of 55'9.75", the master thrower surpassed the previous UMass record of 55'9.75" set by Ian Stevens in 1997. Since the start of the season, Morency has conjured up personal career bests on a nearly weekly basis, exceeding his longest toss of last season by over eight feet.

Morency also continued to nudge his way up the historic ladder in the 35-lb. weight throw. He placed second in the event with a 59'2.25" toss, a personal best by over three feet. His feat propelled him to second all-time in the UMass history books.

Despite his monumental performance, even Morency could not clinch a victory for the Minutemen. The squad finished with 161 points, trailing Rhode Island by five points. Heading into the meet, coach Ken O'Brien knew his team would be faced with a foreboding task.

"It's typically been a very difficult meet for us because Rhode Island is a tough team, a team that's beaten us in the Atlantic 10 meet the past couple of years," he noted, "Rhode Island has had a good history of being able to take us to the wire."

Although the team was unable to avenge last year's loss to Rhode Island, a valiant effort allowed them to finish ahead of perennial nemesis New Hampshire, as well as Maryland, a solid team that the Maroon and White had never faced prior to this weekend.

While Morency's brilliance was the highlight of the meet, sophomore Adrian Zullo turned in a solid sprinting performance as well. In his first meet of the season, Zullo finished first in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.47.

His effort was the fifth fastest in UMass history and qualifies him for the New England Championships and the ICAA Championships, both to be held at the end of the season.

For the second week in a row, the Minutemen performed without the services of junior Marc Sylvander, who is nursing an abdominal strain. The mid-distance runner is aiming to be back in action for next week's Valentine's Classic in Boston, as a prep meet for the Atlantic 10 Championships to be held on Feb. 19.

As for the mindset of his team, O'Brien is certain that the Minutemen are brimming with confidence heading into the final stretch of the season, especially with the recent honors bestowed upon Morency and freshman standout Stefan Russ.

Last week, Morency received Atlantic 10 Athlete of the Week honors, while Russ nabbed A-10 Rookie of the Week. For both players, it was the second consecutive week that they won their respective awards.

"It's a very nice tribute to those two guys who work very hard," O'Brien said, "but it also gives the whole team a lift to have some of your team members selected for a conference wide honor. These little perks many times play major roles in a team's success."

Weighing the cost of a loss

UMass pays after Atlantic 10 upset

When is a loss more than a loss?

How about when the last meeting between the two teams ended in a 29-point swing in the opposite direction? How about when the victors had dropped 10 of their last 12 games coming in by an average of almost 15 points? How about when a win (by the losing team) would have allowed it to finish closer to the conference leader, which also fell in a thoroughly unprecedented upset?

Lost yet?

You're not the only one. After Sunday's crushing 42-40 defeat at the hands of former Atlantic 10 punchline Temple, the Massachusetts Minutewomen (9-12, 6-4 A-10) may be left to wander the remainder of the season in the forest of mediocrity that is the A-10 East. The division saw its most bizarre sequence of the season this past weekend, when its top four squads all added to their loss columns against opponents that they undeniably could have, and in some cases should have, conquered.

UMass had every reason to believe that its Sunday battle at the Apollo of Temple would turn into a roundball laugher much like the Jan. 27 meeting between the two teams in Amherst. The Owls (7-14, 2-8 A-10) had only managed a week earlier to win their first conference game, against equally horrific Rhode Island. And if Temple's 69-42 plastering at UMass two days earlier was any indication, these Owls had no business even stepping onto the same hardwood as the Minutewomen.

So much for expectations. With the Maroon and White's leading scorer relegated to cheerleader status after banging heads with her own teammate and the squad's other two legitimate post players unable to keep out of foul trouble long enough to so much as slow down Temple's frontcourt, UMass felt the full impact of that fall didn't hit the hometown hoopsters until they checked on the other action from around the East.

Fast-leading St. Joseph's (18-4, 9-2 A-10) may not have been as heavily favored heading into it's road showdown with A-10 West top dog George Washington on Sunday, but the Hawks had to like their chances against the Colonials (18-5, 9-1 A-10). St. Joe's toted a perfect 9-0 road record into the Charles E. Smith Center for the battle, a mark that included convincing victories at Villanova, Virginia and, you guessed it, Massachusetts. But by the time the smoke cleared in our nation's capital, Hawk coach Stephanie Gaitley and her squad were left humbled by a 70-67 defeat.

But according to the somewhat bitter Gaitley, Sunday's defeat had more to do with hometown officiating than it did with any sort of Hawk collapse.

"I feel that the calls down the stretch were game changers, and I don't think that refs should dictate the game," Gaitley said. "I'm not saying the calls were the difference between us winning or losing, but they were the difference between us having the opportunity to win."

The defeat was the Hawks' second within the conference, making UMass' loss at Temple all the more excruciating: a Maroon and White win would have placed Joanie O'Brien's troops a single game behind St. Joe's in the A-10 loss column.

Speaking of the loss column, one team that had essentially resided there for the entire season, Rhode Island, finally got the chance to ruin someone's weekend at home against St. Bonaventure on Sunday. Despite the fact that the Rams only dressed six players for the contest due to a rash of injuries, URI (2-19, 2-9 A-10) was able to hold off the Bonnies thanks in no small part to a career-high 19 points from sophomore forward Yatar Kuyatch. So, even as the Minutewomen were lamenting their folly in Philly, they had to be quietly thanking their counterparts from the Ocean State for keeping the third-place Bonnies in check.

The loss at Temple also shed further light on what may be shaping into the greatest one-on-one matchup in the entire conference this season: UMass guard-forward Alison MacFarland (left) versus Owl guard Nicole Lunar. Whoever ends up in the A-10 will you find two players who play each other so fiercely, and shut each other down so completely in the process.

Senior New Jersey native MacFarland entered Sunday's game tied for second place on the squad in scoring, averaging 9.4 points per game and leading the team in field goals attempted with 200.

But in the team's two tests against Temple, MacFarland has all but disappeared offensively; she managed only five points on an atrocious 2-for-10 performance from the field in the January 27 win at home and took only four shots, one of which fell, Sunday at the Apollo.

But if MacFarland's game suffered in the two contests, Chaszar's absolutely disintegrated. The senior from Pennsylvania also stood at second place on the team scoring list prior to Sunday's game, but couldn't hit water if she fell out of a boat against the Maroon and White; Chaszar came up empty on three field goal attempts and settled for a goose egg in the points scored column of the stat sheet. Add that to her zero point, 0-for-10 shooting night in the teams' last meeting, and you'll see why MacFarland and Chaszar may be happier to never face each other again. And they may never have to.

If Temple reverts back to the radical inconsistency with which it started the season and the Minutewomen don't find a way to slay their two-headed demon of foul trouble and offensive ineptitude, neither team will have much of an opportunity for a late season run at glory.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist

Atlantic 10 Standings

EAST	Conf.	Overall
St. Joseph's	9-2	18-4
UMASS	6-4	9-12
St. Bonaventure	5-5	13-6
Fordham	3-7	4-17
Temple	2-8	7-14
Rhode Island	2-9	2-19
WEST	Conf.	Overall
G. Washington	9-1	15-5
Xavier	9-2	18-3
Virginia Tech	6-4	13-8
Dayton	6-5	11-11
Duquesne	3-7	8-14
LaSalle	3-7	8-13

Weekend Results
Xavier 77, Dayton 64
Temple 42, Lasalle 40
Rhode Island 58, St. Bonaventure 53
Virginia Tech 52, Fordham 52
LaSalle 58, Duquesne 50
George Washington 70, St. Joseph's 67

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 11 Wednesday, February 9, 2000

Future ends for dental clinic in health services

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Correspondent

University Healthcare and union officials aimed to raise awareness of what they label a crisis in the management of Health Services by holding a press conference at the Health Services building yesterday.

The impetus for the conference, and the final straw according to union organizers, was the recent announcement that the University Health Services Dental Clinic will be forced to close by June 30, 2000.

According to the officials present at the news conference, the clinic is part of a number of facilities that provide services for 67 percent of the undergraduate student body, as well as for graduate students, university workers and faculty. The dental clinic recorded just under 8,000 visits last year.

According to Cathy Rhines, a representative of the Service Employees' International Union (SEIU), in addition to abruptly closing the clinic, the University administration has long been unresponsive to workers' complaints, which have been recorded in numerous surveys and reports since 1993. Though employees have been voicing their complaints in surveys up until 1998, laborers had entered into an initiative designed to make Health Services employees and administration come to a cooperative solution on their problems.

Health services employees explain their changing services during a budget meeting held yesterday.

The private arrangement has failed, and they are relying on public awareness to help change administrative policy, officials said yesterday.

Rhines said Executive Management is now cutting heavily into services, namely the dental clinic, to lower costs. The administration has also proposed a 33 percent decrease in the student fee for health services over the next three years. To Rhines and her colleagues, this means additional cuts in jobs and services far beyond the dental clinic.

When asked what other services might be endangered by the plan, Rhines said she was not sure. "We get things like [the dental clinic closure] dropped on us," she said.

In response to administrative criticisms on poor service, Rosemary Riley, a representative for the University Staff Association, brought up the recent accreditation of Health Services by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO) as further proof that the facility is providing competent service to its patients, despite what the administration alleges as justification for its cuts.

The overall evaluation score of University Health Services by JCAHO was 93 out of a possible 100 points. According to Mayers, "You don't come by that score easily."

To Riley, the evaluation proves that the "staff here will not compromise the care [they] provide to students." Still, with regard to the administration, Riley continued, "We as employees need someone to listen to us and support us in doing what we do [on]."

Rhines said she is in the dark on the administration's motives for its attitudes towards Health Services, but she speculated the cutting of Health services is part of a greater movement in the administration towards privatization of this University. She called privatized management a "quick fix" solution to managerial problems.

In fact, according to the speakers, the lack of response to employee and student concerns are deliberate moves by the administration to, as Shaw put it, "set [University organizations] up for failure, and set [them] up for privatization."

James Shaw, the president of the Graduate Employees Organization (GEO), also addressed privatization in his contribution to the conference. He called it "an ideological mission" on behalf of the University "to sell off parts of campus to private and corporate interests."

"It's not going to cut costs, or save money," he said. Shaw also commented on the University's lack of response to students and employees in the current transition to privatized management. "There are lots of employees with creative solutions [to management problems]," Shaw said. "The frustration is that the University administration is reluctant to draw on employee feedback."

Those present said they felt that the

Turn to CLINIC page 2

Tobacco prices in question

By James V. Grimaldi
Washington Post

WASHINGTON - The latest lawsuit filed against the tobacco industry, alleging price fixing, might seem packed with incriminating evidence, but it's far from certain the legal salvo will hit its target, antitrust experts said.

Documents used to support a class-action lawsuit filed yesterday in U.S. District Court appear to show major U.S. tobacco companies agreeing on the prices they will charge for cigarettes to be sold in far-flung places such as Saudi Arabia, Jamaica, Costa Rica and Argentina.

"Price increases to be put into effect ASAP," one document reads about sales in Guatemala. "It was agreed," reads another about sales in Trinidad, "that the three companies would exchange information on proposed price increases."

But, because the documents are about foreign sales and not U.S. sales, the lawsuit may not be another devastating blow to the beleaguered tobacco industry. In fact, because the records fail to show executives specifically colluding to fix prices of cigarettes sold in the United States, some antitrust experts said.

It's the class-action plaintiffs' attorneys who have the difficult task ahead.

The lawsuit alleges that tobacco companies conspired "in a long-running and systematic series of agreements to fix cigarette prices above competitive levels in violation of both the Sherman Act and international law." It relies heavily on circumstantial and anecdotal evidence, and the heatsuit account of a former attorney for the Liggett Group, in an effort to show that while the industry was setting prices overseas, it most likely was doing the same thing in the United States.

In federal court, experts said, the attorneys will need more.

"It sounds like it is going to be a difficult case," said Mark Schechter, an antitrust attorney at Howry & Simon and former Department of Justice antitrust enforcer for 18 years. "It is an industry that's recognized to be relatively highly concentrated and one where there is a fair amount of uniformity in pricing. They are going to need to come up with something more than identical pricing."

But Jon Ferguson, a prime architect of the lawsuit along with attorney Michael Hausfeld, argues that the evidence is strong enough now to go to trial. Hausfeld's firm, Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld & Toll, had been mulling the lawsuit when Ferguson joined Chandler, Franklin & O'Bryan of suburban Alexandria, Va., specifically to work on tobacco litigation.

Ferguson should know the documents; He helped collect them when he was an assistant attorney general in Washington state suing the tobacco industry.

Turn to PRICES page 2

Students react to elimination of department programs

KARA STONES / COLLEGIAN
One student raises her hand at the meeting addressing the elimination of the Apparel Marketing major.

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

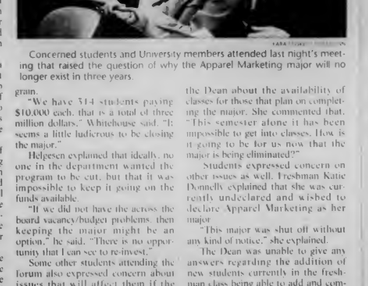
Irate students met yesterday with Robert Helgesen, Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources at the Morrill Science Building to discuss the elimination of the Apparel Marketing major.

The meeting was an in-depth question and answer forum that allowed students to express their concerns and look for other options beyond the elimination of the major.

The first issue that was addressed was the reason for the elimination of the major. Helgesen explained to the students that the department lacked an adequate number of faculty members to teach classes. According to him, two positions within the Apparel Marketing major remain vacant, while four positions in the Consumer Studies Department itself are unoccupied. These positions cannot be filled due to budget constraints.

"There have only been funds allocated for the hiring of temporary or short term faculty," Helgesen said. "The funding for hiring long term faculty members has not been allocated yet."

Sheila Mommen, Head of the Consumer Studies Department explained, "The reason why we are down positions is because they do not let us fill the positions we need."



He also explained that the lack of faculty and staff was not limited to only the Consumer Studies Department. According to him, the Landscape Architecture major is also affected by the lack of staff, as well as other departments and majors on campus.

"We don't have enough budget. This is not a problem that is restricted to only Consumer Studies," Helgesen explained. "What I know is that our budget is continuing to erode, and that the way that we must deal with this is by eliminating majors."

He explained that the major had a deficit of roughly $240,000 and that there was no way that he could keep the major running with these kinds of deficits. However, he was unable to give students any kinds of figures regarding the total cost of keeping the major up and running.

Students responded to the lack of information with anger, complaining that the Dean did not know enough about the major to make educated decisions about its future. Apparel Marketing major Crystal Collette explained, "When I look at my checkbook very closely, I know that I have five dollars. What are the numbers for this program?"

Sophomore Economics major Mike Whitehouse commented that the major seemed to be fairly inexpensive to run as opposed to other majors and that other options should be considered before the elimination of the program altogether.

KARA STONES / COLLEGIAN
Concerned students and University members attended last night's meeting that raised the question of why the Apparel Marketing major will no longer exist in three years.

Helgesen explained that ideally, no one in the department wanted the program to be cut, but that it was impossible to keep it going on the funds available.

"If we did not have the across the board vacancy/budget problems, then keeping the major might be an option," he said. "There is no opportunity that I can see to re-invest."

Some other students attending the forum also expressed concern about issues that will affect them if the major is eliminated.

Sophomore Alayne Maverson, an Apparel Marketing major, questioned the Dean about the availability of classes for those that plan on completing the major. She commented that, "This semester alone it has been impossible to get into classes. How is it going to be for us now that the major is being eliminated?"

Students expressed concern on other issues as well. Freshman Katie Donnelly explained that she was currently undeclared and wished to declare Apparel Marketing as her major.

"This major was shut off without any kind of notice," she explained.

The Dean was unable to give any answers regarding the addition of new students currently in the freshman class being able to add and complete the major. Helgensen would

Turn to PROGRAMS page 2

Assaults & graffiti close weekend

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

The news of rape and sexual assault overshadowed much of the weekend, although several other incidents were also reported throughout campus.

Homophobic graffiti was reported in both Pierpoint Dorm and Patterson Dorm.

According to Barbara O'Connor, Deputy Chief of Security Services, such graffiti is not uncommon. "Unfortunately this is not an unusual occurrence," she said. She went on to mention reports of racial and homophobic graffiti range from "pencil markers, things on wipe boards, to scratching paint."

Police Roundup

James C. Lyons, assistant to the director of Security Services, said in reference to the Pierpoint Dorm incident that someone had written the words "gas people suck" on an emergency door. The other reported incident was on a bathroom door in Patterson Dorm. There are no suspects in either incident.

An incident of domestic violence was also reported as occurring on Friday afternoon. A report came in of "yelling and screaming" at the Lincoln Apartments, according to Lyons. Police arrived and discovered Roque A. Vianna, holding his wife on the ground to prevent her from leaving. Although he had not hit her, he was arrested and charged with domestic assault and battery for forceful restraint.

Later in the weekend, at a basketball game in the William D. Mullins Center on Saturday, police on detail at the event received a complaint about an unruly fan.

According to Lyons, "[an officer] saw him approach a group of people who were cheering for the Texas side and tried to stop them." Police asked the man to leave the game but he refused and made several homicidal threats. Police arrested Casimir Laizer, 57, of South Hadley and charged him with disorderly conduct, assault and battery and threat to commit murder.

In total, the police arrested three people, received reports of one breaking and entering, two accidents, six thefts including one motor vehicle theft, 13 acts of vandalism, five liquor law violations, five drug law offenses, one sexual assault, a recovered motor vehicle and two rapes.

In regards to the rape, Lyons said the UMass police still has "nothing new to report."

On Friday morning, a UMass student was the victim of acquaintance rape. According to O'Connor, using the term acquaintance is a "normal operating procedure for describing somebody the victim knew previous to the attack." She explained that the term is used arbitrarily whether the victim knew the assailant for years or if they just met them a short period earlier.

A description has yet to be provided involving the Saturday morning assault in a Washington Tower elevator. She was apparently traveling from a lower floor when she was attacked and raped by an unknown assailant.

Lyons says that although the

Turn to POLICE page 3

Extended Forecast

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 20	HIGH: 39 LOW: 23	HIGH: 34 LOW: 22

SOURCE CNN.COM

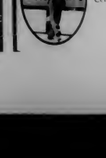
NEWS

Is It In the Stars?

Ed/Op editor Alexis Pushkar thinks she has the confusion on horoscopes all figured out. Turn to Page 4 and see what she has to say.

PAGE 4

ARTS



Remember Cast Weekend?

Check out reviews of last weekend's production of "In Relation To" as well as Ben Harper and Stephen Kellogg's shows inside Arts today. Also, read up on the Telephone that is red. Wow!!!

PAGE 6

ARTS

Cooking to turn the corner

Now that Bruser Flint has his team playing hard, can it turn the effort into a conference win over La Salle tonight at the Mullins Center?

SPORTS

PAGE 10

Arts & Living 6
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

■ programs

continued from page 1

make a decision regarding that at a later date.

Others asked the Dean why other programs, such as the funding for the renovations to Totman Gym and the recent addition of a stone walkway near the Campus Center, were necessary while programs were being cut.

Sophomore Apparel Marketing major Renee Gemest asked, "Why are they building a gym when academic programs should be was above this?"

Some students in attendance did not feel that their questions were being answered adequately and requested a meeting with both a representative from the Provost Office and Chancellor David K Scott.

Freshman Apparel Marketing major Andrea Mangini said, "We didn't leave there knowing any more than when we came in. If Dean Helgensen didn't know the answers to our questions then he shouldn't have been the one speaking to us."

■ prices

continued from page 1

"I'm pretty certain that if we get into discovery, we're going to find other evidence," said Ferguson, who lives in Seattle and helped direct his state's lawsuit against the tobacco industry. "But I wouldn't feel badly if we took it to a jury right now."

Representatives for the tobacco industry strongly disagreed. The suit names Philip Morris, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, British American Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson Tobacco, Lorillard and the Liggett Group in the alleged price-fixing conspiracy.

"Tobacco companies are brutally competitive," said Mark Smith of Brown & Williamson. "We often talk about the 'war in the store,' the battle in the marketplace.' This (lawsuit) is nonsense."

■ clinic

continued from page 1

administration has brought about some of the conditions that have led to problems with Health Services. "They [the administration] say that we're resistant to change," Rhines said. Citing the numerous employee surveys taken in recent years, she went on, "We've been asking for change since 1993. It's nonaction [on the part of the administration] that has placed us in this crisis," she said.

Rhines and others brought up allegations that the University has funneled money into subsidizing contracts with private institutions such as Amherst College and Hampshire College. "Using our money to subsidize private colleges is unacceptable to me," Riley said.

When asked why and for how long these subsidized contracts had gone on, Rhines replied that she did not know the answer. According to Simon Kouchakian, a field representative for SEIU, University Health Services has lost nearly $2.5 million to these contracts since 1993. He also drew attention to a faulty contract with the insurance provider Kaiser, which Kouchakian claims cost Health Services an additional $6 million over the same period.

Mayers joined with Rhines in saying that the University administration has been negligent in keeping employees in the dark about new policies. As administrative director of the dental clinic, she was informed of the final decision to close just under two weeks ago.

Employee suggestions with regard to contracts and other cost problems like those with Hampshire and Amherst Colleges, "fall on deaf ears," according to Rhines. Other suggestions have included cutting down the administratively imposed delays in hiring practitioners, and renegotiation with insurance providers whose payments do not fully cover the costs of services. According to those present yesterday, none of these proposals have seen action.

Instead, lab manager and SEIU activist Kevin Rhines said Health Services administration has condoned even more unsound financial practices, such as providing services and prescriptions for patients carrying insurance providers with whom Health Services does not have a contract.

According to Cathy Rhines, administrators have assured workers to "fill the prescription anyway," saying that they would "write it off." Kevin Rhines is outraged at what he sees as the failure to carry out "basic business practices" in running Health Services. "We've been giving away services," he said. "It's pitiful management," he remarked, "and responsibility for it should not fall on the workers."

Still, workers have been held accountable for the shortcomings of Health Services, according to the union representatives, through budget cuts, poor reviews, and downsizing. Cathy Rhines referred to a survey in which only nine percent of workers placed confidence in the managing director in running the institution. In a similar survey, 17 percent of those polled also felt that they could share differences of opinion without retaliation with the UHS director. Despite these figures, there has been no change in Health Services administration.

"Sports teams regularly fire their managers for doing a bad job. Why don't we do the same thing with [our administration]?" Kevin Rhines said. Cathy Rhines said she felt that the executive management was not being held accountable for problems the way middle management and employees were. Nor were they paying the price for these problems as students and faculty have been forced to do, Cathy Rhines said.

Those present recalled an often-suggested proposal to reconfigure the executive committee to one that allows students and employees to have a voice in the administration of Health Services. This policy also has not seen action or feedback.

It was also pointed out that those who would suffer most would be students, who could be denied services and care as a result in the reduction of their fee. Not only would they be denied access to University-provided services, but they would also have trouble finding services in the surrounding area to meet their needs.

According to Administrative Director Bev Mayer, the outflow of patients who had relied on University Health Services for dentistry could never be absorbed into surrounding private dental practices. Dr. Preetmohinder Bagga, acting director of the dental program, also agreed. Citing the barely-adequate $200,000 overhead on the 8000-patient practice, he commented, "No private practitioner would be able to survive under these conditions."

While Health Services employees have been notified late about the policies being implemented by the administration, students have not been informed at all, according to Kevin Rhines.

"It's all about politics and power," Kevin Rhines said of the administrative policies. "Public service is being devalued because it doesn't make a profit." But, he says of the work done by healthcare officials at UMass, "Public service can't be measured in a dollar."

TERESA CANINO-RIVERA / COLLEGIAN

Students receive an explanation concerning the closing of the dental unit at UHS yesterday during a Health Services meeting.

Fate of journalist unknown

By Maura Reynolds
Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW – Kremlin officials tried yesterday to calm a growing international uproar over the fate of a missing Russian journalist by repeatedly asserting that the reporter – whom they claim to have handed over to Chechen fighters – is alive and well.

But they declined to provide any evidence and said they can't say where Radio Liberty correspondent Andrei Babitsky is.

"He's alive, but he's moving around all the time," said Sergei V. Yastrzhembsky, the government's spokesman on war-torn Chechnya.

Yastrzhembsky was one of a stream of Kremlin officials to insist in the past several days that Babitsky is safe. He and others – including Nikolai P. Patrushev, the head of the KGB's main successor agency, and Interior Minister Vladimir B. Rushailo – have said that intelligence reports, including interceptions of the guerrillas' radio traffic, support the assertion.

"He is alive and healthy and moving around all the time," Deputy Interior Minister Ivan Golubev said on live television late Tuesday. "I can't tell you more because the case is ongoing."

The Kremlin has expressed irritation with the attention directed on the case both Inside and outside Russia. Human rights groups, journalists' associations and foreign governments have lodged formal protests.

"This is a private matter which should not be addressed on the level of national policy, let alone relations between states," Foreign Minister Igor S. Ivanov complained. "It should be resolved by the competent agencies which are supposed to deal with it."

Russian officials claim they turned Babitsky over to Chechen fighters in exchange for three Russian POWs and released a video purporting to document the hand-over. The alleged Chechen fighters shown taking Babitsky's arm in the video are masked and unidentifiable.

Babitsky – a 35-year-old Russian citizen whose aggressive reporting earned the military's particular ire – has not yet surfaced on the Chechen side, and the Chechen leadership insists that none of their commanders has seen him.

Turn to FATE, page 3

Can you talk the tech?

At RCN, we've become a telecommunications powerhouse through the exceptional customer service we provide. And there's no end in sight to our growth. In fact, we're opening a new 24-hour state-of-the-art call center in Springfield, MA and are currently seeking additional agents to provide superior technical support to our Internet subscribers.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT AGENTS ALL SHIFTS

Using your highly polished customer service and problem solving skills, you will work via the telephone to interpret, understand and resolve customer issues. Your background must include a technical knowledge of PC and Mac configurations to the Internet a working knowledge of DOS, Windows 3.1, Windows 95/98 and Mac Operating Systems as well as a demonstrated familiarity with Internet software. Previous support experience is a plus.

Those exciting positions offer a competitive pay rate, excellent benefits, paid training and growth opportunities. All in a business casual environment. Please forward your resume to: Human Resources, JavaNet, 1 Federal St, Springfield, MA 01105. Fax (413) 886-6905. E-mail: rjaunch@javanet.com EOE

RCN The first wire of communications

www.rcn.com

Fizzus Tastus Smilus

{ inviting to the touchus }

Experience refreshing Coca-Cola® classic in an ice-cold glass bottle at The University Store, University C-Stores and Newman Center. Offer ends February 12, 2000.

Coca-Cola. enjoy

TERESA CANINO-RIVERA / COLLEGIAN

The job fair is here!

Michael Neath, from Landscape Contruction, talks with a few students during the Stockbridge Job Fair yesterday.

■ fate

continued from page 2

His family and colleagues, meanwhile, have pointed out numerous oddities in the video and inconsistencies in the official Russian account, and they say they fear the worst – that Babitsky died in Russian custody and officials are trying to cover it up.

New details about Babitsky's detention and disappearance have emerged in recent days, although they only raise more questions about the journalist's fate and the actions of Russian authorities.

One of Babitsky's colleagues, Vladimir Dolin, said yesterday that the shirt Babitsky is wearing in the video is one Dolin brought to the Chernokozovo detention camp in northern Chechnya on Feb. 2. Two hours after law enforcement officials at the camp promised to deliver the shirt and other items, they told Dolin that Babitsky had been transferred.

"This means he was alive at least until Feb. 2," Dolin said.

The following day, Russian officials announced the prisoner exchange and one day later released the video. Dolin said when he watched the footage he immediately suspected something was wrong because Babitsky had "lost a frightening amount of weight."

"With every day that passes," he said, "I have less and less hope."

Russian officials, especially those in the military, have not tried to hide their hostility toward Babitsky. On Dec. 27, the official press center set up to control war coverage released a statement condemning Babitsky and an amateur video he shot from behind Chechen lines. The statement accused Babitsky of consorting with bandits "that he considers worthy of respect."

It continued: "It is difficult to imagine a situation in which an American journalist interviews the authors of the explosion of the American Embassy in Kenya, savoring the number of victims, or to imagine a French reporter who chose the killers of passengers in the Paris Metro as his heroes... Russian citizens must know that Radio Liberty has been long involved in the war against them on behalf of bandits and terrorists."

OCD sufferers find relief

Support meeting to be provided

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

A support group for people living with Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD) is holding its first meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in Campus Center in room 917. The group, which was founded by Jon Dosick, is open to all Five College students, family member and friends of people who suffer from OCS, and is completely confidential.

Obsessive Compulsive Disorder is a psychological disorder that is distinguished by patterns of unwanted thoughts linked with repetitive behavior that is meant to relieve stress, Dosick said he had been living with the disorder for the last 14 years.

"I am someone who has OCD," he said. "I have had OCD for about the last 14 years, I have been public about it for about five years now."

OCD affects roughly three percent of the general population of the United States, which equals out to almost two million people. About 90 percent of people who are afflicted with OCD have both obsessions and compulsions with some experiencing one or the other.

Dosick said that the stress of being in college or away from home could add to the severity of the disorder and OCD can potentially be caused by extreme stress. When asked who was leading the meeting.

"There is really no authority figure, it is a peer group and a no stress environment, and it will be low key," Dosick said.

"There are many manifestations of OCD," he continued "Excessive checking, hand washing, hair pulling and some people when they are driving think that they have run someone over with their car."

According to Dosick, the main focus of the group will be to educate and let people afflicted with the disorder know that they really aren't alone. "People hide it because of shame," he said. "Through personal experience I know this can really be helpful."

According to the OC Foundation website, "support groups are an invaluable part of treatment. These groups provide a forum for mutual acceptance, understanding, and self-discovery. Participants develop a sense of camaraderie with other attendees because they have all lived with OCD. People new to OCD can talk to others who have learned successful strategies for coping with the illness."

Besides Dosick the group is co-sponsored by the Alliance for the Mentally Ill of Western Massachusetts and The Program for Students with Psychological and Mental Disabilities.

For more information, please look up www.ocfoundation.org

■ police

continued from page 1

UMass Police Department does not believe there is any connection between the attacks from this weekend and the attacks in November of 1999. "[We] never rule that stuff out... you never know until you solve things."

The assailants from the vandalism and indecent assault and battery have still not been identified. One of the individuals was described as a white male, approximately 6' 3", 175 pounds, with dark brown hair spiked on top, approximately 20 years of age, wearing a gray sweater with a one to two inch black horizontal-stripe, and dark pants.

The other two individuals are described as white males, 5' 7" with short light hair. Anybody who might have any information about either incident should contact the University Police at 545-2121.

O'Conner said students need to be careful about allowing people into the building or signing anyone in they don't know. She said that once people get into a building "finding them in a high rise is like looking for a needle in a haystack."

Great Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. A great place to get contacts lenses.
2. Free sample start-up contact lens solutions
3. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass.
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases.
5. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames.

Frederick H.Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
University Health Services
For appointments or questions, Call 577-5244

What's Left Sale

Final Winter Markdowns
50-75% off
Clothes, Shoes & Accessories

downtown Amherst

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Valentine's Day Sale

Ustore™
Not like a mall... Better

Buy 1 get the 2nd 1/2 off

All Stuffed Animals & All Picture Frames

Higher price Prevails (must be of equal or lesser value)

Valentine's Day Bear Drawing

Name:_____ Phone:_____

Email:_____

Do You Live On Campus? ___ Which Dorm? _____

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our opinion

Welcome to your neighborhood

With the two sexual assaults reported on the University of Massachusetts campus in the past week, we, as a campus community, are once again reminded of the harsh reality of violence on campus.

Last Friday morning in a Southwest dormitory, an acquaintance rape allegedly took place, and then again at approximately 1 a.m. on the following Sunday when a stranger assaulted a female student in an elevator in Washington Tower in the same residential area.

These assaults, coupled with the report of three males vandalizing the bathroom in Pierpont Hall and subsequently harassing a female student, and coming on the heels of a series of assaults in broad daylight near the campus pond over a three-week span last semester, are part of a very serious problem on campus.

While the aforementioned cross section of reported crimes is reason enough to take action, the Collegian fears that there are likely even more incidents similar to these that go unreported, as the victims are often threatened to stay quiet or place much of the blame for the assaults on themselves. Statistically, only one in 10 rapes is reported in the United States, according to Safe Campuses Now, a crime prevention awareness and education program staffed by student volunteers. SCN also claims that rapes are the most underreported violent crimes in the nation.

Laura C. Martin, author of the novel Life Without Fear, said that one out of eight college women will be raped while in school. At UMass, this boils down to a rough total of 1,200 female undergraduates being the victims of some form of rape.

It goes without saying that 1,200 is way too many – especially as the average.

Last semester, in response to the series of assaults, the University bolstered security around campus, particularly near the pond, an emergency call box was placed near the location of the attacks and personal shriek alarms were distributed. Chancellor David K. Scott issued a security update that added that he suggests that students "do not walk in unlit areas... travel with friends, know who you are letting into your residence hall or apartment building, and be aware of your surroundings."

The Collegian appreciates measures like these that the Chancellor and the administration took to prevent further violence at UMass, but, as evidenced by the fact that the latest assaults occurred, such measures were not enough.

Further action, however, cannot be left to the administration to take. There is only so much that the governing body of the University can do to keep crime at a minimum.

The Collegian believes that the first step to creating a safe campus is building a more closely-knit community. While we are not naive enough to think that simply making friends is going to completely wipe out the problem, we do have faith in personal contact. The better you know the people around you, the safer you will be in their company. Make it a point to meet your classmates. Perhaps if more students on campus were on better terms with those who used to be strangers, it would take some of the guesswork and risk out of college leisure life.

Our futures are hidden in the stars

Although I am sure that many of our astute and faithful Collegian readers are now expecting a column outlining the Seth and Alexis campaign platform, I must disappoint and turn my attention to a more pressing world issue: the future.

Many people are concerned with the subject; they are concerned to the point that they will do anything to catch a glimpse of it. For example, Nancy Reagan supposedly used an astrologist to plan for the future and influence national policy. While this explains much of the disastrous Reagan presidency, it also highlights a trend among people I know.

Someone that I know, we'll call him Hector to protect his good name and considerable acreage of cabbage fields a few miles south of here, thinks that by getting his tea leaves read or reading his horoscope he is one up on the rest of us because he knows what his future holds. I know nothing about tea leaves, although I'm sure that Hector's tea leaf reader (we'll call her Raven because that's her name and she should be publicly ridiculed) does know a lot about tea leaves and all their mysteries.

Horoscopes, on the other hand, I do know something about, and I think that they're bunk. I don't really expect them to forecast my future, but they never make any sense at all and are never very entertaining anyway.

Other people, namely Hector, find meaning in them. For Hector, secrets are told on the day they are forecast to be told. Tall dark strangers enter his life. Financial planning brings rewards, and conflicts are won or averted according to what his sign tells him will happen.

Alexis Pushkar

Sometimes I do find meaning in some of them. For example, I often find that what the powers have to say about Libras makes a lot of sense in my life.

I am a Cancer.

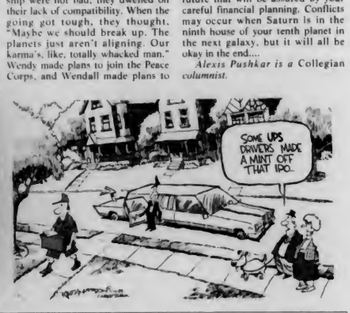
As a Cancer I share such traits as moodiness and a love of family with fellow Cancerians Julius Caesar and Captain Kangaroo. Being a Cancer is the only thing that I share with Julius Caesar and Captain Kangaroo, and it is only through the sheer lunacy of astrology that I ever contemplated having anything in common with Captain Kangaroo. (Julius and I were both breach babies and sometimes I say Et tu Brute when people betray me.)

Some friends have told me that they have no problems with horoscopes because loony or not, they are entertaining. Well, okay. Sometimes it is fun to check out my astrological compatibility with Mr. Right. But be careful: dwelling too much on your compatibility with Mr. or Miss Right can be dangerous and undermine a good thing.

Take my friend Wendy (whose name has been changed to protect her from the IRS or the CIA or the SGA). Like me, Wendy is a Cancer, and if you are interested, we are sexually compatible with Pisces, Scorpio, Taurus and Virgo, according to all astrology guides I've ever consulted. (Don't even ask, my answer is no.) Wendy liked this guy Wendall (whose name has been changed to protect him from irate hot dog venders in Central Park). Wendall is unfortunately an Aquarius, and while he is cute and slick and all, all the horoscope guides say they are a match made in purgatory, destined for hell.

Though things with their relationship were not bad, they dwelled on their lack of compatibility. When the going got tough, they thought, "Maybe we should break up. The planets just aren't aligning. Our karma's, like, totally whacked man." Wendy made plans to join the Peace Corps, and Wendall made plans to become a tree-hugging hippie. While these were noble intentions, Wendy was doing it to get into grad school and Wendall was tired of bathing.

But somehow they managed to overcome terrible astrological odds, and they managed to endure many nights when the stars lined up to form the words, "You suck," in the night sky. As the days turned into weeks and the months turned into years, they realized they were happy in spite of their lack of astrological compatibility.



But the moral of the story is not that horoscopes are bunk. Wendy found out that she was on the cusp of Cancer and was indeed partly a Gemini, which combined with the fact that she was supposed to have been born earlier in June and the fact that Wendall was an Aquarius means that they are a match made in heaven. Later Wendy found out that the "You suck" was for George W. Bush as a presidential candidate. The moral of the story is really: Don't assume anything.

Happy Valentine's Day, Wendall and Wendy. You will have a great future that will be assured by your careful financial planning. Conflicts may occur when Saturn is in the ninth house of your tenth planet in the next galaxy, but it will all be okay in the end...

Alexis Pushkar is a Collegian columnist.

Divide and Conquer

Write for ed/op

Count your blessings

Picture this: you are attending a university with 260,000 other people, you only pay 20 cents a year to go there and all of a sudden the university decides to hike the tuition to 140 dollars a year. This was the case at the National Autonomous University of Mexico on Feb. 11, 1988. As you can imagine resistance was swift and sharp, and within two weeks massive demonstrations broke out. What followed was a nine-month shut down of the school, which was just broken up Sunday morning by Mexican police and military forces.

Brian Lohnes

We have problems here at our University, which goes without saying, but at least we have the ability to work our problems out without turning to such drastic measures. The Mexican University, which includes several high schools and several research institutes, was officially in the hands of students for the better part of nine months. Throughout this time there were several violent clashes with police and military forces, but the students held fast. There were demonstrations of more than 100,000 people at a time occupying the main streets of Mexico City and yet, the university president Francisco Barnes de Castro wouldn't officially drop the price hikes. What he did was drop the amount to approximately 65 U.S. dollars and wouldn't go any lower. It's like the guy was some slimy used car salesman or something.

Finally he decided that the tuition would stay where it was adjusted to ($65 US), but payment would be optional. Now here's where the story gets screwy. The students still wouldn't budge. So talks were begun. The "talks" basically consisted of administration members risking life and limb to meet with the leaders of the student rebellion only to be berated and verbally lashed in front of a large audience of students. Then the protests almost came to an end but it was exposed that even though the tuition was free, there were hidden fees that were actually more expensive than the original tuition proposal. Shortly after the talks collapsed Castro resigned.

This is not the first instance of trouble at this University. In 1968, huge demonstrations were held and finally were stopped by the army, who slaughtered hundreds of students. It was the memories of that massacre that kept the government from taking any swift action. Sunday at 6:15 a.m. the troops invaded and took back the buildings with no major violence and no reported deaths.

I guess the moral of this story is that, the problems we have here are important, but we should be thankful of what we have. What we do have is a University that provides us with an education, a student governmental system that works for its student body and an active student population that can, and does speak up for itself. Privatization sucks, period. But at least we don't have to save money to buy books with and bus items from the campus store. It struck me as strange that the events in Mexico didn't make very many headlines, if any at all. I was more surprised that we didn't hear anything about it from some of the political organizations on campus.

What would happen here if it were announced that tuition was headed through the roof? Personally, I can't see anything like the above-mentioned events happening. Sure there would be a public outcry, but what then? The tuition increase was in the neighborhood of 7,000 percent going from 2 cents U.S. a year to $140. Roughly estimating the average tuition at UMass being about $10,000 a year (remember I am a journalism major...math might as well be Greek) that bill would be in the neighborhood of $70 million a year. Hopefully that will put it a little more in perspective.

So before you curse the University again, just think of being shut out of, or held up inside of UMass for nine months with no classes, no security and an army of soldiers waiting to pounce on you because of $140. I like to consider myself a knowledgeable and fair person, and when I first heard this story I wanted to laugh. Then I read that over half of Mexico lives below poverty level and most doesn't make $140 in a year. Even the lowest paying jobs in this country pay more than that a week. We have every right to protest and complain, and I don't think that should change; I am not speaking against protesting and demonstrating. But, I do think it is important that every once in a while we stop and just remember the things we have and take for granted that others can merely dream about.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

Red tape and paper towels

Several people asked me about how Orchard Hill got paper towels. As a result of their inquiries I feel obliged to give them, and other students who might be curious, the following account of the quest for paper towels among the webs and jungles of the University of Massachusetts bureaucracy.

Among the first things I did in the University of Massachusetts was wash my hands. To my surprise there were no paper towels, or any other hand drying devices, in Orchard Hill. I then was forced to shake my wet hand with a hand of a shocked friend. This experience seemed like an unfair treatment of the students who pay their dues to go to a public university. Most of those I spoke with about this issue felt that lack of paper towels was natural and that my quest was destined to fail.

I was so outraged by the fact that a basic sanitary right was not satisfied; that I had the energy to ask every and anyone who was in anyway knowledgeable of the issue "Why not?"

Anna Faktorovich

Starting locally seemed appropriate. During one of the first Grayson/Field House Council meetings I casually introduced the issue just to get a glimpse of people's feelings about it. They're responses was frightening. Everyone in the room was convinced that the administration was not going to bend over to satisfy the students. Those present were also sure that many tried to get paper towels in the past and failed. Overall, they were shouting at me for an hour or so about how stupid I was to introduce this obviously unproductive issue, without my making great comebacks (I was shocked).

The next target was the Housing bureaucracy. John Simply was the person in the correct position in the administrative ladder.

"What is your position on installing hand drying devices?" I asked. He answered that he didn't see anything wrong with having paper towels, but he needed to call Ted. He called me back relatively soon and said that he was unable to install paper towels or hand dryers. This was not a shock, because of the previous introduction to the issue.

The next reasonable step was the Budget office. I stopped by and received the full budget for several years. The budget was negative. The Housing budget office was next on the "to-do" list. An appointment with Janet Chevan, finance assistant director, seemed logical. She was very understanding and did not refuse to listen to my pleas. Instead, she kindly pointed out that there were many repairs and other immediate concerns and financial difficulties that prevented housing from being able to commit to such large-scale operations as papertowelization of the campus. The next strategy involved asking Health Services to write some sort of a document that would state that not wiping one's hands after going to the bathroom is a health concern to the student. To carry out this goal a Health specialist nurse was required.

At our first meeting, she welcomed me and my concerns with open arms and agreed completely, saying that in the previous years many students came to her complaining about the lack of hand dryers. She said that writing a statement would be helpful to her even if I did not succeed in receiving paper towels. This way she would then at least have a copy of her opinion to give to anybody else that might come to her with this problem. She then told me that she would get back to me in two to three weeks.

That meeting gave me a burst of the brightest hope. Practically hopping on clouds at the end of about two weeks, I came to her office without making an appointment. Over the period of those two weeks her story changed. Now she realized that it would be "too political" for her to write this sort of a piece. She did, however, supply me with pamphlets that stated that washing hands was a good idea and the phone number of the head of Health Council.

His reaction to the request was at first one of surprise and shock. Apparently this was the first time he heard about this issue. He called the head of Housing to find out why paper towels were not available on campus. I was in the room when the heads of Health Council and Housing Services discussed this issue, and it sounded like a gentlemen chat. At its closure it seemed that the Head of Health Council brought up his health concern. The head of Housing brought up his financial concern. They both were aware of their different concerns, but they were sure that this wasn't an issue they could decide on the phone. The head of the Health Council then advised me that it would be wise to present the case to the Health Council.

Legal Services was the next stop. They also proved to be a mediocre bureaucracy. I was bounced from one starting lawyer to another, until finally someone was found to take the case. The request was simple: "Please give me some document that states 'a bathroom used by over 20 people is public, and, the University/landlord is responsible for it.'" He found nothing!

I was at the end of my rope. Housing services was not getting back to me. The budget office was telling me that it is physically impossible for them to squish a penny out of their budget, and now I had no legal backing to support my argument. I was almost literary in the gutter.

While in this "dire" state of despair, one lawyer took the time to give some comfort through his wise words. He said that "any victory takes time" and that I should "be more patient and take my cause to the streets where the real power lies." As I understood it, his suggestion was to write a petition.

Now my hope was that student senators would support this issue, and help distribute the petitions throughout campus. The response was, "Oh, you again." Some senators had other endeavors to tackle. Some felt it was politically incorrect for them to tackle a motion that Housing was not going to execute (they would supposedly look "stupid" approving something that Housing would then simply say "no" to). Some were a bit more sympathetic and said they would take a petition. Some suggested I leave the petitions in the SGA office for those interested in signing. But overall, I received the feeling that nothing was going to get done.

At that point I was beyond pessimism. "Well," I thought, "I should call Housing and ask if receiving signatures is going to affect their decision." I picked up the phone in the Student Government Association office and first called Ted, he was not in, then I tried John Simply. John was in. "Hello John," I said, "Do you remember me? I called a while ago." "Yes, I remember you," John replied. "Hi, how are you doing?" "I'm fine, thank you, I am calling to find out your current position on the paper towels and/or hand dryers issue I asked you about earlier."

"Well, I can not afford placing them all over campus right now, but I do have the funds to cover some buildings, what do you want?"

"Orchard Hill."

"OK."

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian staff member.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Marc Mensched Finance Manager
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Jeanie Gorlowsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor Samantha Postlhen Assistant to the Managing Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Grein News Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Kara Stokes Photography Editor Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor Ben Alumed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Paper or plastic?

The cashier does not like you. This is true in every scenario. The cashier does not necessarily hate you, or even dislike you, but the cashier has no natural interest in making your life any better. Your best bet to make your shopping experience a positive one: do not piss the cashier off. These are the facts about the cashier:

The cashier is basically a lump, an automaton with almost no independent thought allowed. For all you people out there who think the cashier can answer your question, I want you to read this next sentence very carefully: The cashier puts the laser over the UPC code and then presses the 'Total' button. This is all the cashier does.

The cashier does not know where any products in the store are. The cashier has never heard of your favorite rock group, author, or chainsaw brand. As far as the cashier is concerned, the machine is always right. If your wrapping paper rings up as $79.98 plus luxury tax then damn, that is how much that wrapping paper costs, and the sign does not mean a damn thing. The cashier wants to be ignored. Do not talk to the cashier – the cashier does not care about your life.

The cashier cannot leave the register for any reason. Do you follow me now? Those are the basic rules, and if you follow these rules, then all is fine and you can pay for your stuff and escape unscathed. Sometimes, however, this just doesn't happen, and then the badness begins.

You see, when you violate a majority of the rules, you make the cashier do something that the cashier dreads above all: summon the supervisor. The supervisor knows where things are located. The supervisor is the president of your favorite band's fan club.

The supervisor has keys. These keys give the supervisor vast power – power to engage in hand-to-hand combat with the cash register and actually make it do stuff. The supervisor can, with an arcane magic-like process of which the cashier has absolutely no understanding, make your wrapping paper cost $3.50. The supervisor can force the stock boy to take off his Ring of Invisibility and actually help you carry stuff to your car.

The cashier hates the supervisor. The supervisor never gives the cashier his break on time. The cashier has to beg, grovel to the supervisor for quarters. Usually the supervisor possesses a sense of superiority more fitting to the Supreme Court than the Food Court. The less contact the cashier has with the supervisor the happier the cashier is.

Making the supervisor come over is bad news.

First, you force the cashier to deal with the supervisor, whom the cashier hates. Then the cashier has to wait for the supervisor to come over, which defeats the cashier's whole goal in life, which is to get you the hell out of the way so the cashier can resume chatting, or reading, or dreaming of the other cashier on Register 5 naked. Then, while waiting for the supervisor, you try to talk to the cashier. This makes the cashier even angrier because, as previously stated, the cashier just wants you to shut the hell up. The cashier just gets angrier and angrier.

Rob Schulze

This is bad. The cashier then exacts his revenge in a multitude of ways. He can use ancient cashier secrets brought over on the Mayflower to screw you in ways you could never discover. It may only be a few cents, but since you were enough of a bastard to make the cashier summon the supervisor over a seven cents difference in the marked price of Wheat Thins, that probably would make you cry if you ever found out about it. The cashier can be rude beyond belief to you and take his time doing everything, making you wait forever at the register, which, as a customer, is the one thing you don't want to do. The cashier can bag your stuff in such a way as designed for maximum breakage. Yes, the cashier is a very petty individual. But it's all the cashier has.

So, be kind to your cashier, because just because the cashier does not like you, doesn't mean the cashier wants to hurt you. Simply don't ask the cashier to do anything besides scan the stuff and press the 'Total' button.

Oh, yeah, there's one more rule: ugly people are not allowed to go through the cashier's line with condoms. Ever.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian columnist.

Enlarging the debate

There was something sad about Gary Bauer's withdrawing last week from the race for the Republican presidential nomination. Bauer, a long shot candidate from the start, left the GOP race after garnering only one percent of the vote in the New Hampshire primary. Why do I care about a weasely candidate who holds appalling views on homosexuality and abortion? Because the failure of Bauer's campaign illustrates the difficulty of running for public office as an unorthodox candidate.

Richard Anderson

It could be said that Bauer's campaign floundered simply because his ultra-conservative message failed to resonate with voters. Maybe. But Bauer was also a victim of Big Money. His campaign expended most of its resources in securing a respectable fourth place finish in the Iowa caucuses. Bauer was thus left without the money necessary to compete in New Hampshire. Had he enjoyed the financial security of George W. Bush, Bauer could have moved on to the upcoming South Carolina primary. It's possible he would have done well among South Carolina's many conservative Christians. But, Bauer could not afford to continue.

His death will not be the last. Fellow GOP candidate Alan Keyes is struggling and is unlikely to survive the next three weeks. I do not lament the loss of these two bigoted, maniacal candidates. I do, however, lament that the scope of the political debate has been limited. Candidacies like those of Bauer and Keyes shake up campaigns and provide needed challenges to the status quo.

The smugness with which frontrunners George W. Bush and Al Gore comport themselves should be an insult to every American. The two have attempted to insulate themselves on the campaign trail by collecting massive funds and endorsements from the entrenched, political establishment.

Think about George W.'s resources. Start off with a $70 million war chest. Add the support of the national Republican Party machinery, which is desperate to regain the White House. Bush also boasts the prestige of having a former President for a father. Furthermore, he enjoys intense support from the National Governor's Association. Bauer, Keyes, and Bush's leading challenger Sen. John McCain cannot access resources anywhere close to that. And although Steve Forbes has a significant private fortune he lacks Bush's base of elected support.

On the Democratic side, Al Gore has also amassed substantial sums of money and elite support to stifle Bill Bradley's challenge. He has aligned himself with the party establishment, gaining endorsements from the likes of Ted Kennedy and minority leader Tom Daschle. While Bradley has raised funds competitively, he lacks Gore's support among the power brokers. Furthermore, Gore has at his disposal all the accoutrements of the vice presidency, such as intense media exposure and a claim to the successes of the current administration. The AFL-CIO's endorsement of Gore provides him with a nationwide infrastructure to conduct his local campaigns. Bradley, conversely, will rely heavily on volunteers as he pushes parsimoniously toward the March 7 super primary.

The travesty in 2000 is that the political power brokers are attempting to determine who our candidates will be. By throwing their money and their political clout behind Gore and Bush, the elites are attempting to squelch any opposition. The issue supercedes ideology. Regardless of party, the campaigns of Bradley, McCain and others are of dire importance to the health of our democracy. Fringe candidates enlarge the public debate by raising multiple viewpoints and issues. They force the frontrunners to answer difficult questions and justify their own stances. The fewer the candidates, the less their views matter because you'll have to vote for one of them. You'll have no other choice. And choice is a big part of what democracy is all about. The powers behind Gore and Bush wish to limit your choices until your vote in November merely acts as a rubber stamp to affirm what they have already decided.

Last week I commented to a friend that even as a strong liberal, I am unashamed of my infatuation with McCain. "But Richard he's terrible! He's a militant guy!" I know. I agree with most of what he says." I responded. "But I can't help it. I love the guy". What I love about John McCain is that his campaign is a kick in the teeth to every power center in the nation. His surge in South Carolina is encouraging because it proves that it's possible to give the political establishment a run for its money. Literally. How do you enlarge the debate? Ideally our political system would allow for multiple parties. But in the short term, campaign finance reform and free television advertising for candidates would do much to even the playing field. The best way is to enlarge the public debate, however, is to listen and support fringe candidates. You don't have to vote for them or agree with them, but give them a fair shot.

Richard Anderson is a Collegian columnist

Thou... art ....That

ed/op

Many voices, few words

The school's population falls nowhere short of immensity. Walking through campus, one feels as though one is among hordes. Through our self-expression we manage to separate ourselves from the mass of background noise and attention-grabbers. That we are individual affords a solace, while our voices and words grant comfort. Through our words we find and hold onto ourselves forcibly in a crowded reality. Still and all among the masses reside a few who plunge deeply into their selves and their words; they lose sight of the world and its marvels.

A population of preoccupied people exists. Their preoccupations vary as greatly as our distinctions: money, grades, getting somewhere on time, assignments, tests, business with other people. Any of these and a hundred more constantly clutch our mind and whisk it away on a wild current of distraction. The unimportant and immaterial seizes our culture and grips it with an iron fist. As a result, mainstream society has discarded matters of the heart and spirit in favor of trifle matters such as money and busyness, building itself and everyone in it upon the notion of one task leading to another in an endless, great, incorporeal "To Do" list. Stepping back and looking carefully, we notice our list rarely reads, "Spend time with yourself" or, "Enjoy the company of loved ones" or even, "Do nothing but relax."

Some consider these to be "boring," others divulge quite fruitfully in them. The difference between the two resides in what they truly value in life. For the first, preoccupation with all those little tasks in the "In Box" provides the principal course for life's digestion. The second group asserts spending time with people and accumulating experiences soaked with richness and energy to be more important. Two different outlooks, neither better nor worse than the other, leads to two different lifestyles. Mind you, experience reveals the preoccupied life indicative of stress and feelings that time passes without hindrance or slowing.

Scott Vignola

For example, how often have you or others said, "This weekend went by fast" or the scarier, "I can't believe I only have one semester left until I graduate?" Time elapsed quickly because insufficient attention was given to your self in the moments as they transgressed. Moreover, the lack of mindfulness prevents us from recognizing the beauty of the present moment and the potential it contains.

Life strives to find happiness – meanwhile observing and exploring personal values – and unendingly deciding how we shall spend our time, be it a Friday night or Tuesday lunch break. Ever and always the gift of the present moment waits for us to take hold of it, to seize it and ride like a whirling dervish full of spontaneity and zestful energy.

Parents constantly try to spend more "quality time" with their family. They fail to see that all time is quality time. People succumb to the trap of thinking that "quality time" needs to be set aside, put on a schedule, added to the grand "To Do" list in order for it to happen; it's easier to stuff it in a bottle and open it on the occasions you've set aside. But life's blessings are not pre-packaged or shipped in tiny bottles that read "Open With Care." They emerge from the precious, the irreplaceable. Laughter with friends, walking to gentle snowfall, hugs and kisses, chocolate; for these and many others I can think of no replacements. Like the credit card commercial that goes, "There are some things that money can't buy, for everything else there's MasterCard®."

"Do not feel demoralized for wasted time, but enlightened for the unlimited potential this moment now brings. Snap the chains that bind your spirit and break the walls dividing heart to mind."

Aside from its capitalistic intentions, I think this advertisement's philosophy hits pretty close to a valuable mark.

Preoccupation bears another price. If we forget the ultimate goal we're placing us all on a level field: death, my fellow members of the students. Each moment that passes brings it inevitably closer. Whether you spend your moments with a significant other, in a boring lecture, or basking in the warmth of a wonderful summer's day, we draw nearer to death. As Robin Williams put it so gracefully in Dead Poets Society, "Carpe diem boys. Why? Because we are food for the worms..."

Do not feel demoralized for wasted time, but enlightened for the unlimited potential this moment now brings. Snap the chains that bind your spirit and break the walls dividing heart to mind. You and you alone are responsible for your experiences and feelings. To consciously take the reigns of your own life and state, "I am what I am because this is what I want to be" carries with it the weight of a freedom that few ever even imagine. Yet, to be free allows one to etch themselves into the memories of each person they encounter in a way that can never be replicated.

Walking with your own wind, you will encounter those who permeate with anger and frustration to a degree you only dreamed possible. Friends, family, even a lover – then can be anyone. Don't get caught up in their lack of luster for life. Each possesses one guaranteed goal on this good earth. Enjoy it and love it because you'll miss it when you hear its final moments. Nostalgia won't touch your memories abundant with appreciation for every second, and the fulfilling sentiment that you really wouldn't do a thing different if you had all to do again.

Scott Vignola is a UMass student.

inx

Super Viagra to the Rescue

WRITE ed/op

No more special treatment

The University of Massachusetts, our University, our little place of learning here in Amherst, our great place, our amazing center of academic knowledge, our bastion on the hill with an amazing reputation of fairness.

Right? Right? Isn't that the goal of a public institution? Apparently, if one believes the philosophy available in one area of the UMass website, quoted here as, "Everyone at a university should be a discoverer, a learner. That teaching responsibility of the university is to make all its students participants in the mission. Those students must under gird their engagement in research with the strong 'general' education that creates a unity with their peers, their professors and the rest of society." It was the Boyer Commission that wrote that, and it was in the Commonwealth College area of the UMass website that that statement was, and is, available.

However, it should be noted that there are two, slight and almost miniscule little things that make the location of that statement absolutely ridiculous. The first is that, obviously, the existence of the Commonwealth College makes it inherently impossible for the University to do anything related to the statement. Second, the fact that anyone actually believes that a bunch of nerds can be a part of a "unity with their peers, their professors, and the rest of society," while being systematically encouraged to stay away from the rest of us heathens at UMass are lying to themselves.

Sam Wilkinson

The cute thing about the Commonwealth College is that it maintains exactly the kind of things that are beneficial to nobody's development. Not only does it encourage a bunch of individuals who spend more time worrying about ass-kissing while in high school in a desperate attempt to maintain their oh-so-precious G.P.A., it keeps those same people away from the influence of others who might be described as "more rounded."

By "others" I mean the rest of us, those that are smart enough to be here, but who don't get coddled and soothed by a University desperate to attract what they believe to be the high end of the academic spectrum.

Honestly though, we all love those really smart kids from high school, the ones that cared more about grades than having fun, the ones that looked down on other people for not being as diligent as them, the ones that considered being rebellious drinking two bottles of Diet Mountain Dew instead of one and thought that a righteous make-out session involved cybersex at three in the morning.

When they come to college though, those kids from high school whose skin burned after five minutes of sunlight, should be broken of such miserable habits such as studying whenever you are not in class. There's more to this world of ours than the letter A and the number 100, and if college isn't the place to experience it, these individuals are going to have a hard time finding a better place.

Take into account the fact that we (and when I say we, I mean we, as in students that aren't honor students) all attend a public school, a public one where we are all supposed to be afforded equal access to education, and the existence of the Commonwealth College becomes further suspect. After all, shouldn't we all be able to take the same classes? Shouldn't we all be allowed to learn the same things from the same professors?

Why is UMass taking so much time, money, housing, and class offerings to tell us that they think we are so much lesser people than those precious honor students is questionable, as after all, didn't they accept all of us to attend their free and equal public institution?

If we'd wanted an exhaustive private school atmosphere, we would have sauntered on down the road to Amherst College or maybe to Boston College. Why the University of Massachusetts feels it necessary to create a school that isolates the nerds from the rest of us, and then offers those same nerds opportunities that the rest of us are not afforded is an awful behavior from our fair University.

What UMass needs to do, in an attempt to level the playing field, is completely scrap the Commonwealth College idea and instead, treat everyone equally.

Those pansy kids with books stuck in their butts can emerge and face the reality that is "sunlight." They can move to Southwest, Central, Northeast and Sylvan. They can deal with loud music, wild parties, and, get this, not the diet stuff, but the real, genuine, grade A, completely caffeinated Mountain Dew. They can try to study and deal with scheduling like the rest of us. They can suffer to find classes the way we all do, and if they can't deal with that, maybe mom can pick their wedgies or whatever it is that UMass is worried about honor's students receiving from us sinners who aren't so special as to be called honor students.

Meanwhile, the rest of us can move on into their rooms in Orchard Hill, we can take some of the classes that previously were available only to honors students, and do our best to make sure a bunch of nerds see the world.

For UMass, they get to promise everyone in the state of Massachusetts, and everyone from beyond, an education that, for all students is equal and fair.

And why wouldn't our fair institution want to live up to that kind of standard?

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist

Kellogg rides the Iron Horse

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Correspondent

Stephen Kellogg
The Iron Horse
Feb. 6, 2000

Many people don't know this but when Ben Harper was first starting his journey into music, he was almost booed off the stage while opening for The Dave Matthews Band at Great Woods (now the Tweeter Center) during the DMB "Crash" tour. I'm glad to say that I was one of those people who glared at Ben Harper as he took up valuable Dave Matthews Band time. Of course, within six months time Ben Harper had become one of the hottest acts around. Before long everyone liked him and The Innocent Criminals began headlining concerts. I think whenever someone has the chance to see a band before they explode into the radio waves and before they are unleashed on MTV, this should. With this in mind I ventured to Northampton with a triad of friends and saw Stephen Kellogg in his Iron Horse debut. Unlike Ben, this little known local musician was far from booed off the stage, conversely he was cheered and praised for his brand of low-key, emotional, folk music.

The Iron Horse, for all of those who haven't been (I joined those of you who didn't know what it was) is a pub like motif where the audience sits down and enjoys a meal while listening to the bands play. The UMass alum of 1998 got up on stage and began to promote his third and latest CD "South of Stephen." His particular brand of music melds folk and lyrical-poetry, a style, which recently has made a resurgent move in the music scene. With roots in the music of Bob Dylan, Van Morrison and others, Kellogg captivates his audience with his composing, song writing and soft harmonic voice.

He opened his set with a song from his new album "The Way She Is," followed by "Lady Sunflower" off his first full-length album "Rain Summer." Throughout the set he mixed up crowd favorites with new songs of the album. Each song incorporates his own unique song style, a soft guitar that exemplifies the lyrics and Kellogg's own voice.

Kellogg did not disappoint with his show, bringing the crowd an energy that will hopefully lead to a breakthrough album and career; and Stephen knows it. I predict that it won't be long before his voice will spread from the Pioneer Valley to the rest of the U.S.

COURTESY FRANK WARD

The Cowardly Lion In Winter

Amherst College presents James Goldman's The Lion In Winter on Feb. 10-12, at 8 p.m. at the Experimental Theater. Tickets are free but reservations suggested. Call 542-2277.

Ben Harper impresses with guitar antics

By Caroline Fullmer
Collegian Correspondent

Ben Harper and Innocent Criminals
Jon M. Greene Theater
Feb. 3

On Thursday night, Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals performed before a sold out crowd at the Jon M. Greene Theater at Smith College in Northampton. Ben Harper, a cross between Jimi Hendrix, Bob Marley and Lenny Kravitz, made the crowd rowdy and touched the inner souls of all beings male or female, old or young. The night began with clear aisles and a mostly sitting room atmosphere, but as the night progressed, the aisles filled and most chairs were left empty. It struck me to notice someone twice my age getting down way harder than the majority of twenty-something's that filled the crowd. Ben Harper, best known for his first release Fight For Your Mind, played one set consisting of a few old favorites and jammed out new tunes from his latest release The Will to Live. "Oppression" from Fight For Your Mind opened the set into a loud hard pulsating rhythm, the floors and walls vibrated with each strum of the guitar.

Throughout the entire show Ben changed guitars for practically every song, displaying his ambidextrous abilities at the acoustic, electric and jazz guitar. One the most appealing aspects of his music is the astonishing way he can dramatically progress from a very soft mellow mood to a loud hard core, rock beat. I couldn't tell which the crowd liked better, the Jimi Hendrix approach or the Bob Marley. Either way the fans could not get enough of it. One dude jamming out next to me was so stoked on the show that he embraced me, announcing this was the best show he'd ever seen, no questions asked. However, I on the other hand can name a few better, but Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals still rocked me to the core, literally.

As the show moved on through various songs the crowd's energy grew. Ben took time to listen to the crowd's requests and compliments as well as graciously thanking his fans. The stage set up consisted of a single chair where Ben was poised alone in the center of the stage, two percussion sets, and bassist. I felt that the percussion was really the most exceptional force of the band, besides Ben's captivating voice. Highlights of the night consisted of a sweet rendition of Bob Marley's "Get up, Stand up" as well as "Curfew." A crowd-pleasing "Excuse Me Mr.," "Mamma's got girl friend" and a hard rock version of "Faded" were also played. During the song all couples, old or young, male or female had no problem expressing their love for each other.

A new song "Steel My Kisses" consisted of a funky bass line and vocal jam. This song, out of a full setlist, was the first one that was truly impossible not to dance to. With this and Ben's entertaining introduction of his band, he and Innocent Criminals left the stage with his fans absolutely begging for more. After a rather lengthy period of time, the lights dimmed again and the band took the stage. A sweet rendition of Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing" began the encore, which made the entire crowd move to each and every word. Now let me just say that this song, the encore song, was the song that made me realize why Ben has so many devoted fans. Perhaps it was the way he looked when singing, or perhaps it was his soft melodic voice when he said "open up and let me in" that finally reached and grabbed me, for at that point in time I did not want him to leave the stage again. The encore lasted until about 10:30 p.m. ending with a loud version of "Mama Depressive."

All in all the show lasted about an hour and I left the theater with my body still feeling the vibrations from the speakers. I'm glad I saw Ben Harper in person and I'm glad I was able to truly experience his talent. However, I think next time I want to hear Ben like that again I'll listen to my personal favorite "Burn One Down" really really loud.

University of Massachusetts Boston

Special Summer Programs in Cuernavaca, Mexico

June 5 – July 10, 2000
Spanish Language and Mexican Culture

June 5 – July 11, 2000
Popular Markets in Mexico

These experiential programs emphasize hands-on learning in the beautiful City of Eternal Spring, Cuernavaca, Mexico.

To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston MA 02125-3393

UMASS BOSTON
617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

Thai Corner
On Boltwood Walk
Welcome Back Students
Eat In - Take Out
Lunch: Monday - Saturday 11:30 - 3:00
Dinner: Sunday - Thursday 5:00 - 9:00
Friday - Saturday 5:00 - 10:00
Real Thai Food
rice + noodles
flavorful entrees
Best Pad Thai in town.
31 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA 253-1639

Everybody Scores!
REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!
GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.
YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!
PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

$score BIG $score OFTEN Sweepstakes
UpCLOSE travel well BLOCKBUSTER
CALGON SESSIONS.com
SKECHERS OldGlory.com
TripHub.com
UNIVERSAL UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION
mybytes.com™
No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States (except Florida) 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 03/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/21/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "BBO Rules" Common Pictures, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER™ name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc. Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. (Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER™ store locations.)
© 2000 YourInBrown

Red Telephone strikes back

By Neale Gay
Collegian Correspondent

Red Telephone
Aviation

It's a common story with Boston's Red Telephone: gain the attention of a major label, and record an incredible album only to find that the label isn't interested in a follow-up. It was one record, hit or miss. The Red Telephone had to make it and they had to do it with fireworks.

They were promised the usual lofty promises when Warner Brothers signed them in 1998; fame, fortune, and instant rock stardom. Singer/guitarist Matt Hutton looks back on those distant days and bitterly remembers, "One day we were sitting in the Vice President's office and the next day they wouldn't return our calls."

It shouldn't be surprising if this story sounds familiar. What happened to the Red Telephone happened to Frank Black and Girls Against Boys. They Might Be Giants and the Jesus and Mary Chain waved goodbye to their "reputable labels" and opted instead for smaller independent record companies that cared about artistic integrity. The result has culminated in some of these bands' best albums in years. The Red Telephone was not to be forgotten.

With a revamped sound and five incredible songs, the Red Telephone recorded a new EP in the basement of drummer Mark Britton's house. The resulting songs make up Aviation.

The best way to explain this album is to quote Matt Hutton. He calls it "Sky Rock." This is a slight departure from what Warner Brothers called "Spy Rock," the kind of psychedelic post-punk the Red Telephone were known for on their 1998 Warner release.

Aviation is a prophetic album because it's elevating. As a whole, it takes you somewhere. The music has a way of building you in and the lyrics keep you from leaving. Hutton sings with his heart, guitarist Sean Toohey creates a wall of audibly pleasing noise, and bassist Pat MacDonald and drummer Britton are so involved on the same level that it's easy to feel the bass and the drums as one instrument.

From the first track, "Jet Pilot High," the Red Telephone set a standard that used to be only achieved in their live performances. With Britton's engineering, Aviation is true to form. The album actually sounds like the band, something not achieved when recording was mentored by the Corporate Giant.

Available for the first time on Feb 5, Aviation is soon to be in stores everywhere. Look for the Red Telephone sometime soon while browsing through the aisles of Newbury Comics looking for something a little bit different. The Red Telephone are sure to give you that.

UMass play hits close to home

By Melody Zagami
Collegian Correspondent

In Relation To Curtain Theatre
Feb. 4, 2000

If you didn't catch In Relation To at the Curtain Theater this weekend, you missed spending some quality time with your family. Though this may not seem like such a big deal, if you had been there you'd have realized just how important they are.

This show is a different kind of theater, one that utilizes simplicity and emphasizes the importance of character and relationships. Conceived and directed by Yael Prizant of the UMass Theater department and performed by students, this piece is a collaborative effort that started, quite amazingly, without a script. Every bit of material in the show was created as the show's rehearsals progressed.

In the opening we're presented with our typical American family, two kids, a mom and a dad. White-faced and mime-like, they are seemingly a whole until the middle child arrives and this is when the story begins or rather the history of a family begins.

Dressed only in colored t-shirts and black pants, the players in In Relation To took like a universal family. One that deals with the same problems that we all do in our everyday lives; growing up, communicating, and finding our own personalities amidst those of the rest of our family.

All the players in the show articulate their place in the family. By dance, spoken word, and interaction each illustrated how it feels to be the first born, the middle child and the baby. Marnie Tibbetts and Timothy Mahon worked well as the mom and dad. In one of the first scenes where the middle child, Iris, is getting ready to start off on her own, Mom is concerned about which dish set she'll use, while her father nags non-stop about whether she's checked the oil in the car. This rings true for me, indeed, and, given the laughter, the rest of the audience as well. Not only is the family well represented here but Prizant and her crew also employ the art of puppetry as well.

It shows how life, especially concerning our daily interactions with each other, can be much like a game show. The family is sitting in their living room and their conversation quickly transforms into a game show. Complete with a host – the puppet – whose game show announcer voice booms loudly when someone wins a point. This scene echoes the arguments and conversations that go on in our families and relationships every-day, making In Relation To much more than a play because the characters are modeled after what we all experience in our family lives and relationships.

The play found its own voice in its realization that family is the foundation of both our defeats and our victories. We are shaped by our birth order and role in our family and this effects how we react to everyone else we come into contact with. Even though I am an only child, I still related to the show and further understood why people behave the way they do. In Relation To succeeds in welcoming you into a family and bringing you back home.

NHL

continued from page 10

The perennially strong Colorado Avalanche lead the Northwest Division, with the Edmonton Oilers in second place just five points back. Joe Sakic leads the Avalanche in scoring, despite only playing in 32 games. When Sakic and Peter Forsberg were injured, it was simply too much to ask of young stars Chris Drury and Milan Hejduk to carry the load, and the Lanche suffered greatly. If everyone stays healthy, and if Patrick Roy and Sandis Ozolinsh improve then plus, this team could give Detroit and St. Louis a run for their money.

The Stars will be the strongest team in the Pacific, assuming the offense gets jumpstarted by the return of Jere Lehtinen, without whom Mike Modano and Brett Hull have been struggling. The defense is still incredibly strong, and the goaltending has given up the second fewest goals in the league.

The Coyotes have shown Khabibulin just how much they missed him by staying step for step with the Stars. Once it was apparent that Khabibulin was not coming back, management went and got Sean Burke from the Panthers to bolster the goaltending. Though Jeremy Roenick is having a decent season, Keith Tkachuk has dipped under one point per game (43 points, 45 games).

As for the rest of the teams in the division, it is a coin toss as to who will make the playoffs. Currently, all but Anaheim would make the cut, but they are only three points from last slot. Russia has it that the Ducks will acquire another quality scorer to support Paul Kariya and Teemu Selanne, but it will take a Disney miracle for this team to have a chance at the Cup. If your favorite team is one of the top few seeds, do not take the first round for granted. Every Red Wing and Devil fan can tell you just how harsh a truth that is.

Matt Brady is a Collegian correspondent.

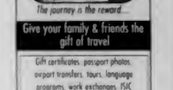
seniors

continued from page 10



Minutewomen this season, Clement is no less part of the family. Competing in the freestyle events this season, Clement who came to UMass from Guam, has held her own amongst the veteran swim team competition. Similar to Crenshaw, Clement made her way to the Minutewomen swimming squad from the water polo team. There she was named co-captain twice and letter-lined three times.

Marci Hupp. No stranger to competition amongst the chlorinated waters is Hupp as she too has competed for both the swimming and water polo teams. Originally from Ohio, Hupp has made some serious waves since joining up with the Minutewomen. Hupp ranks in the top of the 200 and 100 freestyle events and is a record holder in each. Also to her credit, Hupp holds a position in the record books for the 100 fly and was a part of three school record setting relay teams.

No, these seven graduating Minutewomen may not have been a comedic hit or nighttime drama, but they did share the same laughs and hardships together.

They sacrificed to make a great contribution to UMass and the swimming program. Although the series has now come to an end for these women in their UMass swimming careers, they similar to the cast of any long running television show have shared moments that will always tie them together.

IF YOU SEND BRETT MAUSER ROSES, HE WILL LOVE YOU FOREVER AND HELP YOU WRITE SPORTS STORIES

Council Travel
America's Student Travel Leader for over 50 years

The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261
www.counciltravel.com

INTERNATIONAL STUDIES ABROAD
STUDY ABROAD PROGRAMS
Mexico, France, Australia, New Zealand, Spain, Chile, Argentina, Costa Rica
Liz Everson will be on campus to talk to you about study abroad opportunities.
Date: Today, Wednesday, February 9th
Time: 9:00 a.m -2:00 p.m
Place: Student Union
International Studies Abroad
isa@studiesabroad.com
(800) 580-8826
www.studiesabroad.com
isa

Clip & Curl
HAIR, SKIN & NAILS
MASSAGE THERAPY
All hours by appointment
SPECIALIZING IN:
• Swedish • Deep Tissue
• Hydrotherapy • Therapeutic
Full Service Salon featuring Hair Styling • Aveda Facials Nail Services • Massage Therapy 100% Organic Hair Removal
$5 OFF full leg wax or without bikini
Pink Heart 30 min. Massage w/ Paraffin Wax Paraffin Wax Pedicure Hair Shampoo & Blow Dry
Worries Away 60 min. Massage w/ Paraffin Hair Shampoo
Red Heart 30 min. Massage Paraffin Wax Pedicure Hair Shampoo & Blow Dry
RTE. 116, SUNDERLAND • on the bus route • 665-2629 • TUES - FRI: 9-7, SAT: 9-4

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Miller Lite Bottles $2.25
Michelob + Michelob Light Draft $1.75
Rum + Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House, Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY - S&B Productions DJ's Fooz, Cromo, and Unseek
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

Are you a morning person?
Would you like to be able to work each morning before classes start?

Then deliver Collegian papers the job for you
Come down to Rm in the Campus Ce fill out an applic

Valentine's Day is Coming...
Give a special message to the love in your life, friend or crush with a Collegian classifiesd.
Special section in Monday, February 14th issue of the Collegian
1/2 off student rate 10¢ per word, $2.00 min. Spot color free with purchase of heart graphic border.
To purchase stop by the Collegian newsstand next to the UStore
Deadline Thurs., February 10th

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Toyota Celeca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636

'88 Honda Accord for sale. Good condition. Low mileage. $2000 o/bo. Call 253-9195.

1989 Honda Accord LXI Green 4 dr sdn. 181,000 miles. $2300.00. Call 323-4323.

COMPUTERS

GREAT LABTOP DEAL! IBM Thinkpad 560, 40MG RAM, 2 GIG HDD, Pent 133, 12" active color, New, 1 yr wty. $699.00. Ocean Computer 888-496-2326.

EMPLOYMENT

Full time/part time line and prep cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr-$8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Office Assistant Needed. Students needed to work afternoon hours. Must have Win 95/Office 97 experience. Good phone skills. Previous office experience a plus. SALARY $7.00-8.00. Fill out application at Blaisdell House. 545-2842.

Mad Scientists Wanted. Conduct fun, exciting, educational, science activities with kids. After school. High energy. Experience with groups of children. Reliable car. 413-584-7243.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

New Students Program. Public Relations Jobs. Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Office for tour guides, student admissions reps, and summer orientation counselors. Deadline is Feb. 11, 2000.

EMPLOYMENT

Cool Candy Company on bus route in Amherst seeks outgoing phone sales reps. You can work around your classes with our flexible schedule: choose one of two daily shifts(four hours each), minimum of three shifts per week. Shifts are 10am-2pm or 1pm-5pm. Earn up to $10 an hour with base salary plus commission. Requires some sales experience but personality is most important. Don't miss this great opportunity-call Beth right now to set up an interview! 1-888-556-5599.

CAMPAIGN JOBS with the Sierra Club. Full-time and part-time. $300-400/wk. Call Casey 256-6434.

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous customer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. OJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semestar. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rantals Free delivery. 253-9742.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONALS

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. Subdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

FOR SALE

Everyone has the right to be safe. Simple And Fast Effective Techniques Company is dedicated to keeping you, and the ones that you care about as protected as possible. One OPTION that we provide is the OC Alternative. OC is a chemical that is more powerful than mace and is not an irritant like pepper-spray but an inflammatory agent. The instant inflamation of the breathing tubes, caused by the spray, cuts off all breathing except what is necessary to sustain life. Because it is an inflammatory rather than an irritant, OC effective against all of those who feel no pain, such as individuals on alcohol or drugs. The spray disables your attacker for 30-45 minutes and leaves a UV dye on your assailant for easy identification by the police. We are making the OC spray available in a keychain or pen form. The pen does not write but...it may save your life. Check for our other OPTIONS in this newspaper. If you are ready to make a wise, sound and inexpensive investment into the PROTECTION of yourself and your loved ones, then send a check, cash or money order amount of $11.95 for the keychain or $9.95 for the pen to: Sensei David Seerung, AIKIOO SCHOOL OF SELF DEFENSE (518) 237-0775, 24 George St. Cohoes, NY 12047. Please include $3.00 for shipping and handling. There is also a 15 day money back guarantee on all of our products. Please feel free to check out these OC products or any of our other products at www.securityplusprofit.com/RN11112.htm

FOR SALE

Study, partying...violent sexual assaults. Unfortunately rapes are becoming far too common on our college campuses. The statistics are horrific. The silence regarding these crimes is one of the rapist's strongest weapons. The Safe-T company(Simple And Fast Effective-Techniques) is presenting a video that specifically targets defenses for female students and educators. The escape/evasion techniques demonstrated within our video do not take years of practice but were chosen for their simplicity and effectiveness. We cover areas of defense overlooked by many in our industry such as date rape evasion and escape from various grips and holds. What we are offering you and your loved ones are the tools to keep you safe and lessen your fear of harm. The price of the video is being offered at an incredibly low price of $19.95. Also included in the price of your tape is a free pass that will be honored at one of our upcoming Safe-T seminars. Those who train survive. Please send check or money order to: Sensei David Seerung, Aikido School of Self-Defense, 24 George St. Cohoes, Ny 12047. (518)237-0775. Please include $4.00 for shipping and handling.

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

Double papasan sofa $125. Good condition. Paid $300+ new. 665-0589.

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom in 2 bedroom apt looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker 3/4 mi from campus. Effective immediately. Call Alissa 253-4275.

ROOM FOR RENT

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now: 549-5946.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Nice Place easy living. $380/mo. Call Kevin 397-9903.

SERVICES

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419, free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Volunteers Needed. Are you looking to do community service? For more info call Alpha Phi Omega 545-2068.

Used rap and r&b cds, magazines too. Want to buy or trade. 549-1371.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

College is over today!! Call us here at 545-3500 Don't forget Valentine's Day is coming up!

Five College Community Calendar

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 9

Support – The Fluency Support Group will meet at 7 p.m. in Arnold House room 11. Contact Lisa at 577-4025 for more information.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 3 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – All graduating undergraduate seniors are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker. The deadline is Feb. 9. Call 545-3464 for more information.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Support – AL-ANON and ALA-TEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Help – Women who have been sexually and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALA-TEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel	28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WCVB & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
14	International	33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 9, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Greeks: Crucible of Civilization (In Stereo) (C					State of Stele	Ella Fitzgerald-Something
WFSB	3	News (C	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	City of Angels (In Stereo) (C		"A Vision of Murder: The Story of Donielle" (2000) Melissa Gilbert,		News (C	Late Show (C
WBZ	4	News (C	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	City of Angels (In Stereo) (C			"A Vision of Murder: The Story of Donielle" (2000) Melissa Gilbert,		News (C	Late Show (C
WCVB	5	News (C	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (C	Two Guys-Girl (Norm (C		Drew Carey (C	Spin City (C	20/20 (C	News (C	Nightline (C
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends (C	Nanny (C	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) (C		Roswell "Blind Date" (In Stereo)		News (C	Friends (C	Nanny (C
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C	Dateline (In Stereo) (C		West Wing (In Stereo) (C		Law & Order "Mother's Milk" (C		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Jim Calhoun	College Basketball: Boston College at Connecticut. (Live)				Post Game	News	Real TV (R) (C	College Basketball (R)
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (C	Ent. Tonight	Dateline (In Stereo) (C		West Wing (In Stereo) (C		Law & Order "Mother's Milk" (C		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons (C	Simpsons (C	Seinfeld (C	Friends (C	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Sitcom Scandals 3		News		Frasier (C	Frasier (C
WWLP	22	News (C	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C	Dateline (In Stereo) (C		West Wing (In Stereo) (C		Law & Order "Mother's Milk" (C		News (C	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (C		Greeks: Crucible of Civilization (In Stereo) (C					Bingo Game	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (C
WGGB	28	News (C	ABC News	Seinfeld (C	Frasier (C	Two Guys-Girl (Norm (C		Drew Carey (C	Spin City (C	20/20 (C	News (C	Nightline (C
WSBK		Judge Judy (C	Judge Judy (C	Seinfeld (C	Frasier (C	7 Days "Buried Alive" (C		Star Trek: Voyager "Flashback"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS		Roseanne (C	Roseanne (C	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder		WCW Thunder		Ripley's Believe It or Not! (R)
A&E		L.A. Law "The Brothers Grim"		Law & Order "Wager" (C		Biography "George Reeves" (C		Investigative Reports (R		American Justice (R) (C		Law & Order "Ritual" (C
CNN	22	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (C		Crossfire (C	World Today (C		Larry King Live (R		Newsstand (C		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	30	Saturday Night Live (C		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	★★★ "Married to the Mob" (1988, Comedy) Michelle Pfeiffer,				South Park (C	Man Show (C	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Jackal		On the Inside "Call 911"		How to Survive: Will to Live		How to Survive		On the Inside "Call 911" (R)
ESPN		Sportscenter (C		College Basketball: North Carolina at North Carolina State. (Live)				College Basketball: Seton Hall at Rutgers. (Live)				Sportscenter (C
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) (C		"Sweet Dreams" (1996, Drama) Tiffani-Amber Thiessen,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV		MTV Jams (In Stereo)		Lyricist		Snowed in (In Stereo)				Road Rules	True Life "I'm on the Meth Trail"	Undressed (R)	Loveline (R)
NICK		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (C	Rugrats (C	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Rev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons (C	M.T. Moore	Newhart (C
SCIFI		Sliders (In Stereo) (C		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Poltergeist: The Legacy (C
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	Trauma Center		Extreme Machines (R)		Secrets of Forensic Science		Secrets of Forensic Science		Extreme Machines (R)
TNT		In the Heat of the Night (C		ER "Sharp Relief" (In Stereo) (C		★★½ "The Hard Way" (1991, Comedy) Michael J. Fox, James Woods,				★★½ "Shakedown" (1988, Drama)		Peter Weller,
USA		Baywatch "Fire With Fire" (R		JAG "People vs. Rider" (C		Walker, Texas Ranger (C				★★½ "Fresh and Bone" (1993, Drama) Dennis Quaid, Meg Ryan. (In Stereo) (C		Texas Ranger
HBO		(5:30) ★½ "Simply Irresistible"		★★★ "A Lesson Before Dying" (1999) Don Cheadle. PG-13 (C				Sopranos "Commendatori" (C		Oz "Capital P" (R) (In Stereo) (C		D.L. Hughley: Going Home (C
MAX		(4:45)	★★½ "My Father, the Hero" (1994, Comedy) PG			★★★★ "Tootsie" (1982, Comedy) Dustin Hoffman. PG (C				★½ "The Killer Eye" (1996) R		Second Skin	Hot Line (R)
SHOW		★★½ "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" (1985) Pee-wee Herman. PG				★★★ "Tomorrow Never Dies" (1997) Pierce Brosnan. PG-13 (C				★ "Whatever It Takes" (1999) Andrew Dice Clay.		Beggars

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

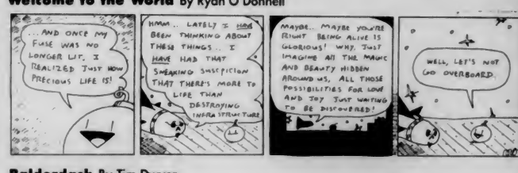
Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

PC and Pixel By Thach Bui

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This is a good day to watch the world go by, but before you find a suitable perch you must be sure that you've tended to your own duties.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – How someone close to you goes about his or her business is sure to teach you something important about how you go about your own. Watch and learn!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may be gravitating toward someone who knows just how to push your buttons. What you'll get in the end may be an unpleasant surprise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may be tempted at this time to do something you've resisted all your life. Whether you do it or not depends upon how you see yourself right now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You have been ignorant for far too long of what is right beside you. An opportunity is about to pass you by – again! Don't let it!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The promise received yesterday is sure to be kept today, but it may be in a way that surprises you to the core. Be ready for anything!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A current situation will remind you of past good times spent with a close friend. Savor this memory today and enjoy the day.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – What you are doing at this time is not pleasing you, though it may be paying the bills. Surely, you can combine profit and pleasure!

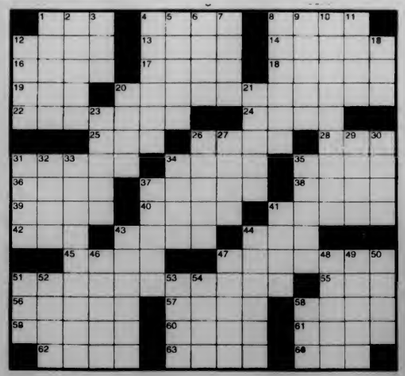
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It's a good day to resume work on a project that seemed to fizzle out not too long ago. Today, the chances for real progress are considerable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You are likely to inspire rather heated feelings in one who is usually quite reserved. This will surprise everyone concerned, to be sure!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You have a way about you which is sure to attract just the right kind of attention today, and at just the right time, too!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You want to live more impulsively at this time. There's no reason to think that you can't have a little more adventure in your life.

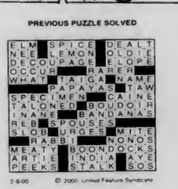
Quote of the Day



"I got stopped by a cop the other day. He said, 'Why'd you run that stop sign?' I said, 'Because I don't believe everything I read.'"

–Stephen Wright

MONKEY BOX BY PBJ



"I READ IT FOR THE ARTICLES. HONESTLY!"

ACROSS
1 Haze
4 Caboose's place
8 Parson's word
12 Gambling town
13 Earthenware jar
14 Brief film role
16 Addleonarly
17 Shoe part
18 Snake-charmer's partner
19 Foot part
20 Explodes
22 Wrap around
24 Sale disclaimer
25 Work unit
26 Fastens up
28 Baste
31 Soup dipper
34 Henhouse
35 Scrabble piece
36 Flock members
37 Like a sick child's nose
38 "Lonely Boy" singer
39 Every
40 Brewery products
41 Bogger
42 Ham on –
43 Emulates Meryl Streep
44 Circuit
45 Skin an apple
47 Losses
51 Advantageous position
55 Hoover, e g
56 Tijuana goodbye
57 Egg yellow
58 Honolulu's island
59 Musical show
60 Icicle site
61 Air pollution
62 New Jersey team
63 Went 95 mph
64 Function

DOWN
1 Criminal
2 Beginning
3 Mod — gar pan
4 Wandering
5 Delight
6 Charity donations
7 Absorbed
8 Type of road
9 New Zealander
10 Decorating leather
11 Infamous fiddler
12 Evaluate
15 Clumsy one
20 Employ
21 Cheerful
23 — corgi
26 Areas
27 Charged bits
29 Sommer of films
30 Have on 31 Sly look
32 Not at home
33 Misleading
34 Sect
35 Hosiery shade
37 Al Unser, e g
41 Weapon handle
43 Develops
44 Oozed out
46 Concerning
47 Dig into
48 Sandler and Smith
49 Lake in Nevada
50 Complacent
51 Volvo, e g
52 Yemeni city
53 Pre-Easter buys
54 Kind of opera
58 Buckeyes' sch

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-9-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kathleen Rolls
Photo Technician	Teresa Canino-Rivera
Copy Editor	Mary Grein
Production Supervisor	Joylyn Lombard
Production Staff	Roberto Delgado, Melanie Thomas

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's Largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 12 | Thursday, February 10, 2000

As Beast of East, Devils could end up singing Blues

With the NHL All-Star Game having taken place this past weekend, the majority of hockey writers worldwide will be attempting to predict what will happen in the coming months. And, since I am markedly unoriginal, here are my forecasts for the second half of the season.

The New Jersey Devils lead the Eastern Conference and the NHL with 75 points at the mid-season break. Sound familiar? It should. The Devils have seen themselves in positions similar to this one since winning the Cup back in the 1994-1995 season.

Matt Brady on the NHL

However, the past few years the Devils have been a complete letdown in the playoffs, losing each of the last two seasons to No. 8 seeds; last season to Pittsburgh and two seasons ago to Ottawa. Don't expect them to lose in the first round this season; this team is the hottest in hockey, having gone 14-3-2 in its last 19 games.

The Devils have been tremendous underachievers this season, despite the fact that Mark Recchi is having a stellar season. This team missed captain Eric Lindros severely when he was out with an injury, but has played much better hockey since his return. The acquisition of Keith Primeau gives the Devils another physical two-way player, but it probably won't be enough to vault the Devils into Cup contention.

The Toronto Maple Leafs lead the Northeast division by eight points over the second place Senators, and appear to be a solid squad. Curtis Joseph is one of the best goalies in the league and Bryan Berard anchors a talented defense. Mats Sundin still is a steady offensive force, but who knows how long Steve Thomas will continue to help him for.

This team has only been playing .500 hockey as of late, so the verdict is still out on them. Ottawa should still come on strong in the second half, and truly any team can win this division aside from the Canadiens. That's right, the once-mighty Canadiens are in last and are there to stay. The Florida Panthers continue to lead the weakest division in hockey, the Southeast. Despite a strong start, the Panthers have had problems as of late, but this is the strongest club the team has had since it went to the Stanley Cup finals in 1996.

The team has one of the league's most underrated defensemen in Robert Svehla, and the offense is fronted by the electrifying Pavel Bure. This team will get a much-needed boost when starting goaltender Trevor Kidd returns from a fractured right shoulder in a couple of weeks. They should get a challenge from the upstart Washington Capitals for the division title.

The Western Conference is dominated by the Central Division, which has two of the top three teams in the NHL. The Detroit Red Wings were the most dominant team in hockey last decade, and yet again will challenge for the Stanley Cup title. Steve Yzerman, Brendan Shanahan, Chris Chelios, Nicklas Lidstrom, Sergei Fedorov, Chris Osgood...the list goes on and on.

This team will be a Cup contender until the management decides to stop shelling out the cash to pay all of its superstars. Don't be a bit surprised if the championship goes back to the Motor City yet again this year. A home-and-home series with the division-leading Blues this week will be key for the confidence of both squads. As for the Blues, they received terrible news when they learned that leading scorer Pierre Turgeon will be out for the next 6 to 8 weeks with torn thumb ligaments.

No problem. Well, maybe "no problem" is a slight understatement, but this team is incredibly strong and deep. The day after Turgeon was injured, Al MacInnis returned to action after missing several contests with a collapsed lung. He and Chris Pronger combine to make the best two-defenseman combo in the NHL. The Blues have gotten strong play out of the "Czeching" line of Pavol Demitra, Michal Handzus, and Lubos Bartecko, possess the veteran leadership of Stephane Richer and Scott Young, and even contain the youthful talent of Marty Reasoner and Jochen Hecht among others.

Oh, and I forgot to mention that with Dominik Hasek retiring at season's end and Nikolai Khabibulin still holding out, the Blues can lay claim to having the best goalie from outside North America in Roman Turek. His numbers? Try 27-11-5 with a 2.04 GAA and a .909 save percentage.

Though the Blues may falter slightly in Turgeon's absence, they will still be a force in the West, and he will return well in time for the playoffs. Remember, this is the team that took Dallas to overtime four times in six games in the second round of last year's playoffs. Watch out for these guys; the Rams might not be the only team bringing a title to St. Louis this year.

Turn to NHL, page 7

Seniors prepare to bid UMass adieu

By Matt Cracker
Collegian Staff

Maybe not as recognizable as the members of the hit television show Seinfeld or as familiar as actors staring on Beverly Hills 90210, which will come to an end this upcoming season, are the seven seniors of the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team that recently completed their final season of competition at UMass.

This cast of characters helped the Minutewomen to a 7-4 regular season record this year, not to mention a first place finish in the Rhode Island Invitational Swimming Tournament.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Elizabeth Risotto, with fellow seniors from the women's swimming and diving team, approaches the end of four years of service.

Their abilities combined with the talents of their other teammates elevated the UMass "Women-of-the-Water" to a high level of success. They could contend with a range of competition.

And the women excelled individually to accomplish personal bests in their field. Each member contributed both athletically and personally to UMass during their time with the Minutewomen.

Meet the members of the senior class of 2000 UMass women's swimming and diving team.

Andrea Spencer: One of the wet Maroon and White's tri-captains this season, Spencer competed in both the fly and I. M. events. She currently holds the school record in the 200-yard I.M. and has clocked in as one of the fastest Minutewomen in school history for the 100 butterfly, the 50 freestyle, the 400 I.M., and 100 freestyle.

Lia Lansky: Lansky joins Spencer as the second member of the tri-captains that lead the Minutewomen swimming squad. Hailing from Memphis, Tenn., Lansky has been with the Minutewomen since her freshman year and swam in both the fly and freestyle events this season. Lansky also falls into the UMass record books as having some of the fastest times in the 200 fly, 400 I.M., and 100 fly.

"The most worthwhile moment, there were so many, is probably just being around the team. They are like my second family," said Lansky when asked to comment on some of her experiences with the Minutewomen. "Swimming is a part of it, but it is not the whole thing."

Tricia Argentina: Another member of the Minutewomen, the New York native's strength lies in the longer distance events. Argentina swam the fly event this year and owns the team's best time in the 200 fly last season.

Elizabeth Risoto: Also joining the team from New York, Risotto has been a major force for the Minutewomen in the backstroke events this season. Risoto garnered many points for the UMass cause this season, performing incredibly and often winning the 200 backstroke. Grouped amongst the strongest women swimmers at UMass, Risotto has a position in the record books for both 100 and 200 backstroke, the 200 I.M., and as a part of the standard setting 200 and 400 relay teams from last season. However, this season has not been much different for Risotto, who has come up big in almost all her appearances with the Minutewomen.

Lyndsay Crenshaw: Joining the Minutewomen from California, Crenshaw crossed the chlorinated waters of many pools this season in the freestyle and backstroke events. While doing double duty as a member of the University of Massachusetts women's water polo team, Crenshaw is ranked with the best overall performances in the 200 and 100 backstroke events.

"The most memorable thing about being on the team was definitely the girls and everyone I swam with, I had a lot of good friendships," said Crenshaw when asked about her memories from being with the Minutewomen. "I will miss it, but it is definitely time to leave. I got my four years and I have no regrets."

Claudia Clement: Although only becoming a member of the Turn to SENIORS, page 7

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Lia Lansky is one of seven seniors winding down her regular-season collegiate career with the UMass women's swimming and diving team.

It's test-taking time for UM

Are the Minutemen up for the A-10 obstacle?

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

It could happen.

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team (11-10, 3-3 Atlantic 10), it is numerically possible to take over No. 19 Temple for the A-10 East title before heading into the conference championships one month from now.

How?

With eight games left in the regular season schedule, all against teams in the conference, UMass has the capabilities to piece together a fine end-of-the-season run and jockey for a better position to capture the conference title. That title equals an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament.

It can all begin tonight when the Minutemen take the floor at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center against a very weak La Salle squad. The Explorers are nestled at the bottom of the A-10 West with a record of 8-11 and 2-6 in conference play.

The Minutemen, are set in fair conditions within the conference race. One of just four teams with winning conference records, Temple (16-4, 9-1 A-10), St. Bonaventure (13-8, 5-3 A-10) and the only western representative, Dayton (17-4, 7-2 A-10), UMass must hope that Temple tumbles off its perch during this final stretch. Though the Minutemen freefell in last week's match up with the Owls, 75-48, they still have one more shot at Temple on Feb. 26.

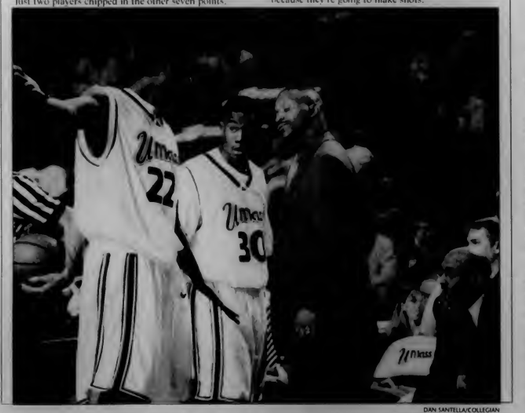
"Fordham did us a favor by knocking off St. Bonaventure [this weekend]," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "There's only four teams in the league with winning records and we're one of them.

"I asked them, 'What do you want to do? Do you want to sit at home like you did last year during the postseason or do you want to play?'" Flint continued.

UMass' record has baffled more than just the Minutemen.

"Their record, you know – I don't understand it myself," said Texas' Gabe Muoneke in reference to the confusing record of UMass. "They've got a lot of good weapons."

Coming off the one of the best halves of the season against then-No. 16 Texas on Saturday, the Minutemen turned around the lowest scoring half of the school's history, 16 points, and shot 51.6 percent from the floor in the second half. After shooting a paltry 2-for-11 from three-point land in the earlier half, UMass reinvented itself, nailing six of its 12 attempts. Still, 50 of Massachusetts' 57 points were earned by three players, just two players chipped in the other seven points.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Chris Kirkland, senior forward and inspirational leader of the men's hoop team, takes a rare moment away from the action for reflection during UMass' most recent loss to Texas. His Minutemen host La Salle tonight.

"We've just got to make shots," said Flint. "Sometimes, we get so tentative that guys don't want to miss, and when you don't want to miss, that's when you make mistakes."

The Explorers have three main scorers in their sporadic offense that compensates for their lack of defense. Senior guard Donnie Carr led La Salle in almost all categories last year including points (18.7 ppg), assists, threes and minutes played. Rasual Butler, who tacked on 15 points in a recent victory over Virginia Tech, and Victor Thomas are the three main offensive weapons.

"They've got three guys on their team who can score 35-40 points a game in a heartbeat," said Flint. "So it's going to be a big game on the defensive end because they're going to make shots."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Bruiser Flint (right) may not have as much talent as he's enjoyed in years past, but he gets the most out of hard-working players like Chris Kirkland (left) and Shannon Crooks (center).

Three UM rookie athletes receive conference award

Three members of UMass athletic teams were each honored for outstanding accomplishments as the Atlantic 10 Rookies-of-the-Week for their respective sports for the week ending February 6.

Freshman Katie Teft of the women's gymnastics team was selected for the second time this season.

Teft placed third in the all-around against No. 17 West Virginia and Radford last week-end with a score of 39.075, tying the fourth-best mark all-time at UMass in the event. In addition, she finished second on the uneven bars with a 9.850 and ranked third on the balance beam with a 9.800. She earned a career-high 9.725 on the vault to place sixth in the event.

"The addition of Katie to our program has been a pleasant surprise," coach Dave Kuzara said in a press release.

"And not just because of her gymnastic ability, but because of the kind of person she is; the team player she is. I'm glad she has been able to achieve so much early on."

The Minutewomen are currently 4-4 and will host No. 8 Penn State on Feb. 12 at 4 p.m. in Boyden Gymnasium.

From the women's swimming and diving team, freshman Kate Allery was designated for the award for the first time this season.

Allery earned a first place finish as the Minutewomen defeated Fordham, 210-86, last Saturday. She recorded a first-place score of 264.75 in the three-meter diving and 217.05 in the one-meter dive for third. Allery's best three-meter diving score (266.80) set the school record Nov. 13.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kate Allery

Minutewomen will next play on Feb. 17, when it travels to Buffalo, NY to begin the Atlantic 10 Swimming and Diving Championships. The event runs through Feb. 19.

And for the men's swimming and diving squad, freshman Tommy Keane enjoyed a solid week for his first rookie accolade.

Keane earned a first and second place finish as UMass topped Fordham, 198-98, last Saturday. He recorded a first-place time of 4:41.98 in the 500-yard freestyle, and posted a 1:46.23 in the 200-yard freestyle for second place. His time in the 500-yard freestyle is the fastest on the team this season. Keane is also ranked third, overall, in the A-10 standings.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Tommy Keane

The Minutemen will also next play on Feb. 17, when it travels to Buffalo, NY to begin the Atlantic 10 Swimming and Diving Tournament. The event runs through Feb. 19.

– Collegian Staff

Derrick Thomas, 33, dies in hospital

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

For the second time this year, the world of professional sports has endured the death of two likeable athletes as the result of auto accidents.

While Charlotte Hornets guard Bobby Phills met his death instantly, Kansas City Chiefs Pro-Bowl linebacker Derrick Thomas, 33, died yesterday from heart failure that doctors believe to be the result of a clot, Espn.com reported. Thomas' death comes 16 days after he crashed his car on an icy road on his way to a flight for NFC Championship Game.

Thomas suffered paralysis from the neck down as a result of the accident, and according to his doctor, his fatal cardio-respiratory arrest was also a result of the injury, espn.com reported.

The website also described the details of his death while he was undergoing rehabilitation at Miami's Jackson Memorial Hospital.

The site reads: "While being transferred from his bed to a wheelchair, he uttered something to his mother and his eyes rolled back, said Dr. Frank Eismont, a hospital neurosurgeon."

Espn.com indicated that numerous resuscitation attempts were made to revive Thomas before he was pronounced dead at 10:10 a.m. ET. The same source also printed a statement issued by Chiefs' president Carl Peterson:

"It's a devastating tragedy to the Kansas City Chiefs family, the people of Kansas City, the fans of the National Football League and to me personally. Derrick Thomas has been such an important part of the Chiefs family for the past 11 years.

"He has done so much for this team and our city during his time with us. He had so much love for the game, for his teammates and for our town," Peterson continued. "Our prayers go out to Derrick's family, to his fellow teammates and to our fans who knew Derrick. A light has gone out."

Two other people were also in the car with Thomas at the time of the crash. According to police, both Thomas and the other casualty of the accident, Michael Tellis, 49, were not wearing their seat belts, Espn.com reported. Tellis was killed instantly and a third passenger, who was wearing his seat belt, was treated and released.

Members of the team, from teammates to coaches, expressed their sadness to the media yesterday during a press conference.

Dental Clinic gets drilled

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Debate regarding the elimination of the Dental Clinic, a subsidiary of the University Health Services, continues to rage on campus.

The announcement to close the clinic came about two weeks ago, when employees were informed that the department had incurred losses of approximately $260,000 during the past year.

According to a statement made by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos, the service is being eliminated due to both losses and to the new plan for reduction of student health care fees. Cevallos explained that the campus is proposing to the University Board of Trustees that the student health fees be reduced by 10 percent in the coming year with a targeted reduction in the basic health fee of roughly 33 percent.

The clinic, which is currently being offered as a service to students on campus, has a staff of seven full time employees. The staff includes two dentists, two hygienists, two dental assistants, and one office manager all of whom could face the potential loss of individual positions.

Barbara Pitoniak, a representative of the News Office commented that these current employees "will in effect lose their jobs." She went on to say that the University would make every attempt to locate new positions for them.

An administrator from the Dental Clinic, who declined to give her name due to the fact that she feared that she would not get job placement help from the University, also expressed concern for the jobs of those in the department.

"We were told that we are going to be placed in positions, we have nothing in writing and we were told that we were closing as of July 1," she said.

She explained that the Clinic felt that the University did not take their suggestions seriously regarding other options for the future of the Clinic.

"This is the first time that we have seen these new costs in front of us," she explained. "I feel that we have offered solutions to the administration and they have been totally ignored."

The Clinic currently sees about 7,500 students per year and offers them a vast array of dental services. According to the Dental Clinic representative, the office typically sees 16 students per day for dental care treatment. In addition, they also remain open for an hour in the morning and in the afternoon each day that they dedicate to dental emergencies.

"We have no idea where the students will go," she said.

Currently, members of the Clinic intend upon fighting to keep the services available to students on campus.

"We are in the middle of writing a proposal," she said. "We are definitely trying to fight for this."

BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN

It was announced two weeks ago that the Dental Clinic within the University Health Services will be eliminated as of July first. The clinic, which sees about 7,500 students a year, is being closed due to both losses and to the new plan for reduction of student health care fees.

SGA makes training a top priority, addresses security

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) passed two motions last night that would increase training of both judicial officials and residence life employees.

At its regular meeting, the Senate enacted two motions that would require judicial advisors, resident assistants, resident directors and assistant resident directors at least one hour of rape and sexual assault sensitivity training given by the Everywoman's Center. This training session would be in addition to any other training that these employees already receive.

The reason behind the motions, author Chair Worcester said was "to make sure everyone received training from someone who is a professional in the field."

Student Trustee Seth Avakian said, "I'd like to have this done for every student, but this is a place to start."

He went on to say he believes there is a need for greater sensitivity to issues surrounding rape and sexual assault and that this was the first step. "We are taking a step forward, we the SGA recognizes this is a problem and this [motion] is a possible solution."

Although at first some senators believed the professional training from the Everywoman's Center should replace the already existing training, by nights end it was agreed that the motion was pro-student and should remain as an additional requirement.

Both Avakian and President Jeff Howe voiced their concerns on the reported assaults this past weekend, stressing that unfortunately they are not unusual.

"The most important thing is that they are not new, but now they are coming across," Howe said. "We need to keep the dialogue open."

Also regarding campus safety, the SGA passed a motion that would allow student security staff to receive additional housing seniority points for every full semester spent working for security. It was said by Senator Laubinger that the job is important, but unappealing to students because of how they are treated, in particular speaking of low wages.

"I feel the job is crucial to the safety of the community," Senator Laubinger said. "This would be a way to not only recruit, but keep security staff."

Other issues on the agenda last night included a motion that Senator Zeltve originally said he wrote after reading an editorial regarding UMass students and social security numbers. The motion resolved that the incoming class of Fall 2000 should be made aware they have the option to receive a randomly generated number instead of their social security number.

It was explained by Zeltve that by using these numbers students are put at a serious security risk. The motion concluded by stating, as well as being made aware of their choice, the incoming class should be educated on identity theft.

In addition, Howe expressed his dissatisfaction with the lack of contact the Senate received from Housing before releasing a memo to all Registered Student Organizations stating they must cease advertising on Residence Halls without meeting certain standards. Howe said he felt this was a violation of first amendment rights and has requested that housing review their decision.

Also passed last night were allocations of money to both the Casa Dominicana and Boricuas Unidos group. Both were given slightly over $1,000 in order to fund upcoming events being sponsored by the groups.

The better half of the meeting was spent discussing and appointing new senators to the previously 49 member Senate. According to the Speaker of the Senate, Mikale Billard, the Senate had lost quite a large number of its senators between semesters. Last night, two new commuter seats were filled as well as one in Webster and John Quincy Adams dorms.

President to lecture on freedom

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President William M. Bulger will present a seminar and lecture series on freedom and education titled, "Freedom and Education in the Classical World," today from 7-8:30 p.m. in Room 163 of the Campus Center.

Bulger's lecture is part of the John Templeton Seminar and Lectures on Freedom and Education. The effort is funded by a $500,000 grant from the John Templeton Foundation with support from the departments of political science and economics. Jeffrey Sedgwick and economics professor Robert Costrell conduct the lecture series.

Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Cora B. Marrett said the University is honored to be hosting this seminar and lecture series.

"A seminar on freedom and higher education is most appropriate in Massachusetts, a commonwealth widely known for its role in advancing both," Marrett said. "The University is gratified to have been chosen by the Templeton Foundation as the site for this important activity."

The honors seminar will cover a wide range of materials including Plato, to Plutarch, Rousseau, Thomas Jefferson and Horace Mann, right up to the contemporary period.

There will also be discussions, analysis and research into the current debates over charter schools, home schooling, school choice and competency testing. As part of their coursework, students will conduct research into results from the first rounds of the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) tests now required in the state's public schools.

William M. Bulger President of UMass

Bulger's lecture will be the first of four during the semester. On Feb. 29, James Peyser, chairman of the state Board of Education and Stephen Gorrie, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, will debate the issue of school choice and charter schools. On March 30, Abigail Thernstrom from the state Board of Education and Ronald Ferguson from Harvard University will discuss the test-score gap between black and white students. On May 4, the final lecture will feature author and educational historian Diane Ravitch discussing "Education and Democracy."

The seminar and lecture series are designed to answer basic questions about the meaning of freedom, a core value in our society, according to a News Office press release. All the lectures are free and open to the public.

"All That Jazz" to soothe SU Ballroom

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Soulful vibes will fill the Student Union Ballroom tonight as the Black Student Union hosts, "All That Jazz," starting at 7 p.m. The evening, which will include performances, food and games, is a part of a series of events to honor Black History month.

The majority of the event will consist of musical performances, in an effort to not only entertain, but also educate according to Melissa Straughn, the co-event coordinator.

"We are always trying to educate the audience," Straughn said.

The group felt that focusing on the musical side of its culture was important and would make for an enjoyable evening, according to Straughn. She went on to explain that the evening was designed as a sort of timeline of black music, incorporating all eras from jazz to hip-hop.

The evening will start from the beginning with African Roots and move through Negro Spirituals, Harlem Renaissance works, Motown sounds, and Civil Rights pieces. Some individual performers for the night will include Neg and Negresse Kreol, Flava Unit, singer Dinora, poet Rachel Jean-Marie, Boundaries, vocalists SOS and Khalid from "Bring in the Da Noise, Bring in Da Funk."

"This year we [the Black Student

Turn to JAZZ, page 2

UMass professor warns of toxin hazards

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

According to Dr. Tom Zoeller, associate professor of the University of Massachusetts Biology department, recent studies show that based on the foods people eat, they may already be contaminated with certain toxins that could affect brain development.

These toxins come in the chemical molecular form of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB's). What makes this toxin dangerous, Zoeller explained, is that they are indestructible molecules that are fat soluble and can dissolve in most people's fat cells and remain in there for large periods of time.

Zoeller said that the source of the PCB contamination in cells is the result of carelessness by many manufacturers in disposing waste. He said the result is the contamination of ground soil, the same soil that most farmers use to plant crops.

According to Zoeller, he most recently read an article about contaminants in people who grow their food, instead of buying hydroponic foods, vegetables grown in green houses with minimum use of soil. Zoeller said.

"People are exposed to PCB's in the food, so it depends on what you eat," Zoeller said. "It's known that we're all contaminated with PCB's."

However, Zoeller said the problem isn't only limited to plant-grown products. In fact, there are national studies taking place on PCB's in people who eat fish, Zoeller stated.

"It bio-accumulates up the food chain," Zoeller said. "A fish might eat an insect who ate a plant with PCB."

As a result, Zoeller said almost everyone is contaminated to some degree with PCB and may not know it because the effect may not be physically detectable. This poses a problem during their studies because they cannot physically link the toxin to the neurological deficit it causes.

According to Zoeller, one of the main reasons for this is there are many chemical structures for the PCB molecule that lead to different behavior properties that, in turn, lead to a variety of neurological deficits.

PCB's effect on the thyroid hormone has been determined to be the cause in the different rates of brain development, Zoeller said.

"Our lab is really the first to look at PCB action on the role of the thyroid hormone to modify brain development," Zoeller said. "There are certain PCB's that look to the body like thyroid hormone."

The thyroid hormone regulates brain development in a process that acts like a switch, turning the gene expression of brain development on and off. According to Zoeller, because certain PCB's can take the shape and form of these hormones, sometimes the cells will take up the PCB toxins instead of the hormones, and cause deficiencies in the brain development that could lead to attention deficit disorders.

However, Zoeller commented that once PCB's enter the body, they become stored in fat cells. During milk production, the PCB's can become concentrated with the milk, but Zoeller said this could pose problems to breastfeeding infants.

"A woman who is lactating today

Turn to SCIENCE, page 2

UMass students to get feet wet in school Entrepreneur program

By Heather Palmer
Collegian Correspondent

Students will have the opportunity to win $10,000 and gain the experience and skills needed to develop their own business today. The University of Massachusetts and five area colleges will launch its own Entrepreneur program at 5:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

The program is open to all students and will be moderated by James Theroux, the Flavin Professor of Entrepreneurship at the University's Isenberg School of Management. The guest speaker for today's event is UMass alumnus Jeff Taylor, CEO and founder of Monster.com.

The program is designed to bring teams of students together with alumni, mentors and faculty for a series of practical seminars on the skills needed to start a business. Both Graduate and Undergraduate students are welcome to join the club, according to Jannie Chernoff, director of economic development at UMass.

Students will team up to write business plans and submit them for final competition in May. At that time a panel of judges, including alumni members and Venture capitalist will award the $10,000 prize.

Turn to ENTRECLUB page 2

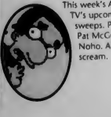
EXTENDED FORECAST

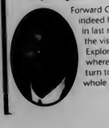
Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 27	HIGH: 43 LOW: 25	HIGH: 32 LOW: 17



Shooting from the Hip

Our own Kathleen Ralls takes a sobering look at the unfortunate plight of Apparel Marketing majors in today's Ed / Op section. She took the time to write it, so READ IT!

PAGE 4



Clean Sweeps

This week's Arts cover looks at TV's upcoming February sweeps. Plus, read about Pat McGee's latest trip to Noho. Arts: we're a scream.

PAGE 5

Welcome to the Jungle

Forward Chris Kirkland did indeed have fun and games in last night's plastering of the visiting La Salle Explorers. And you'll know where you are when you turn to Sports for the whole scoop.

PAGE 16

Arts & Living 5
Comics 15
Crossword 15
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 16

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

science

continued from page 1

ll be giving her child PCB's that the mother has [stored her fat cells] for years," Zoeller said. "Studies show that the mount of PCB in mother's milk does affect the brain developent of infant, but the magnitude of the effect is less than the nefit of breastfeeding."

Unfortunately, Zoeller said there is no way to measure how uch PCB might be in the mother's milk because there isn't ough information on the science of PCB's. According to him, would cost close to several hundred dollars to be tested for B at the current time.

"We don't have enough evidence because the level of contanation is dependent on what we eat and where we get the d," Zoeller said. "The magnitude of the effect should map to ose environmental areas that are highly contaminated."

Scientists are also still trying to find what parts of the brain e being affected by PCB's, Zoeller said. He indicated that peoaffected by PCB's might not necessarily know it. However, said signs include boredom or inattentiveness.

"You may just tell yourself that you're bored a lot or have no pulse control," Zoeller said. "There are a lot of ways to look at ention deficit. It's a difficult issue to completely understand."

jazz

continued from page 1

Union] wanted a theme to celebrate black history month," Straughn said. "We believe music is very much a part of who we are and a part of our culture."

Nakan Hodjat, activities coordinator said the structure of the event is designed to engage the audience. He explained the Black Student Union was focused on continuing to educate the community, but realized that many don't like to be lectured in addition to their classes.

"The times have changed, and we're trying to change with those times. It seems people have shorter attention spans although education is always our motive," Hodjat said.

This is the second annual year the event will be held at the University of Massachusetts, although last year was more freestyle. The changes made to this year's event include tables at which games will be able to be played. The games will include dominoes, spades, chess and checkers. In addition Straughn said participation with the audience will be increased.

The entire event will be hosted by Remon Jourdan of Nostalgia and will include an after party starting at 10 p.m. Hodjat encouraged all to come and enjoy the evening, saying that it was the mission of the Black Student Union to educate and entertain the entire campus community.

Attention Photographers!

There will be a mandatory meeting on Sunday at 5 PM in the newsroom.

Be there....or else.

Gauging Votes in new S. Carolina

By David Von Drehle
The Washington Post

GREENVILLE, S.C. - Carroll Campbell is miffed.

The former governor of this booming state left office wildly popular after two terms in 1994, handed the keys to his handpicked successor and moved to a lucrative lobbying job in Washington. He helped save Bob Dole's 1996 nomination and was talked about as a possible vice president. Along with Ronald Reagan, he became known as the man who turned South Carolina Republican.

Now another nomination is teetering - that of Texas Gov. George W. Bush. Once again, Campbell's South Carolina machine is critical to saving it. And a couple of GOP congressmen, a couple of ingrates, really, two men who don't seem to remember what Campbell did for them not so long ago, are trying to mess things up. They're backing Arizona Sen. John McCain.

"I like Lindsey Graham," Campbell says of one renegade. "I helped Lindsey get elected. I helped Mark Sanford get elected." That's the other one."

They tend to forget this now.

"They're trying to divide the party. They're the hot Young Turks; they want to run things right now. They both think they should be senators. So we have somewhat of an insurrection going on now."

This intramural game among South Carolina polls is about more than bruised egos and the acute sense of time-serving that develops in a state where a senator can hold office longer than Graham, 45, has been alive. It also points to a crucial question about the state's voters, one that will play a big part in the Feb. 19 primary:

How much has this place changed lately?

Everyone agrees South Carolina is not what it used to be. For all the ruckus about the Confederate flag over the state capitol, the old birthplace of the Confederacy has become a showplace for the global economy, a magnet for rich retirees and a burgeoning suburbia of up-for-grabs independents.

The new South Carolina can be found in many places, in Florence, in Aiken, on Seabrook Island. Or here.

Just off I-85 near the Greenville-Spartanburg airport is a huge box sprouting exhaust stacks and gleaming white in the midwinter sun. Inside, on floors so clean you could eat off them, hundreds of men and women, white and black, clean-cut and nicely dressed, build the sexy BMW Z3 roadster and the coveted X5 sport utility vehicle.

When BMW chose South Carolina for its first American factory in 1992 _ in the full sun of Gov. Campbell's reign _ it was the 75th German company to locate here, drawn by cooperative government and the weakest union presence in the country. BMW attracted Michelin, the French tire company, Swiss pharmaceutical giant Hoffmann-La Roche opened its own plant in another corner of the state.

As the boom crested over the past five years, $5 billion in new investment was pouring into South Carolina every year. In 1998, to take a fairly typical year, nearly half of that money came from overseas. There is some high-tech going on here, but mostly this is an explosion of manufacturing: steel, tires, cars and medicines. There's even been a new season for that dying mainstay, textiles.

No one missed the change in South Carolina more dramatically than commentator Patrick J. Buchanan, who came here after a narrow victory in the 1996 New Hampshire primary preaching protectionism and old Dixie pride. He discovered a lot of people who had the best jobs of their lives, and they liked their Swiss, German and French bosses.

"Successful GOP leaders now are the ones who speak the international language of economic development and educational reform," says Lee Bandy, politics guru of the State newspaper in Columbia. Both Bush and McCain are fluent free-traders.

Campbell was a significant force in this renaissance. But can he steer its effects?

For three months, since the first glimmers of a McCain victory in New Hampshire, the Bush campaign has put a big slice of its future in his hands. Campbell's well-organized, highly disciplined Republican Party operation _ led by his right-hand man, Warren Tompkins _ was supposed to be the linebacker that would cut down McCain as he ran to daylight.

Now, with McCain sprinting across the open field, it's put-up or shut-up time for the Campbell machine. This is a touchy moment for the former governor, who, some say, plans on being governor again. Campbell's hand-picked successor, David Beasley, was defeated for reelection in 1998 despite Campbell's best efforts.

"If Bush loses, Campbell loses his identity and perhaps the strength of his endorsement," says Bill Moore, a political scientist at the College of Charleston.

Which is why Carroll Campbell is miffed.

McCain strategist Mike Murphy believes the changes in South Carolina are so sudden and deep they obliterate the disciplined traditionalism of the Campbell GOP. The $40,000-a-year welders at BMW ... the middle managers from up north now living in the Columbia suburbs ... the retired corporate executives on the Hilton Head and Kiawah fairways ... don't rely on a party endorsement to tell them how to vote.

Reps. Graham and Sanford understand this new order, Murphy argues. Graham bucked his pro-military state on some Pentagon construction projects. Sanford, who is term-limiting himself out of Congress this year, is friendly with Democrats and has preferred increased

Turn to 3, page VOTES

Entreclub

continued from page 1

The UMass Five-College Entrepreneur Program, also know as the Entreclub, is sponsored by the UMass Office of Economic Development, Mass Ventures, the affiliate venture catalyst company for UMass, and Hampshire College.

Chernoff said colleges and universities are natural sites for innovative ideas, but they do not provide the connections between students, faculty, alumni, and venture capital firms that are needed to successfully launch a new business.

The Entreclub will provide beneficial skills for students that they might not obtain in a classroom. In a previous Collegian article, Chernoff said, "Without even leaving campus, they can meet entrepreneurs and business experts and learn how to describe a business idea in a way that persuades others to invest, join the team, or buy the idea."

There will be a team networking meeting and eight practical meetings held throughout March and April featuring lawyers, entrepreneurs, and marketing specialist.

This will give students an opportunity to work with other undergraduates from different departments as well as alumni and community entrepreneurs. Students will also be able to earn academic credit for developing a business plan through this program.

The general event tonight is open to all students and will also serve as an informational meeting. Joseph Steig, Entreclub program director and Vice President of Mass Ventures encouraged all students to attend.

"Students should come whether or not they know anything about business," he said in a previous Collegian article.

COLLEGIAN STAFF PHOTO

Worth a look

A UMass student views images of Tibetan on display in the Student Union Art Gallery. The show, entitled Rare Photographs From Inside Tibet, runs through February 11th.

Valentine's Day Sale

Ustore™

Not like a mall... Better

Buy 1 get the 2nd 1/2 off

All Stuffed Animals & All Picture Frames

Higher price Prevails (must be of equal or lesser value)

Valentine's Day Bear Drawing

Name:_____ Phone:_____

Email:_____

Do You Live On Campus? ___ Which Dorm? _____

All Fields must be completed to validate entries
All entries must be in by Monday, February 14th at 4:00
Drawing to take place at 4:30 on Valentine's Day at Ustore

You'll shoot your eye out...

Senior Turfgrass Management majors Matt Hays and Tim Langevin shoot pool in the games room in the Student Union yesterday votes

continued from page 2

Social Security funding to huge tax cuts.

The McCain campaign will try to tap this same maverick appeal. They want every voter, the candidate said Tuesday: Republican, independent, conservative Democrat, "libertarian and vegetarian."

"The idea of the Reagan Democrat is coming back in South Carolina," Graham says. "I'm the first Republican elected in 120 years in my district. These days you've got to have a populist streak in you. You can't be a country-club Republican."

People may remember Lindsey Graham as the sixth drawling face of the GOP impeachment effort. For a few months last year, his boyish mug could be seen on every channel. Prosecuting the president played poorly in many liberal neighborhoods, but it made him a hero in South Carolina.

Graham says he loves Campbell, even if they disagree. And on one point, he says, Campbell is right: Graham does think he should be a senator. "I think it's the best use of my talents," he says. If he outlives the eternal Strom Thurmond, Graham intends to run for his seat.

But he denies that his ambitions have anything to do with the McCain campaign. "This is not about me trying to do something for me," says Graham, "because I'm doing all right on my own." Indeed, polls suggest Graham is the state's most popular politician.

He joined McCain 15 months ago, Graham says, because "God has put John in the right place at the right time. He's the perfect antidote to Clinton fatigue."

Perhaps the riddle of this race should be put this way: Are New Hampshire and South Carolina two formerly depressed textile states now roaring in the new economy _ basically alike? Or is the divide between Yankee and Dixie still decisive?

Campbell and other Bush advisers stress the differences. First, there is the high number of religious conservatives here, especially in the Piedmont region of Western South Carolina. A German executive was quoted not so long ago complaining that it's easier to buy a gun than a drink in Greenville.

The first Bush appearance after his New Hampshire defeat was aimed directly at these voters. Greenville's Bob Jones University is the center of evangelical South Carolina, and Bush was there within hours of the polls closing in Manchester.

Since his appearance, Bush has taken heat over the school's ban on interracial dating, but doubtless he'd do the same thing again. If turnout for the primary is normal, his appeal to Christian conservatives will likely be enough to give him the win.

There's another difference, according to former GOP chairman Haley Barbour, a key Bush supporter. While New Hampshire is full of "Massachusetts tax refugees who are liberal on the other issues," South Carolina's new voters come more from the conservative Midwest and South.

Graham, however, is betting that people are pretty much the same and "at the end, the people will decide. They'll ask, 'Who's someone I can show my kids, someone who's a real 1's stand-up guy, post-Clinton?'" In this new world, he says, establishment politics won't work.

Regardless of the outcome, this primary drives home the old lesson: All politics is local. Power in politics is not just what you can get done; it is also what people think you can get done.

After the 19th, Bush and McCain will roll out of here one greatly strengthened, the other fighting for his life. And they'll leave winner-and loser-s behind.

Examples of fractal use abound

By Bryn Nelson
Newsday

While visiting the Mangbetu society in central Africa, Ron Eglash studied the tradition of using multiples of 45-degree angles in the native artwork. The concept is similar to the shapes that American geometry students produce using only a compass and a straight edge, he said. In the Mangbetu society, the uniform rules allowed the artisans to compete for the best design.

Eglash found a more complex example of fractal geometry in the windscreens widely used in the Sahel region. Strong Sahara winds regularly sweep the dry, dusty land. For protection from the biting wind and swirling sand, local residents have fashioned screens woven with millet, a common crop in the area. The windscreens consist of about 10 diagonal rows of millet stalk bundles, each row shorter than the one below it.

The geometry of the screen is quite extraordinary, said Eglash. I had never seen anything like it."

In Mali, Eglash interviewed an artisan who had constructed one of the screens, asking him why he had settled on the fractal design.

The man told Eglash the long, loosely bound rows forming the bottom of the screen are very cheap to construct but do little to keep out wind and dust. The smaller, tighter rows at the top require more time and straw to make but also offer much more protection. The artisans had learned from experience that the wind blows more strongly higher off the ground, so they had made only what was needed.

"What they had done is what an engineer would call a cost-benefit analysis," said Eglash.

He measured the length of each row of the non-linear windscreen and plotted the data on a graph.

"I could figure out what the lengths should be based on wind engineering values and compared those values to the actual lengths and discovered that they were quite close," he said. "Not only are they using a fractal geometrical system to produce these scaling shapes, but they also have a nice practical value."

In Senegal, Eglash learned about a fortune-telling system that relies on a mathematical operation reminiscent of error checks on contemporary computer systems.

In traditional Bamana fortune-telling, a divination priest begins by rapidly drawing four dashed lines in the sand. The priest then connects the dashes into pairs. For lines containing an odd number of dashes and a single leftover, he draws one stroke in the sand. For lines with even-paired dashes, he draws two strokes. Then he repeats the entire process.

The mathematical operation is called addition modulo 2, which simply gives the remainder after division by two. But in this case, the two "words" produced by the priest, each consisting of four odd or even strokes, become the input for a new round of addition modulo 2. In other words, it's a pseudo-random-number generator, the same thing computers do when they produce random numbers. It's also a numerical feedback loop, just as fractal-are generated by a geometric feedback loop.

"Here is this absolutely astonishing numerical feedback loop, which is indigenous," said Eglash. "So you can see the concepts of fractal geometry resonate throughout many facets of African culture."

What is the deal?

Find out.

Read the Collegian everday!

THE ALANA JOB FAIR

DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO MEET PROSPECTIVE EMPLOYERS!

Coop/Internship Opportunities
Networking
Summer/Permanent Employment

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2000
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM
UMASS AMHERST
6:00PM~9:00PM

ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED !

SPONSORED BY: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Diversity in Management Education Services (DiMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC) and the Campus Career Network (CCN).
For more information, please call Ruth Carey @ (413) 545-6252 • www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Are you a morning person?

Would you like to be able to work each morning before classes start?

Then deliver[ ] Collegian p[ ] the job for [ ]

Come down to [ ] in the C[ ] fill [ ]

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion
Where is the SGA?

With recent events on campus, including two more alleged sexual assaults, the administrative threat of removal of the Apparel Marketing major and public press conferences decrying University Health Services, one group on campus has remained suspiciously quiet on University issues: The Student Government Association.

Supposedly elected to represent the views of the students, President Jeff Howe, Trustee Seth Avakian and Speaker of the Senate Mike Billard have all but been absent from the realm of public comment. It is almost as if the SGA administration has decided to play it safe during these final few months before the next election.

One wonders why the elected leaders of students have not publicly pressed the need for the student good to be taken into consideration when major campus decisions are made.

The SGA administration needs to remember that they were not chosen by University of Massachusetts students to be either passive or quiet; rather, they were chosen to represent students, and what better way to represent students is there than to come out on issues directly affecting students' well-being?

Two students were attacked earlier this week in Southwest, an affront to students who were given good reason to be afraid of walking to classes last semester and are now being given reasons to be afraid of their homes.

Meanwhile, at University Health Services, among other UHS problems, the Dental Clinic is closing, thus forcing students in need of dental attention off campus.

To add insult to injury, the University has removed a major, Apparel Marketing, in an attempt to save money, thus burdening 275 majors with the knowledge that, if they can't graduate in three years, they won't graduate as AM majors.

There are three issues perfect for a calculated SGA response. Rather than doing too much (as the SGA did at the end of last semester by passing a meaningless no confidence vote against Jo-Anne Vanin, UMass Dean of Students) in response to the assaults, the organization could respond in a steady manner that would do the organization, and their tarnished image, good. Passing legislation calling for an increased examination of what could have been done to prevent last weekend's assaults as well as decrying the lack of available dental services are issues perfect for a calculated, planned and organized SGA response.

No one is in a better position to represent the student view than individuals elected to represent all students, and yet, it would appear that both Billard and Howe, as Avakian has already graduated, are merely relaxing during the final semester of their senior year, rather than giving their respective jobs the kind of heads up attention that is needed. A lack of leadership from students elected to be leaders is both embarrassing and damaging to the overall student good.

Especially in a time of what might be too extreme to call a crisis, but certainly serious enough to warrant a concerted response on the behalf of UMass students.

While today's letter is a good start, The Daily Collegian can only hope that silence on the behalf of the SGA administration concerning other student issues will not continue. If it does, this newspaper feels that the next time SGA positions are up in elections, students need to vote for individuals more interested in bravely and responsibly representing students' views than in silence and acceptance.

To do anything less violates the trust that voters put in their leaders to do what is best for the voter, and in this case, SGA silence is not best for students, despite their current path of action.

Majoring in the art of survival

I believe that in Apparel Marketing, students have a strong bond with our professors. It is rare to have a professor at a huge university like UMass to actually know your name and know a little bit about you. I have taken many classes within different majors here at UMass and never have I found the quality of teaching as I do in my major. Our professors do not post their notes online, which I find impersonal. Our professors teach in the "old-fashion way" with chalkboards, overheads, videos, and even speakers from various retail companies, which I find most effective.

An excerpt of a letter from senior apparel marketing major Diane Elgart.

Kathleen Ralls

She was already looking forward to the day when she could come back as an alum and show her children the Apparel Marketing Class of 2000 photo. Standing in front of Skinner Hall with the rest of her band of seniors, the memory should be framed among the rest of the pictures that date back to the days of Home Economics.

Diane Elgart, 21, a senior Apparel Marketing major, wonders now where those pictures will go. She wonders what is going to happen to Skinner. She wonders what her professors will do after their jobs are eliminated in three years. All this was but a dream just one week ago when students within the College of Food and Natural Resources were informed that along with apparel marketing, family and consumer studies would no longer be offered as a potential major at UMass next fall.

One of Elgart's professors gathered his students after class to break the news and field any concerns they might have had. Last week one of her professors had to exit her own classroom in tears.

"It's just not making any sense," said Elgart. "Our majors are being penalized for production, so many freshmen come here just for this major."

Like many students, Elgart accepted to UMass unsure of what she wanted to study. Unfortunately, after one year of testing out other classes, she did not found anything that she wanted to pursue. On the hunch of an advisor, Elgart attended a lecture series within the department. She had no idea that such a major existed, and she immediately knew that it was what she wanted to pursue.

The idea of small classes, headlined with guest speakers ranging from alumni to representatives from top companies just made sense to Elgart. The close-knit atmosphere does not stop at the classroom door; students collaborate on a coffee table set up in Skinner Hall to raise funds.

"We have a lot of speakers come. I've never had a class without at least one," said Elgart. "Our classes are small, we pretty much all know each other, that's one of the reasons why I got into this major."

Apparel marketing is not without glitches. Many of their requirements include classes from the School of Management such as marketing and accounting. According to Elgart, the top school in the field, the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York, does not insist on the same large number of requirements as does UMass. Unfortunately, since it is not a part of SOM, they are considered second-class citizens when it comes to class priority. With classroom space shortage a campus-wide dilemma, some of the SOM requirements have been altered to accommodate the squeeze. With the rigorous business classes still mandatory, graduates are capable of transitioning directly into straight business and management positions.

Elgart is concerned that the quality of the degree will be compromised as a result of the cuts. When future employees look over resumes of UMass graduates, are they going to question their validity since the program will no longer exist?

"They'll (Administrators) be more likely to wave a class since some are already hard to get into anyway," said Elgart.

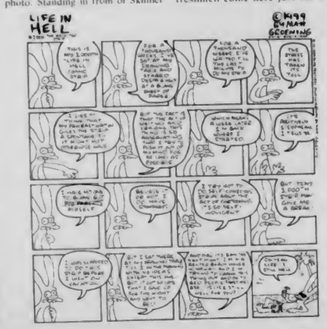
What does that mean to the freshmen and sophomores?

"Some are going to transfer," said Elgart. "One girl at the meeting the other night said she just transferred here to get into the major... another said that she now considered leaving UMass."

When future employees look over resumes of UMass graduates, are they going to question their validity since the program will no longer exist?

Many students have jobs immediately after graduation at top companies like TJX and Filene's, a credit to the quality and respect of the major. In fact, apparel marketing majors sponsor their own Retail Career Fair that such companies flock too.

With the assistance of their professors and academic advisors, students within Consumer Studies are now rallying with a campaign of letter writing directed at state and university officials. In the meantime, they are still trying to find a straight answer pertaining to why their prosperous majors were deducted in lieu of others. They wonder how much it will take to keep them going financially.



"We've been told that the program is cheap to run, that's why we don't understand why they this is happening," said Elgart. "I just think it's going to look bad on the university."

Elgart was disturbed after Tuesday night that Robert Helgesen, Dean of College of Food and Natural Resources, did not appear to come prepared with any specific figures, nor did he offer additional information above the answers he provided for the students.

"I don't know if he can disclose such information right now," said Elgart. "Just show us the figures."

It's the hope that there will still be seniors here in these two majors at UMass three years from now, and that their pictures will stand up besides their proud predecessors fighting to keep what they deserve.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

Your Opinion
Letters to the editor

Dear UMass Community,

Last semester our campus experienced a state of shock, confusion and fear during the months of November and December due to the incidents of sexual assault that took place. The Everywoman's Center and the Student Government Association took a very active role in attempting to respond to the needs of this campus. We attempted to spread awareness and sensitivity when dealing with this very serious issue.

Many students learned that rape has been, and continues to be, an issue on our campus and that it unfortunately occurs much more frequently than we hear about. Many women who are victims of sexual assault are reluctant to come forward and report their assault to the police or the Dean of Students Office for many reasons. One reason is that many women feel that reporting what has happened will do little more than force them to recall very painful memories, and that little or nothing will be done.

The fact that three sexual assaults were reported over the weekend does not necessarily indicate that it was an unusually violent weekend on our campus. It indicates that the victims were willing to come forward with their story and seek assistance. The problem is the that there are many women in our community who are in need of support and who do not feel comfortable coming forward and seeking it. It is the responsibility of every member of this campus community to create an atmosphere where people can feel comfortable seeking help. We hope that the reports this weekend are a result of heightened campus awareness that resulted from the positive campus response to the assaults that occurred last semester.

As awareness heightens and victims feel more assured that they will be supported when they report these types of crimes, we will undoubtedly see an increase in the numbers of incidents that are reported. This in itself, will help us to better address the issue by understanding its scope. With this in mind we ask that you aid us in making our campus a more comfortable place for all students.

The Everywoman's Center Counselor/Advocate Program has services available to all students seeking help in the aftermath of sexual assault or battering. These services are free of charge and completely confidential. Please utilize this service if you are in need of help. The Crisis Hotline can be reached at 545-0800.

The Student Government Association is also committed to helping the campus community. Please feel free to contact President Howe at 545-1287 if you have any suggestions as to how we could improve safety at the university. We are interested in any type of involvement and would be more than willing to aid any group that was interested in continuing the development of ideas and the spreading of information.

We need to continue the awareness and problem solving around campus safety issues. Thank you.

Jeffrey F. Howe
Student Government Association President

Sage Freechild
Everywoman's Center
Counselor/Advocate Program Director

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Musser Co-Sports Editor

Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Mencheel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Blockbuster and Saget

Dan Viens

With each passing day our lives seem to become more and more convenient. Whether it is faster computers or simpler ATM machines the world of technology is constantly supplying the public with things that seem to make our lives faster and better. However, what really is going on is that a covert government organization is finding more and more ways to pinpoint each of our locations at any given moment. This agency not only wants to locate us, but, among other things, it wants to know what we eat, where we shop, whether or not we buy rolling papers, how often we cross state lines, who we call, when we go to the bathroom, whether or not we ever saw a shrink and whether or not we ever bought a water-soluble personal lubricant.

It all starts with the seemingly helpful and convenient Stop & Shop or Big Y card. When you go shopping just scan this little card and you are able to save til' your hearts content. Buy one get one free this, half price that or free shaved monkey with a purchase of 50 pounds of bananas: there are different deals to be had everywhere. The only trade off is that the company knows exactly what food you like to eat. In turn they know if you have a sweet tooth, if you're on welfare, what kind of bowel movements you're likely to have, if you buy food that is likely to be eaten after marijuana use or if you are one of those activist hippy, vegetarian types. This innocent tracking device combined with our ATM cards, credit cards, licenses, student IDs, library cards, and insurance cards make us into little boxes of peas being scanned at a supermarket. Our everyday life information is just as easy to access as the price of those peas. We might as well be walking around with big bar codes stamped on our asses.

Each of the methods of following us humans that I have mentioned are all rather innocent compared to one that I have failed to discuss thus far. The ones I have mentioned are at best minor annoyances. Their motivation to hijack our information is to make some money off of us. They want to send us advertisements that are similar to the stuff we buy. They want to make the most popular ATMs able only to dispense twenty-dollar bills so that we will spend more. The one major tracking device besides the Internet that I have failed to mention is the most devious. It is even dangerous. The reason for this is that it is not controlled by a secret government agency; it is controlled by a cult. A cult that has gone mostly unnoticed. A cult with a leader who is shrewder than David Koresh, with brainwashing techniques more influential than the leader of Heaven's Gate (the cult who committed mass suicide a few years ago) and who possess methods of cultihood which are more disturbing than that of Charles Manson's murderous organization. The reason this cult is so dangerous is that without anyone knowing it has amassed millions of members. Members that are so brainwashed they have no idea that they have become meager followers to a sick and twisted cult. Who are all of these members? Do you know any? The answer is that you're probably one yourself. All you need to be a member of this cult is a Blockbuster Card.

If you have that little yellow and blue card In your possession then you are on the road to becoming a lifeless, controlled shell of a being. However, let us start with the people who work there. They have been turned into glassy eyed, robotic talking lemmings. As soon as you step into a Blockbuster Video one of the attendants runs your way and greets you. There is nothing wrong with a nice greeting. However, all of these people are just a little too happy to be working in a video store making six bucks an hour. This greeting translated into their cult language actually says, "Welcome to our secret society where everyone is the same. Join us and you will no longer need to make decisions for yourself. Our almighty leaders will choose what movies you watch, who your life mate will be, what gender your children will be and when you will die." The first time you enter Blockbuster it may only sound like a kind greeting, but each time you go into the store your mind becomes more susceptible to their subliminal suggestions.

There is one way that Blockbuster differentiates itself from most other cults. This is that the majority of the members have no idea that they are in a cult until it is much to late and their mind has been dominated by the overpowering subconscious signals being sent by other full-blown cult members. One result of this is that many people are able to get out of the cult without any problem and without even knowing they were on the verge of living life as a vegetable. However, there is one drawback to escaping from this cult. This is that most people who do it die very soon after. Nine out of ten people who cancel their membership to Blockbuster die within a year. In 1998 83% of unnatural deaths were people who had canceled their memberships to Blockbuster Video. Another 8% were people who owned competing video stores, while the other 9% died from fatal glue accidents. I think that Elmer's may be a cult also, but I'll save that for another column.

The incredible correlation between canceling one's Blockbuster membership and meeting an untimely death is astounding. I feel that it is something that cannot be overlooked and yet it has. It is almost as though the person behind this cult has so much power that no government, army or alliance could possibly stop them if they tried. There aren't many people who are wise enough to pull the wool over so many civilian eyes and at the same time intimidate the powers that be in order to keep them out of Blockbuster's affairs. In fact I am quite sure that it would be impossible for one person to do this all alone. I believe that the Blockbuster Video cult is headed by two powerful dictators. The only men powerful enough to pull this off are Bob Saget and Regis Philbin. These men are the perfect balance of relentless power and mind controlling intelligence. The mind controlling intelligence comes from Saget. I mean, without this no way would anybody have watched Full House. Regis on the other hand is the war general type. Just look at how he stares down those contestants and the home viewing audience on Millionaire. As a side note there is no such person as Kathy Lee. That is just Bob Saget in a dress.

These two men have formed the most dangerous and powerful cult ever, one that I am proud not to be a part of. For your sake please don't get a membership to Blockbuster Video. If you already have one don't cancel it. Just don't go there anymore. Instead go to Captain Video or Video To Go. If Blockbuster calls you to see what's up just tell them that you're in a coma.

Dan Viens is a Collegian columnist.

Television Sweeps Week

Proof that we'll watch anything

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

Sweeps week is when the networks go out of their way to increase ratings that will influence how much sponsors are willing to give them for their add space. In short, every single network is, including the nonnets like UPN and WB give the nation the episodes of their favorite shows, which either will change the way the show is outlined or the most outrageous situations that cause the audience to gasp with excitement. The different sweeps weeks throughout the year are when people are more likely to see the best episodes as well as the most number of cliffhangers, it's almost like watching the season finale three months ahead of time.

UPN is celebrating sweeps week early (Feb. 7-11) with a testosterone-focused schedule. All this week the "superstars" of the WWF will appear on UPN shows, which is being called "Bad Attitude Week". The Rock (not only ex-champ, but also now a best selling author) will appear on "Star Trek: Voyager" fighting The Borg refugee seven of nine. Not only is this for the "millions and millions" of the Rock's fans, but also for all the Trekkies who want to see Jeri Ryan in even skimpier and tighter outfit then they are used to. Also current WWF Champion Triple H will co-star with ex-Dirkel, Jaleel White in the UPN comedy "Grown Ups". Jerry "The King" Lawler and his real girl friend "The Kat" Hornerb "Miss Kitty") show wrestling fans behind the scenes as the crew sets up for a show. On Thursday "WWF Smackdown" shows at its regular time (god forbid people shouldn't see their weekly dosage of chokeslams, elderly women who are impregnated by an ex-Olympian, and torrid love scandals! On Friday you are all in for a treat as Bob "Hardcore" Holly, a WWF ex-tag team, Hardcore and Intercontinental champion starts in the "Blockbuster Show Live Cinema Operation Sandman Warriors in Hell"

At this point I would like to say that I have never been more embarrassed to be affiliated with Blockbuster Video then when I heard (in the title & 2) that they refer to a made for TV movie as a "cinematic work". UPN is only showing two "sweeps" worthy shows during sweeps week and they are Jerry Seinfeld's guest voice on "Dilbert" as a super computer (2/27) and the "Monster Truck 2000: The New Thrillennium". I need not say more except that this show could possibly rival the genius that is

Turn to SWEEPS page 7

Starting Sunday, Feb. 13, "February Sweeps" will consume major TV networks and American households alike. The period, one of four during which ratings are measured in every TV market, is historically known for big promotions, slews of ratings grabbers, and special presentations. While "sweeps" period has given rise to some of TV's truly historic moments: the advent of "Seinfeld," "The X-Files," and "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," which all first aired during a sweeps period, it has also bore witness to atrocities like "Leprechauns" and the awful perversion of 'Merlin."

This week's Arts cover takes a closer look at the sweeps period – both what we can expect this year, and what has come to be expected historically. So, sit back and relax. Read all about a "Simpsons'" character dying, Reese Witherspoon on "Friends," "The Jon Benet Ramsey Story," and even a Fox show called "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire."

The business behind the broadcasts

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

What are sweeps? It's a question that I hear often. After doing extensive research in the television industry over the last few years, I tend to become ignorant of the fact that a lot of people are not familiar on how TV works.

It seems like you can always hear about "sweeps week" on TV, and the networks are certainly not ashamed to advertise them. The fact is that this is a very good marketing technique. The simple fact that they are advertising that it is sweeps week means that they are trying to make you think that you should be watching TV, because that's what everyone else is doing, and you'll feel out of the loop if you do not do it as well. Television sweeps is an extremely dense topic that means a lot of things. Throughout history, sweeps week has been an extremely important time for almost every aspect of television. Using examples from past sweeps periods, I'll try to explain the technical aspect and the economical importance of the phenomena, which makes or breaks careers four times each year.

There are four major sweeps periods. The middle two weeks of September, November, February and May are all known as sweeps. During sweeps, ratings companies are watching everything. Some shows are guaranteed hits, while others are struggling to get good reviews and stay on the air. The ratings are polled by two major companies – the most popular being the Neilson company, and compiled nation wide. The top show on television, which currently is "Who Wants to be a Millionaire," usually pulls in about 35 million viewers that are tallied by the Neilson ratings.

The ratings do not actually reflect 35 million homes. There are actually on about four thousand homes that are recorded with diaries or people meters. A people meter is an electronic device that is placed in the home that physically monitors everything that is watched on that TV, and who is watching it.

The two major terms that are thrown around when dealing with television are "ratings" and "shares." A rating is the actual amount of people watching TV. A share is the percentage of people watching a certain program, pinned against the amount of televisions that are in use.

So what do all of these random terms actually mean? They mean a lot to people who want to write, produce, direct, star in or own anything on television. Big ratings mean big money and that's most important.

Advertising helps sell the ratings during sweeps week. Many networks will advertise what they think is their best material heavily, so people will watch in large numbers. The biggest rating grabbers are always the shows that have done the best advertising job. There is a reason why you will see commercials for "All new 'Dawson's Creek' or "Two straight weeks of Millionaire!" The networks know that if they psych you up enough for something, you will certainly watch.

There have been some pretty big hits during sweeps weeks in the past. During September sweeps, all of the season premiers are aired. The first time "ER" was on TV was during a sweeps week, as well as almost every other huge show that we've grown to love. The complete opposite of this happens in May, when there are season and series finales, which this year will be capped by the ending of "The X-Files" and "Party of Five."

There isn't that much new that takes place during February sweeps. There are certainly new episodes of your favorite shows, but there won't be very many new series entering into the mix. Perhaps the only show that can be considered new, that is worth a watch, is FOX's "Malcolm in the Middle." Even though it premiered just under a month ago, it is still the most examined new show that's being placed under a microscope.

There have been some very significant events that have taken place during sweeps week. Since everyone is watching, it would be a big deal if people do not. This past fall, the NAACP along with other minority groups began to plan a boycott of television during September sweeps. They had a problem with the obvious fact that there was almost no diversity in any of the new network series that were being produced. In a season that was highlighted by new series such as "The West Wing," "Action," and "Judging Amy," it was difficult to find something new, which did not cater to a predominantly white audience. This difficulty became the networks' excuse for creating such an undiverse amount of programming. However, it seemed to backfire on all of the major industries, because almost everything that has been released since September has been a flop. The networks are crying over the fact that this has become the worst season ever for new series, and they are searching desperately for something to save them. Some of the ideas that they have come up with, to prevent television from taking more heat as a less important medium, are to develop a sweeps period during the summer.

The summer is when the two biggest hits of the new season, "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" and "WWF Smackdown," were premiered. The two shows were aired in the summer, because ABC and UPN realized that there would

Turn to HISTORY, page 9

"All about Passion" for McGee

Local favorites and up and comers Pat McGee brought their sweet acoustic jams to Pearl St Nightclub last Wednesday

Pat McGee Band
Pear Street Nightclub
Feb. 8

By David Siegel
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday Night, the Pat McGee Band made a stop at the jam-packed Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. Over the past four years, the Pat McGee Band (PMB) has made a name for themselves on the national jam band scene playing an almost unheard of 200 concerts a year. Tuesday night, more than 400 hundred people were shown how they have garnered such acclaim.

The night began with Australian born guitarist Howie Day performing his original guitar works mixed with his quirks sense of humor. Day showed loads of potential jamming away, while showing a very surprising stage presence. Next up was Washington D.C. based Cecilia. Cecilia blended together an engaging mix of brilliant guitar work with the sweet melodious vocals of its four singers, each switching off to give everyone a piece of the spotlight.

Shortly after the Pat McGee Band came to the stage to a roaring ovation from the mostly college-age crowd. The sweet strumming and melodies of "Who Stole Her From Heaven" instantly grabbed the crowd's attention and alluded to what a great show was to come. Pat then took the microphone and chatted how they had just concluded its recording of their new album, "Shine" which is to be released on April 11th. He went on to say that the show would move through it into old songs as well as a few new ones.

The first single from "Shine" will be the song "Runaway" which was played next. This song exemplifies the strong energy the band possesses and how this feed from the audience's enthusiasm. After a few new exciting songs, PMB jumped back into their vast repertoire and unloaded with crowd favorite "Feeding Both of Us", with its soaring guitar and sweeping keyboards and its sweet three part harmonies. This song can't help but make you feel soul head.

A few more new songs ensued including the bango-guided "Drivin'", "Lost" with its hypnotizing guitar riffs, "Mimic" and then "Shine", a song written in tribute to one of Pat's good friends, with whom he had an unfortunate passing. After this slow grooving arrangement, the band led in with crowd favorite "Rebecca". This song showcases Pat's superb songwriting skills paired with his sweet lead guitar. The band kept the crowd mesmerized with its adored hit "Passion" with its catchy chorus and rhythmic beat. Two slower songs proceeded to slow down the pace of the show including "Time" and then a rare glimpse of percussionist Chardy Mcewan, busting out on rhythm guitar on "Hero." The crowd's energy was then drawn upon again with favorites "Can't Miss What You Never Had" and "Straight Curve" to end the set.

To begin the encore, Pat strolled onto the stage single-handedly and rolled out a beautiful rendition of "Haven't Seen For a While," being joined onstage by Jonathan Williams (keyboards) and Al Walsh (acoustic guitar) for the soaring choruses. Pat and Al then departed, handing Jon the stage. Jon sat down at his keys and asked what the audience wanted to hear. The unanimous request and full-audience and performer.

The entire band rejoined Jon onstage for a thrilling version of "Pride" featuring the thumping bass soloing of John Small. This song was highlighted when Pat McGee asked for an audience member's small, handheld microphone and went on to sing a full chorus with it in hand. Finally, a power medley of the Who's classic "Pinball Wizard" paired with a rendition of Crosby, Stills and Nash's "Love the One You're With". Throughout the medley, the overwhelmed audience leaped in unison to the explosive beat and famous guitar riffs.

The Pat McGee Band's electrifying blend of spectacular originals mixed with numerous exciting cover songs will make them a driving force in the music industry for years to come. Their new recording "Shine" will serve as a breakthrough for the band, catapulting them into stardom putting them on the pedestal next to such great southern bands as the Dave Matthews Band and Widespread Panic. Catch them when they promise to return to the area in the weeks after the new album is released.

TURN

Sister Seven, Venice and Bowery Electric headline week's Trax

2GE+HER
2GE+HER
TVT

MTV, of all the possible sources, is the first to do a full-length parody of the recent boy-band phenomenon. The question is: do we really need a full-length parody of boy bands? They are essentially jokes themselves to the over – 12 crowd, so it is already an uphill battle to make the parody any funnier than the real thing. Also, this material was already covered sufficiently on "Saturday Night Live." A funny skit featuring Horatio Sanz, Chris Kattan, among others offered a short parody of the boy bands that was more than enough for most people. But MTV has taken the route of excess and feels the need to provide us with not only a feature-length film parody to be aired on the network, but an accompanying soundtrack of the intentionally silly songs the group plays.

2GE+HER is the name of the film, the main group in the film, and the soundtrack. While the movie has sort of an intriguing concept, I find it hard to believe that a sanitized TV movie can really roast the boy bands with any kind of intensity. Somehow I doubt MTV will really risk pissing off its meal ticket, and the disc, sure enough, is just mildly funny boy band song parodies. "Us-Me-Us (Calculus)" and "Say It (Don't Spray It)" are serviceably funny titles, and the songs also are funny for their duration, but once is more than enough for even the funniest songs on this disc. Many of the other songs aren't even parodies; they are just awful BSB – like pop songs that makes the listener wonder why on earth if this is to be taken as a parody/comedy CD, that anyone would want to listen to the crap being parodied. This could be done much, much better; evidence being that there aren't even ten songs worth of funny material, the final two songs are a remix and a karaoke mix. The one true moment of inspiration is the photos of the band, which features an overweight member, Doug (Kevin Farley), doing some hilarious poses and facial expressions. In the end, however, this is a novelty CD that, if done better, would be worth playing once and awhile with your friends for a laugh. As it is, though, it's a potentially funny concept not fully realized. D+
(Micheal Delano)

The Syrups
Fig
Beck Records

The first few moments of the opening track, "Lutefisk," with gentle guitars and a spacey tone, prepares you for an album of textural exploration and envelope-pushing stylistic approaches. Then the song really starts, loud guitars and horns and all the rest, and The Syrups plow through eight tracks of punkish pop-rock. Their sound is energetic, clean, and nicely arranged, but it's also identical to barrels of other floundering rock bands out there: originality, unfortunately, is a commodity in which The Syrups come up empty.

Lyrically, I don't make many demands on the bands I listen to, but when I hear a chorus that goes, "Cause in the morning you're my baby/and by the afternoon/you said maybe baby/you'll be my regular girl," my stomach starts to wretch. The Syrups indeed.

The fifth track, "Barely Know You," sounds much too similar "I Do" by Lisa Loeb for me to take it seriously. This album is filled with scattered moments of listenable music, but precious few moments of original, worthwhile song writing. C-
(David Troupes)

Music from the Motion Picture Soundtrack: Cradle Will Rock
RCA

First thing's first, Tim Robbins is the man! I'm sure that Cradle Will Rock is an awesome movie, for the sole reason that Tim Robbins is the creative genius behind it. However, apparently Tim Robbins doesn't have any control over the soundtrack for the film.

There's not too much that I can say about the soundtrack. It is mostly instrumental pieces of work with a few tracks thrown in that have a piano and some vocals. Whatever noise is produced from my stereo while I have that CD spinning includes people clapping for actors that sound like they are on

Turn to TRAX, page 8

The University of Massachusetts'

Something Every Friday

Comedian "Peter Correale"

Comedian Peter Correale brings to the UMass campus his unique brand of fast-paced comedy about life, relationships and just getting by.....

Bluewall Cafe
Friday, February 11, 2000,
8pm, FREE

****

The film "American Beauty" will be shown following the performance. "American Beauty" will also be shown on Sunday February 13th, at 8pm AND 10pm, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Visit us on the Web: http://www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm

This program is made possible by a grant from the Auxiliary Services Department and the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs.

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE

Now Featuring Drink Specials
Miller Lite Bottles $2.25
Michelob + Michelob Light Draft $1.75
Rum + Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Promo Night with DJ Fooz, feat. Free Prizes
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House, Hip-hop, and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY-S4B Productions DJ's Fooz, Creme, and Uncle
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Rte. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 • (800) 594-9537

Follow Your Heart To Atkins Farms
You'll Find Gifts in Every Department.

Sweets for your Sweet, Chocolates, Fudge, Truffles & Specialty Valentine Baskets

Cookies for your Cookie, Heart Shaped Cakes & Cookies, Cookie Trays & Valentine Cupcakes.

Blossoms for your Blossom, Roses, Bud vases, Arrangements & Mixed Bouquets

We deliver to the surrounding area or can wire-out flowers. (413) 253-9528

Or Visit Atkins Flower Shop
For a little bit of Bliss at Atkins
Located On The 116 Main Entrance
(413) 549-

Modern TV takes sexist stance

Tube Notes with Ryan Benharris

I'm sensing that there's something wrong on TV. We live in an age where diversity seems to trigger all sorts of new ideas, and the opportunity for every race, sex and religion to speak their minds freely is something that the people of this country are very fortunate to have. Freedom of speech is a great thing, but sometimes it can be hurtful. When there are things on TV that are used for the sole oppression of another group, I definitely see it as a step backward from a chance for everyone to be treated equally. Given that, I've had something dwelling in my head since about the beginning of winter break. For some unknown disturbing reason, I think there's a growing popular trend on cable TV to belittle women for the sake of a joke. This is truly wrong. I may be sticking my neck out on the line when I touch on this subject, and it may even cause me to lose a few male readers, but to be perfectly honest, if my point is made, then I'm not complaining.

Without further ambiguous references around the subject, I'll just come out and say it. I have a major problem with "The Man Show." I'm not against "The Man Show," but I have a problem with what it has presented, and more importantly, what I think may follow.

In case you have not seen the extremely popular Comedy Central series, "The Man Show," a brief synopsis of it, is that two men, Adam Carolla (MTV's "Love Line" and Jimmy Kimmel, ("Win Ben Stein's Money") try to define what it is to be a man. The show begins with a theme song that praises things such as "juggy girls" and "girls on trampolines." When the two men come out on stage, they usually introduce their weekly guest, who is the fastest recorded beer drinker in the world. After he downs two mugs, the show begins, and the men introduce products that they have created, porn stars, and pretty much anything else that you can think of, that would define the stereotypical slovenly useless male figure. "The Man Show" always ends with random shots of large breasted women jumping on trampolines, with shots resembling a softcore porno movie. "The Man Show" is not something that will win awards, but people are watching it.

Now, as I stated before, I'm not against "The Man Show" for one simple reason. Even though the entire show portrays men as Gods of the household, and tries to define male culture in such a narrow-minded way, there is one thing that needs to be pointed out about "The Man Show." The show is actually an excellent farce on male life, and the show's stars are actually making fun of themselves. One problem that I have though is that most of its viewers are too stupid to figure that out. Some men have come to idolize "The Man Show" and everything that it says. Some people that I talked to, say that they watch it every single Wednesday in their underwear, with a bag of chips and a big frosty mug. There's nothing wrong with people having fun, but the "The Man Show's" true humor is very rarely understood by its target audience.

"The Man Show" happens to be quite creative. The jokes that are used tend to be funny, and the skits are very unique. To even call the two creators chauvinists would be unfair. If we just look at what their other two jobs were, we can see that they are smart enough to know what they are doing. In the case of Adam Carolla, he spends half of his life that he is not writing and starring in "The Man Show," giving people love advice on "Love Line." I'm sorry, but that doesn't sound like a job for a guy who only watches football, scratches his crotch, and makes whooping noises at hot women all day long. Carolla and Kimmel know what they are doing and I certainly wouldn't challenge them by trying to prove otherwise. However I really don't think that we need another show that the viewers are going to think is an open chance to degrade women, because it's funny.

The worst thing about my gripe towards "The Man Show" is there are other people and groups following suit. To be perfectly honest, the first time that I saw "The Man Show," my only response was at how funny and original it was. The idea was something that had been joked about for a while, but when it was finally placed on TV, I thought it proved how funny it actually is. My problem arose, when I was home watching 80 channels of cable that I don't get at school, and I stumbled upon the second rate garbage channel, FX. FX has ripped off the man show entirely, and frankly it scares me. On their show, "The X-Show" two unknown men, (whom they probably found in a strip club, keeled over in their own vomit with bruises on their eyes from where the stripper punched them out) imitate "The Man Show" in a more crude and unfunny manner. "The X-Show" is solely dependent on its jokes about nude women and men's reactions to that. There is something wrong with this. We should not have to stand by idly and watch as a company such as FOX says that it's okay to make shows like this because they're imitating something that another station has done. When FX runs "The X-Show" all of the real underlying humor in "The Man Show" is lost, and all it becomes is a crude and opinionated way to look at society.

As "The Man Show" gets more popular, there's no doubt that the trend will not stop at crappy imitations such as "The X-Show." History proves that there will certainly be more. I'm not really sure why I'm speaking out against the trend. I'm really not sure where I stand on the show's popularity. The only thing that I am certain about is that the trend will continue. The first amendment gives us the right to free speech. All that I'm asking the loyal follower of "The Man Show" to do is to open your eyes and ears. Listen carefully to what it is saying. Watch closely and cautiously to what it may become.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

Searching for Lando

Paintings like these from Billy Dee Williams! (of Empire Strikes Back fame) will be on display at R Michelson Galleries in Northampton

■ sweeps

continued from page 5

"Battledome"

The WB has promised its viewers (that includes people who watch the WB for the shows other than "Dawson's Creek", "Roswell", and "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" which equals about 20) give or take tent a month of all new episodes, spot lighting that Buffys' rival vampire slayer Faith will come out of her coma, which undoubtedly will spell trouble for Buffy and her friends. I wonder what will happen?

ABC, whose sweeps week winner of last year "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" (which subsequently has jump-started CBS, NBC, FOX, and other syndicated game shows to make a come back) is now on the ABC schedule three times a week and giving Regis Philbin a real career and a break from Cody stories, has on their sweeps agenda "The Beach Boys Story", which was heavily promoted during the first fifteen minutes of the Superbowl. In addition to an entire month of new programming, ABC will also broadcast a reunion of "Mary and Rhoda" bringing back the "Mary Tyler Moore" show to the year 2000 for a whole new generation.

FOX attacks sweeps with two deaths and a "COPS" rip-off. The death of Mr. Strickland's mistress, Debby (voiced by Reese Witherspoon) is the mystery that haunts Arlen, Texas in a two-part "King of the Hill". "Hill" which is still funny and smart, showing that Mike Judge can go beyond "Beavis and Butthead" and still stay grounded after writing and directing the feature film "Office Space", however, these episodes are too similar to the Simpson's "Who Shot Mr. Burns?" double header. Speaking of Simpson's deaths, FOX announced that this Sunday a major Simpson's character will die. But who will it be? Many insiders say that it will be Maude Flanders, wife of Christian do-gooder Ned, while other rumors are saying that Chief Wiggum will be brought down in the prime of his life. Finally, during this the last season of the "X-Files", FOX is taking off on itself (surprise, surprise) as "The X-Files" will take the format of "COPS" for February 20th episode.

CBS will also have brand new episodes during the month of February and will also air the mini-series "Perfect Murder, Perfect Town" based on the Jonbenet Ramsey murder case, an investigation, which is still in progress. Despite my hatred for CBS, this really takes the cake. I mean the investigation isn't even over, there are no real suspects, and it is in general just a sick and twisted case.

NBC is trying to win back some of it's audience from ABC with not only a month of all new "ER" (which is a miracle within itself), but also has Reese Witherspoon guest starring on "Friends", giving all of us guys a new reason to watch the show. NBC will also have a "Homicide" movie. "Homicide" was one of the best cop dramas, not only going inside the minds of a precinct of homicide detectives but also seeing the way they interacted with each other and each situation from week to week. This will bring back not only Andre Braugher but also many members of the cast from the Emmy award winning drama. Also NBC will air the "10th Kingdom" a magical story of modern times and the middle ages merging, capitalizing on the success of past sweeps week winners like "Noah's Ark" and "Gulliver's Travels". Finally, supermodel Angie Everheart (who last starred in the horrific "Bordello of Blood") will appear in "Law and Order: Special Victims Unit".

The sweeps theory, is that bringing the best and brightest to network television will bring ratings into the network, which will lead to more money from car companies, McDonalds, Disney, and any other sponsor willing to pay for a fifteen-thirty second spot during a "popular" show. But like any other year, we'll just have to wait and see whom the winners and losers are at the end of the week.

STUDY IN GERMANY!

Do you speak German? Are you interested in an exciting learning experience? Study for a semester or year at one of the nine universities in Baden-Württenberg. Virtually all academic disciplines are available.

★ ★ ★

Information session:
Monday, February 14, 2000, at 5pm.
Study Abroad Advising Center, Hills South, Room 455

★ ★ ★

For additional information contact:
Stefanie Bergmann, International Programs Office.
Hills South. POhone: (413) 545-2710.
email: sbergman@ipo.umass.edu

Wow, the Daily Collegian sure is great

Council Travel
America's Student Travel Leader for over 50 years

The journey is the reward.

Give your family & friends the gift of travel

Gift certificates, passport photos, passport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, rail passes, tickets, accommodations and more.

44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261

www.counciltravel.com

Goten by Shamiyeh
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE

Call for reservations and hours of operation

Now accepting OCMP

Now Taking Reservations for Valentines Day

Come sit and relax as our chefs exhibit their talents in preparing for you the finest foods at your table.

For nearly 30 years our large island tables are private dining your have your guests gather for birthdays, anniversaries, meetings, and private functions of all kinds. Affordable prices. Dinner and more times specials are available for groups of 6 or more. Call us today and try us for your special occasion.

104 Old Amherst Road • Off Route 116 • On bus route
Sunderland • (413) 665-3628

Clip & Curl HAIR, SKIN & MASSAGE THERAPY
All hours by appointment
SPECIALIZING IN:
• Swedish • Deep
• Hydrotherapy • Thera
$5 OFF full leg wax without
Full Service Salon featuring Hair Styling • Aveda Facials • Nail Services • Massage Therapy • 100% Organic Hair Removal
Pink Heart 30 min. Massage 60 min. Aveda Facial Paraffin Wax Manicure Hair Shampoo & Dried reg. $38 disc. $28
Worries Away 60 min. Massage w/Paraffin Hair Shampoo reg. $60 disc. $45
Red Heart 30 min. Massage Paraffin Wax Manicure Hair Shampoo & Dried reg. $50 disc. $43
VISA
RTE. 116, SUNDERLAND • on the bus route • 665-2629 • TUES - FRI 9-7, SAT 9-4

安城中國餐店
AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
• HANDMADE & SZECHUAN CUISINE
• HOME STYLE COOKING
• FRESH ORGANIC GROWN VEGETABLES FROM OUR OWN FARM
• NATURAL GROWN SOYBEAN PRODUCT
• DIET WORK "AND OUT"
• FULL LIQUOR LICENSE
• OPEN 7 DAYS
253-7835 or 253-2813
62 Main Street, Amherst

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK
Where do you see yourself this summer?
Choose A or B?

A. Hiking a trail with a mountain goat as you hike through snow capped glacier peaks?
B. Commuting in bumper to bumper traffic?

A. Rowing your new best friend under the "Big Sky"
B. Spending the summer with the same old crowd?

A. Viewing millions of stars & the northern lights on a clear, cool August night?
B. Spending hot & humid summer nights next to an air conditioner?

If you answered "A" to any of the above, choose a summer in the "Last Best Place".

St. Mary Lodge & Resort
(Glacier Park's Finest)
We will be interviewing in Boston Tuesday February 15th for our 2000 summer season.
Call (800) 368-3689 today to schedule an interview.
Visit us at www.glcpark.com

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount 18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441 Discount

Featuring "Busch & Busch Light" $12.49 30/PK

Bacardi Rum $15.99 1.75 Liter

Dewars White Label Scotch $15.99 750 ml.

New Amsterdam • Black & Tan, Amber, India Pale Ale $4.19 12 Pk bots.

MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK

MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE $18.99 case bots

"Sierra Nevada" Pale Ale...$11.49 12/Pk bots.

"Salter Home" White Zinfandel $3 750 ml.
"Meridian" Chardonnay, Cab. Sauvignon, Merlot $8 750 ml.
"Beringer" Founders Estate...Chardonnay, Cab. Sauvignon, Sauv. Blanc Merlot $8 750 ml.
Case Discounts available on these!!

Vodka 80° EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 lt

Check Out RUSSELL'S In Door Specials!

• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

Taste of the town: where to get breakfast

By Justin Wong
Collegian Correspondent

Whatever your endeavors may be, you much like thousands of other students, start your day with high-octane caffeinated beverages and perhaps a little something something to nibble on. I am kicking of this first installment of Taste of the Town to set you straight for your mornings.

First up to bat are some local Amherst haunts that you all know...

Amherst Center

Black Sheep Deli
Hours of operation: Monday-Thursday 7-8p.m.
Friday & Saturday 7a.m.- 9p.m.
Sunday 7-5p.m.-8p.m.
Contact at: 253-3442
What they've got: Sandwiches $2.75-4.95
Salads, Breads, Pastries, $1.00-$3.95
Smoked fish
Coffee- small $0.81 large $1.19
Flavors& Cappuccinos: small $1.45 large $2.14

Decor: Lounging, wood finish booths and tables good for quick lunch dates and what have you. The environment is rustic and comfortable.

Perks: If you ask for your sandwich on two dinner rolls you get more food for the same money. Good service, friendly people and fresh food.

Money Shot: Fresh and healthy alternatives to cal zones and pizza that won't break the bank or your lower intestinal track.

Claudia's Cafe
Hours of Operation: Monday-Thursday 7a.m.-9p.m.
Friday & Saturday 8a.m.-6p.m.
Sunday 8a.m.-6p.m.
Contact at: 549-7122
What they've got: Salads $4.95
Soups cup $2.18; bowl $3.19
Sandwiches- upwards of $5.00
Bagel with cream cheese $0.95-$1.45
Cake slices, scones, muffins
Coffee- upwards of $1.50
Lattes & Cappuccinos small $2.14; large $2.62

Decor: spacious and low-key. This is where you hang to do lunch and/or homework. Some people just chill.

Perks: grand assortment of fresh cookies and cakes. Sugar Jones is housed in the basement. You can't go wrong if you have a sweet tooth.

Money Shot: Gallery space for artists. Check out GirlsEyeView, which runs until Feb. 28th.

RAKA STORIES/ COLLEGIAN

Rao's Coffee Roasting Company
Contact at: 253-9441
What they've got: everything to do with coffee and tea.
Prices- don't worry it's worth your money.
Decor: Swank cafe with reasonable setting and ambiance
Perks: Dope coffee and tea available in French presses.
Money Shot: Fresh brewed and fresh roasted coffee served to perfection.

On Campus

The Blue Wall
Hours of Operation: Monday-Friday 7a.m.-11p.m.
Saturday & Sunday 7a.m.-10p.m.
Contact at: 545-1919
What they've got: Coffee $1.05-$1.50
Muffins, Cookies, ice cream
Bagel and cream cheese- $1.45
Décor: Stagnant institutional drab with lots of tables and funky odor.
Perks: Big screen TV so you can watch "the game" or the Simpsons.
Money shot: Open the latest (and on weekends) with reasonable coffee.

People's Market
Hours of Operation: Monday & Friday 8:45-4:00PM
Tuesday-Thursday 8:45-5:00PM
Contact at: 545-2000
What they've got: Bagels & cream cheese-$1.05
Juices, Juices & more juices
Sandwiches-$2.65-$3.15
Foodstuffs
Decor: just a bit above institutional. You will find funky characters like Mister Mustard and paper cameras.
Perks: Surround sound system with the full range of music that hits the 18-35 demographic. Occasionally live DJ sets. Students with great attitudes and bodies.
Money shot: Students working for students in a nonprofit small business.

Guild honors year's best

By Susan King
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD – Screenplays for American Beauty, The Sixth Sense, The Cider House Rules and The Insider are among the nominees for the Writers Guild of America Awards for films announced by the WGA Wednesday.

The nominations for outstanding achievement in writing for the screen during 1999 are divided into two categories: best screenplay written directly for the screen and best screenplay based on material previously produced or published.

Nominees for best screenplay written directly for the screen are: American Beauty, written by Alan Ball; Being John Malkovich, written by Charlie Kaufman; Magnolia, written by Paul Thomas Anderson; The Sixth Sense, written by M. Night Shyamalan; and The Three Kings, screenplay by David O. Russell, story by John Ridley.

Last month, Ball received a Golden Globe for his darkly satirical screenplay and Kaufman received the Los Angeles Film Critics Association and the National Society of Film Critics honors for his funny, quirky examination of people's quest for fame. These are the first produced screenplays written by Ball and Kaufman, who had previously worked on TV sitcoms.

Kaufman says when he wrote the script he had no expectations that the real John Malkovich would even read it, much less co-star in the film. He really can't explain why he chose the actor as the subject of the movie.

"I have never had a good answer," he says. "It was a kind of intuitive thing. I felt he was the right person. It was a funny idea, but it wasn't a jokey idea because he is such a great and mysterious actor."

Nominees for best screenplay based on material previously published are: The Cider House Rules, screenplay by John Irving, based on his novel; Election, screenplay by Alexander Payne and Jim Taylor, based on the novel by Tom Perrotta; The Insider, written by Eric Roth and Michael Mann, based on the article by Man Who Knew Too Much, by Marie Brenner; October Sky, screenplay by Lewis Colick, based on the book Rocket Boys, by Homer H. Hickam Jr.; and The Talented Mr. Ripley, screenplay by Anthony Minghella, based on the novel by Patricia Highsmith.

■ Trax

continued from page 6

Hearing the soundtrack to the film really is an awful experience.

When I first picked up the CD I thought to myself that the soundtrack was completely worthless, with no points at all to mention to a group of college students, and it has no place being in this paper but then I looked at the tracks.

Amidst the instrumental songs performed by classical music artists that I've never heard of, is the song "Croon Spoon." The name "Croon Spoon" is odd enough, but it's what it said underneath the name of the song that really caught my eye. The line in small italic letters says, "Performed by Eddie Vedder and Susan Sarandon." Yes, you read that right. Eddie Vedder and Susan Sarandon. I immediately blurted out to the five people in my room, "What the hell. I think this says that there's a song on here by Eddie Vedder and Susan Sarandon." After an eruption of laughter, cheers began to throw the CD in, and what we heard next, beat Jim Carrey's proclamation of the most annoying sound in the world" from Dumb and Dumber. All I could picture was Eddie standing on stage in a blue tuxedo with a martini in one hand, and the microphone swinging in the other, while trying to sing even though he was clearly drunk. And who'd ever decided that Susan Sarandon needed to sing, let alone with one of the greatest rock stars of the last decade, should give up their career as a record producer, and go back to flipping burgers at Hardees where they belong.

Here are a few tips for a variety of people. For anyone who has twelve bucks to spare; don't buy this soundtrack. For Eddie Vedder; instead of Susan Sarandon, I know someone else you can sing with, they're called Pearl Jam, get in the studio! Oh yeah, and if you have free time on Saturday, fly down to Vegas, I hear Scott Weiland will be doing a duet with Meryl Streep.

F
(Ryan Benharris)

BOWERY ELECTRIC
Lushlife
Beggars Banquet

Bowery Electric is a New York-based outfit that is comprised of Lawrence Chandler and Martha Schwendener. Their slow, minimalist electronica sound is comprised of Schwendener's vocals, Chandler's programming, samples, and scratches, as well as additional bass, guitar, keyboard and string arrangements from both members. The group's previous releases include their self-titled 1995 debut, 1996's Beat, and a remix album titled Vertigo that appeared in 1997. This latest release, Lushlife, features a heavy electronic music influence – an influence that was introduced on Beat and is now being expanded upon. This is the first Bowery Electric album I have experienced, and from what I can tell the decision to incorporate electronic elements more heavily is definitely a wise choice.

While Bowery Electric's sound is undoubtedly interesting, it is definitely not for everyone. This is not the type of in-your-face techno of Fatboy Slim or the bangin' house of Basement Jaxx. Think along the lines of the slower Underworld songs and you will get an idea of their sound. Schwendener's hypnotic, otherworldly voice coupled with the lonely strings and droning samples could produce some unexpected nap time, but you'll be too busy bobbing your head to the tight beats in the background to ever fall asleep. The snare drum and base are the backbone of many of the songs, and they contrast nicely with the slower pace of the strings, vocals, and samples. One addition to the packaging I would have liked to see is a lyric sheet, since while the vocals are for the most part easy to understand, they are very mysterious. If you are like me you can't usually decipher the meaning of a song without looking at it written down, and some of the odd lyrics that Schwendener repeats during the tracks are compelling and inspire interest in to learning their true meaning. "You've been saved...this time" ("Saved") or "You're gone like a freedom fighter" ("Freedom Fighter") are just begging for an explanation. One final note: this is night music. I don't know exactly why, but throw this in your CD player at night, during a car ride or just lounging around the house, and it is considerably more engaging. This is top-quality music to get your relax-on to, and I can't recommend it enough. A
(Michael Delano)

Venice
Spin Art
Vanguard Records

It takes quite a bit of work in the world of music to try to prove to listeners that when you're still trying to make a name for yourself, you don't have to be a 16-year-old cheerleader from the Mickey Mouse Club. Venice is a band that formed over seventeen years ago, and even though time may not be on their side, they still seem to have strong talent.

Venice consists of cousins Kipp and Michael Lennon, and their respective brothers Pat and Mark Lennon. In 1997, Venice released their first album, Born and Raised, to a lot of international success, and this is what they hope to match with their new release in the United States.

Spin Art is the second release from Venice, the four-part harmony group from California. The soft vocals, mixed with some pretty good harmonica work, make Spin Art extremely easy to listen to. Most of the CD, especially the first track on the album, "The Man You Think I Am," is very reminiscent of Fleetwood Mac and The Eagles. The one element that the band tries to stress more than any other is the importance of strong vocals in music. The sound that stands out the most is the variety of voices that are contributed to each song. Though it is clear that Venice will not be the next Dave Matthews Band, they seem to be humble in their attempts to bring music to the world. Spin Art comes complete with a cover of Fleetwood Mac's "Landslide," and the design of both the CD and case cover includes a variety of colors and paints that make it look absolutely terrific. If you're into soft rock, then the relaxing sound of Venice's Spin Art is definitely for you. B+
(Ryan Benharris)

Sister Seven
Wrestling Over Tiny Matters
Arista Records

Say what you will about guitar skill and sonic texture; in the end, a band will sink or swim largely on the talent of its singer. For that fact alone, Sister Seven has a lot going for it in the considerable abilities of front woman Patrice Pike. That the music itself is wonderfully crafted and emotive only seals the deal.

Pike's voice is soulful, deep, soaring, visceral, inviting, angry, caressing; in short, it's exactly what any particular song needs it to be. The thirteen songs on Wrestling Over Tiny Matters are mature, meaty tunes that combine the best of alternative rock with elements of funk, folk, and soul. The stylistic range displayed across the album is impressive, but no matter how many chances a song may take, it always sounds distinctly like a Sister Seven song.

The album opens with the searing guitar riffs of "Fallen Angel," but doesn't sit still for long. "Under the Radar" and "The Only Thing That's Real" are softer, more typical rock tunes, but "Elijah" takes a sharp turn with its crawling drum beat and chilling, spartan guitar work, slowly escalating with thicker, more dire guitars. Track nine, the excellent "Nobody Knows," begs comparison to TLC. Wrestling Over Tiny Matters is an excellent collection of songs from a band that currently sits (unjustly, I should add) barely on the outside of mainstream media attention. A-
(David Troupes)

PRIMER 55
Introduction to Mayhem
Island Def Jam

Primer 55 is just below average is nearly every facet imaginable. Their sound is reminiscent of a Machine Head-influenced Limp Bizkit. This would be tolerable if M11 didn't just recently incorporate a hip-hop sound to their music, which, in terms of quality, blows Primer 55 away completely. The music is just basically heavy riffs, ridiculous lyrics, and some completely useless DJ scratches. This is the rap-metal that gives rap-metal a bad name. Of course, the now-obligatory guest appearances are in full effect with M.C.U.D. from the comparably brilliant rap-rock act Hedlp.e.) making an appearance on "Set It Off" and DJ Kilmore from Incubus scratching on a number of tracks. I love Hedlp.e.) and Incubus, and both members should be embarrassed to have contributed to this album. Further down the laundry list of negative aspects is the packaging, which is just cheap and looks thrown together. Some ridiculous pictures of girls beating each other up or parading around in bikinis and skull masks may have some deeper meaning, but I haven't thought hard enough to find it.

Primer 55 also seems content to continue a certain trend in metal music that has shown up as of late. I've got news for everyone, thirty seconds of someone breathing heavily or of some ridiculous samples with a drumbeat does not constitute a song! Many are guilty of this as of late, with some being meaningful intros or instrumentals and others being the aforementioned trash, but this practice just needs to end in my opinion. Moving on, what kind of lame title is Introduction to Mayhem? It's reminiscent of Tommy Lee's most recent gift of crap to the music world, his band Methods of Mayhem, and I don't even want to talk about them. Now, enough of the negative aspects, and believe me I could go on. On the positive side, "Loose" and "Set It Off" do seem to have some potential in a live setting, and I would assume their live show is halfway decent since they managed to get a record deal. Otherwise, I don't view this CD as preferable to a kick in the crotch, therefore if I ever get to meet Primer 55 I am sure they will recite the title to one of their songs for me, namely "The Big F You." D-
(Michael Delano)

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10. always
75 n. pleasant st. amherst 256 0733
145 main st. northampton 586 6155

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?
If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom tooth research study. Your wisdom tooth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.
For more information call:
SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outside Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569
SCIREX

Sweet Specials
For Your Valentine
Cash& Carry Specials
Special 1: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar $9.95
Special 2: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Baloon $13.95
Special 3: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Baloon Teddy Bear $21.95 plus many other Valentine Arrangements & Cut Flowers Available
Open & Delivering:Sunday, Feb 13th Monday, Feb 14th
Knowles Flower Shop
172 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-3805

Thinking About Being TESTED FOR HIV/AIDS
Anonymous HIV Testing for all UMASS students
Please call the Anonymous HIV Testing Phoneline at 577-5126. Educators can schedule an appointment, answer questions and help you decide if testing is right for you at this time.

University Directories
Sales & Marketing Internships
The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market official directories locally, selling advertising space to area businesses in specific college markets. Earnings average $3000.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!
We will be attending the University of Massachusetts Job Fair on February 16 and interviewing on February 17. Be sure to stop by our display table. Call 1-800-743-5556 ext. 157 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply.
University Directories
PO Box 8830 • Chapel Hill, NC 27515
(800) 743-5556 • Fax: (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

WORK MAGIC.
Ready to Live, Learn and Earn in the most magical place on earth? Then become part of the Walt Disney World College Program. It's your opportunity to spend a semester making friends, making magic and making a difference.
TO GET THERE, GET HERE
February 17, 2000
7:00 pm
School of Management
Room 120
STOP BY AND DISCOVER A WORLD OF OPPORTUNITIES AT DISNEY.
www.wdwcollegeprogram.com
COLLEGE PROGRAM

Fu Manchu matures on new album, King

By Anthony Camara
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – In 1969, Christopher Lee camped it up in The Castle of Fu Manchu as the sinister villain with the impossibly long mustache, mediocre make-up and foolproof plan for global domination.

The Southern California band named after the Mandarin megalomaniac has no such fiendish plot for taking over the world. Truth be told, all Fu Manchu wants to do is take your world and rock it.

Since 1990, the Fu's have been grinding out the type of no-novelty, '70s-style rock that was probably running through your parents' heads when they were sitting in detention.

Big riffs compliment tight drumming and the occasional cowbell, with lead singer Scott Hill's oft twice-tracked voice filtered through a wall of feedback and buzz.

While bands such as Monster Magnet have capitalized on '70s elements more as musical novelties rather than blueprints, Fu Manchu have dropped their guitars to D and approached song writing just as their heroes did decades ago.

"All the music we write is internalized. We go into a rehearsal spot and play the riffs," said bassist Brad Davis in a recent phone interview.

"We don't sit out in the desert with a guitar and an amp, frying on acid or anything stupid like that," he continued.

Just one listen will reveal Mountain and Foghat as influences, but when you add to the Fu formula lyrics which draw from a wealth of cult films, UFO phenomena and muscle cars, the band is unmistakably Black Sabbath gone day-glo.

King of the Road, due in stores Feb. 15, continues the Fu legacy with some of the band's strongest offerings to date.

"Hell on Wheels" rumbles like a convoy of Harleys, and the Fu's unlikely cover of "Freedom of Choice," originally by nerd-popsters Devo, even sounds tough and road-tested. Recorded in Palm Desert, the album feels loose and fun, without sacrificing Fu Manchu's trademark insistence on air-tight song structure and repetition.

Chalk that up to the Palm Desert sessions, which were filled with biker flick breaks and trips to the pool.

"Recording in Palm Desert influenced the album by not influencing it," Davis said. "It's contrived when you're in L.A., trying to be mellow while you're recording an album. But out there, all you need to worry about is getting in there and writing the songs."

Although Fu Manchu's back catalog is impressive in its own sludgy, proto-metal way, the newer songs of King of the Road speak best for the band's musical evolution, which can be seen more as the result of lineup changes rather than shifting influences. The arrival of Ex-Kyuss drummer Brant Bjork and new guitarist Bob Balch has heralded a cleaner, harder Fu sound.

"We know each other and our habits, and what we're capable of a lot more than when we did 'The Action Is Go,'" Davis said. "We've done a lot more touring, and we're much more focused ... this lineup has existed for three years. To me, the songs aren't like collections of riffs anymore, and all the songs don't sound the same. When I listen to the older albums, there are no peaks and valleys."

COURTESY OF THE STAR ARTISTS

This is band camp

John Manning will join pianist Nikki Stoia next Tuesday for a concert in UMass' Bezanson Recital Hall

■ history

continued from page 5

be nothing else to watch, and they could pull in a huge percentage of the viewers. However, there is always the underlying question of who is watching television during the summer, and as a cardinal rule, ratings are always down, but the networks are so desperate for something, that it seems that they will try almost anything.

During sweeps period, it is vitally important to keep viewers informed of what will be happening. Nothing is more evident than the current controversy that is developing over the upcoming episode of "The Simpsons" that is set to air this Sunday night. About two months ago, FOX thought it would be the greatest strategy ever to release to the media that someone was going to die on the popular cartoon. They figured that it would be a huge mystery, much like their "Who shot Mr. Burns" ordeal that took place over both May and September sweeps periods a few weeks ago. However, when there was a glitch in their superior plan, and someone leaked out that the death would be to Maude Flanders, FOX looks like they don't have it all together. Because of this whole ordeal, the network will suffer. "The Simpsons" will not gain as high ratings that they had intended on.

The best thing about sweeps period is the quality of the shows that are on. "Friends," "ER" and "The X-Files" all boast shows that are not to be missed. For die-hard fans of certain series, this is the time for you to get your money's worth. What's bad about sweeps week is that it also becomes a standard to which networks run all of their new episodes. There's a good chance that there will not be a new episode of certain series again, until the few weeks before May sweeps period. It certainly cheapens the thrill of a new episode, if it ends with the admission that there will be a repeat next week.

The underlying truth is that sweeps is simply a marketing tactic that we will all surrender to. With a complicated web of advertisers and television heads bonding together to form something that the general public can never understand, the only thing that we can do is sit back quietly and watch everything develop in a very specific systematic order.

The Daily Collegian
would like to know if you'll be our Valentine.
Because we love you.

Caffeine victimizes stunned Georgetown

By Jennie Kim
The Hoya (Georgetown U.)

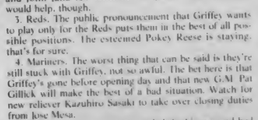
(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – A drug pervades the Georgetown community, and, like amphetamines or other dangerous narcotics, it increases your heartbeat, breathing, and metabolic rate.

Taken in large doses, it begets adverse effects and severely endangers your health; however, despite these harmful consequences, this drug, caffeine, fails to acquire the status of a "danger drug," because moderate consumption of caffeine shows no signs of life-threatening side effects.

The problem is that caffeine consumers can either overdose or become addicted and experience withdrawal. Caffeine addiction, traditionally experienced by mature adults, now also penetrates the lives of young adults: Georgetown students, stereotypically driven perfectionitists, are becoming increasingly dependent on caffeine for good grades, peak athletic performance and mental alertness. From ordering at Uncommon Grounds to purchasing over-the-counter caffeine pills, members of Georgetown are gradually and unsuspectingly becoming caffeine addicts.

Uncommon Grounds employees said all types of customers come to the coffee shop, but being located near the medical buildings, this cafe sees many medical students come in. Although many students ingest caffeine, caffeine consumers on campus are typically motivated by athletics, late night studying, attempting to combat hangovers and dieting. The Corp estimates that the coffee shop serves 1,300 people daily, according to their Web site. The coffee shop's peak hours are from 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. on weekdays, and the busiest business days are during exam weeks. The early morning shift accrues profit from students on their way to first period.

Even though the shop offers coffees, mochas, espresso drinks, teas and hot chocolate, coffee remains the most popular drink, and it also contains the most caffeine. The chai latte and espresso drinks contain about 80 percent of coffee's caffeine, and tea contains the least amount. These facts indicate that during study hours or before attending classes, studious pupils need their caffeine fix to prepare their minds for the absorption of information.



The reasons for the attraction to this drug lie in the short-term effects of caffeine often referred to as a "lift." The physiological effects start 15 to 45 minutes after ingestion, and, within 30 to 60 minutes post-consumption, the central nervous system usually achieves maximum stimulation. The body will experience an increase in heartbeat, respiration, basal metabolic rate and the production of stomach acid and urine. The "lift" combats drowsiness and fatigue while encouraging rapid and sustained intellectual activity and improved performance of manual tasks.

CollegeClub.com
it's all U.™
No porcupines, living, dead or otherwise, were harmed in the creation of this advertisement.

Saving hockey in the White North

Once upon a time, not all that long ago, a small game called hockey thrived in Canada. Young boys played in the streets and on frozen ponds, growing up to be superstars and heroes to another generation of youngsters. Fans clamored to fill such hallowed buildings as the Montreal Forum and Maple Leaf Gardens. And a team from Montreal went on to become one of the most devastating dynasties in all of sports. Ever. So what's happened to it all? Where has the game of hockey, once so deeply rooted in the Canadian culture, gone? While America has seen baseball go through a rebirth, and we can now once again cling to "our" game, Canada has lost its beloved pastime in the dark shadow of the almighty dollar.

Last Thursday, Ottawa Senators owner Rod Bryden announced that he is looking to sell the team, a move that could land them in the states. He pointed his finger at the Canadian government for a lack of commitment over establishing tax breaks that would financially benefit the team. According to reports on ESPN.com, Bryden has approached three levels of the Canadian government, saying he needs help to compete with the U.S. teams, which pay lower taxes. Bryden said he is looking for between $2.47 million and $3.3 million a year from the federal government to ease the U.S.-Canada dollar exchange rate.

In response to this request, and similar pleas from other owners, the Canadian government has come up with what it thinks is a solution to the problem: establishing sports lottery-licensing fees. This plan states that those provinces with an NHL club pay a licensing fee to the teams, in effect because they are being bet on in sports lotteries. Ok, let me get this one straight. The citizens of Alberta – a province which has two NHL teams (Edmonton and Calgary) – would have to pay money out of their own pockets to support the two teams, because they are franchises that are bet on? Have I missed something? Has Pete Rose given up on baseball and somehow gotten himself elected into the Canadian government?

For a brief moment, I can sympathize with the NHL teams here. Basically, through this deal, they are saying, "Hey, you guys are profiting off of us, now we want some if it back." If you're involved in an organization that's making money for other people, there's certainly nothing wrong with wanting a piece of the action. However, this isn't the way to go about things. The intentions are good, but the method is all wrong.

Betting is a sticky situation in the world of sports, and the idea of it somehow being connected to the welfare of a team doesn't sit well. No, it's not directly involved, but the fact that these folks will have to pony up some sort of cash because they live in the area of a sports enterprise that betters profit on is, for lack of a better word, shady. There are other ways to go about this, methods that steer clear of the betting world entirely.

The Canadian government could install a tax into the existing system that would have all citizens contribute financially to the teams. This method, while it would have its drawbacks, would at least stand more morally upright than the current proposition. Also, the financial burden would not lie squarely in the hands of those living in the vicinity of the team. Having the cost dispersed amongst the entire country would be a better deal for all involved parties. No one province would have to shoulder the responsibility of keeping a team afloat. I would like to believe that the Canadian people would support something like this, even if it were employed as a temporary fix.

If this course of action they are planning to take for some reason hits a dead end, and they ignore my idea of a tax system, there's always Plan B: Harry Sinden. What, you ask, does Hardball Harry have to do with any of this? It's easy. Sinden has, for years now, run the tightest ship in all of professional sports, notoriously underpaying his players. If there is anyone that can operate a team under the heavy Canadian tax laws and still come out in the green, it's this tightwad. Desperate times call for desperate measures, so the saying goes, and right now the game of hockey in Canada is against the wall, blindfolded and puffing away. Let's hope something gets done.

Marty McSorley has become the latest catch in the Boston Bruins' quest to sign every available veteran free agent in the league. The Bruins, who in the off-season struck gold with Dave Andreychuk, and are expecting big things out of Joe Murphy, signed the 36-year-old defenseman on Tuesday. McSorley will never be known for his offensive game, but he will give the Bruins a big body to put on the ice. The question is, what else does he bring to the table? He has two Stanley Cup rings, so the experience factor is a plus. And seeing as the Bruins' best fighter carries the tag of assistant coach now, perhaps it's a good thing that the team now has somebody who can throw a decent right now and then. Other than that, the jury is out until he laces up the skates and produces something that is worth the ink it took to sign him.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist

Playing the MLB numbers game

Winners and losers of the winter deals

By Jon Heyman
The Sporting News

Not everyone can be a big winner. There must be losers, too. That's the way it was this winter, which was highlighted by some real ingenuity (a four-team trade) and some unusual movement among real stars through trades (though the week began with Ken Griffey, Jr. still in Seattle).

The Big Winners:

1. Rookies. The new management tandem, Dan O'Dowd and Josh Byrnes, could write a book on how to remake a team in 100 days. Virtually nothing stayed the same, and we'll assume that's a good thing. Plus, they saved $10 million on their projected payroll.

2. A's. Coming off his big 1999, G.M. Billy Beane got Omar Olivares at a bargain $8 million over two years after re-signing Randy Velarde ($6.45 million, two years) and John Jaha ($6 million, two years). Jim Edmonds would help, though.

3. Reds. The public pronouncement that Griffey wants to play only for the Reds puts them in the best of all possible positions. The esteemed Pokey Reese is staying, that's for sure.

4. Mariners. The worst thing that can be said is they're still stuck with Griffey, not so awful. The bet here is that Griffey's gone before opening day and that new G.M. Pat Gillick will make the best of a bad situation. Watch for new reliever Kazuhiro Sasaki to take over closing duties from Jose Mesa.

5. Tigers. They desperately needed the big guy and had no chance but to overpay for Juan Gonzalez. Hideo Nomo at $1.25 million is a steal.

6. Indians. Here comes a veteran ace pitcher, finally. The guess is that Chuck Finley will be even better outside of Anaheim.

7. Phillies. The winners of the Andy Ashby sweepstakes could lose the war if Curt Schilling doesn't return to full health after arm surgery. Mike Jackson helps, as does Bobby Abreu's $14.25 million, three-year deal.

8. Cubs. Who'd have thought Terry Adams could bring them Ismael Valdes and Eric Young?

9. Yankees. They kept David Cone, and they'll probably keep Derek Jeter for seven more years at $118.5 million, which, by today's standards, is quite reasonable. George Steinbrenner needs to stop stalling and sign that deal now.

10. Red Sox. In the only trade involving two Everetts, the Red Sox got the better of it, adding clutch Carl for minor league shortstop Adam (plus pitching prospect Greg Miller). A potentially great offseason was dimmed by Tom Gordon's elbow injury and Bret Saberhagen's shoulder injury.

The Big Losers:

1. Padres. Did Kevin Brown scare them from ever competing again?

2. White Sox. Talked about Alex Rodriguez but came up with Cal Eldred. Ouch.

3. Rangers. G.M. Doug Melvin got what he could for Gonzalez. But no matter what Boras says, we can't see left-handers Darren Oliver and Kenny Rogers making the difference against their nemesis, the Yankees.

4. Diamondbacks. They didn't do much except overpay for Tony Womack.

5. Pirates. They were pissed by Griffey, a Donora, PA, native who was so disgusted thinking about a year in Pittsburgh he called off all talks. Plus, Wil Cordero isn't worth $4 million for three years.

Leading Lady

Freshman sensation Jen Butler will look to return to the UMass line up in a big way when the Minutewomen hit the road this weekend.

■ minutemen

continued from page 16

ly, because they got three guys that... if they get it going, they're hard to guard. I thought we did a great job of always being in their faces."

"If you don't, you're in trouble," Flint said, responding to questions about his objective.

For a while, it looked as though the Explorers would go blow for blow with the Minutemen. With the score knotted at 15 with 8:31 to play in the first half, the Minutemen put their games in fifth gear, scampering into the locker room on the tail end of a 22-5 run. Kirkland had 12 in that span and before La Salle could take a breath, the deficit was 17 at 37-20.

"It was [15-15] and they just upped their aggressiveness," Morris said. "You can't hang your head, you got to get back and play defense. We just sort of gave up."

The Explorers would cut it to 14 early at 42-28 with a long ball by Butler, his first points of the game, but an 18-4 run capped by Crooks finished La Salle off early. The lead would grow to as big as 35.

While Kirkland did his work inside, Monty Mack continued on his steady pace, hitting for 20 points on 9-of-17 shooting. It is the 12th time in 22 games in which the senior sharpshooter has reached the 20-point plateau.

After a three-game homestand, the Minutemen now pack their bags, playing five of their final seven games away from Amherst. The next test lies in Cincinnati, where UMass dances with Xavier, who is 9-1 at the Gardens this season. UMass, which plays considerably better on the road, comes in with a 5-3 record in its opponents' gymnasiums.

"On the road, they just take the bunker mentality," Flint said. "We don't put our heads down, we just keep playing hard because you know everybody's against you. We know everybody's against us, so it's just us."

UMass 82, La Salle 48

at Mullins Center
Amherst, MA

UMASS (12-10)	Min	M-A	M-A	O-D-T	A	F	PTS
Chris Kirkland	35	10-19	4-5	4-4-8	2	2	28
Mike Babul	36	2-5	1-2	3-3-6	6	2	6
Kiwana Rhymer	19	2-6	2-2	2-2-4	1	3	6
Monty Mack	31	9-17	0-0	4-2-6	3	0	20
Shannon Crooks	32	6-9	0-0	1-2-3	3	1	12
Anthony Oates	10	2-4	0-0	2-0-2	0	1	4
Jonathan DePina	17	1-2	0-0	1-3-4	0	2	3
Harnell Blizzard	4	1-1	0-0	0-0-0	0	1	2
Winston Smith	1	0-1	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Dwayne Early	2	1-2	0-0	0-0-0	0	1	2
Micah Brand	11	0-0	1-2	0-1-1	0	1	1
TEAM				1-4-5
TOTALS	200	33-66	10-16	18-24-42	15	16	82

FG%: .500. FT%: .625. 3-point goals: 8-12, .500 (Crooks 2-3, Mack 2-4, Babul 1-1, DePina 1-2, Smith 0-1, Early 0-1, Blizzard-Rhyme 1-2, Kirkland 2, Blizzard 2, Crooks). Turnovers: 10 (Babul 3, Mack, Crooks, Oates, DePina, Early, Rhyme 1). Assists: 14 (Kirkland 4, Babul 3, Mack 3, Crooks 2, DePina 2). Technical fouls: none.

LA SALLE (9-12)	Min	FG M-A	FT M-A	REB O-D-T	A	F	PTS
Xavier Thomas	36	4-10	3-6	2-5-7	0	3	11
Rasual Butler	34	5-11	0-0	1-2-3	0	1	11
James Jordan	20	2-3	2-3	3-1-4	1	2	6
Julian Blanks	32	1-5	0-0	0-1-1	1	2	3
Donnie Carr	36	7-16	0-0	0-3-3	5	3	16
Mike Sabbatham	4	0-0	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Dwayne Jones	4	0-0	1-2	0-0-0	0	1	1
Alexander Pavlovic	9	0-2	0-0	0-0-0	0	2	0
Jesse Wilson	9	0-2	0-0	2-0-2	0	1	0
Mike Polhetsky	4	1-1	0-0	1-0-1	0	1	2
Garrett Bragg	11	1-1	0-0	2-0-2	0	1	3
TEAM				0-2-2
TOTALS	200	19-52	6-15	14-14-28	7	17	48

FG%: .366. FT%: .400. 3-point goals: 4-15, .267 (Carr 2-7, Blanks 1-3, Butler 1-4, Thomas 0-1, Bruckert-Wells 0, Butler, Blanks-Polhetsky, Jordan 0-1). Turnovers: 20 (Butler 7, Thomas 5, Blanks 3, Sabbatham-Jones, Polhetsky, Bragg, Blanks 1, Thomas, Butler, Jordan, Wilson). Technical fouls: none.

Attendance: 4,772

SCORE BY PERIODS	1st	2nd	TOTAL
UMass	37	45	82
La Salle	20	28	48

UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint had reason to grin as his team shellacked visiting La Salle, 82-48, last night at the Mullins Center

■ defense

continued from page 16

we just kept playing," said Flint. The UMass offense slowly resurrected itself and came away with a 37-20 lead at the half. It was more of the same in the second half with the Minutemen outdueling the Explorers 45-28.

The Explorers have straight jump shooters like Donnie Carr, Victor Thomas and Rasual Butler, players who can create their own space and find the rim in traffic. Their offense has no personality because it is so disorganized and undisciplined. More often it was one La Salle player going one-on-one rather than passing to find the open man.

"We gave into a good defense," said La Salle coach William "Speedy" Morris. "We never got into our offense."

Besides Mack, the Minutemen lack consistency in their outside shooting. Crooks, who fine tunes his game every trip down the floor, went 0-for-9 in the first half against No. 18 Texas only to finish with 17 points. After sitting out last year due to transfer regulations, it's clear that Crooks has the goods to maintain a slot in the starting lineup for the next two years.

Kirkland has developed his game into an athletic slasher in the past year and a half, and is the second-leading scorer with 14.9 points per game.

More often than not, though, the rest of the team lags behind, unable to capitalize on the open shot. Oftentimes it is the offense that is in question. Why can't these guys score enough? Who has the green light and who, if anybody, doesn't?

None of these questions applied last night, however, as UMass drained 50 percent of its shots on 66 attempts from the field against slupps defense. It seemed at times that La Salle simply double teamed whoever had the ball, whoever it was.

Better defense was clearly the key to a Minutemen victory last night, but it needs to be joined with consistent offense for them to name it.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

Jaguars have winning recipe

Jacksonville strikes free agency gold

By Dan Pompei
The Sporting News

While free agency has created more holes than it has patched, the Jaguars have found a way to make the system work to their benefit. In fact, what the Jaguars have done in free agency could serve as a blueprint for other teams.

Jaguars Coach Tom Coughlin and senior vice president of football operations Michael Huyghue play the free-agent game the way Bobby Fischer played chess. They are aggressors, not reactionaries. Kings and queens are protected at all costs, while bishops, knights and pawns only are sacrificed for a greater return. Each move is considered within the context of the whole board.

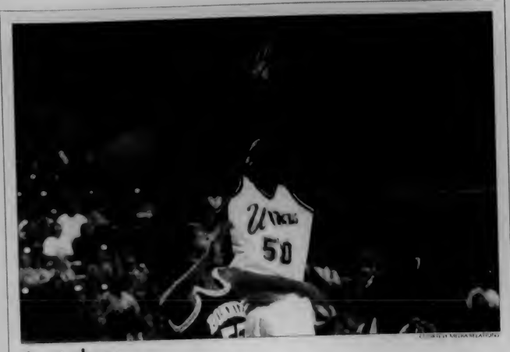
The Jaguars' yearly goal has been to sign three quality free agents from other teams. Last year, for instance, they signed defensive tackle Gary Walker, tight end Kyle Brady and safety Carnell Lake. Some of the Jaguars' best players, such as right offensive tackle Leon Searcy and receiver Keenan McCardell, have been free-agent signees.

This is how the Jaguars do it.

Prepare for every possibility. "They probably spend more time on free agents than any team," Buccaneers player personnel director Jerry Angelo says. "Their attention to detail goes way beyond anybody else's."

The Jaguars study trends, like how much money each team spends on each position. In addition to Coughlin, who pulls the trigger, and Huyghue, who coordinates everything, four staff members – three lawyers and a Ph.D. – devote most of their time to the process, investigating possibilities and running numbers. For each player the Jaguars want to sign, a book is produced that is between 50 and 100 pages in length. It includes psychological profile work on the player, his bargaining history, his agent's history, a study of signing bonuses for his position, grades of comparable players, a comparison of similar deals and a market value analysis.

Additionally, before the Jaguars ever call an agent, they will conduct about 12 hours of in-house, mock negotiations in order to prepare them for everything they may face. "We want to be at least twice as prepared as the agent," Huyghue says.



Be aggressive. The Jaguars have done more on the first day of free agency each year than some teams have done on all the other days combined, making contract offers to players such as Searcy, Walker and now-retired defensive end Jeff Lageman. All of their major offers have been made in the first four days of free agency. They don't allow other teams or agents to influence what happens to their roster; they control it themselves.

"Striking quickly has helped us to set the market and structure better deals," Huyghue says. "A lot of teams don't decide what to do about a free agent until he goes out and gets a better offer. We forestall the competition."

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
FEB. 23-26
ANTHONY'S FAVORITE 65HHH NIKI KNOCKERS
VALENTINES SHOW!!
SUNDAY FEB. 13TH "THE CENTERFOLDS" ALL-MALE REVUE
DOORS OPEN 7PM
BUY TIX NOW - SAVE $!!
18+ SEATING
Now Recruiting Attractive Entertainers to Join Our Team!! NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY. Call Scott Today at 413/532-8868
500 New Ludlow Rd. - South Hadley, MA
CLUBline 413/532-3621
HOTline 413/538-6969
Visit Us At — www.anthonys.net

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Life As You Know It...
InsideGuide.com™
Internship Opportunity
ON-CAMPUS INTERVIEWS THIS WEEK
- Manage/Market/Promote 100% Student-Driven Site
- Call toll-free 1-877-613-4089 for info or visit www.insideguide.com

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

A cut above

Forward Helodie Smith has risen above the ranks of her A-10 competition and put up stellar offensive numbers for the Maroon and White this season.

Belichick will get respect

By Alan Greenberg
The Hartford Courant

FOXBORO, MA – As lets defensive coordinator Bill Belichick worried about Terry Glenn twice a year. As the Patriots head coach, Belichick will worry about Glenn daily.

Except Belichick doesn't intend to worry about Glenn, or any other Patriot. He'll tell them what he expects and they'll do what he tells them or he'll find someone who will.

Easier said than done? Not for Belichick. Like Bill Parcells on a bad day, Belichick is about as subtle as a knife at your throat. He said he doesn't know what Patriots discipline was like during the Pete Carroll era, and it doesn't sound as if he's going to waste a lot of time trying to find out.

But Belichick – who was in weekly phone contact with at least one Patriot last season – sounds as if he has more than an inkling.

"It's important that the players, however you do it, respond to what they're asked to do," Belichick said. "If they're not asked, then maybe you shouldn't expect them to respond."

There are some coaches. Carroll being the latest casualty, who try to treat players as mature, responsible adults, so dedicated to the job that they will police and motivate themselves.

It's not that Carroll's way never works. It worked great for Celtics coach K.C. Jones, an easygoing guy who replaced dictator Bill Fitch, just as easygoing Carroll replaced dictator Bill Parcells. But it only worked for Jones because a basketball team, with far fewer players, is much easier to control than a football team. And when the team is dominated by do-anything-to-win players such as Larry Bird, Kevin McHale, Robert Parish and Dennis Johnson, having a dictator coach can do more harm than good.

But those Celtics were the exception. In most situations, on most pro teams, a disciplinarian coach is a requisite because many athletes can't or won't discipline themselves.

When Parcells was coaching the Jets last season, several of his former Giants – personal favorites of Parcells – came to the Jets' camp to visit him. What did Parcells tell Jets employees when his former players showed up? "Get 'em out of here."

As for Carroll, his failure was emphasized after the Patriots, in what was far and away their worst performance of the season, went to Philadelphia Dec. 19 to play the Eagles (3-11), but lost 24-9, a game the Patriots had to win to keep their playoff hopes alive. Before the media was allowed into the postgame dressing room, Patriots defensive end Willie McGinest screamed at some teammates for their lack of dedication, epitomized by their going out on the town the night before when they should have been resting in their hotel rooms.

Belichick, whose father, Steve, was a scout and assistant coach at the Naval Academy, said discipline in the turn-of-the-century NFL isn't about hair length, dress or jewelry. It's about being on time, staying out of trouble and knowing and executing your on-field assignments.

"In the end," Belichick said, "you're not going to get very far. You might get by for a couple of games, but it'll catch up with you quickly."

If there was a poster boy for the lack of discipline that caught up with the Patriots (8-8), it was Glenn. Mocked by Parcells for the slowness with which he

Turn to NFL page 13

Facing the NHL's great debate

By Larry Wigge
The Sporting News

The question inevitably comes up every time a group of great hockey players gets together as it did last weekend at the All-Star Game in Toronto. Which country produces the best players?

"One of the latest cries is that our game isn't producing enough skilled players," Red Wings left winger Brendan Shanahan says. "Heck, in Canada, there was a government inquiry. 'Why don't we have skilled players?' – after we lost to the U.S. in the World Cup and when we couldn't beat the Czechs in the shootout in the Olympics."

With an increasing emphasis on the skills European players bring to the NHL, Canadians have bristled at suggestions that hockey is no longer their game. But this isn't a contest to see how many Canadians, Czechs, Russians and Americans there are in the NHL. It's how the NHL has managed to blend the skill of the Europeans and the passion of the North Americans to give hockey fans the best of all worlds.

"You can take 100 players from around the world," says Blackhawks director of player personnel Mike Smith, "put them on the ice together, and in 20 minutes, they would manage to pair off with the top 20 players facing one another.

"Hockey may be a sport of 10 to 15 different languages, but when they're on the ice, the players all speak the same language – hockey."

Nowhere is this chemistry on display more beautifully than in Anaheim, Calif., where Canada's Paul Kariya and Finland's Teemu Selanne show us a different game – a game that almost resembles keepaway from the opposition.

"If Paul and Teemu played together when Jari Kurri and I did in the early 1980s," Hall of Famer Wayne Gretzky says with an excited look, "they would have shattered some of our records.

"Give them the room we had to operate and just sit back and enjoy the show."

"A lot of teams have one guy you have to key on," Bruins goalie Byron Dafoe says. "But those two are almost unstoppable. Not too many players can see someone open on the other side of the net, but they do it like it's nothing out of the ordinary."

The Mighty Ducks' recent slump, in fact, may be the result of miscommunication on the part of Coach Craig Hartsburg.

"A couple of weeks ago," Kariya says, "Craig talked to us and gave us a little bit more rope. He said, 'I think you're being a little too conservative. Go out there and do what you do best and make plays. It's given us a new life."

And it puts fans who see the two on the edge of their seats.

Capitals Coach Ron Wilson guided the U.S. team to the gold medal in the 1996 World Cup. Two years later, his American skaters lost out to the Czechs in the Olympics at Nagano, Japan. That same year, Wilson saw a German-born goaltender, a Slovakian goal scorer and a United Nations of other players lead his NHL Capitals to the Stanley Cup finals. He's quick to point out how we should not bicker over who's the best but enjoy seeing the best of the best dazzle us.

"It's clear to me if you're looking for skills, you're looking for a European player," Wilson says. "If you're looking for a guy who can score or grind, you look for a Canadian or American.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Captain Kirk

Chris Kirkland did more than drop a career high in points on the Explorers of La Salle last night; the forward also snared eight rebounds on the evening.

Co-op and Summer Job Fair

Thursday, February 17, 2000
10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Summer and Semester Employment Opportunities for all majors
Undergraduate and Graduate Students

Over 65 Employers are coming to see YOU!

Including:

Boston Globe
CIGNA
Compaq Computers
Fidelity Investments
Filene's/The May Company
General Electric
Johnson & Johnson/Ortho.
Mass Mutual
The May Institute
Phoenix Home Life
Pratt and Whitney
Raytheon
Six Flags New England
US Fish and Wildlife Service
US Food and Drug Administration
Walt Disney World

University of Massachusetts Amherst
Presented by the Campus Career Network
For more information, call 545-2224

■ Turner

continued from page 16

place.

"Jeff has been one of our three best players this season, along with Jeff Blanchard and Nathan Sell," Mallen said.

Jeff has made great strides in his tenure in Amherst, showing steady improvement on a year-to-year basis. The junior played in just 17 games as a freshman, missing 16 games due to a fractured fibula. In spite of the adversity of missing the first half of the season because of injury, he managed to remain in game shape and ended up with four goals and four assists for the season.

As a sophomore he appeared in 34 games. His production more than doubled, as he totaled 22 points on nine goals and 13 assists during that campaign. For his efforts on and off the ice, he was awarded the alternate captainship. While he produced on the ice, he also got the job done in the classroom, as he made the Hockey East All-Academic Team with a GPA that exceeded 3.0.

Mallen also credits Tim for his academics. "They're both very smart hockey-sense wise," he said. "More importantly they're both very smart academic wise."

It may seem like the two brothers have a lot in common, and that they do, but it is also easy to distinguish between them.

"They're cut from the same cloth, but they definitely have their own unique personality," Mallen said.

"I'm more of a controlled hockey player," Jeff said. "I play my position and I try not to be out of position. I can win my face offs, so I'm a pretty good defensive zone face off taker. I'm not an overly aggressive player; I'm not going to knock anybody down."

While Tim sees himself as "an aggressive hockey player," Tim said. "I'm going to be the one to go into the corners and do a little grinding. I like the physical play more."

Jeff and Tim are not the only members of the Turner family that got a chance to play college hockey. Scott, the eldest of the three, played for St. Scholastica College in Duluth, MN. Not only did he play hockey, he traded in is skates for cleats in the spring as a member of the baseball team.

"They had an older brother that played college hockey, and he gave them a 'heads up' as to what they needed to do to be successful," Mallen said. "They both came here very well trained. They were the best kids when they walked through the door, in terms of conditioning."

Just like Scott, both Jeff and Tim were excellent baseball players. As a senior at Nouvel High School, Jeff batted .430 and stole a school-record 72 bases. Tim, not to be outdone, was a first team All-State selection and a USA Today honorable mention All-American.

The Turner brothers don't just bring scoring to the Minuteman lineup; they bring a solid mindset and the will to win.

"I like the competitive nature of both guys. When the game is on the line, both of these guys really come to compete," Mallen said.

As it stands now, if the brothers Turner continue to produce in the manner they have thus far this season, they may very well become the most prolific brother scoring combination in UMass history.

6-foot-2, 205-pound winger Jay Shaw (above) has emerged as UMass' most aggressive forechecker, while Jeff Turner (below, left) has provided the lion's share of the scoring for coach Joe Mallen (below, right)

■ Shaw

continued from page 16

said. "He's more of a defensive player…a good team player who is a competitor who is out there to win every night. A lot of times it's not the guys who are out there to start the games, but the ones who are out there to finish it. When we have a one-goal lead late in the game, Jay will be out there."

Fighting through the pain

While the story of Jay Shaw took a pleasant turn following his freshman year, that wasn't the case for younger brother Justin.

At first, things seemed like they were heading in the right direction for Shaw. Before the 1999-2000 season began the sophomore defenseman was seemingly penciled in as one of the blue-line regulars for the Minutemen.

Unfortunately, Shaw became infected with mononucleosis just before the start of the season. He missed most of the first half of this year with the illness, but returned to the lineup for the Harvard game on Dec. 29.

Since then, the 6-foot-4, 220-pound defenseman has played in four additional games. However, with the emergence of first-year defensemen Samuli Jalkanen, Kelly Sickavish and Luke Duplessis, Shaw has found it tough to crack the lineup on a nightly basis.

"It's been a rough year. I've faced so much adversity in the past two years. I just can't understand it," Shaw said. "I'm trying to play more games and I'm concentrating on becoming a better player. All this adversity will only make me a stronger person."

However, as Justin alluded to, spending time on the sideline was not unfamiliar for No. 4. A year ago, despite steady play whenever in the lineup, injuries forced the freshman to miss 16 games during the season.

Frustrated, but determined to contribute to his club, Shaw still manages to see the light at the end of the tunnel.

"I'm not a quitter. I'm going to keep fighting," he said. "I'll do whatever it takes to be in the lineup."

Mallen also seems optimistic that there will be plenty of good things to come from Shaw in the next few seasons.

"He's been a tough go for him this year. He worked so hard over the summer, then got mono at a critical time," said Mallen of his sophomore defenseman. "But since then he's worked extremely hard in practice and scratched and clawed his way back into the lineup."

"Justin has great size and a great work ethic, plus he is very strong in the corners," added Mallen. "Over time I think that his playing time should increase by a large amount."

A little brother's love

Even though the Shaw's' have spent the better part of their life playing on the same hockey teams, they realize that the opportunity presented to them at UMass will be something that they have long after their playing days are over.

"It's a great experience that will stay with us forever. We're so lucky to be able to go to a Division I school and play hockey side by side," Justin Shaw said.

Added Jay Shaw, "It's awesome when you can play with each other. We played together in high school and in juniors, but to play Division I hockey together is quite an accomplishment."

After all, there aren't too many other players who can make the same claim as the Shaws.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.

✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job

Class Begins:
Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College

Act Now, Space is Limited!

1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

What's Left
Sale
Final Winter Markdowns
50-75% off
Clothes, Shoes & Accessories
downtown Amherst

Collegian Sports @ www.DailyCollegian.com

Valentine's Day is Coming...

Give a special message to the love in your life, friend or crush with a Collegian classified.

Special section in Monday, February 14th issue of the Collegian

1/2 off student rate 10¢ per word, $2.00 min. Spot color free with purchase of heart graphic border.

To purchase stop by the Collegian newsstand next to the UStore

Deadline Thurs., February 10th

You'll Find A "Sweetheart Of A Deal" At LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink and Drive

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4558

■ nfl

continued from page 12

recovered from a hamstring injury as a rookie – "she's getting better," Parcells said – Glenn, the Patriots' leading receiver, was benched for the first quarter of the Nov. 28 game at Buffalo after being nearly three hours late for Thanksgiving Day practice. Glenn, who was cited by police that morning for speeding, was reportedly so drunk at a Thanksgiving Eve charity event he had to be helped into a car.

Before the game against the Colts at Indianapolis Dec. 12, Glenn missed the third, and last, bus taking the Patriots from their hotel to the stadium. Two weeks later, after Glenn, sick with the flu, failed to show for a mandatory Saturday night team meeting, Carroll told him not to bother coming to that day's game against the Bills in Foxboro. Glenn didn't.

Three days later, Glenn left Patriots headquarters while his teammates went to practice. Carroll had just suspended him for the season's final game, saying Glenn had failed to stay in touch with the team's medical staff during the off-days, as NFL policy requires. Glenn denied Carroll's charge.

"From a talent standpoint, Terry Glenn is as good as any receiver I've ever been around," said Belichick, who has been around Keyshawn Johnson the last three years.

Belichick in no way sounds like a man interested in getting rid of Glenn, who was a late addition to the Pro Bowl roster, replacing the injured Tim Brown.

Spring 2000
Eating Disorder Programs

• Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals with Nutritionists, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. Confidentiality Assured
Call 577-5314, General Medicine 2

• Eating Disorder Informational Sessions
Facilitated by a UHS Nutritionist, these drop in sessions will include a video and discussion about eating disorders, where to go for help and learn how to help a friend. Registration is not required for these sessions that will meet 4:00 - 5:30 p.m. on Feb. 14, March 7, April 24, and May 9 in room 302 at University Health Services.

• Residence Hall Workshops
Body Image and Understanding Eating Disorders Workshops are available upon request. Contact your Resident Assistant to schedule a workshop.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS. WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue-well maintained: New Clutch, brakes and tires. 148k, a lot of life left. $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

'85 Toyota Celeca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636.

EMPLOYMENT

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Camp Poyntelle seeks counselors for co-ed Northeast PA, overnight Jewish Federation camp- 3hrs fromNYC-General, Sports, Drama, H2O & Arts. 1-800-973-3866 summers@poyntelle.com or www.poyntelle.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Full time/part time line and prep. cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Office Assistant Needed. Students needed to work afternoon hours. Must have Win. 95/Office 97 experience. Good phone skills. Previous office experience a plus. SALARY $7.00-8.00. Fill out application at Blaisdell House. 545-2842.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campusfundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

Double papasan sofa $125. Good condition. Paid $300+ new. 665-0589.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONALS

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom in 2 bedroom apt looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker 3/4 mi from campus. Effective immediately. Call Allissa 253-4275.

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now: 549-5946.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped offby a retailer? Contact the Student Legal services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $229 rt. Europe $169 ow. Other worldwide destinations cheap. ONLY TERRORISTS GET YOU THERE CHEAPER! Book tickets on-line www.airtech.com or 212-219-7000.

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endless-summertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Volunteers Needed. Are you looking to do community service? For more info call Alpha Phi Omega 545-2068.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, FEB. 10

Meeting – Anyone interested in starting a Rape Awareness and Education group should meet at 2:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. Come ready to share ideas, concerns, and support. Call Tammy at 549-6597 for more information.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 3 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more information.

Auditions – The UMass Theatre Guild at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. This show is open to the public.

FRIDAY, FEB. 11

will be holding play auditions for "Noises Off" at 6:30 p.m. in room 804 of the Campus Center.

Auditions – The UMass Theatre Guild

SATURDAY, FEB. 12

will be holding play auditions for "Noises Off" at noon and 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable will perform improvisational comedy.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for tenors and basses to join. Email Erica at massappeal@mailkitty.com for more information.

Community – Spectrum Magazine is accepting submissions for art, poetry, and prose for the year 2000 issue. Submission forms can be picked up outside the Spectrum office in room 406E of the Student Union until Feb. 12. Call 545-2240 for more information. All undergraduates are welcome to submit.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 15 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gavel to Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 10, 2000

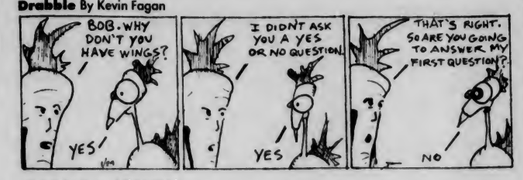
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Beautiful San Juan Skyway		Mystery! "Touching Evil" ⓒ		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope "Grey Matters"		48 Hours "The Perfect Child" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope "Grey Matters"		48 Hours "The Perfect Child" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WGVB	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Whose Line? [Whose Line?		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown ⓒ		Friends ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Popular "Booby Camp" ⓒ		Charmed "Animal Pragmatism"		News		News	Nanny ⓒ
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER "Be Still My Heart" ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Real TV ⓒ		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⓒ				News	Real TV (R) ⓒ	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Ent. Tonight	Friends ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER "Be Still My Heart" ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER "Be Still My Heart" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Stark Raving	Forgotten Fires (In Stereo) ⓒ		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		This Old Hse.	Dra.-Cel	Mystery! "Touching Evil" ⓒ		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown ⓒ	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WGGB	40	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Stark Raving	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⓒ				It's "Knockout" Kissing's in Action (R)		(1998, Drama) Chuck Norris.
WTBS	72	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	ss "Marked for Death" (1990, Drama) Steven Seagal.						Law & Order ⓒ
A&E	43	L.A. Law "The Lung Goodbye"		Law & Order "Legacy" ⓒ		Biography: Lana Turner		Investigative Reports "Inside Polygamy" (R) ⓒ		Newsstand ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline (R)
CNN	42	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	World Today ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ		Newsstand ⓒ		Daily Show	Stein's Money
COM	35	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	ss "A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon" (1988) River Phoenix.		Beyond Bizarre (R)		Stein's Money	Turn Ben	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Whales		On the Inside "Demolitions" (R)		Secrets of the Pharaohs (R)		Secrets of the Pharaohs (R)		On the Inside	"Demolitions" (R)
ESPN	46	Sportscenter ⓒ		College Basketball: Pittsburgh at West Virginia. (Live)				College Basketball: Syracuse at Louisville. (Live)				Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE	24	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) ⓒ		"Dead Innocent" (1995, Suspense) Nancy Beatty.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	45	MTV Jams (In Stereo)		Tom Green (R)	Senseless	Say What Kits TRL (R) (In Stereo)				Celebrity	Senseless	Lyricist	Lovelina (R)
NICK	51	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Thornberrys	Beetlejuice	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons ⓒ	Jeannie	Newhart ⓒ
SCIFI	59	Sliders (In Stereo) ⓒ		ss "Children of the Night" (1992, Horror) Peter DeLuise.				Civil Rights Martyrs: Free at Last				Raging Rivers (R)
TLC	28	Moms Again	Moms Again	Trauma Center		Raging Rivers (R)						ss "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid" (1982, Comedy) Steve Martin.
TNT	54	In the Heat of the Night ⓒ		It's "Carter's Choice" (In Stereo)		ss "Tough Guys" (1986, Comedy) Burt Lancaster. ⓒ				ss "Far and Away" (1992, Drama) Tom Cruise, Nicole Kidman. (In Stereo) ⓒ
USA	55	Baywatch "Deep Trouble" ⓒ		Jag "Defenseless" (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ				ss "Far and Away" (1992, Drama) Tom Cruise, Nicole Kidman. (In Stereo) ⓒ		Fatrack Confessions 2 (R) ⓒ
HBO	60	(4:30) "Robin Hood: Men in Tights"		Children in War (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ				ss "Introducing Dorothy Dandridge" (1999) Halle Berry. TV. ⓒ				ss "The Replacement Killers" (1998) TV. ⓒ	"Club Wild"
MAX	61	(3:00) "Major League II" (1994) TV.		Let Me In, I Hear Laughter		ss "A Gal Called Wanda" (1988, Comedy) John Cleese. TV.				ss "The Replacement Killers" (1998) TV. ⓒ			Linc's (R) ⓒ
SHOW	62	ss "Red Sun" (1972, Western) Charles Bronson. ⓒ				ss "Guarding Tess" (1994) Shirley MacLaine.		"Common Ground" (2000, Drama) Edward Asner, Beau Bridges.



Truth Is Stranger By Scott Morrill

Welcome To The World By Ryan O'Donnell

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Mutans Mutatis By Karl Levy

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Mutans Mutatis By Karl Levy

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You can learn a thing or two today by staying on the sidelines and watching others play the game. You'll be called to action very soon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You are beginning a period of increased activity and involvement which will demand the utmost in pacing, timing, and self-preservation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may wake to find that the time is ripe for a dramatic change of sorts and that you're in the mood to do something truly surprising.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Environmental influences may make it more difficult than usual to begin your routine today. Allow for more travel-time and expect the unexpected.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're ready to take on more responsibility at this time, but someone in authority may feel that you need just a little more "seasoning" first.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – One set of plans may have to be put on a back burner today for an unspecified amount of time, while immediate practical matters are addressed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Tell is like it is today. There's no reason for you to invent any aspect of the story, or exaggerate in any way. Truth is stranger than fiction!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – One you begin to tell your story today you'll have your audience in the palm of your hand. Don't take others for granted at this time.

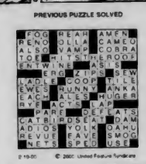
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You have what someone else dearly craves at this time, and you may have to work hard to protect what you feel is rightfully yours.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You won't have to wait long at this time before someone with a lot of clout stands up in defense of your plans and ideas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Take care of business one step at a time today. You usually try to consolidate your efforts, but today you must resist "doubling up."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Travel is sure to be more difficult than usual today, but not because you failed to plan as carefully as possible. Some things are unavoidable.

Quote of the Day



"I am ready to meet my Maker. Whether my Maker is prepared for the great ordeal of meeting me is another matter."

–Winston Churchill

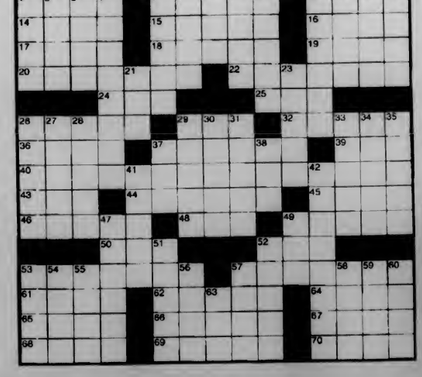
ACROSS
1 Waspits
5 Sunfish
10 Travel by foot
14 Continued
15 Jazz pianist Blake
16 A Great Lake
17 Composer Stravinsky
18 Travel by foot
19 Hit hard
20 They don't take chances
22 Novelist King
24 Vapor
25 — Paulo
26 Evening wrap
29 Draft org.
32 Sleeper's noise
36 Mafia —
37 Force (onesself) on others
39 Operate
40 Slant features
43 Flightless bird
44 Off the mark
45 Quarter 'you
46 Kind of test
48 Thor pet
49 Construction site sight
50 Pine
52 Mary — Ashton
53 Pretended
57 Marie antoinette
61 Baseball family name
62 Metric quart
64 Like a button?
65 Ceremony
66 More
67 Swim visitor
68 Honey we're
69 Very small
70 Type of hole

DOWN
1 Heroic
2 Letterhead items
3 Be aware
4 Harlem
5 Necklace units
6 Sugar cane refuse
7 Neurote
8 Feels it
9 Burrow into
10 Sword or rifle
11 Curve
12 Margarita ingredient
13 Eager
21 Actress — Dawn Chong
23 Artist's stand
26 Embarrass
27 Mexican menu items
28 Killer whales
29 Good or black order
30 Fern reproductive body
31 Sub detector
33 Old cattle town
34 Boca —, Florida
35 Follow
37 Psyche parts
38 36 Across, for one
41 Synthetic fabric
42 Pre-Roman culture
47 Defeated
49 Corn or the —
51 Blue pottery of Holland
52 Truck in London
53 Homestead
54 Writer Wiesel
55 Jot
56 Extreme
57 Stank
58 Melody
59 Skin-active vitamin
60 Harvest
63 Neckwear

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu



Call 545-3626 for more information.

No Menu today.

If you're really wondering try the hotline.

Night Editor: Adam White
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor: Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff: Dan McQuinnes-Rose, James Gilbert

Men's hoops sends Explorers wandering home

Minutemen all smiles as La Salle fades away fast

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

With one of the most intimidating game faces around, Kiwana Rhymer wasn't having a spectacular game. Six points, four rebounds, actually, hardly a standout performance for the Massachusetts men's basketball team's big man. Yet with 12:58 left in the game, the Virgin Islands native wore a smile that stretched clear across his face. He didn't need to rebound, nor was it necessary for him to throw his body around anymore.

Massachusetts	82
La Salle	48

The influential Rhymer's grin came when Shannon Crooks picked Rasual Butler's pocket and took it the distance for an emphatic flush to put the Minutemen up by 28 points en route to an 82-48 whipping of the La Salle Explorers last night at the Mullins Center.

With the win, UMass (12-10) gained a half game on St. Bonaventure, with whom the Minutemen were in a lock for second place heading into the evening. La Salle fell to 8-12 with the loss.

The Minutemen recovered from last week's bruises to dominate the paint for the game's entirety, bullying La Salle's undersized frontcourt. Chris Kirkland was quite possibly the most guilty of them all. The senior co-captain scored 16 of his career-high 26 in the deciding first half, when UMass took advantage of gaping holes in the Explorer defense. Kirkland, on numerous occasions, was found all alone underneath for the easy bucket. Even when he misfired from close waters, he quickly corrected his mistake with a putback device. The Minutemen outscored their Philadelphia visitors 48-22 in the paint and earned 17 second-chance points.

"The tougher team won without question," La Salle coach Speedy Morris said. "We have great kids in that locker room, but I don't know how tough they are."

Meanwhile, on the other side of the floor, Flint came in with a game plan and it worked. His strategy was to shut down La Salle's three-headed monster of Butler, Victor Thomas and Donnie Carr. Averaging nearly 54 points coming in as a trio, they would collect just 34 last night, shooting a combined 14 for 39 from the field. La Salle, in turn, buckled, shooting a miserable 36 percent from the field.

"We made them take tough shots," Flint said. "I think they're the most explosive team in the league offensive-

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 11

UMass forward Chris Kirkland had his way with the La Salle defense last night, torching the twine for a career-high 26 points.

Defense is the gateway for UMass men's hoop victories

Last night it was evident which is more important to a team between defense and offense.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team crushed Atlantic 10 West cellar dweller La Salle, 82-48 at the William D. Mullins Center. Looking purely at the numbers, 10 players scoring and three reaching double digits, the answer should sway towards offense. Monty Mack passed Marcus Camby and Edwin Green to claim ninth place on UMass' all-time scoring list with 1,407. Mack entered last night tied with Camby at the 1,387 point mark.

Senior co-captain Chris Kirkland, the game's leading scorer with 26, tied a career high dating back to Feb. 17, 1999 against George Washington. Anthony Oates came off the bench to chip in his own career high of four points. Senior co-captain Mike Babul was pivotal in the offense. The small forward, known for his defensive expertise, added six points and a career high six assists, one more than the entire Explorer squad mustered.

But it wasn't the offense.

It was clearly the defense, which has been a stalwart in Massachusetts' game since the days of John Calipari. It is the third stingiest defense in the conference, allowing just 64 ppg. The same goes for steals with an average of 9.1 per game. Kitwana Rhymer has stepped into the big man duties inside as blocked shots have become a more prevalent for the Minutemen. Against Marshall on Nov. 29, 1999 Rhymer swatted a career high six shots for the win.

"They gave a great effort defensively," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said of his team. "Defensively, I know we're going to get it done."

Last night against the Explorers, UMass forced 20 turnovers and converted for 19 points off of them. Often getting a second, and sometimes third chance to score with 18 offensive rebounds, Massachusetts ripped off 17 points on such opportunities. Way above their average, the Minutemen scrapped for 14 steals, tying a team record last set on Saturday against Texas. Need more evidence that defense is this team's mealticket? Try 21 points tallied off the fast break. La Salle fell apart from the constant harassment.

"Very few teams press us and we made some horrible decisions in the frontcourt," said Morris. "We panicked... we lost our composure out there."

The Minutemen exuded poise and competence. Whether Shannon Crooks was calmly running the point or Kirkland dashing through the flimsy La Salle defense, UMass was better coached and better prepared. In the first 10 minutes, both teams struggled to find their rhythm, bricking three-pointers and fumbling loose balls.

"We didn't get down on ourselves,

Turn to DEFENSE, page 11

UMass hockey keeps it in the family

Minuteman pucksters undergo Turner-ound

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Brothers Jeff and Tim Turner have always played hockey, but never on the same team. Massachusetts coach Joe Mallen gave them that opportunity this season, when he brought in Tim to play alongside older brother Jeff.

"One of the interesting things about the Turners is their age difference. Because of this, they never had a chance to play together, especially on this high of a level," said coach Joe Mallen. "This is really a unique opportunity for them, where they're able to play together."

One might think that when Mallen traveled to Saginaw, MI on his recruiting visit that there was a package deal waiting in the wings, but that was not the case.

"The package deal for them was slow to come. We recruited Jeff and we [the coaches] weren't sure about Tim, whether he was going to be big enough and strong enough to play at this level," Mallen said. "I'm really glad we got both of these kids because they are legitimate, top notch kids in our program."

"I wanted him [Tim] to come here not only because he is my brother, but because he is a good hockey player," Jeff said. "I knew that Tim would bring a lot to our team. We needed right wingers that could put the puck in the net."

Though Tim agreed to be a Minuteman, it would take hard work before he would get the chance to be on the ice with Jeff. He sat out the first two games of the season because of a coach's decision, but when he got his chance to play, he made the most of it.

No matter how long it took for Tim to get onto the scorecard, he knew that when he did, it would be the chance that he had been waiting for his whole life. His hardworking nature gave him that opportunity relatively early in the season.

"One of my dreams was to play with him [Jeff]. We were fortunate to only be three years apart, where it could be possible," Tim said. "He went to Rochester [United States Hockey League] and I went [to Rochester] after he did. I knew that if we did make it to college, we would have a chance to play together."

Since his insertion into the lineup against Boston College on October 23, Tim has been a fixture for the UMass offense. In his 26 games for the Maroon and White, he has tallied 19 points (5 goals, 4 assists).

"Tim is on the verge of making the All-Rookie Team," Mallen said, "which would be a great accomplishment for him and the program."

Even after Tim got his chance to be on the ice, it wasn't for a while that he would get a chance to join his brother on UMass' most potent scoring line.

"We [the coaches] always wondered what it was going be like to see them play on the same line," Mallen said. "Early in the season we didn't know whether it would work or not, but since we put them together they have done great in terms of trying to find each other."

The chemistry between the two is uncanny, especially for playing together for only a short while. When they are on the ice together, it is as if one is using telepathy to tell the other where he is going to be.

"Coming into the season we knew were going to have a chance [to play together]," Tim said. "We started off a little slow, I think it took a little time."

"It's been great [playing with Tim]. I think that as the season has gone on we've started to read off each other a lot better," Jeff said.

Despite the season that Tim is putting forth, it is Jeff that has been the backbone of the Maroon and White attack.

Jeff is the leading scorer for the Minutemen posting an astounding 28 points (12 goals, 16 assists), which ranks him thirteenth in HE for total points, while his 6 goals and nine assists in conference play is good enough for ninth

Turn to TURNER, page 13

Jeff Turner has established himself as an absolute machine for the Maroon and White offense this season, leading the team with 28 points on 12 goals and 16 assists.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jeff Turner

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Tim Turner

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jay Shaw

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Justin Shaw

Jay (left) and Justin Shaw have given UMass incredible punch on both sides of the puck this season.

Shaws bring blend of grit and determination

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Little did Massachusetts hockey coach Joe Mallen know that a connection he made while an assistant coach at Boston College would pay off down the road as the head coach of the Minutemen.

Mallen, who coached with the legendary Len Ceglarski from 1986-93, formed a friendship with former Eagles standout David Emma while in Chestnut Hill. And although Emma moved on to the National Hockey League following the 1990-91 season, it turned out that the former Hobey Baker Award winner had two younger cousins who were pretty talented hockey players in their own right.

Their names – Jay and Justin Shaw.

Four years after Mallen departed the Heights for the Pioneer Valley, Jay Shaw stepped onto the ice as a member of the Minutemen. A year later, younger brother Justin followed suit to Amherst, teaming up to form one of the only sibling pairs in Division I hockey.

"I became real good friends with David Emma while at Boston College, and I knew that he had come from a good family. I found the same thing when I went on my visit to see the Shaw family. They are a very tight-knit group, and John and Jane [their parents] are nice people," Mallen said. "I was very impressed, and I knew right there that Jay and Justin came from good stock."

On most nights, it would be unlikely to find the name of either sibling on the scoresheet. But what this pair of brothers brings to the UMass lineup is something that can't be measured in goals and assists. The grit and determination that the duo displays every time they hit the ice rubs off on their teammates, allowing the Minutemen to play with a little extra intensity when crunch time arrives.

Coming through in the clutch

It's more likely to find Jay Shaw starting a scoring opportunity by winning a battle in the corner than finishing a bid in front of the net. The rugged 6-foot-2, 205-pound winger brings an imposing physical presence onto the ice and is one of the team's most aggressive forecheckers.

"I'm pretty much a role player for the team. I'm looked upon to play good defense and bring a physical presence out on the ice," he said. "I'm trying to increase my offensive production, and I've got a couple of game-winning goals this year, which has helped my confidence."

If one thing holds true for Jay, it's the old adage that quality beats quantity on practically any day of the week. Although Shaw only has three goals to his credit this season, two have been game-winners.

The first goal took place back on Jan. 2 in a 3-2 overtime win over Saint Lawrence University. In front of a home crowd at the William D. Mullins Center, the Ocean State native beat Saints goalie Sean Coakley late in the extra session to propel the Minutemen to victory.

Six days later in Providence, Shaw cashed in on the game-winner in front of a gathering of friends and family. His third goal of the year broke a 1-1 tie early in the third period, and the Maroon and White went on to a chalk up a 3-1 victory over Providence College.

"Scoring the game-winner at Providence was an awesome feeling, but I think that the goal against St. Lawrence was better because it was in overtime against the No. 11 team in the country, and there were only nine seconds left," Shaw said.

The two game-winning goals have proven how far Shaw has come since arriving in Amherst. As a freshman, he saw action in only 11 games and did not register a point.

However, after an intense off-season, Shaw worked his way into the lineup as a sophomore, playing in all but one game in the 1998-99 campaign. This season, No. 24 has continued his steady play and is regarded as one of the team's best defensive players.

"After playing in only 11 games as a freshman, Jay came back and dedicated himself and won himself a spot," Mallen

Turn to SHAW, page 13

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CV2 Issue 15 Friday, February 11, 2000

Bulger denies budget cuts at UMass

Lecture focuses on education

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Students confronted University of Massachusetts President William Bulger on recent budget cuts during his lecture on freedom and education at the Campus Center last night. Bulger denied the cuts by saying the University is experiencing an increased budget during a period in which education serves as an invaluable tool in gaining experience, knowledge and wisdom.

According to Robert Connolly, associate vice president for university relations and communications, all five UMass campuses were allotted a 3.3 percent budget increase during the fiscal year 2000. According to Bulger, the appropriation to UMass-Amherst increased from $170 million to $219 million.

However, according to a statement by Chancellor Scott in the Jan. 26, 2000 edition of the Collegian, he said the increase was $10 million less than what was requested and this would mean having to ask all departments to prepare for one, two and three percent cuts.

When a student asked President Bulger last night about the cuts, he replied by stating, "I haven't heard of any budget cuts. What cuts?"

"It [the University] received more money each year," Bulger said. "There are always going to be needs to make appropriations and that's an internal matter that I'm not familiar about."

In regards to the University's decision to temporarily dispose of the consumer studies department, Bulger said he was not familiar with the University's exact appropriations. According to him, a great deal of the budget was used to pay employees and provide scholarships, but he said under no circumstances has the University received less money than in previous years.

Moving beyond the issue of money, Bulger spoke about the importance of education and of freedom of expression, freedom to be wrong, and freedom to explore and try new things.

"Education needs the fresh breeze of freedom if it is to flourish," Bulger said. "Many of us would bargain away our freedom, but we are lucky because our forefathers...[established a democratic system on which education is based]."

This knowledge and wisdom-seeking process called education is not something that is passively acquired, according to Bulger. He said it is more of an individual and personal process that is a valuable experience for that person.

Through education, Bulger believes people can gain important information, but sooner or later this information may become lost. Therefore, while knowledge can be gained through college guidelines, wisdom can only be gained through life's experiences.

KARA STOREY-COLLEGIAN

"I haven't heard of any budget cuts. What Cuts?" was President Bulger's response to questions posed about the budget during his lecture entitled "Freedom and Education in the Classical World" held in the Campus Center last night.

"Indeed, knowledge has come and gone, but wisdom lingers," Bulger said. "Wisdom is our understanding of reality. It is human in understanding the realm of things, but it goes beyond information."

Bulger said it is the Greeks that we should aspire towards in developing an ideal educational system. The ancient democracy originating from Athens, Greece was based on a system in which all individuals were encouraged to get involved and experience what Aristotle called a life of pleasure, an active political life of virtue and a contemplative kind of life, according to Bulger.

Bulger said he strongly believes that people educate themselves by paying attention, listening, doing extra work and throwing themselves in experiences that will lead them towards their goals.

"I think we should always be striving as [President] John Adams noted that we have the ability to read, write and think," Bulger said. "Those are the three things all humans are capable of achieving."

Entrepreneurs speak to ambitious business people at Club kickoff

By Heather Palmer
Collegian Correspondent

Last night a panel of entrepreneurs told their tales of success and answered questions to kick off the UMass Five College Entrepreneur Club. The panel included alumni of UMass, Hampshire College and Amherst College.

The group consisted of Jeff Taylor, CEO of Monster.com; Edward Price, CEO of Polyarbon Industries; Joe Minton, CEO of Cyberlore Studio; Bob Mayerson, CEO of Tilion.com; Amit Gupta, founder of Dailyjolt.com; and Bob Cann, founder of Milla Company.

The evening opened up with a welcome introduction from President and CEO of Mass Ventures, Jerome Schaufeld. Mass Ventures is one of the main sponsors for this program. Schaufeld said, "We are sponsoring this program to help individuals and groups take their thoughts and ideas and make them possible."

Joseph Steig, Vice President of Mass Ventures talked to future entrepreneurs about the Entreclub. He explained that the Entreclub was created to help grad students, undergrads, part times and full-time Five College students design, plan and launch businesses.

"The best part about this is it includes an interdisciplinary of students. Students from government fields, economics, and engineering can come together," Steig said.

Jim Theroux, Flavin Professor of Entrepreneurship, served as moderator for a portion of the evening. He asked the panelist to share their success stories with the audience. "I had an idea," Jeff Taylor said. "I wanted to make a bulletin board for my company. One night lying in bed it came to me, a monster board. I got up and wrote it down on my little note pad next to my bed. In the morning I went for coffee and drew up the plans."

When asked what the most difficult thing about starting a business was, Taylor said, "It was naming my company and having everyone hate it. But I knew it would work."

"Going with your gut is most difficult thing in entrepreneurship, but if I didn't go with a name like monster, I probably wouldn't be here," Taylor said.

Bob Mayerson, added, "You have to be ready to be involved in every aspect of the business from cleaning bathrooms to going out on the streets and spreading the word."

For business men and women who are just getting started, skepticism is a big concern. "You are always going to find skeptics," said Bob Mayerson. "The key to success is to stand up for yourself and believe in your idea."

Adding to that thought Taylor said, "Skepticism starts to change. Once your company gets bigger the decisions become more difficult and more important."

Money and power were two aspects that created motivation for these entrepreneurs. "I like being the boss," Cann said. Taylor agreed that he had the same thought. "I could be my own boss. But I liked that I could create a business where other people succeed and have a satisfying career."

Minton, Taylor and Mayerson concluded that it wasn't necessarily their education that got them to where they are now. Minton said, "College was a testing ground. Anywhere and everywhere I could work with people I learned the most." Taylor admitted he spent the least amount of time in the classroom, but feels that he learned by interacting with people.

Taylor offered some advice to the future business men and women in the crowd. "Make a business model, don't try something that is already on the way out, go where you can make your money the fastest, and also have management," he said.

For the next two months, the Entreclub will present a number of informational meetings for students who plan to form businesses. Next week students will learn how to make an outline for a business plan. More guest speakers and networking events will take place before the April 24th deadline.

At that time, the business plans will be divided into two groups: the high growth business and Life-style business. From there, the panel of judges will select three high growth business finalists and two lifestyle business finalists, who will present their plans on May 4, 2000 for a chance to win $10,000.

Program to aid potential teachers

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts School of Education devised a new plan to increase the dwindling number of qualified math and science teachers in the state of Massachusetts.

This new system offers a chance for students to be certified in a summer/fall certification program. The new alternative offers students a university-based route to the certification of future teachers.

According to a statement made by UMass professor Allan Feldman, a proponent of this new plan, the new certification program will allow future math and science teachers the opportunity to complete the same curriculum for their career during a much shorter time span. This new program will allow students to complete the necessary curriculum for both math and science teachers in one summer and one semester. Typically, most certification programs require a year of academic course work along with student teaching experience.

Feldman explained, that this was a very helpful program for people who already have a degree in science or math, those that are juniors and seniors currently enrolled in the five college consortium, or a good route for those that are currently mid-career that are looking to switch to either a science or math related field.

Students enrolled in the summer/fall program will have a summer filled with both coursework and fieldwork in teaching and will spend their fall working full-time as student teachers or interns in local science and math classrooms mentored by teachers that are experts in their field. This plan was a joint effort by both the University and the Science Technology Engineering Mathematics Teacher Education Collaborative (STEMTEC). The group is a subsidiary of the National Science Foundation in Western Massachusetts whose mission statement includes improving the preparation of future teachers, and increasing the numbers and diversity of future science and math teachers.

Students that take part in this program will be projected to graduate in December and prepared to enter the teaching profession. Once they begin working in the area they will become part of the eight-college teacher education collaboration. This group consists of schools such as UMass, Hampshire College, Smith College, Mount Holyoke College, Amherst College, Springfield Technical Community College, Holyoke Community College, and Greenfield Community College.

Musical night celebrates black history cafe style with entertaining journey

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Union Ballroom became a soulful Cafe last night as over 200 people were entertained by seven musical acts, outlining the history of black music in America.

The event, sponsored by the Black Student Union and the Black Mass Communication Project, was the second in a series of celebrations for Black History month. The goal of the evening was to educate the community, while at the same time providing a night filled with entertainment, organizer Melissa Straughn said.

The "journey through Black History" was meant to give "homage to those before us" Remon Jourdan, the host, said. This journey began with a dance to traditional African Tribal music, performed by Negresse Creoles.

The second act took the audience to the times of slavery in the South, as Delicia Truitt and Genevieve Leglos sang the song "Eye On the Sparrow," a gospel traditionally sung by slaves.

The third stop on the journey was the Harlem Renaissance. Dinora Walcott and Alex Marcelo performed the jazz tune "God Bless the Child." Walcott and Marcelo again took the spotlight, after a short intermission, to play the Motown hit "Dr. Feelgood," with Marcelo again on the piano.

Following the Motown era of music was the Civil Rights movement, as shown by the recitation of three poems by Rachel Jean-Marie. The first poem, originally written by Nikki Giovanni, was entitled "My Poem."

Accompanying Jean-Marie on the recitation were Erline Achille and Barbara Verneus.

The second poem was written by a Native American woman, Shabnan, and was entitled "Sister." The final poem was untitled and written by Jean-Marie.

To begin the current-day style of music, the step-dance troupe Flava Unit danced to hip-hop music and served as a warm-up for the night's final performers, the hip-hop/rap group, SOS, who closed out the show with a freestyle rap involving most of its members.

Filling in the space between each act was a trivia game and music, ranging from 60's soul to contemporary hip-hop and R&B, spun by D.J. Trends.

Dinner was served during the intermission and consisted of such foods as fried chicken and corn bread. Those in attendance were playing a variety of games as they listened to the music provided.

The organizers of the event, Staughn and Delicia Tuitt, expressed their appreciation to those that come out to support the BSU and Black History Month.

The next planned event is a series of films portraying the "exploitation of Blacks" each followed by a discussion on why the film was exploitive and how this can be prevented in the future. These will be presented throughout the rest of the month of February, Staughn said.

MARK HOLLOWAY-COLLEGIAN

Undeclared Freshman Arthur Hunt and Junior Political Science major Carell Scott play a game of checkers as they listen to music at last night's All That Jazz event in the Student Union Ballroom.

MARK HOLLOWAY-COLLEGIAN

Jeff Taylor, CEO of Monster.com, was part of a panel of entrepreneurs who told shared their stories of success with the Umass Five College Entrepreneur Club in Mahar auditorium yesterday.

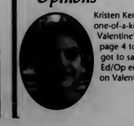
Inter-Religious Dialogue

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Correspondent

On Sunday, Feb. 13 at 7:00 p.m., the Inter-Religious Project at UMass will host a dialogue open to the public called, "the Aesthetics of Faith." Hannah Braune, president of the Jewish Student Union, and Rana Al-Jammal, president of the Muslim Students Association will participate in the dialogue. The event will take place in Room 163 of the Campus Center and be moderated by Chaplain Jonathan Rehmus.

Al-Jammal is a doctoral student in transportation planning with a bachelor's degree from the University of Jordan in Amman. She serves on the University's Religious Affairs Committee as religious liason for the Muslim community on campus. Braune, a junior is a double major in Judaic Studies and Social Thought. She has also studied one year at Hebrew University in Israel.

"Their public dialogue will engage the similarities and differences of

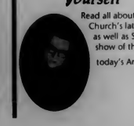


Turn to FAITH, page 2

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 32 LOW: 10	HIGH: 33 LOW: 14	HIGH: 29 LOW: 10

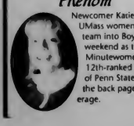
Valentine Opinons



Kristen Kennedy's got a one-of-a-kind view on Valentine's Day. Turn to page 4 to see what she's, got to say, as well as the Ed/Op editor's thoughts on Valentine's Day.

PAGE 4

Indulge Yourself



Read all about the Catholic Church's latest blundering as well as Skybox's first show of the semester all in today's Arts.

PAGE 5

Phreshman Phenom

Newcomer Kaiie Teft leads the UMass women's gymnastics team into Boyden Gym this weekend as the Minutewomen take on the 12th-ranked Nittany Lions of Penn State. Check out the back page for full coverage.

PAGE 12

Arts & Living 5
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

What celebrity do you think you look like, and why?

Complied by Andrea M. Peers • Photos by Mark Holloway

"I have no idea, I'm totally stumped. I don't know who I look like."

Jeff Neild
Building and Wood Technology
Sophomore

"I think he looks like Wally Clever from 'Leave it to Beaver.'" "I don't think I do, but if Jess says I do, then Wally it is."

Jessica Martin/Michael Mead
Social Thought and Political Economy/Sociology
Sophomore/Junior

"I don't think anyone has ever told me who I look like, but I guess I would have to say Cousin It because of my long hair."

Phillip Barron
Philosophy
Senior

"I guess I'd have to say Margaret Cho, the comedian, because she's Korean."

Kim Christensen
Economics
Junior

"I'm gonna have to go for the cartoon character of the Cleveland Indians. I have a smiley face!"

Edson Dias
Art
Senior

"Little kids in my neighborhood called me Erykah Badu because I used to wrap my hair."

Tia Coleman
Biology
Sophomore

■ faith

continued from page 1

seeking beauty and meaning from a life of faith, and it is the culmination of conversations between them that began in the fall," Rehmus said.

The event will have more of a personal focus, rather than a political one and will touch upon the rituals and teachings that have informed their lives according to Rehmus.

Al-Jammal said she looks at the dialogue as "an exploration in common humanity."

"This event gives the community a chance to see two extraordinary people come together and cross the boundaries of faith, culture and background, that society tends to place upon us," Rehmus said.

He also said, "being able to discover beauty and meaning through religion is a beautiful thing, and this event just may help others to discover that."

The Inter-Religious Project (IRP) organizes interfaith dialogue and community service at UMass and is staffed by Reverend Rehmus and the Reverend Kent Higgins of the United Christian Foundation.

Plans for the future also include a national conference entitled, "Spirituality in Work and Higher Education." The event, which will be held from June 4-6, is being organized by Al-Jammal among others.

Entertainment, Food, & Giveaways
AMHERSTONLINE.COM
Bookmark it!

Students respond to ongoing Russian conflict

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

The Russian flag stands in the center of Grozny, marking the Russian takeover of Chechnya's capitol after five months of bombing and shelling. In what some have called a ceaseless war, the flag also symbolizes all the young men who have fought and died. Far from home, University of Massachusetts students from Russia react to their generation dying on Chechnya soil.

Because Russia requires its young men to serve two years in the military, freshman Sasha Senderovich , who immigrated three years ago with his family, is glad to be in America.

"If I were in Russia, I would've been in the army because it was mandatory. I wouldn't want to fight them [the Chechens], and there's probably a lot of young men in that situation."

Reports in the Boston Globe confirm Senderovich's view, but, according to information from Russia earlier this week, the remaining young men may be coming home.

The teenage conscripts that shape a large part of the Russian army will be sent home now that Russia has claimed Grozny. Remaining in Chechnya is Russia's best military men – paratroops and marines. Although the Russian military power has been cut in half, the men that remain still exceed the number of soldiers fighting in the 1994-96 Chechnya-Russia conflict.

The recent rain of Russian bombs over Chechnya is not the first of their struggles, nor is the 1994-96 conflict. The battlefield has been laid out for Chechnya and Russia since the 19th century. For this reason, many believe the war is "unwinnable" and will continue.

Professor Laszlo Dienes, who teaches modern Russian culture and film in the Comparative Literature Department, believes this is only a temporary end. "They [Chechens] will be defeated now with the overwhelming Russian superiority, but they will continue fighting or resisting as they can for centuries."

The Chechens live up to Dienes prediction: they claim they will take back Grozny soon. They will continue to fight in other parts of Russia and they will have the resources to sustain their military campaign for an additional fifty years.

The Chechens continue to fight for their independence from Russia, as they have their own language, culture and religion. Dienes compared the Chechens and other non-Russian nationalities to "the Hindus versus the English, the connection is not any closer than that, except that their territories are contiguous."

Senior Olga Tarassova from St. Petersburg, Russia explained that Putin thinks of Chechnya as a part of Russia, but personally thinks that if Chechens wants to live separately, it is their choice to do so. Dienes has split thoughts on the matter. "On the one hand, the answer is obviously yes [Chechens should have independence]," Dienes said.

"On the other, it can be very problematic, especially from a Russian point of view. Would Americans allow Arizona and Colorado to secede as an Indian state? We don't even let Puerto Rico go..."

As Russia continues to hold Grozny, Senderovich remembers a passage from a Tolstoy novel he read while in Russia. He recounted, "He compared the Chechens to a thistle plant which is very hard to extinguish. If they keep on fighting a thistle plant, they can kill parts of it but not the plant itself." The concept, described over a hundred years ago, still exists.

GREASE HAS NEVER BEEN COOLER!

TICKETS ON SALE MONDAY!
MAR. 21 & 22 SPRINGFIELD CIVIC CENTER | MAR. 24 & 25
BY PHONE: (413) 733-2500, (413) 787-6600 (Springfield only) ticketmaster Ticket Centers ¥ www.ticketmaster.com
TICKETS: $15.75 - $19.75 - $24.75 - $35(VIP)
(service charges and handling fees may apply)
Produced by Feld Entertainment and The Troika Organization

Are you a morning person?

MARK HOLLOWAY/ COLLEGIAN

Students passed out all over the place...
As classes kick in, many students, like sleepy Senior Art History major Jason Springer, quickly lose their youthful vigor and energy.

Tracking the hackers proves challenging

By John Schwartz and Ariana Eunjung Cha
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – The computer vandals who blocked access to nearly a dozen high-profile Internet sites this week took a breather yesterday as the Pentagon, government agencies and universities scoured their systems to ensure they had not become unwitting accomplices in the attacks.

Justice Department officials said yesterday they were continuing their hunt for the culprits but had identified no suspects. Several computer security experts warned that the data trail was probably already cold.

"It's going to be very hard to track this down by technical mechanisms," said researcher Steve Bellovin of AT&T Labs.

Authorities believe the attacks that temporarily shut down sites including Yahoo, Amazon and CNN were a version of what is called a "distributed denial of service." In such hits, hackers drop malicious software into unsuspecting computer systems – often those with weaker security such as those at some universities – and then activate the software remotely to bombard the target sites with overwhelming streams of data.

A spokesman for the Defense Department said while there is no evidence that Pentagon computers were used as intermediaries, officials would check the hard drives of the more than 1 million computers it has hooked up to the Internet.

Tracking hackers can be difficult under the best of circumstances. Investigators generally pore over the records of computer use and try to match hacking incidents to the list of users at the time. Even if the logging software is working perfectly, however, hackers often program the computers they use to lie about their identity – a process known as "spoofing" – and tamper with the user logs on the machines they strike.

"You are going to have to pass over a dozen time zones and have hundreds of different countries to deal with" to track the flow of Internet packets, said Mark Loveless, a computer security expert for Bindview in Arlington, Texas. "Unless the people who launched the attack are complete and total idiots and do not put a few hops between themselves and their actions, then they are not going to get caught."

Bellovin held out hope that a break in the case might still come from the human side. "In the hacker community, people like to brag, people like to talk, and people like to rat on each other," he said.

The FBI is "following all leads, conducting interviews and gathering information and data from the victim companies," spokeswoman Debbie Weierman said.

At Thursday's Justice briefing, Deputy U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder said, "The American people should be reassured that we're doing all that we can to try to figure out exactly who is behind this." He reiterated a plea that anyone with responsibility for computer networks should install the freely available tools for countering the intrusions that turn those systems into launching pads for attacks. The intrusions that turn such machines into what have been called "zombies," Holder said, can often be prevented.

Holder also called for broader education on "Internet ethics" for young people who "know that it's wrong to break into a person's house, yet they don't feel the same moral apprehension before breaking into another person's computer."

Meanwhile, a member of Congress questioned whether current laws covering computer crime could even be used successfully to prosecute the new breed of "distributed denial of service" attack. "The law we see right now ... does not necessarily cover this" explicitly: said Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla. "It's not as clear as I'd like it to be."

The laws that McCollum helped pass as part of the crime subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee focus on such misdeeds as planting viruses; McCollum said he would hold a hearing on March 1 to determine whether changes in the law are necessary.

McCollum said he believed that prosecutors might be able to successfully mount a case based on the current law, "it's just harder for the prosecutors if they don't have something explicit."

Department of Justice officials, however, have consistently said that the new attacks are covered under current law, which they note prohibits unauthorized interference with computer systems whether or not intrusion actually occurs. "We feel the case as we now know it would be covered," Justice spokesman Myron Marlin said. "But if Congress feels we can improve upon the statute, or provide law enforcement with additional cybertools, we are eager to work with them."

Gauging votes in the new South Carolina

By David Von Drehle
The Washington Post

GREENVILLE, S.C. - Carroll Campbell is miffed.

The former governor of this booming state left office wildly popular after two terms in 1994, handed the keys to his handpicked successor and moved to a lucrative lobbying job in Washington. He helped save Bob Dole's 1996 nomination and was talked about as a possible vice president. Along with Ronald Reagan, he became known as the man who turned South Carolina Republican.

Now another nomination is teetering - that of Texas Gov. George W. Bush. Once again, Campbell's South Carolina machine is critical to saving it. And a couple of GOP congressmen, a couple of ingrates, really, two men who don't seem to remember what Campbell did for them not so long ago, are trying to mess things up. They're backing Arizona Sen. John McCain.

"I like Lindsey Graham," Campbell says of one renegade. "I helped Lindsey get elected. I helped Mark Sanford get elected." That's the other one."

They tend to forget this now.

"They're trying to divide the party. They're the hot Young Turks; they want to run things right now. They both think they should be senators. So we have somewhat of an insurrection going on now."

This intramural game among South Carolina polls is about more than bruised egos and the acute sense of time-serving that develops in a state where a senator can hold office longer than Graham, 45, has been alive. It also points to a crucial question about the state's voters, one that will play a big part in the Feb. 19 primary:

How much has this place changed lately?

Everyone agrees South Carolina is not what it used to be. For all the ruckus about the Confederate flag over the state capitol, the old birthplace of the Confederacy has become a showplace for the global economy, a magnet for rich retirees and a burgeoning suburbia of up-for-grabs independents.

The new South Carolina can be found in many places, in Florence, in Aiken, on Seabrook Island. Or here.

Just off I-85 near the Greenville-Spartanburg airport is a huge box sprouting exhaust stacks and gleaming white in the midwinter sun. Inside, on floors so clean you could eat off them, hundreds of men and women, white and black, clean-cut and nicely dressed, build the sexy BMW Z3 roadster and the coveted X5 sport utility vehicle.

When BMW chose South Carolina for its first American factory in 1992 - in the full sun of Gov. Campbell's reign - it was the 75th German company to locate here, drawn by cooperative government and the weakest union presence in the country. BMW attracted Michelin, the French tire company. Swiss pharmaceutical giant Hoffmann-La Roche opened its own plant in another corner of the state.

As the boom crested over the past five years, $5 billion in new investment was pouring into South Carolina every year. In 1998, to take a fairly typical year, nearly half of that money came from overseas. There is some high-tech going on here, but mostly this is an explosion of manufacturing: steel, tires, cars and medicines. There's even been a new season for that dying mainstay, textiles.

No one missed the change in South Carolina more dramatically than commentator Patrick J. Buchanan, who came here after a narrow victory in the 1996 New Hampshire primary preaching protectionism and old Dixie pride. He discovered a lot of people who had the best jobs of their lives, and they liked their Swiss, German and French bosses.

"Successful GOP leaders now are the ones who speak the international language of economic development and educational reform," says Lee Bandy, politics guru of the State newspaper in Columbia. Both Bush and McCain are fluent free-traders.

Children speak on disturbing Irish warring

By Lynne Tuohy
The Hartford Courant

LURGAN, Northern Ireland - As politicians jetted between Belfast, London and Dublin on Thursday to salvage Northern Ireland's fledgling attempt at self-rule, a real breakthrough occurred here when four teenagers got together to play.

It was drama of a different sort, to be sure. But it may be as telling as anything the politicians have to offer about the long-term prospects for peace in this strife-torn province – and poignant commentary on what is at stake on this pivotal day in Northern Ireland's history.

Two of the teen-agers are Protestant brothers; the other two are Catholic girls who are friends. The two sets had not met until Thursday, at the Shankill Community Relations Project in Lurgan, where they performed skits and rehearsed a short presentation for a local audience.

They alternately giggled and took their roles seriously. Laura McMullen, 13, tried to rationalize her own feelings, perhaps new-found, with those of her community.

"It doesn't matter what religion you are," she said. "But in Lurgan, they judge you by what religion you are."

Michael Kirk, 14, said he doesn't particularly want to live in Northern Ireland when he's older, "because of the Troubles."

There's too much arguing. There's too much segregation," Michael said.

Indeed, much of the country's future is riding on how Friday's events play out on its national stage. Stalemates over the surrender of weapons by the Irish Republican Army and the dismantling of military installations by British security forces could prompt the resignations of Ulster Unionist Party leader David Trimble - the Northern Ireland Assembly's First Minister - and Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, the political wing of the IRA.

Valentine's Day Sale

Ustore™
Not like a mall... Better

Buy 1 get the 2nd 1/2 off
All Stuffed Animals & All Picture Frames
Higher price Prevails (must be of equal or lesser value)

Valentine's Day Bear Drawing
Name:_____ Phone:_____
Email:_____
Do You Live On Campus? ___ Which Dorm? _____
All Fields must be completed to validate entries
All entries must be in by Monday, February 14th at 4:00
Drawing to take place at 4:30 on Valentine's Day at Ustore

Our Opinion
About Valentine's Day

Whether or not you even choose to acknowledge it as a holiday, Valentine's Day is just a sweet nothing away. All this week, the gray concrete walls of campus have echoed the collective moan of the UMass singles population, a bitter contingency of have-nots that points to February 14th as just a cruel reminder of the good fortune of others. "Unless you're in a relationship, Valentine's Day means nothing." Is one of the most popular dismissals of the holiday, along with "It's all about money; why should you have to waste 60 bucks on roses to prove how much you care about someone?" The fact is that the unfortunate and unattached often reject the notion of Valentine's Day without really taking the time to measure the holiday's true meaning and worth.

The history of Valentine's Day may actually do more to undermine the holiday's significance than bolster it. Originally the Roman feast of Lupercalia, the celebration was Christianized in memory of the martyr St. Valentine (d. A.D. 270). In what may or may not be indicative of the values and priorities of Middle Age society, the theological roots of the holiday were soon eclipsed by the fact that it fell very close to a traditional pagan love festival, hence the celebration took on its enduring association with romance. The church grudgingly accepted this reevaluation of the day's significance, even attempting to ingrain some sort of moralistic quality into the celebration by quantifying its commemoration as the union of lovers under duress. But even that implication faded over time, leading to the feast's exclusion from the liturgical calendar in 1969.

Which leads us to the holiday's present connotation, as a day set aside for the floral, fine jewelry and/or intimate dining industries to heap guilt upon, and consequently reap untold fortunes off of, those unlucky enough to possess a significant other. In short, Valentine's Day has been reduced to a day of either obligation (for the attached) or alienation (for the unattached). But with a new century upon us, maybe it's time to take a more realistic approach to February 14th.

If you're one of those "fortunate" souls who happens to be attached this Valentine's Day, don't just automatically conclude that you must subscribe to the traditional rituals of the holiday and shower your loved one with chocolate, flowers or candlelight dinners. Instead, take a moment and think about exactly what you hope to convey through these actions. Does a puppy with a ribbon around its neck really say anything at all, much less that you appreciate the difference someone has made in your life? Or is the giving of lavish gifts just a convenient replacement for meaningful conversation and the sharing of actual ideas? Instead of proving your feelings through a sudden monetary commitment, try putting into words exactly what your companion means to you. Try verbalizing the impact that he or she has had on the level of happiness in your life. Even if straight, honest discussion of feelings and emotions isn't exactly your forte, the very gesture of trying to communicate with your loved one on this level will mean more to him or her than anything from Russell-Stover, FTD or even Kay Jewelers.

For those with no "obligation" on this particular Valentine's Day, why not make the day meaningful instead of just dismissing it as exclusively for lovers. Even if you are in no way interested in any sort of interaction (romantic or otherwise) with your peers, do something to give yourself a sense of worth and accomplishment: give blood. That way, you'll at least have the satisfaction of knowing that despite your lack of tangible libido, you do indeed have a pulse. And you'll be helping out greater humanity in the process.

For the rest of the single UMass population, Valentine's Day is the perfect time to break free from asinine popular practice and finally grasp the concept of meeting new people. Avoid the appropriately called "meat markets" uptown. Shelf your excessive makeup, pheromone-powered colognes and cleverly rehearsed pick-up routines. Head to the area's hands-down best spot for meeting other single people – the supermarket – and try connecting with someone on a more human level. There have been volumes written on how to meet people, but this much should be obvious: there are literally millions of things to talk about in a grocery store. Just by taking a quick peek into someone's shopping cart, you can pick up on scores of things that you have in common, at least when it comes to consumption. "You know, turkey bacon doesn't really taste like bacon at all," may not be the sexiest introduction he or she will get this Valentine's Day, but it will undoubtedly be one of the most memorable.

And after all, that's what this holiday is really all about. Creating memories. So whether your Valentine's Day consists of strengthening a current bond or setting out to lay the groundwork for a new one, do yourself a favor: make it real, and make it meaningful. That way, even after the flowers have died and the chocolates have become guilty memories, you'll be left with some idea of what February 14th is really all about.

Just a waste of celebration

Kristen Kennedy

As February 14th quickly approaches, I once again prepare myself for the nuisance that is Valentine's Day. I'm not sure exactly when I began to abhor this cheesy flower and chocolate-covered holiday. There was no traumatic breakup on this day, nor any other such debacle that instigated my hatred. I have never felt the agony of unrequited love that would make me despise a holiday that caters to lovers. O.K., maybe I was a little sore in second grade when the studly Bobby Zeff failed to succumb to my feminine wiles. Apparently my chasing and tackling him on the playground didn't clue him into my undying affection. Some boys are so oblivious! But at any rate, that hardly qualifies as true heartache. After all, I was over him by my math class. So you see, there seems to be no rational reason for my nausea as February 14th creeps towards us. But let's face it, how important is rationality anyway? If I were any kind of rational person would I be majoring in English right now? See my point?

Nope, I guess I don't know when I started harboring such resentment toward this seemingly innocent holiday. But regardless of logic, I hate this day. Guys, just stop and take a critical look at St. Valentine's Day before running out to spend a whole week's paycheck on those lovely (waste of money) roses. Bear with me. I think I've actually got a point here. We celebrate a holiday symbolized by a fat, naked cherub a.k.a. Cupid (notice how this word closely resembles STUPID. Coincidence?). Anyway, this fat-ass flutters around shooting arrows at people's bottoms with the expectation that they will fall madly in love. Sure.

Thanks Cupie, but I think I'll stick to finding my own dates. Cupid has a real grueling schedule working one day out of the year, while gaining fame and respectability without even putting any on clothes. Hell, I need a job like that! Of course, seeing my naked ass flying around could ruin just about anyone's holiday. For the sake of aesthetics, I'll stick to writing.

I propose a ban on this silly holiday. After all, if it doesn't warrant a day off from classes, how important can it really be? This Valentine's Day, tell your significant other that you refuse to acknowledge such a revoltingly commercialized holiday. Girls, you will probably notice a look of relief on his face. Guys, prepare to be slapped! Blubbering and some incoherent grumbling about how you could easily be replaced may follow. But don't let that get to you; she's bluffing, I think. Stand your ground. You will be a stronger person because of it. Single maybe, but stronger. If she really starts to give you trouble, send her to me; we'll have a nice long talk. If, in fact, a holiday is necessary to get you to do something nice for her, sorry, but you probably deserve to be single. Girls, think how grateful he would be if you removed all of the unnecessary pressure that comes with Valentine's Day gift giving. Do you really need those truffles and roses? No, of course you don't. They are simply material things that mean jack-squat in the long run. If you said "yes," then you are just plain selfish and I hope the chocolate makes you break out, and the flowers bring on an asthma attack!

So do the right thing. Stand strong and refuse to buckle under the pressure of the Godiva Company and those rotten Hallmark folk. Together we can do away with this inane holiday once and for all. There are ways that we can come together, rise up above the populace, and let our message be heard. For instance, we could stand in front of the Student Union and rant and rave, like the "holy rollers" who wear sandwich boards saying that we are all going to Hell. As if I needed to be told! Or we could march around the campus, like our friends in the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), making sure that no one could escape our whining. I suppose that if all else fails, we can always take over the Goodell Building, but that almost seems cliche.

Maybe it is too late to organize an all-out revolt this year. But that leaves me a whole year to plan a protest for next February 14th. This year, I guess that I'll just carry out my own personal rebellion. I will not accept flowers, chocolates or any jewelry that will turn my skin green, nor will I give in to the pressure and buy my sweetheart a sappy, heart-shaped card. "She actually has a sweetheart?" you're thinking. Yes, kids, the world works in mysterious ways. I'm not quite sure how I suckered him into the relationship, but thinking back, I'm pretty sure that it wasn't my sentimental and caring side that won him over. Well, I will leave you now to mull over my proposal. I think you will come to the same conclusion I have. There is no need for this absurd holiday.

So, on Monday, if you see a crazy lil' red-haired girl on the Student Union steps blaspheming St. Valentine, please don't curse and throw things... I have feelings too.

Kristen Kennedy is a UMass Student

Who wants to marry a multi-millionaire?

Carla Costa

It's no surprise that the millionaire game shows have gotten out of control. I hear everyone clamoring about how easy the questions are. "Man, I'm gonna call and get on that show. I could win the million. Those people are idiots." Well, except for my neighbors who I hear shouting at the television set when Joe America loses it all because he doesn't know that plants produce oxygen. "Who knows that anyway?!" they yell in horror. My neighbors are college seniors, by the way.

What's great about the game shows is that they function on the notion that everyone is greedy, which obviously we are. Why would we be tuned in and shouting like monkeys at our television sets? What's odd about these shows is that you actually want the contestants to win. You root for them because they're the underdogs. They're the people you encounter everyday who just called a phone number, answered a few questions and bam, next thing you know they've got a million bucks. These shows are the epitome of the idea that you can't just be rich in America anymore. You have to get very rich, very fast.

In a month's time, every network had its own version of the millionaire game show, but next week The Fox Network (a greedy entity unto its own) will take this kind of programming to an all-time low. In keeping with their play-on-primal instincts line-up, Fox will host "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire." Congratulations to Fox for perpetuating the horrifying stereotype that women are gold diggers. "Fifty potential brides will compete," growled the deeply masculine announcer over the commercial. Images flashed of women dressed in white gowns and veils, coyly glancing over their shoulders at the camera. More congrats to Fox for turning women into commodities in a more disturbing and repulsive way than twenty episodes of Baywatch ever could. Despite the hilarity of such an idea, this is not a joke. This is a real program with real commercials and real contestants – as frightening as that may be.

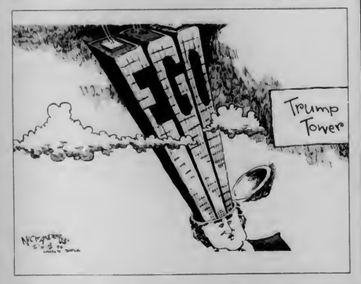
"Fifty contestants will compete in a pageant to marry a mystery multi-millionaire."

When the word "pageant" arises, one can't help but picture Miss America gone astray. Instead of Miss America's sticky-sweet segments where the contestants frolic around the host city, we'll be watching 50 women receive facials and bark commands at servants. What will be the final interview question? "Contestant Number One, what do you find to be more profitable: e-commerce or Swiss bank accounts?" When you really think about it though, these women are geniuses. They'll have guarantees on a beautiful home, a beautiful car, jewels and a permanent date for Saturday nights. Who cares if the guy turns out to be an ugly-as-sin wife beater with schizophrenia when you've got a boudoir instead of a bedroom?

Besides that, the lucky gal will be the first "trophy wife" to literally have a trophy. It really proves to be a win-win situation for everyone involved. The "mystery millionaire" gets a pageant-winning wife without the nuisances of dating, friendship and especially love. We all know what a hassle love is. The woman will get free stuff, plus the opportunity to participate in an event that single-handedly sets back the American womanist movement about 200 years. Now that is an honor. I guess these are the women who took it to heart when their mothers said to "marry rich." Actually, in this instance, I suppose it's really a complete lack of any heart entirely. I wonder if a dowry will be involved. I also wonder if the fabulous Regis Philbin will host the primitive event.

"Mystery Millionaire, this is Regis Philbin. The next voice you will hear is your new wife's."

"Darling, it's me. I won you in these four pageant categories: A. Submissiveness, B. Complete lack of self-respect, C. Poise while extorting money, and D. Swimsuit."



It makes sense that men are not competing to marry a female multi-millionaire since we all know that there are no female multi-millionaires. Well, excluding those hundreds of female CEOs at top organizations all over this country, but I suppose you can't expect much from Fox, the home of "The World's Deadliest Car Crashes" and "Freak Farm Machinery Accidents." What also makes sense is the reasoning behind Fox's decision. These millionaire game shows get great ratings, as does Miss America, so why not create a hybrid and do what television always does best: milk it for all it's worth in every possible variation until the public becomes excruciatingly disgusted with it, then cram it down their throats some more.

"Fifty contestants will compete in a pageant to marry a mystery multi-millionaire, ending in a legal marriage."

I realize that in modern society there are many marriages of convenience, but I'd like to think that few are the result of a beauty pageant. Call me a romantic, a faithful dreamer, but I remember couples that got married because they loved each other. They had usually met prior to the event.

I refuse to even list the date and time of this horror show since I believe in the outlandish idea that our society has evolved, that women are no longer property to be traded among landowning males. Apparently, there are at least fifty women and one major network that disagree with me.

Carla Costa is a UMass Student

Write for the Collegian Ed/Op Page. Contact Alexis or Gary at 545-1361

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Robin Johnson Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Jon Randall Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

A breach in security

Very few things on this campus bother me to the extent that I seriously do something about them. With me, most things blow over. I rant for a bit to a few very understanding friends (you know who you are, thank you), and then try to forget about them. But some things should not be left untouched. In the past week, I had two very negative run-ins with security. Both of these were during the third shift (11:00 a.m. and 2:51 a.m.), and both could have easily been avoided had the dispatcher thought before speaking.

The first incident, last Monday, occurred at about 1:00 a.m. I had just gotten home from studying when I attempted to get into my building. After swiping my ID through the reader about fifteen times, I came to the realization that my card was broken. So I did the first thing that came to my mind. I went to the escort van, still sitting in the horseshoe, and asked the driver what to do. He instructed me to call security and explain the situation. So, I did just that. I explained to the dispatch that my card was broken, but that I did live in the building.

There were several different ways that the security person could have verified that I do live in that building. I also explained that I would have called a friend, except I had just moved there and did not know anyone's phone numbers. She replied with, "That's a Housing matter." (Meaning my card being broken.) Now keep in mind that it was about 1:00 a.m. and easily below 10 degrees out. So I told her that Housing was obviously closed and that all I needed was a security officer with card access to let me into the building, something that I still do not find difficult. She said that sending someone to let me into my own building would be a breach of security. She then instructed me to wait outside of my building until someone else showed up and opened the door.

Yes, you read that correctly. She pretty much said that it would be safer for me to follow someone else into my building than to have a security officer let me in. So I did just that. I waited, and within a few minutes a couple of very big guys showed up and let me in.

Emily Vacanti

Her suggestion in itself seemed to be encouraging a breach of security. Not to bring up a sore subject, but this past Tuesday, two reported rapes in Southwest (where I live) were in the news. I don't understand this: security won't help me get into my building, and yet there are rapists roaming around Southwest. This situation is seriously screwed up.

So that was the first incident. The second incident, Sunday night, occurred at 2:51 a.m. I was waiting for the escort van in Upper Central from 2:40-2:51 a.m. I did not see the escort van drive by, though when I called security at 2:51a.m., they insisted that it had. Knowing that the last run is at 2:30 a.m., I then requested that an escort van come and pick me up and escort me to Southwest. Somewhere in the middle of the request, the line was cut off. I do not know if the dispatcher hung up on me by mistake, or if the line randomly got cut off. So I waited a few minutes and called back. I simply told the dispatcher that the line was cut off and asked if I could get an escort.

He replied by screaming at me (not a direct quote). "You lie. All you do is lie. You lie about the escort, and you lie about hanging up. You will get into trouble if you continue to lie." He was screaming this at me, over the help phone. Not only was I embarrassed, but I was also insulted and upset. All I was trying to do was get a safe ride home to Southwest. I finally told him that I would spend the night in Upper Central and just travel home safely the next morning. He finally ended by saying that he called an escort and the van would be by soon to pick me up.

So, let's review the security situation: I have trouble getting back home safely due to the escort dispatcher, and then if my card doesn't work when I do get home, I'm screwed. So is security really doing its job? Not in my mind. If a rapist can get into a dorm when a resident can't, then there's something seriously wrong with the system, and that needs to be changed, now!

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian columnist.

We encourage Speak Your Mind letters to the editor

Jackson's Alive is non-stop gore

By Wes Wrighton
Collegian Correspondent

Peter Jackson is the director/auteur who brought the film world such works as Bad Taste, Heavenly Creatures (starring Kate Winslet in one of her first major roles), and The Frighteners (with Michael J. Fox). He is currently in the midst of producing the Lord of the Rings trilogy; filming all three films back-to-back-to-back with such major movie stars as Ian McKellen, Liv Tyler, and Elijah Wood. Before you decide to see one of his more recent films, however, take a look at this hidden gem, Dead Alive.

The story concerns its self with a pathetic, lonely guy named Lionel who lives at home with his domineering mother. One day he meets the girl of his dreams, albeit through continuous bumbling around at the local convenience store. They make a date to go to the zoo. What they don't know is that the local zoo has just received the Rat Monkey from the Island of Sumatra. Whatever this monkey bites affects them in a way that no other bite could do...it makes the person crave the taste of human flesh.

To make a long story short, Lionel's mother is bitten by the Rat Monkey while spying on her son and his girl at the zoo. Mayhem ensues as Lionel tries to keep everything seeming normal in his home while the body count piles up fast.

The special effects in this film are great: state-of-the-art, but cheesy looking at the same time. The gore is very original and inventive. The death scenes rival no other film: Lionel tries to rid his house of the zombies with a lawnmower. Zombies are seen dismembering their human prey: one scene has two members of the undead copulating, and later on a baby is produced! The zombies are disposed of in a variety of absolutely disgusting and hilarious ways.

This film was billed as "The goriest fright film of all time" by the New York Daily News and totally lives up to every expectation. If you have a strong stomach, and at least have some sort of sense of humor, then this film is for you. It is a bit of an obscure film, released in the early 1990's and was filmed in New Zealand. The best version to see is the un-rated version, as the R-rated version does no justice to the state-of-the-art effects. I highly recommend this film to anyone – it is kind of unheard of, but it's a treasure that has yet to be discovered.

Peter Jackson went on to bigger and better projects after this film, and he now commands some of the best film actors. His Lord of the Rings trilogy is supposed to be the second (to that other space trilogy we have all seen) most anticipated trilogy of the millennium. George Lucas is even supervising Jackson on some of the production, as well as the computer-generated effects. If you want to catch a glimpse of an auteur before he becomes a household name, check this out sometime.

Sheila Devine will headline tomorrow night's high-energy Skybox show, starting at 8 p.m.

Devine set to bless Box tomorrow night

Ryan Benharris

Skybox is the place to be tomorrow night! Straight off of their six nominations at the Boston Music Awards, The Sheila Divine brings their alternative rock sound to the newest venue in the Pioneer Valley.

After graduating from Oneonta State University in upstate New York, The Sheila Devine recently released their debut album entitled, New Parade to rave reviews last year. The trio formed through various acquaintances in college, and through the wonders of the music industry, ended up in the fabulous city of Boston, MA. The name The Sheila Devine (which almost ended up "Shore Peterson" after the co-star of the 1985 film Ferris Bueller's Day Off) is slang in Australia for guys who aren't tough. The Sheila Devine may not consider themselves physically tough, but as far as their impact on the New England music scene, they can compare themselves to John Wayne.

With all of their recent success, the band is looking toward the future. The quick trend of Massachusetts rock bands such as Godsmack, Guster and even the pop sensations LFO, leave The Sheila Devine right in the middle of a train that's headed in the right direction.

When they come to Skybox tomorrow night, The Sheila Devine will not only welcome the adoring fans of UMass, but also the fast-rising support that they have found in the surrounding local music scene. The band has played venues all over the place.

Along with The Shiela Devine, tomorrow night at Skybox, are Boston natives The Pills. After headlining a show in Boston last week, The Pills will bring a pop rock sound that will certainly enhance the amount of energy and enthusiasm that has been surrounding The Sheila Devine. This will not be the first time that The Pills have opened up a show for such a reputable band. They picked up quite a few dates last year, at shows across the country, as the opening act for Superdrag and Sloan.

The third act on the bill for tomorrow night, is local rockers Marv's First. Marv's First are no strangers to the UMass music scene. Last year, the band kicked off the 98.3 Snow Show at the Mullins Center, and along with less than like, turned out to be one of the certain highlights. The drummer for Marv's First, Critter, spent days before the 98.3 Snow Show selling tickets and signing CD's in the Campus Center. When Marv's First opens for both The Pills and Sheila Devine on Saturday night, it will start up a night that will certainly be filled with excellent music.

The Skybox has been open since the middle of last semester, and has already housed bands such as Hurricane Dave and Rane Stone of

Turn to DEVINE page 6

Indulgences return for Jubilee year as Catholic Church sells out

Kristi Ceccarossi

Great news, fellow sinners! The Catholic Church has brought back indulgences!

The return of this historically corrupt doctrine is part of the Jubilee Celebration, scheduled for the length of this year according to the Roman Catholic calendar.

Depending on what you're guilty of, there are all types of indulgences.

The on-line version of the Catholic Encyclopedia does a fine job defining them. There are local indulgences, which are specific to regions like Rome or Jerusalem, and universal indulgences, which are good wherever you are. Real indulgences come attached to items like a crucifix and personal indulgences are just that, no trinkets involved. Plenary indulgences are remissions of the temporal punishment due to sin: basically, they make your trip to Purgatory a little easier. Partial indulgences only lessen a portion of your penalty, wholly determined by the sin. There are even indulgences for people who are already dead. Of course these can only serve as a petition to God to shorten their sufferings in the afterlife.

But one unfortunate truth that I found about all indulgences – they are NOT complete forgiveness of sin and they certainly are not permission to sin. They are merely the equivalent of slipping God a $20 bill on Judgment Day.

See, this is how it works in the Catholic Church. There's this thing called the Church Treasury. The good acts of Christ, Saints and the Virgin Mary are mostly responsible for this extraordinary fund. And it's rich enough to cover the indebtedness of all sinners. Because of these really big people, your sins are excused, but the guilt you are required to suffer is not. This is where an indulgence can

Turn to INDULGENCES page 6

Your choice of major scheduled airlines (not charters) at discount fares. A full range of discount hotel accommodations. Even cruise lines at discount prices.

HOT SPOTS/HOT DEALS!
Albuquerque $333 RT
San Diego $285 RT
San Juan $366 RT

VERY INTERNATIONAL!
London $313 RT
Paris $353 RT
Rome $429 RT

BIG DEALS TO BIG CITIES!
Los Angeles $285 RT
Las Vegas $333 RT

GREAT ONE WAY FARES AVAILABLE!
Special Hotel and Car Rental Rates, too.

BEACH PARTY!
Cocoa Beach $155 RT
South Beach $165 RT
South Padre Island $282 RT

Major Scheduled Airlines.
Overnight Ticket Delivery Available.
Choose Your Own Flights.

Book Your Discount Travel at:
cheaptickets.com
or call 888-988-8408
PHONE RESERVATIONS
Mon - Fri 8am to 2am • Sat - Sun 8am to 11pm

YOU COULD BE GOING PLACES.
Check out cheaptickets.com/springbreak today.
(Hint: Aloha)

CHEAP TICKETS INC.
America's Travel Store®
Travel Stores: New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Honolulu

Airfares are not guaranteed until ticketed. Fares may be non-refundable and may have an advance purchase. Fares do not include $3-$12 airport passenger facility charges where applicable and tax segment fee of $2.50 per takeoff/landing; fares to Alaska and Hawaii do not include departure taxes up to $17, international taxes, fees, and surcharges up to $95. Fares are subject to change, holiday or seasonal supplements, blackout dates, availability and other restrictions.

Metalfest set to buzz Palladium

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

On Friday, Feb. 11 and Saturday, Feb. 12, the Palladium in Worcester will host the second annual New England Metal & Hardcore Festival. The Palladium will be crawling with massive amounts of aggression from late Friday afternoon until early Sunday morning. Similar to last year's outing, there will be bands playing on both the main stage as well as a smaller second stage. This year's festival will present nearly 50 bands with more to be announced, and will have an impressive mixture of both metal and hardcore acts. The variety of this year's acts is especially impressive, and includes rap/metal acts like Reveille and Primer 55, death metal mainstays Six Feet Under and Cannibal Corpse, and hardcore legends like Snapcase and Vision of Disorder.

Friday's fistful of metal contains far fewer bands than Saturday's all day affair, but suffers no lack of quality. Headliners Machine Head can be expected to lay waste to the audience with their brutal metal assault, while new release The Burning Red provides extra ammunition for the attack. Local rap/metal act Reveille will be on home turf when they serve their not-so-unique sound to receptive local ears. Death metal will make an appearance as well as Chris Barnes, Six Feet Under will try to teach the fans the meaning of their latest release Maximum Violence.

COURTESY JOHN GEDDES

Machine Head will be ripping tunes from their new album, The Burning Red, at this weekend's New England Hardcore & Metal Festival.

Massachusetts hardcore will be well represented when Shadows Fall takes the stage, returning to the Palladium a few months after their opening slot for Sweden's metal masters In Flames. Primer 55 has just released their debut Introduction to Mayhem and if the title of that record is any indication, the pit will be a wild place to be during their time slot. Immolation and Hatepiow will most likely not have any dance numbers during their death metal sets, while Buried Alive and 7th Rail Crew will round out the night with some old-fashioned hardcore and beantown crossover metal, respectively.

The eternal Misfits headline Saturday's metal massacre. To keep them company is death metal legends Cannibal Corpse, aided by the south-ing vocals of George "Corpsegrinder" Fisher. Snapcase and Vision of Disorder will provide some first-rate New York hardcore; be sure to catch Snapcase to hear tracks from the excellent new disc Designs for Automotion. The hardcore bands keep on coming on Saturday, when The Dillinger Escape Plan and Turmoil offer their distinct takes on the genre. Boston will be well represented when Scissorfight makes a guaranteed kill and Tiee continues to live with their death wish. Some hip-hop flava will spice up the proceedings when Candiria and Skarhead bring their unique fusion to Worcester. Punk rock in its extreme form will also make a name for itself this weekend in the form of Grade and Himsa. Newly signed to Roadrunner, fun three-piece The Step Kings will make an appearance, as well as less fun but more brutal bands like Dying Fetus and Deceased. Also appearing on Saturday will be Haste, Diabolic, Isis, and Old Man Gloom. And let us not forget Boston's heroes, the irrepressible Seth Putnam and Anal C*nt.

Excellent Boston hardcore act Diecast is a highlight among the long list of bands that will also be appearing, which is not yet complete. But for the time being, you can at least look forward to Reach the Sky, Hate Machine, Gargantua Soul, Simple, Nok, Colepitz, All That Remains, God Dethroned, Neck, The Hope Conspiracy, Skinless, Blood Has Been Shed, 100 Demons, Dissolve, Blindside, and Indecision. If you manage to take in all of these bands, there is no doubt you will become a much happier person.

The New England Metal & Hardcore Festival will take place at the Worcester Palladium on Friday, Feb. 11 and Saturday, Feb. 12. The show begins at 5:30 p.m. on Friday and noon on Saturday, and runs until 1 a.m. on both nights. Tickets are available at Strawberries, through Protix at (800) 477-6849, or online at tickets.com.

■ indulgence

continued from page 5

help. Buying one is like making an investment in your future – a down payment on your spot in the afterlife. If you've sinned, your chances of being absolved are increased. But again, can't make any promises.

So where did we all get the silly idea that paying off a Catholic priest would reserve a place for us in Heaven? Well, around the 14th and 15th centuries it all came to a head. Johann Tetzel, the Dominican friar, best known for his illegal sale of passes to Heaven, was raking in some serious cash. Supposed pillars of faith exploiting their religious positions to extort large sums of money from naive devotees of God? Can you believe it!? Well, Martin Luther couldn't so he proceeded to do what the Catholics call Luther's revolt. Our history books note it as the founding of the Protestant Church.

Indulgences are probably available at a church near you. Last week, the Boston Globe provided a list of local churches offering this sacrament. Of course the most authentic of these gifts from God is found in the Vatican. But since it isn't likely that you'll be traveling to Rome this year, give a call to your local place of worship. But remember, as the Bull of Indiction on the Vatican website tells us, indulgences are only going to work for the faithful and properly prepared.

I know the Catholic Church has done lots of crazy things in its day, but this is really ridiculous. The Church's own records show that the indulgence was not something proposed by Christ, whose teachings are the entire foundation for Christianity – the philosophy of faith to which Catholic dogma occasionally subscribes. The indulgence was designed by financially lacking churches in the 1300's to build better houses of God and hospitals and to sponsor keg parties.

If you have the money, I suggest you don't waste it on these flimsy tokens, useless pieces of paper, or ethereal blessings from earthly representatives of God. Instead, indulge in yourself. Go out for a really big dinner and refuse to share any of it, go to a bar for a couple of drinks and get into a fight, visit a house of ill repute, contemplate how everyone has a life better than yours, go home proud of everything you've done and sleep for the next three days.

■ devine

continued from page 5

the events that UMass students can take advantage of at Skybox are Sensual Thursdays at 10:00 p.m. every Thursday night where ladies get in free before 11:00 p.m., as well as Horizon every Friday night where ladies' entrance is free before 11:30 p.m.

Tomorrow's show featuring The Sheila Devine, The Pills and Mary's First begins at 8:00 p.m. and doors open at 7:00 p.m. Tickets are $8.00 at the door. For more information, contact The Skybox website at www.umass.edu/skybox.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian staff member

Call for reservations and hours of operation

Goten
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE

Come sit and relax as our chefs exhibit their talents in preparing for you the finest foods at your table.

For nearly 50 years our large sized tables and private dining rooms have made Goten a favorite for birthdays, anniversaries, meetings, and private functions of all kinds.

Affordable seafood, chicken, and steak dinner specials are available daily except Saturday so come in today and try our fine Japanese cuisine

Now accepting OCMP

Now Taking Reservations for Valentine Day

704 Old Amherst Road • Off Route 116 • On bus route
Sunderland • (413) 665-3628

The University of Massachusetts'

Something Every Friday

Comedian "Peter Correale"

Comedian Peter Correale brings to the UMass campus his unique brand of fast-paced comedy about life, relationships and just getting by.....

Bluewall Cafe

Friday, February 11, 2000, 8pm, FREE

****

The film "American Beauty" will be shown following the performance. "American Beauty" will also be shown on Sunday February 13th, at 8pm AND 10pm, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Visit us on the Web: http://www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm

This program is made possible by a grant from the Auxiliary Services Department and the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs.

Chance or Design

Don't take a chance on your career. Working at CIGNA is different. We don't try to force you into a job that doesn't fit your abilities.

What we do is find rewarding, challenging and (yes) fun opportunities for tomorrow's business leaders. Ones that take the kind of talent and hard work you've already shown in earning your degree.

That's not all. We're also just as interested in your personal fulfillment. Which is probably why we have made a habit of showing up on a lot of "best places to work" lists from Fortune to Working Mother.

CIGNA's built its success on hiring bright, creative individuals from all major backgrounds and helping them build careers filled with meaningful work that brings out their best. The result is more productive lives that benefit us as well as our employees.

With 43,000 employees worldwide and $93 billion in assets, CIGNA is a global employee benefits and financial services company. Beyond those numbers, we strive every day to live up to our reputation as "A Business of Caring."

One CIGNA: Many Opportunities.

CIGNA
A Business of Caring.

Visit us on the Web:
www.cigna.com/working/college

We're an equal opportunity employer. M/F/D/V. "CIGNA" refers to CIGNA Corporation and/or one or more of its subsidiaries. Most employees are employed by subsidiaries of CIGNA Corporation, which provide insurance and related products

A capella invades NoHo

Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

This Sunday afternoon, the best collegiate a cappella groups from the Northeast will come to the Academy of Music Theater in Northampton to compete in the Silver Chord Bowl.

If you're looking for a fun afternoon of musical entertainment, check out this show. A cappella is always best when listened to in concert. There is a certain energy that just cannot come through on an album. If you have ever heard any a cappella that you liked on a CD, you will love the music even more live. And if you haven't ever heard a cappella, you might be surprised at the diverse sounds that can be created solely by voices.

As if the competing college groups were not going to be enough by themselves, the professional Boston-based mouth band Ball in the House will be emceeing the event. This six-man band amazes audiences wherever they go, thanks to their funky sound, high energy level and an impressive vocal rhythm section. Ball in the House has opened for Cher at the Tweeter Center and 98 Degrees at the Hatch Shell in Boston.

The National Championship of Collegiate A Cappella will be providing a cappella fans in all regions of the country with opportunities to see talented groups perform throughout February and March. The top two placing groups from each quarter-final will advance to the semi-final for that region. The winner of the semi-final will advance to the National Finals at the Lincoln Center in New York.

So far, Brown Bear Necessities and Harmonic Motion are the only a cappella groups that have been determined as semi-finalists from the Northeast region. The all male Brown Bear Necessities have a predominantly modern repertoire, including Boyz II Men, U2 and Paula Abdul. Harmonic Motion, a large size co-ed group of 15, also sings the work of current rock artists, such as Tori Amos, Barenaked Ladies and Eagle Eye Cherry.

Showtime: 2 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 13 at the Academy of Music Theater in Northampton. For tickets & info call (413)587-126. Tickets are $5.

COURTESY ROB MCEWAN

Shakespeare this ain't
Fresh off her Oscar win for Shakespeare in Love, Gwyneth Paltrow teams with the dreamy Scott Speedman ("Felicity") in Duets

Mainstream adaptation ruins Shakespeare classic

By Desson Howe
The Washington Post

Titus, starring Anthony Hopkins and Jessica Lange, amounts to director Julie Taymor's filmic reprise of her 1995 stage adaptation of Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus. Between these "Titus" projects, Taymor directed the Broadway version of The Lion King, for which she is best-known.

One thing seems clear: Taymor should stick with Disney. Hopkins is masterful as Titus, the grizzled Roman warrior who returns after a great military campaign, only to fall afoul of the political cloak-and-dagger machinations in Rome. Unfortunately, everything he achieves is turned on its face by Taymor's direction, which doesn't interpret Shakespeare so much as make an amateurishly postmodern spectacle of itself.

When Titus returns with the captured Goth Queen Tamora (Lange) and her sons in tow, he honors tradition by executing Tamora's oldest son. This marks the beginning of a multi-layered vendetta that will leave many dead, disfigured or served up in pies.

When Rome's elders invite Titus to rule Rome, the noble soldier passes the mantle to the spoiled, supercilious Saturninus (Alan Cumming, who unintentionally suggests Tim Curry's geeky brother), who struts around in a red-lapeled black leather coat followed by his similarly clad goon squad.

Saturninus shacks Titus by freeing and marrying Tamora, allowing her sons Alarbus (Raz Degan) and Chiron (Jonathan Rhys Meyers) to run amok.

Things get increasingly nasty. Tamora and her lover, the Moor Aaron (Harry Lennix), foment a plan of revenge against Titus, including framing the old soldier's sons for the death of Saturninus' brother. And Tamora's sons accost and rape Titus's beloved daughter, Lavinia (Laura Fraser).

But Titus, whose fealty to Rome knows no bounds, refuses to intervene in these obvious acts of treachery. As madness descends upon him – this would be right around the time Aaron tricks him into slicing off one of his hands – he starts to plot his counter-revenge.

With a story as twisted and bizarre as this, a little directorial conceit goes a long way. But Taymor storms in, brimming over with the kind of "clever" postmodern zeal that was already passe when Peter Brook made the 1967 film, The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of the Asylum of Charenton Under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade."

Taymor simply wants us to know Who's Directing This. Saturninus and his slickly clad cohorts zoom around the city in squad cars and motorbikes. TV network news microphones are labeled "SPQR News." Alarbus and Chiron are portrayed as air-guitar metalheads. And a modern-day child (Osheen Jones) enters the story, only to tag irrelevantly along in every scene.

There's something hideously pretentious about the whole thing. This modernization-of-Shakespeare fever (so the MTV generation can appreciate the Bard's utter dudeness) has become so banal a filmmaker could practically earn the appellation enfant terrible by adapting a Shakespeare play without such frills. But not Taymor. She has too many Great Ideas about modern life to focus our attention on the play. For this she deserves boots and hoots from those cackling hyenas in The Lion King.

Joey's Creek
Katie Holmes will star alongside Michael Douglas and Tobey Maguire in the upcoming Wonder Boys

Rocker's stupidity hardly rivals baseball's ignorance

By Dave Kindred
The Sporting News

Watching the 11 o'clock sports news the past month was enough to convince me that the world had gone mad. I saw a wide receiver in handcuffs charged with murder. I saw a middle linebacker in handcuffs charged with murder. I saw a sport utility vehicle that had been speeding on ice, the vehicle now a wreck, a linebacker paralyzed. I saw a Porsche cut in two, a basketball player dead. I saw all this, and I heard about wife beatings and DWIs and drug trafficking, and I kept seeing John Rocker this, John Rocker that, and John Rocker, John Rocker. John Rocker. And I thought of a dead mother and dead young men and the world gone mad, and I thought, "Who cares about John Rocker?"

I know rednecks. During deer season this winter, within a half-mile of my home, I could have walked up to a 25-year-old redneck hanging off a tree. He'd have been wearing camouflage thermals and a NASCAR ballcap. He'd have been peering down into a forest clearing, his rifle at the ready in case Bambi came by foraging for breakfast.

Had I been desperate for conversation, I could have talked to the great white hunter about good ol' dogs and campfires and loading your own ammo. But I promise you, I would not have asked what he thought of women, homosexuals, AIDS, African Americans and the efficacy of immigration as it relates to the American dream.

I'm sorry, and maybe it's unfair, but a 25-year-old redneck deer hunter's world view doesn't carry much weight with me.

So why, with the world flying apart, should I care about John Rocker's adolescent World Wrestling Federation rantings in Sports Illustrated? Let me say it again, in the wake of Commissioner Bud Selig's suspension and fine of Rocker, the question begging to be asked is: Who cares?

The only reason anyone knows what John Rocker said is because today's insatiable media monster must be fed, and in the absence of substance we hurl into its maw a daily, even hourly, ration of uncensored half-thoughts uttered by celebrities. And so diminished is the coin of celebrity these days that a good left-handed relief pitcher can qualify if he persists in making a public fool of himself as Rocker did by taunting Mets fans during the National League Championship Series.

Turns out that he'd been a private fool all along, reportedly the least popular man in the Braves' clubhouse, a reputation burnished the day his catcher, Eddie Perez, threw a ball into right field because first baseman Randall Simon was slow to cover the base on a dropped third strike. Rocker came to the clubhouse screaming – not because the Braves lost but because he, personally, had lost a personal reward, that day's save.

Simon, an African American, later would be identified as the "fat monkey" of Rocker's rant. And when Rocker used an ESPN interview to pass off the slur as harmless clubhouse repartee, Simon responded angrily: "I swear to you if he said that to my face I'd tear him up. ... When I joke, I don't try to make somebody feel bad. He knows, too. We don't joke like that. He has no relationship with the black guys or the Latin guys on the team. He's lying to try and cover himself. He has a lot of guts to say that."

So in John Rocker we have a 25-year-old self-described redneck who is accused by a teammate of lying to cover a racist slur. And we're paying attention to Rocker? The sad truth is, by suspending and fining him, baseball has legitimized Rocker, even made him an important figure. His childish outburst has been elevated to the level of thought. He has been punished as if he were a politically incorrect devil when he's just a politically stupid redneck.

He constituted no threat to the game's integrity; clubhouses are full of his bigoted likes. It can be argued that Major League Baseball itself is more guilty of racism than Rocker is. Two teams, the Indians and Braves, have institutionalized their racism by using names, symbols and rituals offensive to Native Americans.

Here's how it should have gone down: Bud Selig reads the SI story and calls a news conference at which he says, "John Rocker is an adolescent punk and everyone who knows him knows it. We'll ask him to stay after school three days next week. End of statement."

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, the Braves players take Rocker into their clubhouse, set up a Kangaroo Court, hear the case and then call a news conference at which Randall Simon says, "As judge of this Kangaroo Court, I want America to know 1) John Rocker has been fined $50,000, to be divided equally among five Atlanta diversity-training offices; 2) Rocker has apologized individually to each of his teammates, 3) he will memorize Dr. King's "I Have a Dream Speech," and 4) he now has a statement to make."

Whereupon John Rocker comes to the microphone and says, "What a stupid $5& I am."

Junior joins Senior in Cincinnati as M's, Reds swing blockbuster trade

By Dave Sheinin
Washington Post

In a rare instance of a premier player being traded in the prime of his career, the Seattle Mariners dealt superstar center fielder Ken Griffey Jr. to the Cincinnati Reds Thursday. The deal, more than three months in the making, altered the balance of power in the National League and made Griffey the game's highest-paid player.

In return for Griffey, 30, the Mariners received right-handed starting pitcher Brett Tomko, center fielder Mike Cameron and two minor-leaguers – second baseman Antonio Perez and right-handed pitcher Jake Meyer.

Griffey, a 10-time all-star and a member of baseball's All-Century Team, will return to the city in which he grew up, where he will be reunited with his father, Ken Griffey Sr., the Reds' hitting coach.

As with any major deal in today's times, the Griffey trade was fueled and complicated by money. The trade was agreed upon late Wednesday night, but before it could be completed, the Reds had to sign Griffey, who could have become a free agent after the 2000 season, to a long-term contract. That they were able to do so within 24 hours of the deal being reached hints at how badly Griffey wanted to go to Cincinnati.

By Thursday afternoon, the Reds had signed Griffey to an eight-year, $114 million contract (much of which is deferred), the highest in total value in baseball history, surpassing the $105 million deal signed by Kevin Brown last winter.

"For several weeks, we have been working to honor Ken's request to play in his hometown of Cincinnati," said Mariners general manager Pat Gillick. "We are pleased to complete this deal."

Griffey essentially forced the deal by rejecting the Mariners' attempts to sign him to a long-term deal, and he also wielded his veto power as a "10-and-5" player (at least 10 years in the majors, at least five with his current team) to handpick his new team.

The trade did not include a third team, as had been reported Wednesday night and early Thursday. The Mariners discussed an additional trade with the Anaheim Angels that would have brought center fielder Jim Edmonds to Seattle, and they may further pursue such a deal.

Griffey is just two home runs shy of 400, and is considered the player with the best chance of breaking Henry Aaron's all-time record of 755. He is also considered one of the best defensive center fielders to have played the game, alongside Willie Mays.

This was to have been the final year in Griffey's four-year, $34 million deal with the Mariners. In facilitating the completion of the deal, Griffey appears to have accepted less money from the Reds than he likely would have commanded on the open market as a free agent following the 2000 season. Griffey rejected an eight-year, $148 million extension offer from the Mariners last year.

During baseball's winter meetings the Reds and Mariners announced they had reached an impasse over the inclusion of Reds second baseman Pokes Reese, whom Reds GM Jim Bowden refused to part with, and had broken off talks. The Mariners also pursued a deal with the New York Mets, but Griffey made it known he would only accept a trade to the Reds.

In Griffey, the Reds acquired arguably the game's best all-around player, making them instant challengers to the Atlanta Braves' run of National League dominance, without destroying the nucleus of a solid, young team that won 96 games last season.

Tomko, 26, was 5-7 with a 4.92 ERA last season. Cameron, 27, hit .256 with 21 homers and 66 RBI. Still to be determined is [illegible] the Mariners broke baseball [illegible] by allowing Griffey [illegible] agent. Goldberg, to begin [illegible] long-term deal directly with [illegible] before the trade was [illegible] apparent violation.

Sandy Alderson, [illegible] president of Major League [illegible] said baseball would look [illegible] matter, with a ruling [illegible] made next week.

M&M
Mandy Mosby and the women's gymnastics team hosts Penn State tomorrow at Boyden Gymnasium. The Minutewomen are looking to avenge an earlier loss to the 12th-ranked Nittany Lions.

UM looks to be all it can be

By Farrah Alexander
Collegian Staff

If a fight is what Army wants, a fight is what Army is going to get when the Massachusetts men's tennis team invades the Cadets' territory this Sunday.

Last weekend when the Minutemen competed in the Cornell Invitational, they were unable to meet their full potential due to injuries sustained by three of their top players. Senior Parsa Samii sustained a bone bruise in his heel, sophomore Steve Prisco had to retire from his match due to tightness in his thigh, and freshman Will Shaw wasn't even able to compete, instead being forced to stay behind to nurse a rotator cuff injury.

But make no mistake about it, none of the players on this team are quitters.

Despite incurring a serious ankle injury this past fall during play against UConn, sophomore Todd Champeau flat-out refused to quit and won his match. In his match this past fall against URI, Bill Greener also refused to forfeit the match despite the pain and the seriousness of his injury.

Thus, considering her players' level of determination and their tenacity, head coach Judy Dixon hasn't been losing any sleep over last weekend's events.

"This year we're not at full strength. Will Shaw has a shoulder injury, but I'm feeling very good about our chances to beat Army," Dixon said. "Army's strength is that they're very deep, and usually very fit, and that they fight well in matches, but my guess is if I had to choose who's going to win Army at number one, he [Steve Prisco] would win. I would have to give him the edge.

"At number two I think you'd have to give us the edge again just because of styles of play. It gets harder for us as we go down, which is sort of unusual because were pretty deep, and I think it gets harder for us as they go down because they're very much the same as they go down. So I'm looking to win the doubles point and I'm looking to win at the top. I think we're ready."

On their way to compete against Army last year, the Minutemen were involved in an automobile accident when their van slid on a patch of black ice and spun out of control. As a result, Fabien Rabanal fractured his pelvis, but despite the tragic accident, most of Dixon's team marched on to fight the Cadets.

"Based on last year where they were sort of demoralized when they showed up at Army and still did fairly well, you'd have to say that we have a pretty good chance to do this," Dixon said.

Only a half hour after finishing combat with the Army, the Minutemen will be going head to head with Seton Hall, a team unlikely to upset UMass. "Seton Hall for us is usually not considered a problem, except for they have a very good number one. So [Prisco], in effect is going to have a very tough match, and he has a hard time with this guy's style. But he knows what he has to do and I think that he's sort of ready to play," Dixon said. "I'm looking for a good year from him all the way around at number one. But you'd have to give us for sure the edge at Seton Hall. We're too deep for Seton Hall.

"Seton Hall actually gets very much weaker after their number one. But we're targeting for Army. We're not targeted for Seton Hall. We're going down there to beat Army."

Having successfully thwarted almost all of their rivals in action that this past fall, Dixon couldn't be feeling any better about her team and is drawing on the confidence they acquired.

"I've never had such a good team in terms of our depth and I've never had such an eager team, and right now they're 5-0," Dixon said. "When they go out on the court I think they feel like, we can take anybody on right now."

This Sunday, Shaw will be the only Minuteman who will be sitting out due to injury. Both Prisco and Samii have recovered and are expected to participate. Following their matches this weekend against Army and Seton Hall, the Maroon and White will face its most challenging opponent of the season in Brown.

■ b-ball

continued from page 12

the division.

And dealing with the Dukes will undoubtedly come down to more than just stopping Friday. Duquesne coach Dan Durkin's roster boasts two other players averaging double figures in scoring in LynnDee Howell (10.9 ppg) and Gina Naccarato (10 ppg), and the Dukes have gotten unprecedented production out of junior center Jaime Vander Zanden (7.1 ppg, 6.7 rpg) and sophomore forward Oxana Shetko (.375 shooting from 3-point range). After watching Temple pivot Lisa Jackubowicz shred her team for 17 points and 11 boards last week, O'Brien will undoubtedly be weary of the Dukes' talent-laden frontcourt.

Things won't get any easier for UMass when it reaches Blacksburg, Virginia on Sunday for a 2 p.m. melee with Virginia Tech. The Hokies (13-8, 6-4 A-10) have experienced admirable success this season behind the conference's fifth-leading scoring offense, an attack that averages just over 67 points per game.

Leading the charge for coach Bonnie Henrifen's crew is junior forward Tere Williams, who has connected on a mind-boggling 60 percent of her shots from the field en route to a 15 points per game scoring average. Add to that the doubly-deadly guard tandem of Chrystal Starling (11.7 ppg) and Sarah Hicks (11.2 ppg) and it's easy to see exactly how the Hokies have managed to work such magic this year: Va. Tech took No. 5 Georgia down to the wire in this year's preseason WNIT Tournament, and rallied to beat St. Joseph's, 62-53, in Philadelphia on January 23.

For UMass to rebound fully from its two game losing streak and make this road trip worthwhile, the team will have to truly fire on all

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen suffered mightily without Caroline Nehls (foul trouble) and Jennifer Butler (injury), falling to Temple 42-40 at the Apollo last weekend.

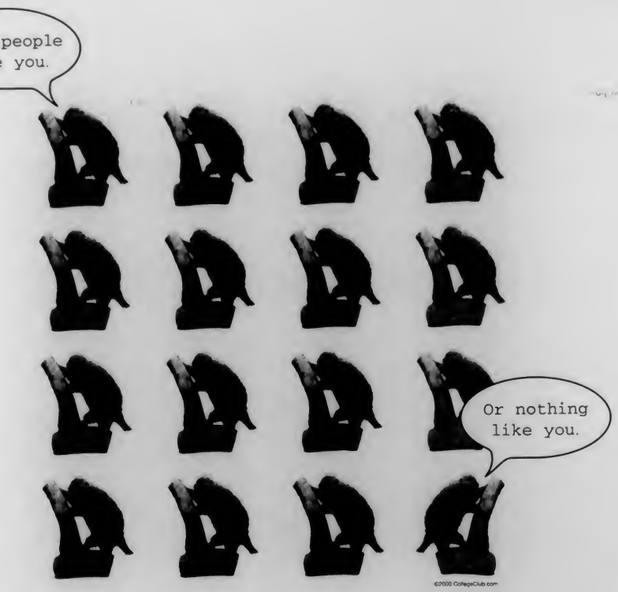
cylinders. That means that forwards Nekole Smith and Caroline Nehls will have to clean up their defense and stay out of foul trouble. That means that guards Tonia Thomas and Kathy Coyner will have to discern when to chuck it from the cheap seats and when to pound the ball inside. That means that tweeners Amber Sneed, Jay Bradley and Alison MacFarland will have to make the extra pass, bang hard for the extra loose ball, and collapse defensively to aid their teammates down low when the game goes into the trenches.

In short, the team will have to play the brand of basketball that it has sought all year, but only delivered on occasion. Because before they know it, the Minutewomen may not have anything left to play for.

AROUND THE RIM: The 15-million dollar lawsuit filed against the team, coach and university last semester has been withdrawn by the plaintiffs. Three former UMass players had cited physical and verbal abuse, along with other charges including medical misdiagnosis, as the basis for a federal suit that never actually reached court.

■ hockey

continued from page 12



paces the club in scoring with 28 points [12-16]. Blanchard is right behind him with 23 points [8-15], while freshman forward Tim Turner [5-14-19] continues to make a case for himself for the All-Rookie team.

The Minutemen will rely on goaltenders Markus Helanen and Mike Johnson to keep them in the game with the Black Bears this weekend. Helanen has been his best against Maine since taking over the starting job last season. In six games, he has over 40 saves in five of them. Included in that stretch is a win and tie over the Black Bears last season.

After this weekend, things won't get any easier for the Minutemen. They are idle next weekend, but will play home-and-home series with No. 2 New Hampshire and No. 5 Boston College.

"I don't think that we can call it desperation yet, but every point counts," Blanchard said.

If you write for Collegian sports, you too can be a part-time lover

ShAre common interests. DiScOVER different views. Join cLubS. Meet fRienDs. MaKe NeW ones. yOu never knOw what you'll FInD at CollegeClub.com. Log on!

CollegeClub.com it's all U.™

No porcupines, living, dead or otherwise, were harmed in the creation of this advertisement.

HEY DAVID SCOTT
HOW big are your buildings?
If Amherst & Hampshire Colleges can contribute $5,000 towards a Thermal Imaging Camera for the Amherst Fire Department, why can't UMass? P.S. We could also use $450,000 for a Ladder Truck.
Paid for by Larry Kelley

amc There is a Difference!
Silence is Golden
No child under 6 in any PG-13 or R rated film after 6PM.
Mt. Farms 4 • Mt. Farms Mall 584-9153
THE HURRICANE: R
Today at 7:10 10:10
Sat at 7:10 10:10
Sun at 7:10
Mon - Thur at 7:50
SCREAM 3: R
Today at (4:40@$3.50) 7:20 10:10
Sat at 12:50 (4:40 @ $3.50) 7:20 10:10
Sunday at 12:50 (4:40 @ $3.50) 7:50
Mon - Thur at (5:20 @ $3.50) 8:10
THE BEACH: R
Today at (4:30@ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sat at 12:40 (4:30@ $3.50) 7:30 10:20
Sun at 12:40 (4:30 @ $3.50) 7:30
Mon - Thur (5:10@3.50) 8:00
THE TRIGGER MOVIE: G
Today at (4:50 @$3.50) 7:40 9:30
Sat at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.50) 7:40 9:30
Sun at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.50) 7:40
Mon - Thur (5:30 @$3.50) 7:50
STUART LITTLE: PG
Today at (5:00 @$3.50)
Sat at 12:30 2:30 (5:00 @ $3.50)
Sun at 12:30 2:30 (5:00 @ $3.50)
Mon-Thur (5:40 @ $3.50)
$3.50 'Twi-lite' Show Daily!
Special Engagement. No Passes or Coupons.

Men's indoor track travels to Beantown for V-Day Classic

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's indoor track athletes are proven, tried and true, honest to goodness contenders in the Atlantic 10. Period. A squad that boasts one of the most talented throwers in the division, an astonishingly poised crop of rookies and depth in nearly every event is not to be taken lightly. Any A-10 team would concur.

But what about the nation?

The Minutemen have demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that they can hold their own among the region's elite. This weekend, the team will have the opportunity to lock horns with the nation's best at the annual Valentine's Classic. For a single day, the Boston University track facilities will transform into the hub of the collegiate track universe, featuring nearly 50 schools, a handful of national track clubs, and over 1000 athletes.

The meet signifies a switching of gears for the squad, as the Minutemen begin to mentally and physically prepare for end-of-season competition. As opposed to regular season tri- and quad-meets, where an athlete often performs in multiple events, the Valentine's Classic allows each competitor to devote his focus to a single event.

According to head coach Ken O'Brien, the Classic couldn't come at a better time for his team. "It sharpens them up for the conference and regional championships that happen after this," he offered. "It's a source of motivation because they see people from all over the country. They're playing in a great facility and they're specializing in their number one events."

O'Brien expects the throwers to provide the boost the team needs to compete at the national level, particularly senior Vic Morency and sophomore Steve Anderson. "Those two athletes can compete at a very high level," he commented. "They'll score very high regardless of how high up the ladder the team competition is."

While the spotlight inevitably will be cast upon the powerhouse throwing tandem, the distance medley relay team will also be seeking its share of the glory. The relay team nabbed first in the event last year, and the quartet (seniors Matt Ely and Sean Murphy, junior Gary Collupy, and sophomore Sal Nastasi) returns this season in an attempt to recapture national eminence.

The sprinting squad recently received a boost with the return of sophomore Adrian Zullo of UMass football fame. Zullo, who converts his wide receiver agility to tremendous success in the sprinting events, should prove beneficial in the final stretch of the season.

Although the team possesses a solid core of mid-distance and distance runners, O'Brien will be looking for a handful of outstanding performances to emerge from the group. This will be of particular importance for this weekend since junior Marc Sylvander, the team's high caliber mid-distance runner, will sit out his third meet in a row due to an abdominal strain.

"Some of the people who are near the top need to gain the confidence to compete at least one level higher in order for us to be a real solid team," O'Brien said.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kevin Curtin leads the men's indoor track team into battle when the Minutemen travel to Boston for the Valentine's Classic

■ xavier

continued from page 12

Wednesday, forcing La Salle into 20 turnovers. Not only that but the Minutemen dominated the key area, outscoring the Explorers 48-22 underneath, much of the credit going to Kirkland, who found plenty of room to work with early on, scoring 16 first half points en route to a 17-point halftime advantage.

Xavier has had 22 games to find replacements for one of its most heralded senior classes. The trio of Posey, Lenny Brown and Gary Lumpkin's absence has shown in the Musketeers' production on the road, where they stand just 2-5 overall.

"They lost a lot of good players. They lost over 5,000 points. Not only that, but they also lost a lot of experience. They lost guys who have been through the wars," Flint said. "Now they got young guys who will be good players, but they were never in a situation where they've had to really carry the load."

Darnell Williams returns for his senior season after sitting out last year with a knee injury. In addition, the Muskies bring the conference's leading rebounder to the fold in freshman David West, who rips down nine boards a game.

UM hopes to continue reign against loaded Carnival field

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Correspondent

It is hard to improve on a first place finish, but both the men's and women's Massachusetts ski teams will attempt to do just that when they travel to Acutney Mountain, VT this weekend to compete in the Boston College Carnival.

Last week at the Brown/UConn Carnival in Lincoln, NH, the men's team pulled out a first place finish in the slalom and a third place finish in the giant slalom, while the women's team came in first in the giant slalom and second in the slalom.

Pete Sanford, a freshman from Queenstown, New Zealand, has already taken over the number one position on the team by coming in first in the slalom and ninth in the giant slalom, despite the fact that he arrived at UMass less than four weeks ago. Ken Thoman, Rich Granger and Beau Gibson also scored points for the Minutemen, and helped the team ski to its best performance of the season.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Rich Granger

For the Minutewomen, Tina King, Lauren Brodes and Carolyn Lowenburg placed third, fourth and 10th respectively in the giant slalom and 13th, fourth, and sixth respectively in the slalom.

Head coach Bill MacConnell, a 34-year coaching veteran, attributed the team's success last week to a more intense off-season training program, and to the ability of his team to step up and handle the poor weather conditions on the top of the mountain. The additions of assistant coaches Mike MacConnell and Maryann Shirley have also helped the team return to top form.

The Minutemen and Minutewomen both race in the Eastern College Ski Conference, which includes Babson, Boston College, Brown, Colby Sawyer, Connecticut, M.I.T., New England College, Plymouth State, St. Anselm's and Smith College.

NCAA rules state that the men's team is allowed to race 10 competitors in each race, while the women's team is allowed to race eight. The top five men's skiers and the best three women's skiers score points for the team.

Last year the Minutemen were able to qualify for the NCAA Regionals and the USCSA (United States College Ski Association) Regionals and Nationals. This year they hope to accomplish even more despite the loss of four-time All-American Tom Holden to graduation. With only the Boston College Carnival this weekend and the Smith College Carnival the following weekend left to the regular season, now is the time for the Maroon and White to wax its K2's and break some land speed records in preparation for post-season play.

The Minutewomen also hope to improve on last year's finish, in which they were able to qualify for the post season for the first time as a team since 1984. No top skiers from last year were lost to graduation, so the team is hoping all signs picking up where it left off a year ago.

If UMass can come even close to duplicating its performance last week in Lincoln, then the rest of the Eastern College Ski Conference better be wary of the Minutemen this weekend in Acutney.

Minutewomen eye Boston Classic

By Jon Tafarella
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's indoor track team will be heading for Boston this weekend to compete in the Valentines Day Classic. The team is coming off an event at Northeastern last weekend, a contest highlighted by a number of outstanding personal achievements.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Melissa Henderson

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sharon Tillotson

Coach Julie LaFreniere will be looking for another outstanding performance from senior Melissa Ward, who is currently ranked third or better on the team in six different events, and has put together an outstanding season thus far through her performance in the high jump and 55-meter dash.

She should find some competition in the high jump, however, from Brown's Mira Manikam and Lindsay Taylor, both of whom qualified at the same height as Ward.

LaFreniere will also be looking for repeat performances from the field team, including seniors Alison Tostevin and Giselle Nicholas in the shot put. Both came in third in their weekend's event, with identical throws of 38'8".

However, they too should have their work cut out for them, considering Brown's Stephanie Sebastian has recorded throws at the 41' mark, and Melissa Chiantco and Caitlin Seymore from the University of Delaware have also thrown past 40 feet. The biggest competition for the throwing squad this weekend will come from UConn Huskies Bethany Heart, who has thrown 42 feet and Dana Bloom, who has reached 45 feet.

Sophomores Rhiannna DeCruz also scored in the jumps and throws on the field, and Tiffany Chaplin put up points for UMASS in the jumps last weekend.

Coach LaFremere's hopes for success at the Classic will be further bolstered by her excellent distance squad. Monica Elmore placed fifth in the 1,000 meter this past weekend, sophomore Kristin Ciswoski placed fifth as well in the mile, and Sharon Tillotson scored points for Logan place in the 3,000 meter run. The one to beat in the mile on Saturday will be Amy DeCamp from New Hampshire, who covered the distance in 4:50, and heavy competition in the 3000 meter run will come from the Providence Friars' Heather Cappello, who qualified in 9:40.

In past years, the UMass women have made a good showing at The Valentines Classic. In 1998, the team took first and sixth in the high hurdles along with second and seventh in the 55-meter dash. Senior Nichele Way took first in the 1000, and Monica Elmore came in fifth. The team also took sixth in the 200 meter and seventh in the 3K.

HAIR, SKIN & NAILS MASSAGE THERAPY
All hours by appointment
SPECIALIZING IN:
• Swedish • Deep Tissue
• Hydrotherapy • Therapeutic
Full Service Salon featuring Hair Styling • Aveda Facials Nail Services • Massage Therapy 100 % Organic Hair Removal
$5 OFF full leg with or without bikini
Pink Heart 30 min. Massage 60 min. Aveda Facial Paraffin Wax Manicure Hair Shampoo & Blow reg. $60 discount $53
Worries Away 60 min. Massage w/Paraffin Hair Shampoo reg. discount
Red Heart 30 min. Massage Paraffin Wax Pedicure Hair Shampoo & Blow reg. $53 discount $43
RTE 116, SUNDERLAND • on the bus route • 665-2629 • TUES - FRI: 9-7, SAT 9-4

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?
If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom tooth research study. Your wisdom teeth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.
For more information call: SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outride Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569
SCIREX

University Directories
Sales & Marketing Internships
The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market official directories locally, selling advertising space to area businesses in specific college markets. Earnings average $3000.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!
We will be attending the University of Massachusetts Job Fair on February 16 and interviewing on February 17. Be sure to stop by our display table. Call 1-800-743-5556 ext. 157 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply.
University Directories
PO Box 8830 • Chapel Hill, NC 27515
(800) 743-5556 • Fax: (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

AEROBICS
CARDIO KICKBOXING
Suspended Wood Floor
YOGA
Area's Largest Room
PILATES
Walk Ins Welcome
CARDIO CIRCUIT
Certified Instructors
STRETCH
Classes Daily
Amherst Athletic Club
256-0080

DJ REEF
SPINNIN' HIP HOP, REGGAE, AND R&B
10 - 1 AM
fun • food • spirits
THE PUB amherst
Drink Specials
16 oz Captain & Coke $2.00
20oz Miller Lite Draft $1.00
"Shot of the Week" Electric Kamikazi $2.00
BANGIN' SOUND SYSTEM
MOST ROOOOM TO MOVE IN TOWN

CARDIO
PRECOR ELLIPTICALS
More Than Ultimate Fitness
TREADMILLS
More Than Kidsports
STAIRMASTERS
More Than Hampshire Fitness
RECUMBENTS
More Than Amherst College
ROWERS
Amherst Athletic Club
256-0080

MERCYhouse
A church for the next Generation
Sunday nights at 6pm in the Jones Library just west of the Amherst town center (43 Amity St.)
WWW KNOWMERCY ORG

Always in Bloom
Valentine's Day!
February 14th
Plants, Balloons, & Stuffed Animals
Dutch & Exotic Bouquets
Local Special
Hugs & Kisses
Kisses: Cuddly Soft Bear, Red Rose & Balloon $25.00
Hugs: Bud Vase Bear with Red Rose $17.50
Uncompromising Quality, Selection, Presentation & Service
220 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-5545
We Deliver Anywhere!

HEY DAVID SCOTT
HOW big are your buildings?
If Amherst & Hampshire Colleges can contribute $5,000 towards a Thermal Imaging Camera for the Amherst Fire Department, why can't UMass? P.S. We could also use $450,000 for a Ladder Truck.
Paid for by Larry Kelley

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS. WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638.

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'87 Honda Accord. Grey 4dr. sdn. A/C, radio cassette, fog lights, power windows/locks. Good condition. $1500.00. 545-2451, ask for Van Dalsen.

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue-well maintained: New Clutch, brakes and tires. 148k, a lot of life left. $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Toyota Celeca 5 speed, sunroof, looks and runs great. $1500. 549-1636.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp-Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Open-minded amateur photographer position available. No experience needed. Equipment provided. Call for more details. 584-4665.

Pt/Time janitorial. Hadley, MA. Mon, Tue, Thurs, Fri and Sat 7-10am. 413-748-0028.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Full time/part time line and prep. cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Office Assistant Needed. Students needed to work afternoon hours. Must have Win 95/Office 97 experience. Good phone skills. Previous office experience a plus. SALARY $7.00-8.00. Fill out application at Blaisdell House. 545-2842.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities * Clubs * Student Groups Student organizations earn $1,000-$2,000 with the easy campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact campus-fundraiser.com, (888) 923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

ANNOUNCEMENT

Phi Sigma Pi National Honor Fraternity is looking for new members. If you have between 12 and 90 credits and a 3.0 GPA come learn more about us at an info nigth 2/15 and 2/16 at 7pm in Campus Center room 904-08. Questions? email psp@stuaf.umass.edu

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONALS

Ali- Thank you for putting up with me for so long. I love you more than you know or at least more than I can put into words. Happy Valentine's Day. Love M.

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom in 2 bed room apt looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker 3/4 mi from campus. Effective immediately. Call Allissa 253-4275.

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now: 549-5946.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

Spring Break 2000 from $419. free food, free drinks. Guaranteed lowest price. Call free!!!! (800)395-4896.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

Volunteers Needed. Are you looking to do community service? For more info call Alpha Phi Omega 545-2068.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Advertise here in The Collegian today!!

Call us at 545-3500

Get your Valentine's Day messages in by 2pm today!!

Five College Community Calendar

FRIDAY, FEB. 11

Auditions – The UMass Theatre Guild will be holding play auditions for "Noises Off" at 6:30 p.m. in room 804 of the Campus Center.

SATURDAY, FEB. 12

Auditions – The UMass Theatre Guild will be holding play auditions for "Noises Off" at noon and 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable will perform improvisational comedy at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. This show is open to the public.

MONDAY, FEB. 14

Auditions – Auditions will be held from 7-9 p.m. for a new UVC-TV 19 independent drama production. The auditions will take place at the studio, located next to the Hatch in the Student Union. All are welcome; no experience or preparation necessary. Call 546-3726 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Spectrum Magazine is accepting submissions for art, poetry, and prose for the year 2000 issue. Submission forms can be picked up outside the Spectrum office in room 406E of the Student Union until Feb. 12. Call 545-2240 for more information. All undergraduates are welcome to submit.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 11, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Lords of the Mafia (In Stereo)		None "Triton Dolfin Bar"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Good Grief, Charlie Brown		Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "El Diablo"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Good Grief, Charlie Brown		Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "El Diablo"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Sabrina-Witch	Hughleys	20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Jamie Foxx	Jamie Foxx	Steve Harvey	For Your Love	News		Nanny
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Apartment"	Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	"Operation Sandman" (2000, Horror) Ron Perlman.				News	Real TV (R)	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence "The Apartment"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World's Wildest Police Videos		Greed: The Series (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Apartment"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Chet	Red Dwarf	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20/20	News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Sabrina-Witch	Hughleys	20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	"Operation Sandman" (2000, Horror) Ron Perlman.				Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	66	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "Single While Female" (1992, Suspense) Bridget Fonda.						★★½ "Point of No Return" (1993)	Bridget Fonda.
A&E	45	Unsolved Mysteries		L.A. Law "Auld Lang Syne"		Law & Order "Silence"		Biography: Sid Mirror.		Investigative Reports (R)	Poirot	Law & Order "Bad Faith"
CNN	29	Worldview		Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand
COM	26	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live
DISC	48	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Arsenal		On the Inside "Effel Tower"		News	Discover Mag.	Storm Warning!		On the Inside "Effel Tower" (R)
ESPN	43	Sportscenter		NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at New York Rangers. (Live)						Figure Skating		Sportscenter
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Weddings of a Lifetime XVIII		"No One Could Protect Her" (1996, Drama) Joanna Kerns.				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	53	MTV Jams (In Stereo)		News		Snowed In (In Stereo)				Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules
NICK	46	All That	Catdog	Henry and June Jam (In Stereo)					Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	Taxi
SCIFI	59	Sliders (In Stereo)		Brimstone (In Stereo)		Terrazzo "Premiere" (In Stereo)		Terrazzo "PK Tat Girl" (R)		Lexx: The Series "Mantrid"		Terrazzo (In Stereo)
TLC	49	Home Again	Home Again	Trauma Center (R)		Police, Camera, Action!		Ancient Technologies (R)		Mysteries of the Bible (R)		Police, Camera, Action!
TNT	54	In the Heat of the Night		Eth "Family Practice" (In Stereo)		"Shutterspeed" (2000, Drama) Steve Bonden. (In Stereo)				NBA All-Star Friday Night		★★½ "Above the Rim" (1994)
USA	23	Baywatch "Promised Land"		JAG (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger		"Ultimate Deception" (1999, Drama) Richard Grieco. (In Stereo)				★★★★ "The Godfather" (1972)
HBO	8	(5:45) ★★ "Love Affair" (1994)	Warren Beatty		Beech: First	★★½ "In Dreams" (1999) Annette Bening.		★★½ "Mercy" (1995, Suspense) Eden Sarbah. (In Stereo)					Dennis Miller
MAX	51	★★½ "Heat of Ice" (1999, Drama) Patrick Stevens.				★★½ "Office Space" (1999) Ron Livingston.		★★½ "Play Time" (1999, Suspense) Donna Washington.					Crotic
SHOW	60	★★ "Sticky Dozen" (Wa, Comedy) Charlotte Ayanna.				★★ "What Dreams May Come" (1998) Robin Williams.				Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "Manifest Destiny"		Red Shoe

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

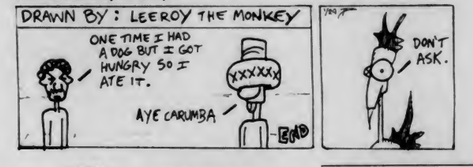
Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By T. Lewis and Michael

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Nona By Anna Faktorovich



Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Listen to that inner voice which tells you to "back off" today. You only have to wait a short while longer before it's time for you to forge ahead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – What you request today may not be allowed – for now. Wait your turn, and be patient. That which you most want will come to you in time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Despite the obstacles, you should be able to accomplish something that benefits yourself and others as well. Your generosity shines at this time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – An old-fashioned notion must not be allowed to hold you back at this time. Today, you may be tested in a manner you had not expected.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Now is no time to let your fears override your desire to move forward. It is absolutely essential that you remain in the heat of the action.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – That which is most frightening today is also likely to be most worthwhile. How will you go about persuading others that this is true?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're waiting for news that may not arrive according to schedule. The decision is yours: move now, or wait a while longer. Think before acting!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You're likely to encounter someone who shares both your aspirations and your fears today. It's important that you talk about an "inner truth."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A generous mix of styles today can only serve to make you work better today. Don't limit yourself to only one way of doing something.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – An idea is likely to come to you today, which you can begin to explore almost immediately, though it's not likely to pay off right away.

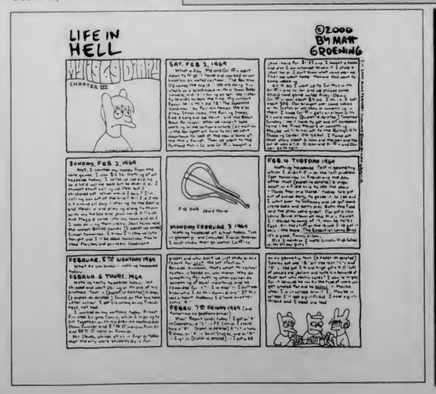
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – That which goes on underneath the surface is likely to be most important to you throughout the day. Get in touch with "inner rhythms."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An important turn of events is likely to come as a surprise to you today, but a quick adjustment on your part has you once again in control.

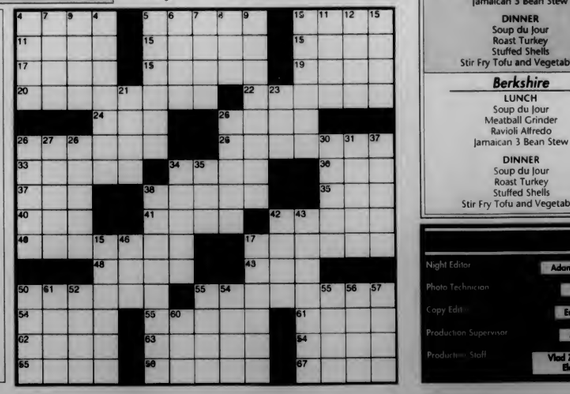
Quote of the Day

"How's it going to end? I was wondering that myself."

–Truman Burbank



ACROSS
1 Petal
5 Garret
10 At a distance
14 Singer Dno
15 Thick-skinned animal
16 Elizabeth —
17 Train track
18 Speaker of Latin
19 Diving bird
20 Bear, e.g.
22 Said "Cheese!"
24 Haul
25 Try
26 Danielle Steel works
29 — over chair
33 Burning
34 Hindu teacher
36 Silent
37 "— too late now"
38 Unearthly
39 Citrus drink
40 Permit
41 Tedious
42 Tavern brew
44 Had a bite
47 Dissenting opinion
48 Whitewash component
49 Wrap up
50 Natural
53 Pancake-makers' needs
58 Appear to be
59 Himalayan country
61 "That hurts"
62 Bedside fixture
63 Banal
64 Radius companion
65 Passionate god
66 More sensible
67 Luge



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

E	L	K	S		B	R	E	A	M		W	A	L	K
P	O	N	E		E	U	R	I	E		E	R	I	E
I	G	O	R		A	M	B	L	E		A	C	M	E
C	O	W	A	R	D	S		S	T	E	P	H	E	N
			G		A		S	A		S	A	N
S	T	O	L	E		S	S	S		S	N	O	R	E
H	A	R	I		I	M	P	O	S	E		M	A	N
A	C	C	O	R	D	I	O	N		P	E	A	T	S
M	O	A		A	S	T	R	A	Y		T	H	O	U
E	S	S	A		H	E	R		C	R	A	N	E
			R	O	D			L	O	U
F	E	T	I	G	N	E	D		L	O	B	S	T	E	R
A	L	O	U		I	T	E	R		C	U	T	E
R	I	T	E		F	R	I	A	R		A	N	N	A
M	E	A	D		T	E	E	N	Y		N	E	A	P

2-11-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Beginner
2 Wander
3 Similar
4 More civil
5 Quiver contents
6 Thunder god
7 "Newsweek" competitor
8 "— jiffy!"
9 Interpret
10 Improvises
11 Hoodwink
12 Lotion ingredient
13 Split
21 Field mouse
23 Famous West
25 Parsley unit
26 Secures
27 Again and again
28 View
30 Reflection
31 Some sharp dressers
32 Manicurist's board
34 Hollow stone
35 Coffee server
36 Items on the periodic table
42 Pre-Easter period
43 Demanding
45 Vises
46 Baby fox
47 Faith — medical practitioner
50 Capn. e.g.
51 At hand
52 Jules Verne's captain
53 Wash cycle
54 — de toie gras
55 Soothe
56 Teen's problem
57 Herring's cousin
60 Hurler's stat

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin
LUNCH
Soup du Jour
Meatball Grinder
Ravioli Alfredo
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Roast Turkey
Stuffed Shells
Stir Fry Tofu and Vegetables

Worcester
LUNCH
Soup du Jour
Meatball Grinder
Ravioli Alfredo
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Roast Turkey
Stuffed Shells
Stir Fry Tofu and Vegetables

Hampshire
LUNCH
Soup du Jour
Meatball Grinder
Ravioli Alfredo
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Roast Turkey
Stuffed Shells
Stir Fry Tofu and Vegetables

Berkshire
LUNCH
Soup du Jour
Meatball Grinder
Ravioli Alfredo
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Roast Turkey
Stuffed Shells
Stir Fry Tofu and Vegetables

Night Editor: Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Erica Mattison
Production Supervisor: Alan Basque
Production Staff: Vlad Zakrzhevsky, Elena Premack

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Friday, February 11, 2000

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

UMass hopes to X-out Muskies

Road warriors look to stay perfect away from Amherst

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team must play with a man down for 40 full minutes.

Game in, game out, potentially the most valuable Xavier Musketeer stands just inches off the court. When the Minutemen travel to Cincinnati for a date with the Muskies, ten thousand strong are expected to pack the Cincinnati Gardens for what's becoming one of the conference's most heated rivalries.

Packing their bags has actually been quite a blessing for the Minutemen (12-10 overall, 6-3 Atlantic 10), who are a perfect 3-0 on the road within the conference. This bodes well for UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint, as his squad nearly lives out of a suitcase for the three weeks leading up to early March's Atlantic 10 Tournament. Five of the Minutemen's seven remaining games are played away from Amherst.

Flint's troops hit the road after a three-game homestand where his Minutemen fell down early but regrouped for an 82-48 victory against La Salle on Wednesday. In the game, Chris Kirkland tallied a career-high 26 points while Monty Mack chipped in with 20 as the Minutemen knocked down at least 50 percent of their shots for only the fifth time this season.

In any event, Flint hopes the Gardens won't intimidate his Minutemen. After all, it hasn't in the recent past. The Minutemen have taken the last two at the Gardens, their only loss coming in the series' first act in 1991. It's gone both ways, though, as UMass and Xavier (14-8 overall, 4-5 Atlantic 10) have split the last six games in the series, the most recent coming in last year's Atlantic 10 Championship quarterfinal round when the Minutemen chopped a 17-point second half deficit to just two with 17 seconds remaining. The Musketeers then got a pair of free throws from James Posey to ice it, moving onto the next round with an exhilarating 72-68 triumph. With the victory, Xavier avenged a painful 78-77 double overtime loss at the Mullins Center just two weeks previous.

"I just think we've done the right things to beat them. We always have pretty good matchups against Xavier," Flint said. "We've always had great games with those guys, both teams go hard and go at each other."

Invincible, no, but nearly invincible, yes. Xavier is 9-1 at home this season with its only loss coming in a 31-point collapse against La Salle. Down just eight at halftime, the Muskies' shooting woes continued as the Explorers shot the lights out on the other end. What was once a tight battle became an 80-49 embarrassment, but Xavier had bounced back for a pair of wins at home, including a 1-point thriller over A-10 West-leading Dayton last week.

Kitwana Rhymer, who had just four rebounds in the Minutemen's 82-48 thrashing of La Salle will need to control the boards when he takes on the A-10's leading rebounder, David West, as UMass battles Xavier this weekend in Cincinnati.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

MEN'S B-BALL
UMASS @ XAVIER
TOMORROW, 12 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
BRETT MAUSER-PLAY
KATHLEEN BALLS-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW

Just ask the Cincinnati Bearcats if the Gardens is at all flowery for Xavier's guests. Cincy's only loss this season came at the hands of the Musketeers, who forced 19 turnovers and murdered the 'Cats from the charity stripe en route to a 66-64 victory.

What lies ahead is a 94-foot fracas where Xavier is expected to implement a full-court press. Last season, UMass scored the second-highest point total in the win in Amherst, playing two extra periods to do so. The Minutemen capitalized on all but one Xavier turnover, scoring 20 points on 11 Musketeer turnovers. The effort merely went for naught when Gary Lumpkin's potential game-winning layup rolled off the rim.

"If we don't handle their press, we're going to get killed," Flint said. "I think we have four ballhandlers on the floor, so that makes it a little tough from time to time. We've done a pretty good job of attacking against the pres-

Turn to XAVIER, page 9

PSU leaves own den for rematch with UM

By Seth Szilagyi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team will be defending its home turf this weekend as it looks to make the No. 8 Penn State Nittany Lions run away like frightened kittens.

The Minutewomen are looking for revenge for an earlier loss suffered at the hands at the Nittany Lions. Penn State roared past UMass, 194.925-188.750. In the previous meeting this season. The Staties have not competed since the last time they met UM, two weeks ago, and could come out a little rusty. They currently stand at 3-1 on the season, picking up wins against then No. 19 Florida, Illinois and UMass, but suffering a loss to New Hampshire, its only defeat of the season, ironically to a team which has also conquered the Minutewomen.

UMass must take heed of freshman Katie Rowland who led the Lady Lions in a meet against Illinois, winning a pair of events en route to the all-around title. Another key element to the State squad is sassy senior Nikki Smith, who was named Big Ten Gymnast of the Week, much thanks to a dynamite balance beam routine. PSU also boasts junior Gemma Cuff and freshman Leslie Blair, who are both strong in the vault.

The early candidate for the UMass MVP goes to freshman Katie Teft who has been dominating the competition. Teft tied for the fourth-best all-time in the all-around when UMass faced West Virginia and Radford. Tallying a 39.075, she shares the honor with former Minutewoman Anita Sanyal. The rookie notched a 9.950 on the uneven bars against UNH to join former Minutewoman standout Tara Swartz atop the all-time list in the event. She ranks first in the vault, uneven bars and balance beam, not to mention the all-around for this year's squad. On the top of that mountain of accomplishment lies honors for Atlantic-10 Rookie-of-the-Week and UMass/WHMP Athlete-of-the-Week.

To avoid a record of 4-5, the Minutewomen must have incredible performances from other key contributors. The senior leadership of both Mandy Mosby and Rene Franklin will be vital to compete against the lethal Lions. Mosby has finished first in the balance beam at the Springfield College meet and third in the same event against PSU and Florida. Franklin recently recorded a career-high on the vault with a 9.600 against WVU and Radford.

"Our captains, Mandy Mosby, Betsy Colucci and Rene Franklin have provided leadership above and beyond what normal captains do," head coach Dave Kuzara said in a press release. "They have been on top of everything since day one."

Along with the senior class, junior Jobi Goldberg, freshman Jen Gendron and junior Mary Moore also set career-highs in the vault. Goldberg recorded a 9.575, while the frosh scored a 9.650, and Moore posted a 9.675.

Nearing the halfway point of the season, this would be a badly needed win for the Minutewomen, who have faced four ranked opponents this season. If history repeats itself for UM, the results will not be positive. The Minutewomen have suffered four losses at the hands of Penn State, West Virginia, Florida and New Hampshire, all in the top 25.

The Minutewomen will be looking to end their streak of losses to ranked opponents in the Bowden Gymnasium on February 12 at 4 p.m. to take on the Lady Lions.

Hockey heads north for a pair with Maine

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team would probably like to forget about the trip it went up to Orono, ME to play their counterparts from the University of Maine.

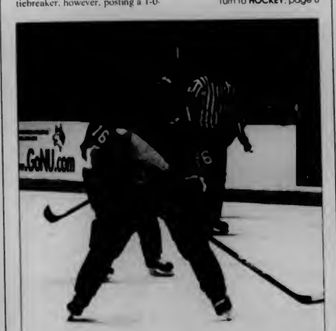
In the quarterfinal round of the Hockey East playoffs last season, the Minutemen dropped a pair of games to the Black Bears to end their campaign.

This weekend, UMass (10-14-4, 4-11-3 in Hockey East) will head up to Alfond Arena for a couplet with the No. 8 ranked Black Bears. If the Minutemen can sweep the hosts, then they would be tied with them in the league standings.

"We're not necessarily looking for revenge, but this has been a series that we've been looking forward to all season," said UMass senior alternate captain Jeff Blanchard. "It's a game is going to be important, though, because we've only got six games left."

UMass currently sits in eighth place in Hockey East, one point ahead of UMass-Lowell; the River Hawks hold the advantage in the tiebreaker, however, posting a 1-0-2 record over the Minutemen during the regular season.

Maine (15-7-4, 6-7-3) visited the Mullins Center back in January, posting a 4-2 in over UMass. That game concluded a stretch of three games in five days for the Minutemen, in which they won the other two contests.



"That first game just came at a certain time of the year where we had the three games in five nights, but this is going to be a different story," Blanchard said. "Basically we have to take points. We have to come out with at least a split."

"Two points is our minimum objective. We don't want to get one point, we need at least two," added Blanchard. "We prepared for it, so it's just a matter of going out there and executing."

The Black Bears are led by senior forward Cory Larose [11-23-34] and sophomore forward Barrett Heisten [11-15-26]. Ben Guite leads the team with 12 goals, while defenseman Doug Janik provides a solid presence on the blue line.

On the UMass side of things, junior alternate captain Jeff Turner

Turn to HOCKEY, page 8

R.J. Gates and the UMass hockey team hope to avenge the Minutemen's 4-2 loss to Maine when they visit Alfond Arena for a pair against the Black Bears.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Road calls struggling UMass

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

February 6, 2000. The Apollo at Temple. Five minutes before tip-off. A sportswaster from Temple radio slides down press row and elbows a certain member of the Massachusetts media. Gesturing toward UMass forward Jen Butler, who is seated at the end of the Minutewoman bench in street clothes, the Owl follower poses a simple question

"Can you win without her?"

The UMass beat writer scoffs at his counterpart, answering without hesitation. "She's only a freshman. Of course we can win without her."

Wrong.

By the time the final seconds had ticked away on that fateful game, coach Joanie O'Brien and her Minutewomen couldn't help but see the proverbial writing on the wall, right there underneath the unbelievable OWLS 42, VISITORS 40 score. The words themselves were unimportant; they probably read something to the effect of "UMass frontcourt eliminated by foul trouble. Temple frontcourt goes to hoop at will. Owls win."

Quite simply, Butler's absence from the Maroon and White lineup was the difference between victory and defeat.

So when UMass (9-12, 6-4 Atlantic 10) hits the hardwood tonight at Duquesne (7-14, 3-7 A-10), it will be more than just a battle of two underachievers struggling for a sense of roundball identity. The 7 p.m. tip-off will mark the return of 6-foot-5 pivot phenom Butler, who comes back just in time to lock horns with another first-year superstar, Beth Friday of the Dukes.

WOMEN'S B-BALL
UMASS VS. DUQUESNE
TONIGHT @ 7 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
DAVID ROSE - PLAY
JUSTIN RUDD-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW

The parallels between the two rookie roundballers are enough to raise more than a few eyebrows. Friday and Butler stood at the pinnacle of the conference in rebounding heading into this weekend, ranking first and second, respectively, in caroms controlled. Friday ranked second on the team in offensive output with an average of 10.3 points per contest, while Butler paced UMass in scoring at a 9.5 points per game clip. Each held down second place on her team in blocked shots, Friday with 29 and Butler with 21, while both ranked tops in field goal percentage on their squads as well. All of which adds up to more than just an intriguing post matchup.

It just say that the winner of this particular battle on the blocks has an excellent chance of pocketing A-10 Rookie of the Year honors at season's end. When two competitors are this closely matched, a decision between them often comes down to their performance against one another.

Not that Butler, or the rest of the Minutewomen for that matter, needs any extra motivation for this showdown in the Steel City. O'Brien's team has indeed backed itself into a corner with its loss at Temple, at a point in the season when wins are vital and losses can be costly beyond belief. With only a half-dozen games remaining on the team's regular-season slate and the Minutewomen trailing East leader St. Joseph's by 2 1/2 games, O'Brien's squad can ill-afford to overlook the conference's middle-tier programs if it hopes to eclipse the Hawks or even challenge for the top spot in

Turn to B-BALL, page 8

Jennifer Butler's return to the paint couldn't have come any sooner, as the Minutewomen play two games in three days on the road, including tonight's clash with Duquesne.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

WOMEN'S B-BALL
UMASS VS. VIRGINIA TECH
SUNDAY @ 2 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
JUSTIN RUDD-PLAY
DAVID ROSE-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW

Softball begins post-Henderson era under Arizona sun

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

A legend may have graduated, but expectations are still high for this year's version of the Massachusetts softball team. Ranked 16th in the USA Today Coaches poll, the Minutewomen are ready to kick off their 2000 campaign, starting today at the Fiesta Bowl Softball Tournament in Phoenix, AZ.

After finishing 1999 with an impressive 43-10 record and a No. 17 ranking in the aforementioned poll, this year's squad will need to keep runs off the board if they hope to add a 13th Atlantic 10 title to their laurels. Replacing Danielle Henderson on the mound obviously won't be easy and the brunt of the responsibility will fall on the right arm of junior Carrie Jeffries.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Carrie Jeffries

While Jeffries finesse style differs from the blazing speed UMass fans had come to expect from Henderson, her goal is one in the same – to get people out. Jeffries, who hails from Placentia, CA, used her good ball movement and deceptive speed to garner a 12-3 record for the Minutewomen ballclub last season. In 97 innings of work, Jeffries posted an impressive 2.09 ERA, giving the team a reliable fallback for Henderson's off-days.

The Minutewomen, however, would be ill-advised to count on Jeffries to carry them as Henderson so often did throughout her career. They must score to win. Luckily, the team is returning two of their top offensive producers from last year in sophomores Cherra Wheeler and Teri Rooney. In her debut season, Wheeler hit .319 in the process of collecting 45 hits with seven home runs and 33 R.B.I.s. Rooney hit .306, with 45 hits, 30 RBI and nine extra base hits en route to becoming on All-A10 selection. Rooney then went on to become an All-Northeast selection, as well as, an NCAA Regional All-Tournament selection.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Cherra Wheeler

Without its star pitcher, the team will have to rely on experience to win the close games. Returning six starters, the team is poised to make a run in this tournament and in the A-10. One of those starters is senior Nikki Faessler, who possesses a big bat and anchors the Minutewomen's stingy defense.

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, they do not get off to any easy start. The team will have to play five games in the course of the three-day tournament, which features 18 teams. The first task at hand in the 21st ranked Stanford Cardinal, who face a situation similar to the Minutewomen's. The Cardinal also lost their star pitcher, Marcy Crouch, who racked up three perfect games last season.

Then, UM will prepare to do battle against Georgia, UNLV, Cal-State Fullerton and the tournament host, ninth-ranked Arizona St. If all goes well, the Minutewomen will be well on their way to continuing their tradition of softball excellence.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 14

Monday, February 14, 2000

UMass sexual assault statistics seriously flawed

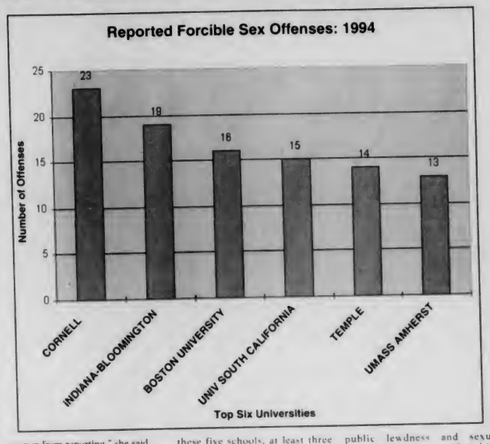
U.S. universities' rape reporting methods vary, analysis reveals

By Stacy Collins
Collegian Correspondent

Media reports naming the University of Massachusetts as one of the country's top three-ranking universities for sexual assault are in error, according to an analysis of national campus crime statistics.

The analysis shows that the allegation of aberrantly large numbers of sex crimes at UMass and at several other campuses is due largely to stricter reporting systems at the accused campuses – not to higher assault rates. In other words, UMass and some other campuses are getting a public black eye for more diligently reporting rape – while hundreds of campuses report zero or very low rape rates that contradict even the most conservative official estimates.

In a study published by The Chronicle of Higher Education last May, the number of reported sex crimes at UMass was substantially higher than those reported in colleges and universities across the nation. Yet UMass and other schools throughout the United States appear to be getting a bad rap for rape because they're doing a better job reporting, and are reporting more than is required by law.



The Chronicle, in its May 8 edition, listed crime statistics for 453 campuses with more than 5,000 students enrolled. Its story specifically cited experts saying the reports rated are not comparable across campuses, for several reasons. Fundamentally, at most colleges and universities, the sexual offenses recorded in safety reports are only those reported through the police department. Under the federal Jeanne Cleary Act, or the Campus Security Act of 1990, colleges and universities are required to report to the U.S. Department of Education and disclose to students all sex crimes that were reported to campus police and other judicial agencies on campus.

But at UMass-Amherst, the reporting appears to be more thorough. The Department of Public Safety works with the Sexual Assault Advisory Committee (SAAC) in reporting sexual offenses. According to Barbara O'Connor, Deputy Chief of police operations and member of the SAAC, "When a sexual assault is reported to the Everywoman's Center, the Dean of Students, the Health Center, Mental Health Services, Victim Assessment Services, and Housing Services, a standardized victim information form is filled out."

According to O'Connor, these forms from each of the agencies are used to count the number of sex crimes, then are reported to the Department of Education and UMass students in an annual campus safety report.

"We're exceeding federal requirements around reporting," said Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center. "We report every sexual assault that gets reported to any campus agency on the Sexual Assault Advisory Committee. It's critical that folks look at the numbers in context of the services provided and the reporting we do," Wallace said.

"People need to understand when you do a lot of outreach, a lot of education, and a lot of support services, reports will tend to increase. When you don't provide services, don't do a lot of education, and the climate is repressive, it discourages women from reporting," she said.

UMass is not the only university receiving a bad reputation for shoddy disclosure of sex crime statistics. In the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) 1994 Survey of Campus Law Enforcement Agencies, five schools exceeded UMass in reporting high numbers of sex crimes. Cornell University, The University of Indiana-Bloomington, Boston University, The University of Southern California, and Temple University all recorded more rapes than UMass in that study. Yet out of these five schools, at least three report sex crimes as UMass does – in a manner that surpasses the legal requirements for disclosure.

At Cornell University, for example, 23 forcible sex offenses were reported in 1994. But of these 23 reports, however, only one was an actual rape, according to Richard Brewer, crime prevention officer at Cornell University. Brewer estimates that in 1994, more than half of all sex offense reports were reports of public lewdness. The campus has since added "separate categories for public lewdness and sexual assaults," Brewer said, which changes the picture.

Like UMass, the Department of Public Safety at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles works with the Center for Women and Men in releasing sex crime statistics. According to Casey Cooper, graduate assistant at the USC Center for Women and Men, "We get a copy of all the Department of Public Safety reports every day. If we have

Turn to RAPE, page 2

Events held in honor of black history

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Correspondent

Over the next two weeks, The W.E.B. DuBois library at the University of Massachusetts will host a number of events as part of its annual commemoration of Black History Month. This year's program of events will focus on the education of black women.

The first event, a lecture and storytelling performance, will take place on Tuesday, Feb. 15, from 4:30 to 6 p.m. on the main floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library. The event, titled "Telling Our Story: Oral History on the African American Community," will celebrate the African-American tradition of storytelling.

Gerulin Powell, a doctoral candidate in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American studies, will give the lecture. In addition to being a doctoral student at UMass, Powell holds a B.A. from Hunter College, a Master's degree in Public Administration from New York University, and is also a candidate in the Graduate Feminist Theory Certificate program at NYU. Among her published articles is contribution to a recent book, Discovering the Women in Slavery: Emancipating Perspectives on the American Past. Her lecture will give an analysis of the role of oral tradition in African-American history.

The event will also feature a performance by seasoned storyteller Onawumi Jean Moss. Moss is a founder and producer of the Keepers of the Word Storytelling Festival, a nationally notable storytelling forum at Amherst College, where she also works as the Associate Dean of Students. Moss holds memberships in the National Storytelling Association, the National Association of Black Storytellers, and the League for the Advancement of New England Storytelling. She has performed for listeners of all ages, everywhere from local schools to international festivals.

On Feb. 15, she will be telling traditional stories to demonstrate techniques and means of oral tradition discussed in the lecture by Powell.

According to Moss, tradition dictates that the particular stories be improvised and chosen based on the audience present, but she predicts that she will emphasize responsibility to community in the stories she chooses during this performance. The stories will draw on a number of styles, from the story telling of African-Americans in the Deep South to that of African descendants living in the West Indies, and each will be performed in the original dialect.

While Moss in particular will seek to entertain the audience, both she and Powell will discuss oral tradition as an important, and very serious, aspect of African-American history. According to librarian Isabel Espinal, "[Moss] makes history come alive in an entertaining way." However, she adds, "It's true history."

The event is part of the UMass Amherst Libraries' "Connecting Cultures" series, and is funded through the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners with funds from the Library Services and Technology Act. It is also sponsored by the UMass Black Student Union.

Next in the Black History Month series and sponsored by the Chancellor, the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies, and the UMass Amherst Libraries, is a series of exhibits beginning next week.

The first of the exhibits will be shown in honor of the 152nd birthday of W.E.B. DuBois. The exhibit, entitled "The Need and Duty of Power and Intelligence: W.E.B. DuBois and the Education of Black Women," will be formally opened on Feb. 23 in the Special Collections and Archives Department on the 25th floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library.

According to librarian Linda Seidman, the exhibit will include materials from the library's extensive collection of the papers and writings of W.E.B. DuBois, and will particularly illustrate his involvement and interest in the education of black women.

The exhibit is also to be held in honor of Ruth Simmons, President of Smith College. Simmons received a

Turn to BLACK HISTORY, page 2

UM hosts inter-faith dialogue

By Andria White
Collegian Correspondent

Last night a small group gathered to enjoy a cultural dialogue called "The Aesthetics of Faith," hosted by the Inter-Religious Project at UMass. The night began with a warm welcome from moderator Chaplain Jonathan Rehmus, as he distributed index cards and invited the audience to participate with its questions.

President of the Jewish Student Union Hannah Braune and President of the Muslim Student Association Rana Al-Jammal participated in the dialogue, sharing their educational knowledge as well as personal views on their religious beliefs. The night was broken up into a series of questions concerning different aspects of the similarities and differences between the two religions.

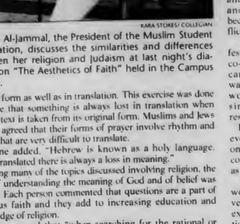
The dialogue began with a question involving the connection between religion and the people within their religion. This led to a discussion of the common ritual of prayer within each religion, especially group prayer.

In the Muslim religion each person is required to make a pilgrimage to Mecca where he or she meets with other Muslims from all over the world. The Jewish religion congregates weekly to share Jewish religious practices and learn from its prayer leader.

Rana Al-Jammal summed up her communication with God with a Muslim phrase. "If you want to talk to God do your prayer. If you want God to talk to you read the Koran," Al-Jammal said.

Braune and Al-Jammal were asked to bring with them an example of a beautiful prayer or scripture to be read aloud in original form as well as in translation. This exercise was done to prove that something is always lost in translation when written text is taken from its original form. Muslims and Jews present agreed that their forms of prayer involve rhythm and rhyme that are very difficult to translate.

Braune added, "Hebrew is known as a holy language. When translated there is always a loss in meaning."



Among many of the topics discussed involving religion, the issue of understanding the meaning of God and of belief was central. Each person commented that questions are a part of religious faith and they add to increasing education and knowledge of religion.

Braune agreed that "when searching for the rational or searching for the truth, the more you learn the more it becomes rational."

Other topics discussed during the course of the evening were how nature is seen through religion and the roles men and women play within their religions. Women are given a break when it comes to the required prayer and fasting in understanding and respect of their rules as mothers, according to the speakers. Also discussed was the common belief that all living things in nature are gods and are respected by religion.

Al-Jammal quoted a phrase from a Muslim text. "I have created you as nations of people so you can get to know one another."

Both speakers said that through religion there are many experiences that can be learned and shared, even between people of different beliefs.

KARA STORES/ COLLEGIAN

Rana Al-Jammal, the President of the Muslim Student Association, discusses the similarities and differences between her religion and Judaism at last night's dialogue on "The Aesthetics of Faith" held in the Campus Center.

KARA STORES/ COLLEGIAN

President of the Jewish Student Union Hannah Braune describes the significance of the passage she chose to share with the audience as well as the effects of translation on its true meaning.

UM sponsors online series on resolving disputes on net

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will sponsor an online series of workshops, discussions, courses, and software demonstrations on the resolution of disputes in cyberspace, Feb. 14-19.

The event, entitled Alternative Dispute Resolution Cyber Week 2000, is being sponsored by the Center for Information Technology and Dispute Resolution (CITDR), and will help those interested in becoming more aware of online conflicts.

According to Ethan Katsh, a professor of legal studies at UMass and co-director of CITDR, the cyber week can serve its participants in many ways. He explained that participants would be able to engage in online simulations and examine new research.

He went on to comment that the event was organized so that people online could see the web as a positive communication tool and see its usage as a means to settle online disputes.

He explained that the online series would allow people to engage in conversations, participate in simulations, examine new resources for information, question new entrepreneurs, and contribute to activities.

Some plans for the upcoming week are a series of WebBoard discussions for interested parties to take part in. Some of the topics planned for these discussions include information regarding using technology to solve environmental disputes, a discussion that covers the new ICANN rules online, and a session in which interested parties can ask online mediator/arbitrator Mark Eckstein (eBay dispute mediator) or Scott Donahey (arbitrator of first domain name dispute under new ICANN rules) necessary questions.

In addition, the event will also sponsor both simulations and demonstrations for participants to take part in. Some of the planned simulations include topics such as a resolution forum, one Accord, I-Courthouse, Cybersettle, and eResolution.

There will also be a portion that will allow students to speak to other students about computer related issues.

Some special events that are to take place at the conference are the option to take an online course with John DeBruyn, add to your syllabus project with Juris, and take part in a technology survey.

The organization CITDR has been active in the dispute resolution field since its creation in September of 1997. The group was established with support from the Hewlett Foundation, the National Center for Automated Information Research, and the Legal Studies department at UMass. Each of these groups individually has been active and recognized in the resolution of conflicts in cyberspace.

According to information from the organization, the need for mediation in cyberspace occurs due to the fact that there are problems, conflicts, and disputes that arise routinely. The organization aims to make cyberspace a harmonious place while also improving online quality.

Some recent projects that the organization has participated in are a recent project with e-Bay, and the formation of Disputes.org, a non-profit entity that works to resolve domain name disputes.

This week's program is an all-online conference that is opened to anyone interested in participating, and currently has almost 700 people signed up. To become involved in the online series, interested parties can register at http://www.umass.edu/dispute.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 28	HIGH: 42 LOW: 26	HIGH: 45 LOW: 26

SOURCE WEATHER.COM

No Candy Hearts To Give Away...

Isn't he cute? Single folk, take heart-- Collegian Columnist Chris Collins thinks there's more to the dreaded V-day than significant others and chocolate candygrams.

ED OP page 4

Vultures Tour Beckons

Beck sells out two shows in Boston, while the Palladium hosts two days of hardcore and metal. Arts: So many flutes stuck in one place, you'll think you're still at band camp.

ARTS page 8

Insert Gun Control Cliché Here

Sharpshooter Monty Mack's aim was true Saturday at Cincinnati Gardens, but UMass was blown away, 87-77, by the Musketeers of Xavier. See today's Sports for that and other on-target stories.

SPORTS page 12

Arts & Living 8
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12
ON THE INTERNET

■ rape

continued from page 1

additional reports of sex crimes, we let them know the additional numbers that come through our office," She continued. "We have a very honest system."

Temple University, too, exceeds federal requirements in reporting sex crime statistics, according to Robert Lowell, chief of detectives at Temple's University Police. Temple police work with the Women's Center in collecting sex crime statistics. "When a victim goes to the Women's Center, she is made aware of what options there are, and most of the time makes a formal report to the police," Lowell said. These reports are included in Temple's annual report to the U.S. Department of Education under the federal Jeanne Cleary Act. "At the end of the year, the Women's Center does a survey of all reports of all agencies who have collected data on sexual assault. The results are a pretty equal representation of the numbers we have at the police department," he said.

These universities are making a collective effort with the campus police and other campus agencies to disclose all sexual assault reports. But the individual reporting methods of each school tell only part of the story. Many universities and colleges are not reporting rape at all.

The DOJ periodically collects statistics on various campus safety issues. In the Survey of Campus Law Enforcement Agencies from 1994, on which this analysis is based, 72 schools reported no data on forcible sex offenses. Of the 608 colleges and universities in that survey that did report forcible sex offenses, 453 had an enrollment over 5,000. Of these 453 universities and colleges, 188 reported that there were none in 1994. In other words, the data indicate that over half of the institutions claimed no forcible sex offenses – a suggestion that strains credulity.

An additional, important factor in examining rape statistics is the population of the college or university. "People get a misconception (of the statistics) because this university has one amount and another university has another, but the population is different, and that is never taken into account," said Lt. Jerry L. Minger of the University of Indiana police department.

To make crimes comparable over populations, statisticians determine incidence per unit of population. When that adjustment is made to the rate of sex crimes per 10,000 students, many schools come out better. For example, Temple University had the fifth highest number of reported forcible sex offenses, but it ranks 42nd in rate of rape per 10,000 students.

"Just because we have high numbers doesn't mean we're rape city," said Sage Freechild of the Counselor/Advocate Program at Umass' Everywoman's Center. Of the 608 schools to report forcible sex offenses in the DOJ data, UMass disclosed the sixth highest number of reported forcible sex offenses, but ranked 32nd in rape rate per 10,000 students. Extrapolating further, if UMass has 24,000 students in a given year, an estimated 17 reports of forcible sex offense might be projected. Looking at a university's rate of rape helps put a clearer perspective on sex crime statistics.

The numbers begin to tell the story, Freechild said. "At a number of schools, a lot is not being reported." At California State University-Long Beach, no rapes were reported at a campus of 27,073 students. In contrast, the U.S. Department of Justice's National Crime Victimization Survey estimates that in 1994 there was one rape for every 270 women across the country. Accordingly, it seems very unlikely that no rapes occurred on that campus – or on any of the 360 other campuses on which no sex crimes were reported.

Unfortunately for UMass, it appears the picture here may only get worse because honesty appears to remain the campus reporting policy. An amendment added to the federal Jeanne Cleary Act in 1998 exempted mental health and pastoral counselors from reporting sex crime statistics on the basis of patient/client confidentiality. Before the amendment, schools were not responsible for collecting reports from such counseling agencies, but often incorporated the reports into their statistics. Now, schools will be exempted from reporting these statistics, but may include them if the school provides a confidential reporting system – as UMass does and apparently will continue to do so.

The new amendment seems likely to lead to less reporting of sex offenses at schools without a confidential reporting system. And Wallace, director of UMass' Everywoman's Center, assures that UMass will continue to itemize all offenses reported to all campus agencies in order to get the clearest picture. "Our statistics have no identifying information. All event records around sexual assaults are confidential, and the reports don't use names," she said.

Freechild doesn't believe the amendment will necessarily change the number of rape reports, at least from campuses dutifully reporting. "Those who are reporting more will keep reporting, and those who didn't report (from these agencies) won't," she said.

So – will there ever be a fair and accurate method of reporting and examining sex crime statistics? "Not for a long time coming," Freechild said.

Institution	Total Population	Rape Rate Per 10,000 Students	Rate Ranking Out Of 608 Schools
CORNELL UNIVERSITY	11,876	19	2
INDIANA UNIVERSITY-BLOOMINGTON	35,551	5	34
BOSTON UNIVERSITY	28,653	6	27
UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA	27,658	5	30
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY	30,040	5	42
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS-AMHERST	24,234	5	32
UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH ALABAMA	12,260	0	330
CALIFORNIA STATE UNIVERSITY-LONG BEACH	27,073	0	350

J.B STAFF PHOTO

Workaholic...

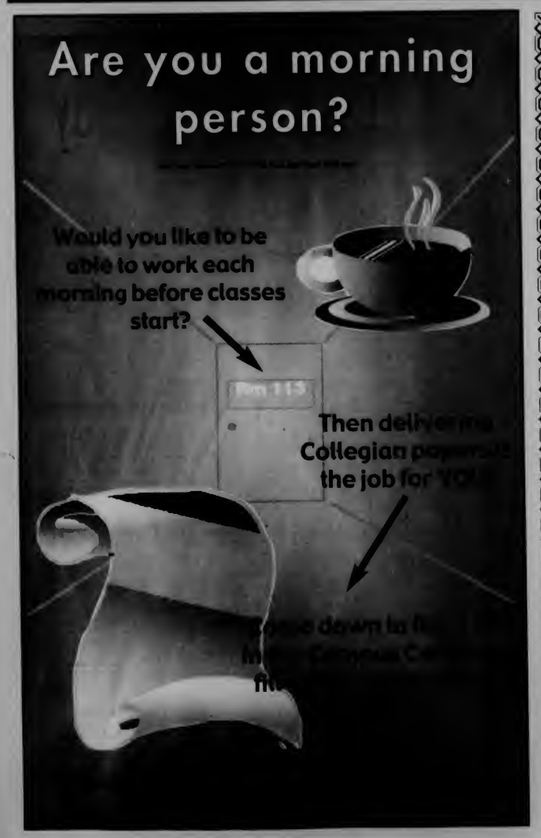
Senior Biology major Stanley Tobi makes the most of his time working at a computer terminal in the GRC low-rise.

■ black history

continued from page 1

doctorate in Romance Languages and Literatures from Harvard University in 1973, and has also been a member of the faculties of the University of New Orleans, California State University at Northridge, Spelman College, and Princeton University.

Simmons became president of Smith in July of 1995, and is the first black woman to be president of a top-ranked college or university in the United States. In 1986, she was named CBS' Woman of the Year, NBC Nightly News' Most Inspiring Woman, and Glamour Magazine's Woman of the Year. She has also been active in redesigning the state of race relations in higher education.



In her presentation on Feb. 23, Simmons will give a lecture entitled "DuBois' Prophecy: the Color Line and Education at the Start of a New Century." According to Seldman, her lecture will be based on a statement by W.E.B. DuBois at the start of the 20th century that "the problem of the twentieth century [would] be the color line." Seidman said the lecture by Simmons will reflect on the "prescience" of DuBois, and will offer Simmons' own reflections on the color line at the beginning of the 21st century.

Following her lecture, the library will host a birthday party, complete with cake, for DuBois.

Furthering campus awareness of Black History month, UMass students will contribute to the highlighted events. An exhibit designed by students in the fall 1999 Women's Studies courses, called "Black Women and Activism," is also due to open on the main floor of the library this month.

According to librarian Emily Silverman, the exhibit will include artwork, videotaped interviews as examples of oral history, photographs, and displayed selections from research. An official date of opening for the exhibit has not been determined yet.

DAILYCOLLEGIAN

Student Union

Craft Center

silver • fimo • beads • plaster • leather • silkpainting copper • tie-dye • screen printing • batik • stained glass brass • sewing • buttonmaking • marbling

We offer free membership to all Umass students, faculty and staff. Members of the four college community must pay a small fee each semester.

Everybody is welcome, no matter what experience you have with crafts!

We offer small evening workshops throughout the semester, these workshops allow for individual attention as you learn new things.

Come by the Craft Center and sign up for a workshop!

We sell supplies for all areas that we offer instruction in.

Our daily hours are:
Tuesday- Thursday: 11am- 5pm
Friday: 11am- 6pm
Saturday & Sunday: 1pm- 6pm

phone: 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr

Bowling for dollars!

Umass students take part in a bowling class in Northampton over the weekend

Wiranto will keep job

By Keith B. Richburg
Washington Post

JAKARTA, Indonesia – After a two-week battle of wills with one of his most powerful army generals, Indonesian President Abdurrahman Wahid made what appeared to be a major retreat yesterday and will allow Gen. Wiranto to keep his job, at least temporarily.

Wahid had repeatedly insisted that Wiranto, who was implicated in a human-rights commission report about atrocities in East Timor, must resign from the cabinet or be fired. But Wahid said yesterday that the general can keep his job while the attorney general investigates the allegations.

"I asked (Wiranto) to resign, but he said he preferred to be investigated by the law, and I said, 'okay.'" Wahid told reporters at the presidential palace after a three-hour meeting with the president, Wiranto, Vice President Megawati Sukarnoputri, and Attorney General Marzuki Darusman.

"This is not a compromise," Wahid insisted. "There is no problem. Wiranto and I are good friends, (but) the media perceives us to be enemies."

Cabinet Secretary Marsilam Simanjuntak, who first announced the face-saving deal, told reporters, "There is an agreement that there will be an opportunity for the attorney general to conduct a deep investigation, and the attorney general will form a team to investigate."

He added, "Wiranto will remain at his present position until the president makes a decision after reviewing the report of the team." The attorney general's probe could take three months or longer.

Wiranto clearly emerged as the winner from the surprise turnaround by Wahid, who returned to Indonesia early yesterday from a two-week trip abroad during which he insisted almost daily that Wiranto step aside. Wiranto had steadfastly refused, saying he was innocent and that a resignation – in absence of formal charges being filed – might be construed as evidence of his guilt.

Wiranto, currently the cabinet coordinating minister for political affairs and security, was armed-forces commander when East Timor voted overwhelming for independence last August. The referendum prompted a two-week round of killing, arson, and looting by Indonesian soldiers and their militia surrogates. The human rights panel that probed the violence decided that the killing and destruction were part of an orchestrated campaign, and it named Wiranto as ultimately responsible.

Wiranto, however, accused the panel of bias, saying it ignored evidence of his efforts to bring together the warring sides in East Timor, a former Portuguese colony that Indonesia forcibly annexed in 1975.

In one interview last week, Wiranto drew parallels between his situation and the 1968 massacre of Vietnamese civilians at the hamlet of My Lai. "When one U.S. officer in Vietnam ... killed a number of innocent villagers, the My Lai incident, I don't think the commander in chief of U.S. troops in Vietnam, or the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, were asked to be legally responsible," he said.

U.S. Customs suspends new system upgrade

By Stephen Barr
Washington Post

